A little girl was recently in the country with her mother picking wild roses. From time to time the child had to be warned against the dangers of the rose-bushes, and their prickly branches. She seized a bough and wrenched off the blossom. As a result, a large thorn entered the hand of the little one, and when the rose was secured, the petals fell apart and the flower was lost. The people of Israel in their wilfulness saw only the blossom of an earthly king. They failed to understand the surrounding difficulties that were to lacerate their feelings, and they did not realize that the placing of a man upon the throne was to mean their own injury as a people. "Make us a King to judge us like all the nations" (v. 5). Self is to-day the earthly king for whom so many reject God, and the result is often as disastrous as to Israel.

GOD'S INDELIBLE LOVE.

A visitor to the London Hospital has described the case of a patient under treatment for a burnt wrist. Upon her arm were the tattoed words, "Jim loves me. I love Jim"—words which she had endeavoured to obliterate with nitric acid. One of the two had proved faithless, and she, poor girl, had injured herself in the endeavour to remove the signs which had been written in the ardour of real affection. As the words remained, in spite of the change of heart, so in the lesson—the marks remained of the Lord's love to Israel. They, foolish people, would have obliterated God from their counsels. He, however, remained faithful to them, and in granting their request, prepared the way for His own Divine purpose to establish another king of His own choice. God to-day overrules our mistakes, and often turns them into blessings.

GOOD OUT OF EVIL.

When Henry Martyn was a youth at college he often grieved his family by his selfishness, pride, and irreligion. Then came a turning point in his history. He was arrested in his thoughtless and ambitious career by a sad bereavement. He had passed a most successful examination, and the intelligence filled his father's heart with joy. A week later another letter brought him the news of his father's death, and the sudden heartrending information overwhelmed him with sorrow. But the sorrow was his salvation, and in after years the missionary labours of Henry Martyn in India were richly blessed in the salvation of others. Out of sorrow God brought joy to the life of Henry Martyn, and so with Israel.

Stockwell Orphanage.

THERE was the usual great assembly of friends at the Stockwell Orphanage on Thursday last. In the annual report the managers strike a jubilant note: "The year which closed at the end of March has been one of abounding blessing, which calls for thanksgiving and praise. No good thing has failed us, and the managers have been spared the anxiety which attends a deficient income for the support of the institution." It is added, however, "As the years pass the difficulty of supporting the Orphanage is not likely to diminish." The year's income from all sources was £28,171; the expenditure was £13,766, so that after the transfer of £12,961 to the Foundation Fund, there was still a balance of £2,421 at the bank at the end of the financial year. Before he died, Mr. Spurgeon wrote, by way of comment, on "The Lord will provide": "This is the bank from which we draw our supplies, and, truly, it never fails. If our stock in hand runs low, prayer soon brings in fresh streams of mercy. Our God provided for the buildings, and there they stand in their beauty; day by day he provides for the little ones, and there they laugh in their joy."

The total number of children who have been received into the institution from the commencement is 2,519, of whom over a thousand belonged to the Church of England; and as the remainder belong to nine denominations, including Romanists, and 334 not specified, we have sufficient demonstration of the catholicity of the institution. There are now resident in the Orphanage, 225 boys and 239 girls, a total of 464. The school work has been well maintained, while the religious training of the children has been well looked after. At the Scripture examination of the Brixton Auxiliary of the Sunday School Union on "The Introduction of the Gospel into Europe," the Orphanage children won eleven prizes besides 182 first and second class certificates. The Band of Hope has 220 members, while the International Bible-reading Association, including some former scholars, has 550 names on its roll of membership.

Mr. E. P. Collier, J.P., presided at the meeting in the Spurgeon Memorial Hall at 3.45. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon said the report was a really rosy one; God had been good to them, mercies had come from every quarter, there had never been a better year, though there had been something about the early days which could never occur again. It seemed as though the Lord made them feel their great loss as little as possible. Friends had been called home, they had received many legacies, and on the previous day a lady, who wished her name to be unknown, had given him £1,000 for the work.

The Chairman said that there were three monuments to Mr. Spurgeon. The Tabernacle commemorated him as a preacher; secondly, there is the immense store of his sermons; and thirdly, there is the Orphanage.

Rev. G. C. Britton, speaking from experience of one who had sold papers in the streets of Reading at ten years of age, he had proved that the education given at the Orphanage was sound. It was a work which cannot be spared.

After Mr. F. G. Ladds, the secretary, had read the financial statement, Rev. Frank Smith (Camberwell) spoke.

Simon Peter.

OUTLINE BIBLE-READINGS.

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, B.D.

6.—THE GREAT TEST.

AFTER great blessing comes severe discipline. The testing came to Peter through deeper teaching, new and strange revelations of the Master, teaching about the Cross. Until now no definite or clear word about the Cross. Nearly two years of the ministry had passed without this revelation. See Matt. iv. 17, "From that time;" and Matt. xvi. 21, "From that time." Disclosed in the last year of ministry. Earlier allusions only vague, veiled and indirect. See John ii. 19; iii. 14; Matt. ix. 15; John vi. 51; Matt. xvi. 4. Now He spake "openly" (Mark viii. 32). Circumstances called for it. Storms threatened, end approaching; above all, disciples were more spiritually prepared for it after Peter's confession. Study Matt. xvi. 21-28; Mark viii. 31-38; Luke ix. 22-27.

I.—THE MASTER'S REVELATION (Matt. xvi. 21).

1. Note the detailed statement. Fivefold revelation of the Cross. (a) Place—Jerusalem; (b) experience—"suffer;" (c) source—Jewish authorities; (d) extent—death; (e) outcome—resurrection.

2. Consider the wise purpose. Hostility of Jews rapidly coming to head. No possibility of winning them. Hence disciples must face future. Also ambitions as of earthly Messiahship and glory to be checked. Ardour for temporal power and authority to be damped. Above all, reminder of great facts of sin and redemption.

II.—THE DISCIPLE'S RESPONSE (Matt. xvi. 22).

1. Consider his prompt action. "Then Peter took Him," i.e., laid hold of His hand. Doubtless elated by Master's glowing words (17-19), and in danger of pride. Yet truly well meant and generous in intention.

2. Remark his astonishing words. Actually began to "rebuke" his Master, and said, "Pity Thyself (so Greek); this shall never be unto Thee," i.e., "Put pain and sorrow out of Thy life." "Sacrifice duty to comfort." Just as at the Temptation (Luke iv), the suggestion was a "short cut" to the Throne, avoiding the cross. The very idea of suffering and death was intolerable to Peter.

III.—THE MASTER'S REBUKE (Matt. xvi. 23).

1. Dwell on the terrible epithet, "Satan." Only a little while ago "Blessed"; now, "Satan." An awful contrast, and one as real as the other.

2. Ponder the sad explanation. "Thou savourest not, &c." R.V. "mindest." Greek implies whole bent of moral being, mind, heart, and will. Cf. same Greek word in Rom. viii. 5, 6, 27; Col. iii. 2; Rom. xii. 16; Phil. iii. 19.

N.B.—May we not infer from Peter's silence that this rebuke was beautifully taken? At any rate, later on he had learnt the lessson. See 1 Peter ii. 20.

IV.—THE MASTER'S REMINDER (Matt. xvi. 24-27).

1. The new call. "Then," i.e., arising immediately out of circumstances. Not only a cross for the Master (v. 21), but for the disciples also (v. 24). Three great laws of discipleship. Denial of self; taking up cross; following Christ. What is self-denial? Denial of self, not merely denying certain things to self, but denying self, abjuring self, doing to self what Peter did to Christ, denying it, ignoring it. "Not I." "None of self." What is "taking up the cross"? Never mistake our sins for the cross. Bad temper, sloth, irritability are not crosses, but sins. Our cross is God's will in daily life, even though it crosses our will. What is to "follow"? Trust, imitate, obey.

2. The threefold reason. Note "for" in vv. 25, 26, 27. (a) "For" (v. 25). It is the only true life. (b) "For" (v. 26). There is nothing comparable with it. (c) "For" (v. 27). The future will reveal its glory.

N.B.—Review last study and this together in Matt. xvi. 13-28, and note:—(1) Christ Himself (13-17). (2) Church of Christ (18-20). (3) Cross of Christ (21-23). (4) Confession of Christ (24-26). (5) Coming of Christ (27, 28). The whole Gospel is here.

LESSONS.

1. Our Lord's constant endeavour (v. 21). To lead His disciples further and deeper. "Lead me in Thy truth" (Psa. xxv. 5). He has "many things to say" (John xvi. 12).

2. Our own deplorable contrasts (Cf. vv. 17 and 23). The hour of praise is the hour of peril. "A full cup is hard to carry without spilling." "A way to hell from the gates of heaven" (Bunyan).

3. Our Lord's faithful dealings (23, 24). No lowering of the standard to suit Peter's ideas. No reduction of His demand on us. Tells Peter frankly his sin and error, and repeats the demand with clearness. "Every man is the stronger for knowing the worst he can know against himself, and for acting on that knowledge."

4. Our own perpetual need. The Cross. The Lord knew this, and hence the emphasis. Notice, in Church history and individual life to-day, these two great facts:—(a) Christian theology is always defective without the Cross. (b) Christian experience is equally defective apart from the Cross (Gal. vi. 14).

Thus was Peter tested and trained. The best training for usefulness is the training of our own character in relation to God.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

BELFAST.

REV. DR. HENRY and Mr. T. Armon Jones, those distinguished Gospel Temperance workers, are at present labouring in Belfast, and are attracting large congregations. Owing to the difficulty of getting people into a hall in the summer-time, a large canvas tent has been erected capable of seating 2,000 persons, and is placed in an open space known as the Chapel Fields.

Dr. Henry's meetings have assumed a new form owing to the special circumstances of the city; the mission—which deeply stirred the community—conducted by Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander closed only at the end of May, so that there was an unwonted readiness to hear the Gospel message. Salvation has been the theme in many homes, and in warerooms and workshops for weeks past. The people have been stirred, and the fire is burning happily in many directions over Belfast. It was felt by the evangelists that to follow up the good and gracious work inaugurated by Messrs. Torrey and Alexander would be wise and right, and accordingly, while not neglecting the Temperance question, they put their strength into a clear and urgent presentation of the Gospel, night after night. God has graciously owned His servants, for not only have they had many hundreds sign the pledge, but in addition they have had the joy of seeing a goodly number of seekers each night enter into life and peace through believing on Jesus Christ.

Dr. Henry's mode of procedure has been both simple and effective. During the earlier part of the meeting he speaks a few earnest words regarding the evils of the drink curse, and shows that Christian people should have no complicity with it. He then repeats his form of pledge, and the stewards pass the pledge boards for signature. Each night has found an encouraging response, often reaching to almost 100 names.

This over, Dr. Henry proceeds to give an evangelistic address. They have been on such subjects as "Lot pitching his tent towards Sodom," "The power of the blood," "Dying as a fool," &c. The address on Lot was a most stirring message and warning, pointing out the overmastering power of sin if allowed to continue its hold on the human heart. Again and again it was felt that the audience was being gripped by an unseen hand, and brought face to face with solemn facts that needed to touch the heart and conscience. About thirty persons made their way to the front of the platform to be dealt with about the great salvation, and almost all of them were men. The discourse on the power of the blood was a cogent plea for substitution, and was a most refreshing and moving deliverance. These Gospel addresses revealed what a mighty preacher of the good news Dr. Henry is. He captures his audience, and has the power of making them listen to truths which are unpalatable to the human heart, yet essential for man to know.

Mr. Jones has been an important factor in the effectiveness of the work. His messages in song have the finish of a cultured artist; but, more important, they come hot from the heart of an earnest servant of God who is longing to bring souls into the Kingdom. Mr. Jones is a true evangelist, and all his powers are put into his sermons in song, just as his gifted colleague throws all his fiery energy into his utterances which sometimes leap from his lips like burning lava.

Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones had a remarkable dinner-hour meeting among the men on the Queen's Island. The Queen's Island means Harland and Wolff's shipbuilding works, where 12,000 men are employed in constructing the leviathans that now plough the waters of every ocean.

Dr. Henry was accompanied by Revs. Henry Montgomery, Jas. Cregan, Wm. Witheron, Ed. Hazelton, J. R. Ballantine, Pastor Sharp, Mr. Wm. Grove, and other friends. As soon as the men had finished their dinner they began to assemble round a lorry placed in a convenient centre, and with the singing of a hymn crowds were seen coming from almost every direction. Dr. Henry gave this great audience an earnest and effective address, based upon the well-known verse, Matt. xi. 28.

Dr. Henry has also had two Bible readings, and will conduct others before finishing his mission. His address on "God's Palace of Peace" was a beautiful exposition of the fifteenth chapter of the Gospel by John. Last Lord's Day was memorable; over 260 pledges were taken, and Dr. Henry preached with remarkable power. The subject of the afternoon discourse was, "Where Heaven Is, and How to Get There," and was specially addressed to women. A very large congregation assembled, and listened with the deepest interest to the comforting words of the fourteenth of John; twenty-five persons made their way to the front at the close. The message at night, intended for men, was based upon the sentence, "Men, the glory and the scandal of the universe." The tent was crowded, and strong men bowed under the weight of the message. All over the tent persons were dealt with about a personal interest in Christ, as well as those who had come to the front, and when the last lingering group left the field the hour was advanced. It was a solemn, yet happy and triumphant close to a midsummer Sabbath day. H. M.

Aldersgate Noon Meeting.

TELLING words from several well-known brethren made the Aldersgate Noon Meeting on Monday last an occasion of much encouragement. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided. The address, by Mr. Chas. Inglis, was on John xiv. 3. Two important questions were suggested by the speaker: "What will transpire when the Lord comes again?" and "How ought I to live in view of His coming?" Mr. Inglis briefly noted, in reply to the first question, that there will be resurrection, transformation, satisfaction, coronation and consummation. We shall be with Him, and "go no more out." The life, then, of the expectant believer should be one of holiness, for we are to "purify ourselves, even as He is pure"; and of earnest labour, "Occupy till I come." Mr. Inglis illustrated his address with well-chosen incidents drawn from his ripe experience of men and things.

Among the subsequent speakers was Mr W. R. Lane, who gave a brief account of some fruitful meetings which he recently conducted among the Guards in camp at Camberley. By the kindness of a friend, a large tent had been provided, which the men could use for reading and writing, and there, in the evenings, Mr. Lane had preached the Gospel. When he commenced to speak, the men put aside books and letters, listening with undivided attention to the solemn message. Many decided for Christ. A striking case was that of a stalwart Guardsman, who, after rushing away to answer the roll and thus securing liberty for a little time longer, came back at once to speak to the evangelist, and was pointed to the Saviour.

Some impassioned words followed from Pastor Emilio Olsson, who called for more earnest and practical obedience to the great command recorded in Matt. xxviii. 19, 20, and pictured the urgent spiritual need of South America, the "Neglected Continent."

The Banffshire Revival.

A POSTSCRIPT.

FURTHER particulars regarding the Banffshire revival having been, by different friends, asked for, it may be stated that since the revival first broke out, most of the fishermen, as well as the "gutting" girls, as they are called, have gone off to different parts in the north and north-west in pursuit of their calling, leaving the villages where the great awakening took place well-nigh depleted of their working population. But at the various places to which they have gone, splendid testimony is being borne by them as to the great change experienced during the memorable season of grace. They have not left their religion behind them, but have carried the fire with them, and are making its power felt where they are.

Mr. JAMES MARSHALL, evangelist, one of the United Free Church deputies, who has for a number of summers conducted meetings among the fishermen in the north, has just returned from Stromness, in the Orkneys, where he has been conducting meetings for five weeks, and his report is, that he has not for many years seen among the fishermen anything to compare with the spiritual interest that exists at present. Hundreds upon hundreds of fishermen from Findochty, Portessie, and Portknockie, were met with at Stromness, and numbers to whom he spoke personally, and others whom he heard testifying in public, were all aglow with what had taken place in the different villages to which they belong.

The meetings throbbed with power and interest, and whereas in former years, during the hours of public worship on Sabbath evenings, the fishermen could be seen in swarms, lolling and lounging about in the public thoroughfares, this year the streets were nearly swept clean, many of the men crowding into church half an hour before the time for beginning the service. Then, on Sabbath nights, after the church services were over, a great open-air meeting was held at the pier-head, at which the men testified. The difficulty was not to get such meetings set agoing; the great difficulty was to get them stopped after they were started. Gathering in momentum as they went on, the air rang with the glad testimonies that were poured forth. One would say, "I could not have stood here three months ago." Another would say: "Two months ago I was saved," and on the current of testimony, with varying details, would flow, one after another rushing eagerly into the ring to speak in praise of Him who "yielded His life an atonement for sin, and opened the life-gate that all may go in."

It was our Lord who said that "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," and men, formerly living in sin, would certainly not be in such a hurry to speak unless they were conscious of having obtained something worth speaking about. Mr. Marshall has been greatly cheered, and deeply impressed, with what he saw and heard among the Banffshire fishermen in Stromness.

Glowing and reliable testimony has also been furnished by Rev. JAMES MUIR (St. Andrew's U.F. Church, Glasgow), who recently returned from conducting a mission among the fishermen at Stornoway, on the north-east coast. The first Sunday of his visit was cold and wet, and somewhat against successful meetings, but the second Sunday was "a great day." At all the regular church services there were large audiences, and at the close of the services in the churches in the evening, a large open-air meeting was held, at which about a thousand people were present. The ministers, Established and United Free, agreed to give the fishermen the opportunity of testifying, and a number did so, nearly all of whom hailed from the Banffshire sea-board. Their testimonies were exhilarating and characteristic. At ten o'clock, with the interest still running high, an adjournment was made to a large hall connected with one of the churches, and hundreds, both men and women, streamed in. Rev. ALEXANDER MURRAY (Stornoway), whose ministry in the place only commenced about a year ago, and who has been the means of much blessing throughout the winter, conducted the service. After a short address had been given, Mr. Murray did what he had never done in his life before, he asked all who wished to be prayed for to raise their hands. Almost at once half-a-dozen did so.

Mr. Muir who has seen times of blessing in different places, both in connection with his own ministry prior to coming to Glasgow, and otherwise, says he has seen nothing so cheering for a long time. And since coming home he has had a letter from a young lady (the daughter of a minister) who has been taking part in the work in Stornaway, telling of results that are being obtained among the fisher girls, some of whom were brought to Christ while Mr. Muir was there, and saying it has been a great blessing to her to have had a share in the work.

From this brief report it will be seen that if Banffshire is suffering loss through the absence of the men, other places are benefiting by their presence.

J. C.

Mr. A. H. Towers at Cockermouth.

Cockermouth, Cumberland, has been favoured with a gracious manifestation of Divine power. Mr. TOWERS, of the Evangelization Society, has just concluded a five weeks' tent mission, and the results have filled our hearts with joy and thankfulness. The missioner was warmly welcomed on account of his successful labours in a neighbouring town twelve months ago. Ministers and clergy threw themselves into the effort heartily. Invitations were scattered broadcast, and addresses given in the streets. The effect was to draw increasing congregations until the tent was too small to contain them. The missioner's grasp of Scripture teaching, his fresh and striking methods of presenting it, and his outspoken evangelical appeals, at once told upon his hearers. Night after night from the commencement awakened souls testified to their being anxious or having accepted the Saviour. These included the non-Christian members of whole families, three in one case and five in another.

There was no sensationalism employed; it was just a forceful presentation of the Gospel, given with fidelity and persuasiveness. God has signally owned his word and revived spiritual life in the churches, while adding largely to their membership. The young converts have all been induced to give their names as members of the church they preferred. Altogether it has been a happy united mission, the influence and fruits of which will assuredly abide. Sunday, June 14, was the last and crowning day of the mission. The early morning prayer, praise, and testimony meeting drew a large congregation, some coming miles from the country. In the evening, the large Wesleyan church was crowded from floor to ceiling, and deep solemnity fell upon the people. When, at the close, those who had decided for Christ were requested to stand up upwards of eighty rose.

Mr. Henry Varley's Meetings.

From Dublin to Stockton-on-Tees gives a long day's journey, but it was worth much expenditure of time and strength to have part in the opening services of the new and beautiful church erected for the assembly under the pastoral care of Rev. N. H. Patrick, whose services in connection with Talbot Tabernacle, London, W., many of your readers are cognisant of. Truly this devoted servant of Christ is doing a most valuable work in this busy centre. I scarcely know a more commodious or better-arranged building in the North of England. The Sunday nights saw the place packed to the doors, many unable to enter. Deep interest pervaded the congregation, and the services, variously held by Messrs. Fullerton, Varley, and Dr. Harry Guinness, drew together thousands to hear the Word.

The writer had promised to visit Crewkerne, in Somerset, on Thursday last. Hence another long railway journey. Really the facilities for travel are wonderful. I sometimes wonder what such men as Whitefield and Wesley would have accomplished had they such means of moving about. I believe they would have turned this England of ours upside down! It greatly needs it.

Now we are at Lewes, in Sussex, for the great Protestant demonstration, held on Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday last. The Martyrs' Memorial pillar stands out prominently on the grand hillside, and a splenid testimony to civil and religious liberty, as also against Romanism and priestcraft in every form has been, and is being borne, in this quaint and pleasantly-situated town. I was shown the position where the steps are, which lead down to the cellars where the nine Protestant martyrs were confined. They were brought up at the instance of Roman Catholic tyranny and persecution, and publicly burnt in the principal street of this town on June 22, 1557. No wonder that righteous indignation burns in our hearts as we stand where Rome consigned these noble witnesses for Christ, to the fire.

H. V.

The Evangelization Society has sent a tent into this part of Sussex. It is in charge of Mr. POUNCEY, and for the past month services have been held in this village. God has blessed the labours of His servants, and several, we believe, have been converted to God. The tent has now gone to Cuckfield, and prayer is asked that the Lord of the harvest would convince of sin, and bring many to Himself.

FRANCIS C. BRADING, Lindfield.

Blackpool Y.M.C.A. Services.

Mr. BEWLEY WEAVER and Mr. FRANK WEAVER were speaker and singer respectively at Blackpool on Lord's Day last in the Hippodrome at 11, 3 and 7. The afternoon meeting was for "men only," and about a thousand persons attended the evening meeting. On the two following Sundays, June 28 and July 5, Rev. John McNeill will be the speaker, and the Tower Pavilion, one of the finest buildings out of London, has been secured for Sunday next. Mr. Geo. Clarke is expected on the 12th, and Mr. W. R. Lane on the 19th.

L. J.

Mr. W. H. Jude at Oswestry.

On Sunday week the Public Hall, Oswestry, was crowded by an attentive and appreciative audience, who listened to Mr. W. H. JUDE while he conducted a service of Gospel Song. A choir, consisting of members of most of the Free Churches of the town, assisted. The meeting was opened by the audience singing, "Jesu, lover of my soul," to Dr. Joseph Parry's famous tune, "Aberystwith," and the rendering of it did credit to the audience. Afterwards Mr. Jude gave three short Bible-readings interspersed with hymns. The preacher earnestly appealed to the Christians in the audience for closer fellowship with God. During the week similar services were held, and many present were encouraged and helped by the meetings.

Rev. James Sprunt at Bath.

During the renovation of Widcombe Baptist Chapel (Mr. J. R. Huntley, pastor), a tent mission is being conducted by Rev. JAMES SPRUNT. During the whole of last week good congregations gathered, both afternoon and evening, although the weather was very wet and sometimes very cold. The Bible readings have been a help to many Christians, and in the Gospel meetings some have "passed out of death into life." A recent issue of the Bath Herald says:—"The meetings were very largely attended, that in the evening being crowded to excess, a considerable number of persons having to remain outside the tent during the whole of the service. It was interesting to see the neighbours in the terrace opposite lending their chairs to accommodate the large number who could not get under canvas. One side of the tent was taken down so that all the people might join in the service. . . . The missioner's address was upon 'The Forgiveness of Sins.' It was a stirring appeal, and listened to very attentively, a large number remaining to the after-meeting."

Arnesby, Leicestershire.

A five days' mission, at Arnesby, near Leicester, concluded on June 18, was conducted by Mr. W. OLNEY, with Miss TIBBETTS as soloist. The village is small, containing about 400 people, but is of some note among Baptists as being the birthplace of the illustrious Robert Hall. The heavy rain somewhat interfered with the attendances on the Sunday, and prevented the holding of open-air services on the Sunday and Monday. Each weekday there was a Bible-reading in the afternoon, and a children's service at six o'clock, and one for adults at 7.30.

On the last three days of the mission, there was a mid-day open-air service for half an hour. Parents have experienced joy in seeing their children decide for Christ, and teachers been made glad in seeing their scholars give themselves to the Saviour. The church has been blessed by a spirit of earnest prayer which had been called forth in anticipation of the mission, and faith has been strengthened by prayer being answered.

GEORGE HIRST (pastor).

Gospel Lantern Services.

A remarkably successful series of Gospel Lantern Services, held during the past seven months on the Sabbath evenings in the Synod Hall, Edinburgh, have been just brought to a close for the season. Great crowds have been attracted, often upwards of 2,000 people being present, and most gratifying testimonies are at hand as to the blessing received by many who had not entered a place of worship for many years, while many of the young have had a fresh interest created in the Bible. Both the Old and the New Testament have supplied subjects which have given splendid opportunities for fixing on heart and conscience the blessings of the Gospel—some by the words sung, and others by the words spoken and illustrated—frequently the deepest impressions being created, and permanent change of life following.

The effort was under the direction of Mr. G. A. Barclay, of Carrubbers Close Mission, and who received some of the best possible clerical and lay help; while a special choir of ladies and gentlemen, all of whom were earnest Christians, and were under the direction of Mrs. Barclay, led the service of prayer, with evident tokens of blessing.

The first of a series of outdoor services arranged for by the local Free Church Council was held on Tuesday week on the Market Ground, Farnworth, Lancs. Rev.

J. F. Munro presided, and addresses were given by Revs. J. G. Hodson and B. Moore. The singing was led by the choir of the Market Street Congregational Church, and there was a large congregation. It is intended to continue the services through the summer months, the choirs from the different Free Churches in turn providing the musical portion of the service.

The Gospel at Ascot Races.

In spite of heavy rain and swampy ground, the Racecourse Mission tent was erected at Ascot last week, and the opinion of the workers is that we have never experienced more of the presence of God than we have done this year. All classes of men and women have been reached; the King and Queen deliberately read the texts upon our literature bags as they drove to the Royal enclosure. Society and "clubdom" received with readiness the tastefully got-up "gold Gospels," and the lowliest present were remembered. Besides all this, the tent itself was ever preaching to the thousands who passed to Windsor, and to those who strolled along the course, reminding them of the truth that "Righteousness exalteth the nation."

One of our meetings on Wednesday was of a remarkable character. While we were at tea in the tent, which was situated only a few yards from the course, a vivid flash of lightning, followed by Heaven's artillery, gave notice of a coming storm, and without further warning the rain began to fall in torrents. In a few moments the tent was filled with well-dressed people, and immediately we got to work. "Jesus is a rock in a weary land, a shelter in the time of storm," was selected as the opening hymn, and this was followed by a number of brief and pointed addresses. Those present were thus brought face to face with God in the awe-inspiring thunderstorm, and one who had known the Lord, but had fallen away through business snares, was thoroughly broken down, and expressed his desire to return to God. He was told, as all had been told, that Jesus is the shelter he must seek, and this he determined to do, we promising our prayers on his behalf.

Thursday proved the only fine day of the week, and the immense crowds present kept us at work from ten in the morning till six in the evening, many meetings being held during the day with the manifest presence of God. At one of these meetings a gentleman was seen to be in tears, and in a conversation which followed gave evidence of a desire to seek the Lord. Before he left us he remarked, "I am more pleased that I met you than if I had backed all the winners to-day."

As is our custom, the police were provided with shelter and refreshment, hundreds of them accepting the invitation, as did also a number of telegraph boys, some of whom were members of the Reading Telegraph Messengers' Christian Association.

Racecourse Mission, Royal Road, S.E.

Personalia.

Mr. Josiah Nix is about to start for a cruise to the North Cape. On his return he will resume his work with the North Scottish fishermen at Fraserburgh.

After completing his evangelistic tour in Australia and New Zealand, Rev. James Lyall was to sail for Europe at the end of May. He has arranged to spend some time on the Continent, but hopes to reach London by the middle of July. Letters may be addressed to the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate Street, E.C.

Mr. T. D. Roberts, formerly superintendent of the Boston Industrial Home, has arrived in England. Prior to sailing he was the recipient of many expressions of good will from friends of the institution, of which he has been superintendent and manager for the past fifteen years. Mr. Roberts expects to engage in religious and philanthropic work in England.

Mr. Colin Young is known to many of our readers as, for thirty years, a voluntary worker among the Jews of the East End. He writes us that he is in great need of £150 to meet an overdraft incurred in furnishing his convalescent home for Jewish people, young and old. He is now in his seventy-eighth year, still making the farm more comfortable and suitable for the poor and weak. He thinks some of his old friends, and others, may like to help him.

Rev. E. P. Hammond. We have been asked to reprint the following extract from a letter which we wrote a few years ago, and which was reprinted into a American paper:—"A new generation has sprung up since Brother Hammond last visited our shores, and I believe he would find again in England and Wales, in Scotland and Ireland, a warm welcome from the parents who owe their conversion to him in their childhood, and a fruitful field among their children."

Obituary.

Rev. Frederick Langham.

Many will learn with deep sorrow of the passing away of Rev. Frederick Langham, the veteran Fiji missionary, which occurred at Stoke Newington on Sunday last. In him the Wesleyan Missionary Society had a stalwart advocate of its claims, a task to which he gave himself unreservedly since retiring from his labours in the South Seas. There is no more marvellous story of modern triumphs of the Gospel than that of the mission to Fiji. Sixty years ago the Fijians knew nothing of Christ and His salvation, but were sunk in superstition, cruelty, and cannibalism. They possessed no written language. This was given to them by Wesleyan missionaries.

Entering the ministry in 1858, Mr. Langham was shortly afterwards sent to Fiji, and many were the thrilling stories of his early missionary days which he often recited in illustrating the wonderful way in which God delivered His servant from the toils of blood-thirsty men. It was given to Mr. Langham to witness a remarkable transformation wrought by the Gospel in Fiji during thirty years of devoted labours. The natives now read the Bible in their own tongue, and it is taught in all the day schools of the colony. More than 50,000 Fijians meet in classes for Christian fellowship, and in their turn are sending missionaries to the far-off islands of New Britain and New Guinea.

Five or six years Mr. Langham was engaged on the revision of the Fijian Bible, and in this important undertaking was greatly aided by his devoted wife and their adopted daughter, Miss Langham-Lindsay. A sad bereavement befel this honoured worker some time ago. First Miss Lindsay was called home; and within a few days Mrs. Langham, who had shared with her husband for so many years the perils and joys of work in Fiji, was laid to rest. The last occasion on which Mr. Langham ministered to his South Sea Islanders was at the time of the Coronation, when the Fijian soldiers encamped at the Alexandra Palace, all of whom save one were Methodists, gathered for worship every Sabbath, the veteran missionary preaching to them in their own tongue.

Welsh Notes.

The Welsh Wesleyan General Assembly has met this month at Pontypridd. During some of the sittings the chair was occupied by Rev. J. Shaw Banks, President of the Wesleyan Conference. The report of the South Wales Synod regarding home mission affairs showed that the yearly collections amounted to £577 17s. 10d. At the missionary meeting addresses were given by Revs. Dr. Shaw Banks, Dr. Pope, and C. H. Kelly.

On the occasion of laying the foundation-stone of a new Congregational church at Barry, Glamorganshire, Mr. Albert Spicer referred to the statement made by Mr. Charles Booth in his recent work on Christian life and work in London that the Congregational was too much the Church of the middle classes. Mr. Spicer admitted that there was some truth in the allegation; but it was overlooked that in their churches there was no distinction between the working classes and the middle classes.

The extension of the influence of the Keswick Movement to Wales has been laid on the heart of some of God's people for a long time, and it is with great satisfaction we notice that arrangements have been made to hold a Convention at Llandrindod Wells, August 3-7. Some of the most prominent of the Keswick speakers will be there, including Rev. E. H. Hopkins and Rev. F. B. Meyer, with Mr. Albert Head as chairman. The proposed convention has the warmest support of some of the leading clergy and ministers in North and South Wales, and it may be added that the late Dean Howell took the keenest interest in the arrangements right up to the time of his sudden and lamented death. We sincerely trust it may become known throughout Wales that this convention is to be held, and that the various churches, especially in the immediate neighbourhood and within convenient distances may do their utmost to support the project. The influence of such a gathering upon the spiritual life of the Principality must be considerable, and in these days of difficulty and differences every opportunity of bringing together the people of God in the various churches is to be heartily welcomed.

About Books.

The deeply interesting story of the Christian Colportage Association is well told in By Voice and Book, by the secretary, Mr. H. D. Brown. The steps by which the Lord has led His servants are fitted to strengthen faith, while numerous incidents show that the Seed of the Word is with power when sown by men led of the Spirit. An abundance of portraits and other illustrations adds greatly to the attractions of a book worthy of an honoured place among the annals of home mission effort. (2s. post free. 37, Farringdon Street, E.C.)

Dark Days in England: and the Dawn of the Reformation. This little volume, by Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D., follows interesting predecessors entitled "Sunrise in Britain" and "The Eclipse of Truth." The aim is to write Church history for the people; and the author is one whose works it is a real pleasure to commend. The latest volume of the series deals for the most part with Wycliffe and his time, and there are striking illustrations. This is a book for the times, and we trust it will find many readers in the homes of the people. (1s. 6d. "Home Words" Office.)

The Schoolboy's Pocket Book, approaching the "finger" shape, and bound in leather, gives timely helps and hints for lads. It has been written by a public schoolmaster, and is well worth reading. (6d. net. Smith's Publishing Co., 4, St. Bride Street, E.C.)

The Manual of Household Work and Management, by Annie Butterworth (1s. net. Hutchinson & Co), puts into compact form counsel and guidance which will be invaluable to the youthful housekeeper, and will repay perusal by those who are more experienced.

The Twelve Sermons series by C. H. Spurgeon has been enriched by a volume On Humility, the contents of which sparkle with that sanctified common-sense and shrewd spiritual application which have endeared the great preacher to so many thousands who never saw him or heard his voice. (1s. Passmore & Alabaster.)

John Ploughman's Pictures. By C. H. Spurgeon. (6d. Passmore & Alabaster.) A cheap edition of the companion volume of "John Ploughman's Talk." There are some plain words for plain people, and those who take pleasure in bringing such words and people into contact will do well to lend a hand in the circulation of so excellent a book.

The appearance in parts of an attractive "Biographical Edition" of Dean Farrar's Life of Christ (6d. net. Cassell) places within popular reach a book to be treasured in any Christian family. Young people will turn to it with avidity, and their seniors will find much light on the Divine record. The illustrations are numerous and excellent.

An excellent gift-book for young women is More Talks in the Twilight, a series of essays reprinted from the Girls' Own Paper, in which Ruth Lamb gives us some of those sage counsels on important themes which have earned the gratitude of many readers. The chapters touch on many and varied topics, but in all the reader is led to the great Source of strength and wisdom. (2s. 6d. R.T.S.)

The Violet Cross League is supplementing its endeavours to inculcate due observance of the Third Commandment by issuing a series of cards. These embody striking comments on the evils of swearing and the results of the profanation of God's holy name. Packets of fifty may be obtained free from Mr. Arthur Garke, 11, Durham Terrace, Christchurch Street, Chelsea, S.W.

Notwithstanding the high value which has always been attached by Bible students to marginal references, reliance on them has sometimes led to disappointment. Several distinct systems of references are attached to editions of the Authorized Version, some being mainly concerned with verbal and others with subject coincidence and parallelism. It was, therefore, a cause of general satisfaction when an influential committee was entrusted with the preparation of a body of references for the Revised Version. That they did their work thoroughly, and reduced the result to a system which placed it at the command of the simplest reader, is well known and gratefully acknowledged by all who have used the minion type edition of 1898. As the book became known it grew steadily in public favour, and to meet the consequent demand an edition in bourgeois type has now been added. Typography, paper (white and India), and binding are all of the excellent order associated in the public mind with the work of the Oxford and Cambridge University Presses, and leave nothing to be desired. The volume is a marvel of compactness and neatness, as well as of quality, and is published at prices ranging from 6s. upwards.

Church of England.

Rev. William Hind, Vicar of St. Barnabas's, Holloway, has accepted the position of minister of St. John's Chapel, Downshire Hill, Hampstead, N.W., just vacated by Canon Girdlestone.

The first of a series of "Westminster Conferences" was held recently at the Church House, S.W. The object of the Conferences, which are under the patronage of the Bishops of Durham and Liverpool, is to afford opportunity to Evangelicals and Moderate Churchmen for discussion of Church and social questions. The discussion was on the subject of "Church Reform and Lay Representation." The Bishop of Hereford occupied the chair, and the Deans of Canterbury and Peterborough, the Hon. Matthew White Ridley, M.P., Colonel Robert Williams, M.P., Chancellor P. V. Smith, and others were present.

Rev. R. Catterall, of St. Augustine's, Highbury, N., in a letter to his people, says that "the very prominent feature of the year's work has been the steady influence and development of the work among educated men. The monthly services for men have been attended by an average of about 400 each month. A genuine interest in the services is shown. Wet days do not materially affect the numbers. Much still remains to be done. But with the enthusiasm and sympathetic help of the many men who attend, we hope to see greater things. In my mind there lurks an ardent desire to do something on week-days for the scores of young men of good class who reside in our near neighbourhood. London is full of traps—mental and moral—for these. Some day, I believe, we shall be able to develop a new effort for these brothers of ours."

Congregational.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, who will be the President next year of the National Council of Evangelical Free Churches, proposes, from January next, to devote three days a week to visiting local Councils.

The congregation worshipping at the Murphy Memorial Hall, New Kent Road, S.E., continues to make satisfactory progress. The membership is steadily increasing. At a recent Communion Service the pastor, Rev. George Fuller, received into fellowship twelve new members.

Rev. D. Tatton has resigned the pastorate of the church at Hemel Hempstead, after nearly twenty-one years of ministry, to undertake the arduous work of reorganization, and of rebuilding the church, at Bushey. This he is doing at the joint request of the church at Bushey and the Herts Congregational Union. Great regret is felt by his people.

Mr. C. A. Jeffery, of Glasgow, was set apart on Wednesday, 17th, at West Kensington Church, for service in Natal. Revs. Hugh P. Young, J. L. Green, Arthur Giles, and D. B. Hooke took part. Mr. Jeffery sails on July 11 in the Gaika for Durban, where he will be associated with Rev. F. C. Rollin.

In response to appeals from his church and congregation, and particularly from the men's Bible class at Skelmersdale, Rev. J. W. Davies has decided to remain there as pastor. Consequently, the pastorate of the church at Gorton, which had been accepted by Mr. Davies, remains vacant.

The Year Book for 1903 of Clifton Road Church, Brighton (Rev. Edward Shillito), records a busy year in all departments of church service. The work among the young and in the mission is most hopeful. The membership stands at 328. The summary of financial statements gives a total of £1,520; of this £116 being raised for the L.M.S.

The autumnal session of the Congregational Union is to meet at Bournemouth during the week beginning Monday, October 12, under the presidency of Dr. Horton. The Colonial Missionary Society's sermon, on the Thursday, will be preached by Rev. George Jackson, of Edinburgh, who will also speak at the evening meeting, with Mr. Frank Lenwood, of Mansfield College, and Dr. Harry Guinness.

Baptist.

The first anniversary services of Pier Avenue Chapel, Clacton-on-Sea, have been held, sermons being preached by the pastor (Rev. Percy A. Clements), and Rev. Charles Spurgeon. The report shows that good progress has been made during the year. During the services the sum of £47 was raised towards the Building Fund.

Memorial stones in connection with a new Baptist Church at Watford were laid on Wednesday last. The work was commenced about eight months ago in temporary premises, and has been attended with much blessing. A freehold site has been given in a capital position, and it is hoped that funds will be forthcoming to enable the friends to open free of debt. The pastor is Rev. W. H. Chillman, who for some seven years laboured in St. Luke's, E.C.

Although the formal opening of the Baptist Church House took place last April, the interior arrangements of the building were not then sufficiently advanced to admit of the occupation of the premises by the Baptist Union and other societies. It is now announced that such progress has been made that the Union will enter into possession about the second week in July, and the first meeting of the Council, in the new Council Chamber, will be held on July 21. The gathering will be of a special character, and Dr. Maclaren has intimated his intention to be present if possible.

City Road Chapel, Winchester (Rev. A. W. Wood) has been re-opened after thorough renovation. Rev. J. R. Wood, ex-President of the Baptist Union, preached a telling and instructive sermon, and subsequently addressed a large and enthusiastic meeting representative of all the Free Churches of the city. Mr. J. J. Allen, J.P., of Bournemouth, presided, and Rev. D. D. John, B.A. (Congregationalist), also spoke. The total cost of the renovation, including the installation of a new system of heating, amounted to about £200, the whole of which, it was hoped, would be met by the recent sale of work and the generous gifts of friends.

The annual meetings of the Southern Baptist Association have been held in Portland Chapel, Southampton, and were highly successful. The Moderator, Mr. A. Tucker, of Salisbury, presided. The reports from the churches were encouraging. Alderman George White, M.P., president of the Baptist Union, gave a stimulating address. Rev. G. Roberts Hern, of Portsmouth, read the circular letter, which was a potent pronouncement, and Rev. John Kemp, of Southsea, preached the annual sermon, which was a profitable message. Rev. T. E. Ruth, pastor of Portland Chapel, conducted the communion service. Rev. G. D. Hooper, of Bournemouth, was chosen Moderator.

Methodist.

The Wesley Guild movement makes steady progress, and it is likely that the annual report to be presented to Conference will show an enrolled membership of 100,000. In various parts of the country efforts are being made to raise funds for the Headquarters Establishment Fund.

The progress of the new Church House at Westminster is necessarily slow. Questions of altered frontage and a new street are being considered, and negotiations are being carried on with the public authorities—the Westminster Borough Council and the London County Council—and with the owners of adjoining property.

The Children's Home has purchased a property at Chipping Norton, which, after some necessary alterations, will be opened as a new branch. The intention is to carry out the wishes of friends who have generously offered handsome gifts for the establishment of a country Home suitable for cripple and invalid children—a work already begun on a small scale with considerable success.

At Saturday's sittings at Dudley of the Methodist New Connexion Conference, Rev. J. Mellor, of Halifax, was elected President for 1904. Considerable discussion took place on the question whether the extension fund should be applied for the sustenance of existing chapels, as well as for the starting of new work, and after the statement that many causes would languish, if not die out, without financial help grants were made to both kinds of work.

In connection with the Wesleyan Century Fund there is still an outstanding balance due from the circuits which have not yet completed the fulfilment of their promises. But progress is being made, and there is now no doubt as to the completion of the million sterling. The Conference will be asked to defer the closing of the accounts for another year. Mr. Hornabrook states that the total amount for chapel and school building towards which the Century Fund is asked to contribute has now risen to the sum of £3,100,000.

The fourteenth anniversary of the Sunday evening services in the Free Trade Hall (in connection with the Central Hall, Manchester and Salford Mission), was celebrated last Lord's Day. Gipsy Smith preached to a great assembly, hundreds failing to gain admission. On Saturday night a midnight meeting was held in the Central Hall. There was a large congregation of the men and women gathered from street and public-house by the well-organised workers of the mission, and a large number, mostly young men, remained after the service to talk with the missioners. These midnight services are held at regular intervals, and have resulted in great good, many of the rescued being now members of the mission church.

Presbyterian.

In connection with the Liverpool Presbytery, a Conference has been held on Religion and Morals. Rev. A. G. Goold held that the key to the whole situation lay in the Sunday-schools, and the whole system should be overhauled, and an effort made to get those who were leaving Sunday-school to enter directly into church life. Rev. R. McLean said that the chief difficulty to be encountered was the materialistic spirit. He thought, too, that the evening services ought to be more free and easy, and less restricted to form than at present. He did not think they would get the people to come to church in large numbers until the services were made free and open. The chief thing, however, was to have something really vital to say to the people.

There was a good attendance and a fair representation of the Presbytery at the ordination of Rev. J. N. Milne, at Poplar. Rev. Robert Milne, of Kensington, presided, and addressed the newly-ordained minister and the congregation. In the course of his remarks he stated that the Presbytery had felt increasing difficulty in carrying on the work in such artisan congregations, and, after careful consideration of the matter in all its bearings, they had now got power from the Synod to adopt a new experiment of ordaining a minister to labour for a period of two years. The Presbytery, however, did not intend to leave Mr. Milne to his own unaided efforts, but had appointed five of their number—two ministers and three elders—to help him in all the work of the congregation.

Society of Friends.

Prior to Westmoreland Quarterly Meeting a Conference was held on "The needs of our various meetings, and what means can be taken to help them." Twelve anonymous papers were read, some of only a few lines, others of several pages. Most of them laid emphasis on the importance of a life of dependence on the Spirit, and individual faithfulness, rather than on any organised effort. Reference was made to the decline in numbers and in zeal among Friends as early as the second generation after the founding of the Society, as showing the danger of ease and worldly prosperity; and several papers spoke of self-denial and simplicity as essential to progress in the Divine life, and to power in meetings.

Of the new central Adult Schools in Birmingham, two occupy disused public-houses, one the Prince of Wales in Hospital Street, and the other the Coppersmiths' Arms in Rea Street, one of the lowest quarters of Birmingham, near the great city markets, where the commonest of the common lodging houses abound. "The great fight in these schools is against the drink, but yet the workers are not afraid of going into a public-house to fetch the men out. Strange to say, the publicans do not seem to object to it. They dare not quarrel with the Adult School folk, because they know the men would resent it. When Darwin Street School was opened some three years ago the neighbouring public-houses were thoroughly canvassed on Sunday evenings for men, and some of those so obtained are now the hardest workers and staunchest abstainers they have."

Barbadoes.—An esteemed correspondent writes from Hastings, Barbadoes:—"God is wonderfully working in a part of this island. At Bathsheba (where Mr. Nicholls labours round about, in the villages and far over the hills), there have been sixty-seven natives baptized this year on confession of faith in Christ. Mr. Nicholls has been getting Bibles and Testaments from the Scripture Gift Mission. Miss Gallop, a lady missionary in this district, is much blessed of God in her meetings for women and children. So few have the Bible; but they are too poor to buy one."

Servia. Things are quieting down in Servia, although the indignation aroused at the barbarism attending the recent coup d'état has not abated. The withdrawal of representatives on the part of Great Britain and other Powers was to be expected, and it is hoped that the lessons of the situation will now be learned by the distressed nation. Meantime, it is reported that during his prolonged exile King Peter translated into Servian John Stuart Mill's famous "Essay on Liberty," and that he has given instructions for its immediate publication and broadcast circulation among the people. We could wish that the Gospel in its purity might also have free course in the land, and that light and peace may crown the blessings of liberty.

The Royal Declaration. The renewed attempt made in the House of Lords to abolish the Declaration of the Sovereign at the time of his Accession has been defeated by a considerable majority. Two years ago the Government tried to pacify the Roman Catholic peers by a suggested alteration in the wording of the Declaration, whereby the substance of it was retained, while words which seemed offensive were eliminated or altered. But the Romanists' policy of "all or nothing" caused the proposal to be dropped. They, therefore, have no ground for complaint. The abolition of the Royal Declaration is impossible. New terms may, perhaps, be employed; but, as the Archbishop of Canterbury pointed out, we cannot ignore history, nor fail to provide against any dangers in the future; and, therefore, a declaration to the same effect as that already in force is absolutely necessary as an integral part of the law of this country.

President Loubet's Visit. On both sides of the Channel there is only one feeling concerning the approaching visit of President Loubet to these shores—that of gladness. The alteration in the tone of the Press — both English and French—regarding Anglo-French relations is very striking. We sincerely hope that the last has been heard of foolish and wicked incitements to bad feeling between the two countries. The two lands are within sight of each other; the barrier of language hardly exists for people of average education, and our temporal interests need not clash. There is every reason for friendship between the two peoples. We can, without a tinge of conventionalism or hypocrisy, ask God to bless our neighbour, France.

A Healthy Press. We congratulate the Daily News upon its new departure in refusing to accept advertisements of alcoholic liquors for its columns when present contracts expire. We also take the opportunity of expressing our gratification at its bold determination to exclude, at great pecuniary loss, all betting news. Others have made the experiment, weakly, and financially it has failed. The Daily News has, so far, held its own. It is an indication that there is a large public—chiefly Christian—that can appreciate a healthy daily press. It is much to be desired that other newspaper proprietors, who have no sympathy with the turf or the drink trade, but who patronize both solely for financial reasons, would have the courage to issue clean, wholesome journals. Surely in every great centre there are sufficient people to patronize a paper which refuses to aid in extending by advertisement corrupt habits! A man is as much responsible for the influence of his newspaper as for the influence of his personal life.

The Sanctity of Marriage. Upon the very day when Earl Russell sought to introduce into the House of Lords his insulting Bill, designed to render divorce more easy, we have news from America that ministers of all denominations are about to unite in a determined effort to stem the divorce tide in that country. The dissolution of the marriage tie in America has been, as is well known, scandalously easy. It is estimated that within the last twenty years half a million of people have been granted release. What this means to morals is easily comprehended. The clique of infidel journalists, who are always clamouring for the easy dissolution of marriage, would do well to look at America just now, and they will see how their abominable principles work out. Happily there is no chance whatever that our Legislature will consider any proposal in this direction. The Divine command concerning marriage is clear enough, and anything that tends to weaken its authority attacks at once the law of God and the well-being of the nation.

The Protection of Children. The new clause in the Bill now before Parliament dealing with children and entertainments, which was passed by a very narrow majority last week, is much to be regretted on every ground. Under its provisions, theatrical and circus children will be exempted from the control of the local authorities, and, as Sir John Gorst pointed out, the taking of these children from town to town, and their association with the stage, will not tend to make them good citizens. When men so diverse as Sir John Gorst, Mr. T. W. Russell, Mr. Labouchere, and Mr. John Burns, can offer urgent and sound reasons why these children should be protected, the passing of this clause is the more remarkable. One thing alone the Government mouthpiece could urge—that old and specious argument, "honest livelihood." It is a false sentiment, and is made to cover a multitude of sins. The physical and moral welfare of children is of prime importance, and the class that is employed in entertainments needs especially consideration.

Help for Rural Districts. Anyone who has acquaintance with village life knows that the beauty and the healthfulness of many districts is too often spoiled by the insanitary condition of the houses. Hence disease and weakness are bred in places where the situation invites to health and strength. The Rural Housing and Sanitary Association is setting itself to remedy this state of affairs by obtaining true conditions of life in rural districts. They will see to it that all insanitary places brought to their notice are dealt with by the proper authorities. This is as it should be. The "country" needs making habitable, and then people need encouraging to go and live in it. If true physical conditions prevailed in rural districts, and both commercially and educationally they were made attractive to town dwellers, we should find in the occupation of our villages a solution of many social difficulties, and a cure for many social evils which are bred in towns and cities. If some great statesman would turn his genius to this problem he would earn the gratitude of the nation. Meantime the hallowing presence and evangelistic effort of Christian residents is greatly to be valued in many of these spiritually starved hamlets.

The Preaching of the Cross. Two very important utterances have recently been made by prominent scholars upon the place of the Cross in modern life and preaching. Dr. Forsyth, at Hampstead, and Dr. Denney, at the Summer School of Theology in Aberdeen, made the subject one of the central themes in two important Conventions. And their contributions to it are very necessary for many just now, for the preaching of the Cross in too many pulpits has been reduced to an affair of words only. The fact of Christ's death is preached, but no "theory" is formulated. People are left to draw their own conclusions. Testimony of that kind is too vague to become regenerative. Unless a preacher can say why Christ died, and how that death affects the forgiveness of sins, he has no Gospel to preach. Too many are afraid of offending "the modern mind" by preaching the Cross as an atonement. That modern mind needs analysing, as Dr. Denney analysed it last week, and at the bottom of it will be found an inadequate sense of the enormity of sin, and an exaggerated sentiment concerning God's Fatherhood. With a revived sense of the heinousness of sin, there would return a grateful and reverent appreciation of the death of Christ as a real atonement for sin, and a forceful presentation of it in preaching.

The Lay Preacher. We are glad to find that the work of the "lay preacher" is coming to be recognized as a necessary part of the Christian ministry by some who have not heretofore been conspicuous in advocating it. From every point of view such work is essential; the country cannot be evangelized without it. It will help to lessen the strain, which presses too heavily upon pastors, of providing three sermons per week for the same congregation. It will reduce the distance between the pulpit and ordinary life. And when the power of God accompanies it in conversion, it will be a Divine rebuke to the pretensions of priestcraft. As a recent writer points out, even many evangelicals force their pastors into the position of priests by causing all public ministrations to fall upon them. But, it is said with much justice, the lay preacher must be "recognized" in the most practical way by the church that adopts him. He must be treated, not as a humble helot, but as a comrade in the ministry, and the Church is responsible to help and to train him for efficient service. Many gifted men in our congregations are limiting their lives by ever listening to sermons when they ought to take their share in proclaiming the Gospel. But care is needed that only men who are manifestly called by the Holy Ghost should be called by the Church to this work.

The Craving for Certainty. A letter from a prominent Congregational minister in a contemporary exactly voices the desires of many men who are alive to the state of nebulosity which is prevailing concerning the great doctrines of our faith. He suggests that some of the foremost teachers, in a specially arranged convention for ministers, should deal with the great truths which lie at the base of our faith, and many ministers are seriously disturbed on the most vital matters. A subtle criticism, to which they cannot fully reply, has unnerved them. They want to be certain, but they are not certain, of the great things. It would undoubtedly be a great service if some of our most prominent Evangelical scholars, fully capable of dealing with "criticism," offered to their less scholarly brethren a re-statement of the grand verities of faith. The time to protest against criticism has passed; it is high time to reaffirm the eternal truths with such scholarly and sanctified certainty that all hesitation in preaching shall be without excuse.

Feeling and Faith. Many earnest believers frequently fall into the very snare against which they warn anxious souls who are seeking God. They tell the latter, for their salvation, to distrust all their feelings, and to accept the Word of God, relying upon that alone. Yet often, in the Christian life, they measure their growth, or the reality of the presence of God with them, entirely according to their feeling. Having commenced in the spirit, they are tempted to end in the flesh. People complain that the presence of God is not real to them, despite their prayers. What they generally mean is, that He is not real to their senses and to their feelings. He has never promised to be so. The presence of Christ with us does not depend upon our recognition of it in the sense life. If, on our part, there is no obstacle to His indwelling: if the conditions He has imposed (see John xiv.) are fulfilled, then He on His part has fulfilled His word, and the believing heart must rely upon that absolutely, and act accordingly. The life of faith is—a life of faith; it is not an initial exercise of faith to be completed by feelings.

Mysticism and Spiritual Vision. "The New Mysticism," as it is called, seems to be quite a fashion amongst certain teachers, who affect a style of speech concerning Christian truth which captivates the superficial mind by its vagueness and its smack of philosophy. But this is a very different thing from true spiritual insight, with which it is too often confounded. The deepest philosophy of the New Testament is probably found in the Epistle to the Colossians, yet there everything is clear and definite, while profound. The new mysticism is but a vague and hazy thing—a mixture of pantheism and psychology, stated in ambiguous language. Spiritual vision, on the contrary, is the open eye, cleared by the Spirit of God, directed to revealed truth. The "new mystic" may dream and see cloudy shapes, but he has no definite facts to report upon. But the Holy Spirit never leads men into vagueness; He guides into all truth. And He glorifies Christ also. We may test every spirit by this infallible rule—does it glorify Christ? If not, whatever its claims, it is not the Spirit of God.

The New "Revelation." The appearance of a new work on "Liberal Judaism" has provided a reviewer in a leading London paper with the occasion for a lengthy disquisition upon the new "revelation," which, we are informed, "is coming to be the acknowledged groundwork of religious truth." This new "revelation" practically means that we have no definite revelation at all, and that all the oddities, contradictions, and aspirations of men are merely forms of "God's revelation in man." Probably the wish is father to the thought. It is difficult to master the mental attitude of those who can calmly survey history, with its record of fetishism, idolatry, barbarity, and a multitude of vain and contradictory religious philosophies, and see in this terrible compound "a revelation of God in man." It seems as if the "new" teachers would accept any theory, rather than fairly face the revelation of God in the Bible and in our blessed Lord. Verily our wise men's wisdom is becoming folly! We may with truth repeat to them after the Baptist, "There standeth One among you whom ye know not!"

The Value of Opposition. One of the Divine methods of leading the Church to fulfil her high calling is that of opposition. From the commencement the people of God have been saved from indolence by renewed attacks made upon their life on the part of the enemy. By persecution and opposition the enemy means to crush the Church; but God means by it the better accomplishment of the work He would have done. The break up of the early Church resulted in the disciples going everywhere preaching the Word. And out of the present attack made by materialists, priests, and legislators, upon evangelical faith God wills His people to emerge a better people than ever. As Dr. Macfadyen points out, to all the attacks of materialists and sacerdotalists many Churches have offered the opposition of "a rose-water gospel of culture," or a mere negative to the affirmations of priestcraft. That is not a testimony worthy of men who have been put in trust with the Gospel. It needs to be virile, positive, and absolute, and we believe that such a testimony will be the result of the present distress. At any rate we are being unmistakably called to it on all sides.

The Education Act.—The forcible collection of rates, including a charge for education, is bringing into prominence the determined opposition all over the country to the operation of the Education Act. Notwithstanding the explanations that have been given, Evangelical Protestants, within and without the Church of England, are genuinely alarmed at the prospect of a growing control by the sacerdotal clergy over elementary education. This is not a matter of conformity or nonconformity, but a manifestation of the true Anglo-Saxon suspicion of the priest. In parishes where the character of the teaching given by Anglican sisterhoods is already well known the opposition to its spread is very keen. A great point will be gained if the Government can be induced by the force of public opinion to withdraw the London Bill, and it is of the utmost importance that every nerve should be strained for the attainment of this object before the prorogation of Parliament.

Concerning Heredity.—I.

By Lieut.-Col. SETON CHURCHILL.

THE late Lord Tennyson, in writing to a friend on the subject of man's free will to do right or wrong, to rise or to fall, made use of a very apt illustration which has often helped me when thinking over the subject of heredity. The poet compared man to a bird in a cage, which had perches one above the other, on which the inmate could stand. The bird had the power to jump from perch to perch till it reached the top of the cage, but beyond those limits it could not go. It could rise to the top, it could go down to the bottom, but the bars of the cage limited its power to proceed.

This is an excellent illustration to bear in mind when considering the subject of heredity, which, according to a dictionary, is defined as the transmission of qualities from the parents, or ancestors, to their offspring. Heredity has in recent times been forced very much to the front, and some very crude and unscientific conclusions have been propagated regarding it.

It is true that science has lately discovered a good deal which was not known to our ancestors in connection with this most interesting subject. Professor Sir William Turner, M.B., F.R.S., who was, in 1889, the president of the Anthropological Section of the British Association, tells us, for instance, of a case of colour blindness in a family, which had been traced through seven generations. In this family the males only were affected, though the peculiarity was transmitted through the females, who themselves remained unaffected. Seven mothers of this family in the sixth generation had among them nine sons and an equal number of daughters. All the sons but one inherited the family defect, but none of the mothers nor the daughters were so afflicted.

The transmission of moral qualities is very closely associated with that of physical ones, and it has been well said that we are each of us like omnibuses, carrying about with us the moral and physical defects and virtues of our numerous ancestors for three or four generations, if not for many more. Emerson, in his "Conduct of Life," chap. i., page 9, says:—

> In different hours a man represents each of several of his ancestors, as if there were seven or eight of us rolled up in each man's skin—seven or eight ancestors at least—and they constitute the variety of notes for that piece of music which his life is.

DISCUSSIONS OF FORMER TIMES.

But in the crude form in which one often hears the subject discussed there is a very great danger of abolishing individual responsibility, and saddling all our defects on our ancestors. Those who have studied the discussions of former times between the advocates of Free Will on the one hand, and the vindicators of Divine Sovereignty on the other, will remember that some of Calvin's extreme followers, though not he personally, pushed the doctrine of predestination to such an extent, that we human beings became, according to their view, mere automata or machines, said to be incapable of choosing between right and wrong. The subject was indeed pushed so far that common sense revolted against such a caricature of Divine truth, and some even rushed to the opposite extreme and denied the Sovereignty of God. The National Church of this country, as also the great bulk of the various bodies that constitute the Free Churches of the land, have practically adopted a happy mean between the two extremes, recognizing that it is impossible to deny the sovereignty of God or the free-will of man, and that though we may not be able to reconcile these two truths, yet God can do so, as the Bible teaches both.

But some of the would-be scientific advocates of heredity are practically bringing us back to the same difficulties that troubled our ancestors, by the exaggerated way in which they present a certain amount of truth, mixed up with a great deal of error and with a great absence of common sense. It is quite true that, if we can inherit from our ancestors, let us say, colour blindness, or any other physical defect, it is not difficult to show that we can also inherit a tendency to the drink crave, to sensuality, dishonesty, deceit, or to indulge in any other sin.

The question arises—Will God hold us responsible in the case of moral defects which we have inherited? In the case of physical defects, there is no blame resting on the individual who is unfortunate enough to inherit them, and the human mind not unnaturally revolts at the thought of a just God holding us any more responsible for our moral defects. Superficial thinkers have, therefore, rushed to the conclusion that there is no such thing as personal responsibility; and, so far from attempting to control the passions of the human heart, these passions are indulged and strengthened by use, and so even stronger passions are passed on to the next generation.

HUMAN RESPONSIBILITY.

It is interesting to note how in all ages the father of lies has, in different ways, attempted to do away with the responsibility of man, and how cleverly he has done this by the careful intermixture of truth and error, so skilfully put together that indiscriminating minds are often led astray. Long before the Christian era, we find that the ancient creed of Hinduism, as also its off-shoot Buddhism, both teach that individuals have had previous existences, and that "Fate is nothing but the deeds committed in a prior state of existence." The only difference between this and the teaching of some of the more extreme people who put every existing evil down to heredity, is, that in the case of the ancient non-Christian systems, it is to the life actually lived in a former existence, and not to the lives of ancestors, that the failures of our present life are attributed. But both systems agree in removing the responsibility from the present, and putting it in the far-away distant past, thus striking at the very root of all personal responsibility in the present.

Common sense, however, revolts at such illogical conclusions now, in much the same way as our ancestors revolted at the very extreme conclusions to which some of Calvin's followers pushed his teaching. Sir William Turner, to whom allusion has already been made, pointed out in his valuable paper before the British Association, that though undoubtedly we do inherit much from our ancestors, yet there is also such a thing known to the scientific world as the transmission of "variability," which is exactly the opposite of heredity, and of which we hear very little from the so-called scientific advocates of heredity. His words are:—

"Intimately associated, therefore, with the conception of Heredity, that is the transmission of characters common to both parents and offspring, is that of Variability; that is, the appearance in an organism of certain characters which are unlike those possessed by its parents. Heredity may therefore be defined as the perpetuation of the like; Variability as the production of the unlike.

He goes on to say, "An individual is derived not from one parent only, but from two," and then he quotes Weissmann, who emphasizes this combination "as the cause of the production of variations and the transmission of hereditary characters."

Many of us must be able to recall such "variations" from the character of the father, due to a mother's influence. I remember going out to India in a troopship with two men who were the leaders in the regiment in temperance and all Christian work. These brothers were the sons of a drunken private soldier lately belonging to that regiment who had quite lately died of delirium tremens. I discovered, however, that they had a splendid mother, and she it was, doubtless, who had introduced that scientific "variability" into her sons' characters, and made them such a contrast to that father from whom they had inherited their physical nature.

OUTLINE BIBLE-READINGS.

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, B.D.

7.—THE TRANSFIGURATION.

THE revelation of the cross at Cæsarea Philippi (Matt. xvi.) was a great mystery to the disciples. The Transfiguration occurred soon afterwards, and had a distinct bearing on this conversation of Christ and His disciples. The Transfiguration was a landmark in our Lord's history and in the history of the disciples. "It stands midway between the Incarnation and the Ascension, and it is the justification of our faith in the one, and the warrant of our faith in the other." Consider it now with special reference to Simon Peter. Note again the three men taken. Need of special training. Probably also more receptive than the rest.

Study Matt. xvi. 28—xvii. 9; Mark ix. 1-10; Luke ix. 27-36.

I.—THE TRANSFIGURED LORD.

1. The Time. Note in all three Gospels the reference to "six days" and "about eight days." Clear connection with preceding conversation about the cross. This is a key to true meaning of Transfiguration.

2. The Character. It occurred to our Lord "as He was praying" (Luke ix. 28, 29). The Transfiguration was thus the direct result of communion with and communication from God. It affected both His appearance and raiment. Glorification of His humanity by His Divinity.

3. The Purpose. What did it mean? It was intended for the disciples, to remind them of the glory of their Master, in spite of the dreaded revelation of the cross. Probably also to prepare them for the cross. To show that His Divinity and His Death were not irreconcilable. No contradiction, but beautiful consistency. But had it also a purpose for Jesus Himself? May it not have been another assurance from the Father as the Son went forward to the cross? Galilee had rejected Him. Jerusalem was soon to follow suit. In between comes a foretaste of the glory to follow.

II.—THE ATTENDANT SAINTS.

1. Who they were. Moses and Elijah. The great lawgiver and the great prophet. Representatives of the Old Covenant. Characteristic and special men. Also both remarkable as to their exit from the world (Deut. xxxiv. 6, and Jude 9; 2 Kings ii.)

2. What they said. They spoke of His "decease" (Greek, exodos) at Jerusalem (Luke ix. 31). The very topic from which the disciples had been shrinking. The death of Christ was thus actually a subject of interest and conversation to inhabitants of the heavenly world. What a revelation to Peter! The Law and the Prophets conferring as to His Master's death! That death would be the "end of the Law" and the fulfilment of propheey.

3. Why they came. Doubtless as a further confirmation to the disciples of the need of the Cross. A reminder that there must be some deep reason for a transaction which occupied the attention of heaven. Again, probably these representatives of the Old Covenant were allowed to come for our Lord's own sake also, to strengthen Him in the fulfilment of God's will which had been anticipated and foretold by the Old Testament. Homage of Law and Prophets to the Messiah.

III.—THE ASTONISHED DISCIPLES.

1. Consider the three selected. Why these? Probably to benefit all through the fittest. Others might have been dazzled, and Judas incited to ambition. Perhaps even these three were only saved by keeping the event secret. See unfitness of the nine by incident at foot of hill (Luke ix. 37-42). God's revelation only to fitted ones.

2. Notice their slumber. Is not this almost inexplicable under the circumstances? Their Master's glory and all the attendant incidents could not keep them awake. Their spiritual condition was evidently none too strong and real, even though by comparison better than rest of disciples.

3. Study their words. On being thoroughly roused, Peter was again the spokesman. Mark very carefully what he says, "It is good for us to be here." The words are often quoted as the expression of a rapt experience, as the realisation of great privilege and adoring gratitude for the honour. But the original Greek will not bear this interpretation. Literally "it is good (or beautiful, or fortunate, or excellent), that we are here." There is no "for us," as of personal advantage, in the Greek, and the word for "good" does not mean precious or valuable, but "outwardly attractive," excellent, opportune. Peter's meaning is, "Master, it is opportune that we are here, to be of service to Thee. Let us make three tents." He thought the Kingdom had come (see Luke ix. 27), and places of sojourn were needed. How like Peter! Always the well-meaning blunderer!

N.B.—Clearly this is the true view, for we are told that he was "sore afraid" (Mark ix. 6), and that he "knew not what he said" (Luke ix. 33), which would not be correct if the words expressed his own delighted experience.

IV.—THE DIVINE TESTIMONY.

1. The Cloud. It came as the direct result of Peter's words (Matt. xvii. 5; Luke ix. 34). God's will about Moses and Elijah staying, was at once shown when Peter suggested the tents. Now Moses and Elijah are hidden.

2. The Voice. "This is My beloved Son." Such is the Divine testimony. The other two are only servants. "This is My Son," and must not be put on a level with the others by the erecting of three tabernacles. The hour had come for the departure of Law and Prophets. As Jews, probably Peter and the other two, were glad that Jesus was, after all, connected with Old Testament saints. So the reminder came. (Cf. Isa. xlii. 1; Heb. i. 1, 2).

3. The command. "Hear Him." For the future He is to be whole object of attention, trust and obedience. "Hear Him," especially when He speaks of the Cross, and do not shrink from it.

V.—THE PRACTICAL RESULT.

1. The full reassurance. After their fear, came "Fear not," and their Master's "touch" (Matt. xvii. 7). In the comfort of this they soon recovered, and "Jesus only" was full of meaning to them.

2. The immediate impressions. These were not very deep or strong, as is seen from their discussion going down the hill (Matt. xvii. 10-13).

3. The permanent recollection. It was only after Pentecost that they recalled this glorious event and its meaning. As to John, see John i. 14; and as to Peter, 2 Peter i. 16-18, Peter never forgot that night, nor its revelation of the glory of his Master.

SUGGESTIONS.

1. God's Meaning in the Transfiguration.

(a) To bear witness to the glory of His Son. Above the law and the prophets, and as the unique and final exponent of the Divine will.

(b) To emphasize the glory of the Cross. As the fitting topic of heavenly interest and the supreme object of His Son's Incarnation.

(c) To create permanent impressions in the disciples about His Son and the Cross. Truths already received to be made real in experience. Creed transfused into life. Not new views so much as new vitality.

2. God's Method in the Transfiguration.

(a) Bringing and leaving disciples face to face with His Son. "Jesus only."

(b) Concentrating attention on His revelation. "Hear Him."

(c) Occupying the mind with the Cross as central, and its entire compatibility with and appropriateness to the glory of the Son of God.

We Shall See Jesus.

"Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another" (Job xix. 27).

Hope fair and sweet that on some bright to-morrow
We shall behold Him. He has promised this.
How, then, will fade each clinging sin and sorrow,
When, made like Him, we see Him as He is!

We shall see Jesus. Living Hope, victorious
O'er sin and fear and terrors of the night!
Our eyes shall see the King in beauty glorious;
Our eyes shall see that far-off land of light.

Not having seen, we love Him; still believing
They, too, are blest who love Him without sight.
Faith's promised end with fullest joy receiving,
When we shall waken on that morning bright!

THE

Science and Mystery of Prayer

By Rev. FREDERIC C. SPURR.

IV.—Some Perplexities of Prayer.

TO many persons the difficulty connected with prayer is not intellectual, but practical. They believe their prayers have been sincere and earnest; yet no definite answer to them has been forthcoming. It may help such to recall the three chief Bible cases of what we may agree to call for the moment unanswered prayers—i.e., the request of Moses to enter the Promised Land, the plea of Elijah that he might die, and the entreaty of Paul that the thorn in the flesh might be removed.

These eminent servants of God proffered certain definite requests, which were not granted. And why not? We may best answer the question by placing each of them alongside the perfect request in Gethsemane, "Not My will, but Thine be done." At once we see their defects. These requests lacked the essential element of true prayer. At their heart was dictation rather than submission. Moses desired to enter the Land of Promise to crown his ambition. Elijah's request to die was the result of over-strain and chagrin. Paul's entreaty proceeded from his desire to serve God free from physical hindrance. None of these petitions was granted; but in each case a far better thing was given. For Moses was reserved the honour of burial by the Divine Hand, an honour which would never have been his had he died in the ordinary way in Canaan. For Elijah a rare passage home was designed, a far grander departure than the disappearance of a disappointed man. To Paul special grace was given, which won for him a veritable triumph. So if God refuses to grant to us the thing we ask for, we may be sure that His Fatherhood is reserving a better thing for us farther on.

We have even a more striking instance of this larger answer which God gives to His children, in the life of St. Paul. The Apostle prayed that when he visited Rome he might have "a prosperous journey" (Rom. i. 10, 11). In this was included the hope of a smooth sea passage, since there are one or two indications in the Acts that the Apostle was a poor sailor. How did God answer the prayer of His most devoted servant? We are told in the graphic story of the voyage recorded in Acts xxvii., "There arose a tempestuous wind" (v. 14). "Exceedingly tossed with a tempest" (v. 18). "Neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and all hope that we should be saved was then taken away" (v. 20). "The soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners" (v. 42). And finally there was a shipwreck. Surely this was a singular kind of "prosperous journey"! A discouraging answer to a saint's prayer! Did the Apostle think his prayer was answered? Did he regard it as a "prosperous journey"? Undoubtedly. He was the only man on board the ship possessed of a cool head and a tranquil heart. His presence prevented a general massacre of the prisoners. God gave him "all that sailed with him" (v. 23, 24). "Prosperous journey!" Indeed it was. According to the letter it was not; according to the spirit the prayer was answered two hundred and four score times more liberally than he had dared to request. In saving the whole ship's crew and passengers, God more than answered Paul's own personal request.

Another of the perlexities of prayer, which is solved by the principles we have already studied, relates to the subjects of our prayers.

For whom may we pray? And how may we pray for them? The Scripture is wonderfully illuminating upon the subject; it defines for us the range of our prayers, as also the true principle which should animate them.

We may pray for all men (1 Tim. ii. 1-4). This is the widest range prayer can take, yet it is not vague. It would seem at first as if such general prayer must be vague, yet it is not, if we pray in sympathy with the prayer of Gethsemane. We are to pray for all men, says the Apostle, in view of God, that His will may be accomplished upon earth.

Again, we are bidden to pray for our enemies (Matt. v. 44, 45), and the same reason is given for this also. We are to pray for them in view of God, that we may be like Him; i.e., that His will may be done in us. And we may pray for the sick in the same spirit (James v. 16). But we may not demand from God the restoration of the invalid to life. The sickness may be the Divine signal for departure from this world, the life-mission having been accomplished. This prayer for the sick is limited by two things. First, that the anointing shall be "in the name of the Lord," and secondly, that the prayer shall be "the prayer of faith." Both of these things have at their heart the principle of the prayer in the garden, "Thy will, not mine, be done."

We may also pray for the soul prosperity of any of our acquaintances (3 John 2.) for surely that is according to the will of God.

Also for labourers to be sent into the vineyard (Matt. ix. 38), since that is God's will.

And if our hearts are touched with a deep compassion for human souls, we cannot help desiring and praying that men may be saved (Rom. x. 1), for this is the desire of Him who will have "all men to be saved and to come to a knowledge of the truth." Our prayers for the salvation of men, however, may not take the form of definite dictation to God. We may not say, as some have dared to say, "You must do this, O God." There is a most intimate connection, undoubtedly, between passionate solicitude on behalf of souls, and the salvation of those souls, but we are too profoundly ignorant of the law by which desire and prayer act upon others, ever to make our prayers absolute demands. The element of free human will must always be considered. God does not compel men to be saved. He influences them, pleads with them, drives them into straits, enwraps them with His love; but the final decision rests with men themselves. It is for them to say whether or not they will respond to the Divine endeavour. And our prayers on behalf of men's salvation must respect this tremendous fact.

It will be observed that in each of these six cases God's glory is at stake. We pray for all men, for kings, for our enemies, for the sick, for labourers, and for men's salvation, because in each of these the glory of God is involved, and we, like our Lord, seek only His glory. Hence we ardently pray above all things else that His will may be done.

A final perplexity of prayer, which is cleared by the principles we have studied, concerns the conditions of prayer.

At first sight, some of the promises made by our Lord are unconditional. Some have so understood them, but it is a perversion of our Lord's intention. Every free promise regarding prayer is rigidly limited by the decisive law expressed in the great model prayer, "Not My will, but Thine be done." Let us, in closing, briefly examine the main free promises.

Matt. vii. 7, 8. "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you; for everyone that asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened." This seems free and unconditional. It is not so. The next verses limit its range. "How much more will your Father in heaven give good things to them that ask Him." "Good things," that is the limit; it is the point of junction between our asking and the Father's giving.

Matt. xviii. 19. Could anything be more unconditional? But read on—Jesus has not yet finished: "For where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I." These two persons who "agree," must "agree" in His name. That is the limitation which harmonizes it with the will of God.

Matt. xxi. 22. Here the limitation is "believing." Believing is infinitely more than expecting, or desiring. True "believing," in the New Testament sense, means vital union with Christ; vital union involves sympathy with Him; sympathy with Him will never lead any soul to demand what is contrary to Him.

John xiv. 13. "Whatsoever you shall ask in My name, that will I do;" but "that the Father may be glorified in the Son."

John xv. 7. "Ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." A wider promise could not be made. Yet what is its condition? "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you."

So everywhere the answers to our prayers are conditioned by the will and the glory of God. These limitations are not capricious, but essential. They are demanded by the Eternal Order. Communion with God is designed to bring us into perfect harmony with that Order; and once that design is accomplished, two things will naturally occur—we shall never ask of Him what would disturb that Order; and what we do ask of Him will aim directly in furthering our Father's glory.

Letter from Rev. F. B. Meyer.

DEAR SIR,—By letter and by deputation this morning, I have been emphatically assured by my brethren of the Keswick platform that they will be deeply distressed if I carry out my proposal to be absent from the Convention. After a full discussion, and without passing any judgment on the political, social, or other aspect of my action in the Education controversy (which they understand is a matter of conscience), they wish me to understand that my welcome will be as cordial and brotherly as ever.

Under these circumstances, I feel that the importance of giving a united testimony to the strength of our union in Christ must have the first place in forming my decision. I intend, therefore, to be present, and to take my usual place.

It should be understood that the proposal of my withdrawal was entirely of my own motion, and did not originate with the trustees, whose invitation to be present I accepted in February. I felt that it was only fair to everybody concerned that I should give my friends of the Established Church an opportunity of expressing their wishes under the new conditions which the Education controversy has brought up.

I am extremely thankful that the incident has ended in this brotherly fashion.—Yours faithfully, F. B. Meyer.

Dr. Torrey in Chicago.

ON Wednesday, June 17, the Moody Bible Institute was in a ferment of excitement, for Dr. Torrey was due to arrive in the evening from New York. A crowd of students and friends collected in front of the Institute and sang hymns to while away the time of waiting. A few minutes before 5 p.m. the telephone reported the safe arrival of the train at the station. Very soon afterwards the carriage, drawn by three horses, reached the Institute amid great enthusiasm, and Dr. Torrey, Mr. Alexander, Mr. Arnold Moody, Mr. A. P. Fitt, and others descended. After the singing of a hymn of gratitude, the photographers had their chance of registering a record of so interesting an event as Dr. Torrey's return after his world-wide tour.

Everyone was delighted to see how well Dr. Torrey looked, as he stood, happy and healthy, in the centre of the crowd on the steps of the Institute. Around him one saw the familiar faces of Mr. Alexander, Professor D. B. Towner, Mr. W. R. Newell, and others. A call for a speech only drew a smiling refusal. "It is Mr. Alexander who makes the speeches, and I sing the solos," said Dr. Torrey, amid laughter. Once inside the Institute, there were many greetings exchanged, and then Dr. Torrey had to be interviewed by representatives of the leading daily newspapers. Later, at the supper-table, he expressed his heartfelt delight at being "home again."

The Chicago journals have devoted much space to the tour of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, and the interest in the meeting to be held in the Auditorium grows greater and more widespread. Before coming to Chicago, Dr. Torrey paid a brief visit to Northfield, and spoke at Mount Hermon. D. W.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, July 5. Psalm xlviii.

A Song of Deliverance.

THE circumstances out of which this Psalm sprang are identical with those of xlvi. The characteristic word, also, of that Psalm reappears in verse 3.

1, 2. The hill on which the temple stood was known as Mount Zion, while Jerusalem lay at its feet towards the north; the whole was the city of the Great King. There were many features in Jerusalem. It was beautiful for its elevation on the hill; it was safely isolated from attack by precipitous ravines; it was a resort of all the earth; but above all, its chief glory was that God's residence was there. In our days this Presence is that of the Holy Spirit in the Church, the Bride of the Lamb.

3-8. The attack of Sennacherib is here described. In Isaiah's rendering of his boastful words, the Assyrian general is described as saying, "Are not my princes altogether kings?" As the army advances, the sight of the city breaks with paralyzing and awful majesty on their sight. Nothing more is needed to complete their discomfiture. It seems as though they have been smitten by an unseen hand. They resemble some huge vessel which is caught in a gale, rolls heavily in the sea, and is driven to pieces on the shore. Thus the miracles of the past were repeated. What triumph rings through the words, "As we have heard, so have we seen!" God is not an absentee. What has been is.

9-14. Their deliverance leads Zion's citizens thankfully to meditate on God's delivering mercy as they gather in His Temple. Then the gates are thrown open, and they go forth beyond the walls. Not a stone has been dislodged, nothing of the beauty of the palaces has been diminished. And this immunity from harm shows what God can do, and what He will be for His people for ever and ever.

MONDAY, July 6. Psalm xlix.

A Psalm of Immortality.

Here we have what has been called "the high-water mark of Old Testament faith in a future life." It is closely identified, therefore, with Psalm lxxiii.—each Psalm deals with the inequalities of this present life, and suggests that they will be perfectly adjusted hereafter.

1-4. The Psalmist summons all the world to hear what God has taught him. The word used for world is specially expressive—it means this fleeting scene. He addresses all classes of the community with the authority of one who has bent his ear to receive the Divine messages before setting them to the chords of his harp.

5-12. Here is contrasted the arrogant security of the prosperous godless with the end that certainly awaits them. They are graphically delineated, not as vicious or violently atheistic, but as minding earthly things. Yet how little their wealth can do for them! They cannot purchase their own souls from death, nor redeem their brother's. At last, in spite of all their effort to preserve their remembrance in the world, they are absolutely forgotten.

13-20. In striking phrases, godless souls are compared to sheep folded in Sheol, "Death shepherds them." But the singer seems to behold the glinting dawn of the eternal morning, when the upright shall be promoted to rule, while these shall waste away, homeless, and without a dwelling (14). Moreover, the word take is used, which is applied to Enoch's translation, as though the holy soul even in those obscure days had a sure anticipation of being translated to the bosom of God (15, Gen. v. 24). Notice the double refrain of verses 12 and 20.

TUESDAY, July 7. Psalm l.

The First Asaph Psalm.

1-6. The herald enumerates the Names of God. He comes, He comes! First to His own people, and then through them shines forth on the world. Notice the splendour of the language, which describes the tempest and flame that precede Him as His couriers. The court is opened. The Divine Judge summons heaven and earth to attend as spectators of the solemn scene as His people stand at His bar of judgment.

7-15. First, God recites the grounds on which He has a perfect right to act as judge. Is He not their God? Then He goes on to show the eternal distinction between the worship which is only external and formal, and that which proceeds from the heart. What are bulls and goats to Him! Are they not His before they are laid on the altar? But one earnest prayer offered to Him in the day of trouble is worth more, infinitely more, than them all.

16-21. This paragraph is still sterner. Direct reference is made in vv. 18, 19, to the seventh, eighth, and ninth commandments; and we are reminded how depraved people may become who practise a religion of ritual, but whose lives are notoriously evil.

22, 23. Here is the moral of the whole. Let us stop to ponder it. People who are outwardly religious may live in practical forgetfulness of Him, whilst they who, in the absence of the external, offer their thanksgivings as sacrifices, and who order their lives according to His Word, find out that He is nigh for their deliverance and salvation.

WEDNESDAY, July 8. Psalm li.

A Litany of Confession.

If we regard vv. 18, 19, as a liturgical addition added by the editor, perhaps Nehemiah, in the post-exilic days, there is no reason why we should not continue to credit this Psalm to him, whose sin with Bathsheba has left such an indelible stain upon his character, albeit that it has caused myriads to have hope. If David was forgiven and restored, surely all others, who evince the same penitence, may be.

1-9. A Plea for Pardon. The penitent realizes his responsibility—note the reiterated my. He uses many synonyms—transgression, "rebellion"; iniquity, that which is twisted and wrung; sin, missing the mark. Of forgiveness, he says it is the erasure of a writing—"blot out"; it is the washing away of impurity —"wash me"; it is the priestly act of pronouncing the leper clean—"cleanse me." But he is so deeply conscious of the inbred character of his sin, since it is inherited and in the blood, that he must needs ask for a more searching work of grace. He must be purged, as lepers were, with hyssop.

10-12. A Prayer for Purity. In each of the three couplets the word "spirit" is the key to the second line. Oh, to have a steadfast, holy, and willing spirit! But God's indwelling Spirit alone can produce these; and nothing less than an act of His creative might can suffice. Do not send us away from Thee, and do not Thou remove from us.

13-17. Views of Grateful Service. The confession has been made, and forgiveness has come to the riven, broken heart. It is at the feet of the Saviour—not despised, but cherished and healed. This Psalm makes us think of the Bridge of Sighs, only it leads not from a palace to a prison, but from a prison to a palace. There the penitent is crowned.

THURSDAY, July 9. Psalm lii.

An Outburst of Indignation.

1-3. Here is the portrait of the bitter foe of righteousness, who boasts in wickedness, and whose weapon is slander. The sudden question with which the Psalm opens, reveals the indignation with which the writer had been considering his character and work. But what a contrast between the high-handed wrong of the tyrant-oppressor and the lovingkindness of God! And what a transition from his short-lived success to the everlasting kindness with which God's love embraces His persecuted and suffering children!

4, 5. Here we have a detailed description of his overthrow, broken down as a building levelled to the ground, dragged by irresistible might from his dwelling, and uprooted from the land of the living. "Selah stands for a blast of trumpets, or a clash of cymbals, bidding the listeners gaze on the spectacle of insolent strength laid prone, and withering as it lies."

6, 7. Here are the effects of the overthrow on the children of God. They laugh, not with pleasure of his ruin, but with solemn exultation that the righteousness of the Divine Government has been vindicated.

8, 9. Evidently there were trees in the Temple area. The Psalmist resembles one of these. No such uprooting can come to him; and, in contrast to the short-lived boast of the Doegs of the world, the Davids give thanks for ever.

FRIDAY, July 10. Psalm liii.

The Doom of the Atheist.

This Psalm is almost exactly similar to xiv. The main difference is its substitution of Elohim (the strong or mighty God) for Jehovah (the Redeemer of eternal ages).

It is as though we were again bidden to consider the terrible condition into which men and society drift apart from God. No God means no law, no order, no bond of unity, no security of property, no safeguards for human life. What a lasting debt is due to the Spirit of God, who perpetuates religion in the hearts of men, else the race would rush to ruin.

The Apostle quotes this terrible description of the human heart as the basis of his argument in Rom. iii., and says that every mouth must be stopped, and that we are all more or less tarred with the same brush. Let us sorrowfully confess how much of this description applies to us, each by each.

What an expressive prayer that is with which the Psalm closes! Who will not join in it? When will the long fight be over? God's people are perpetually engaged in combating the old evils, cropping up in new forms; their heart waxes faint, their hand weary. Hasten Thine Advent, Lord! Lord Jesus, come quickly! Bring again our captivity, and still the enemy and the Avenger!

SATURDAY, July 11. Psalm liv.

The superscription ascribes this Psalm to David, when the men of Ziph would have betrayed him to Saul. It falls into two parts, divided by the Selah.

1-3. The Psalmist is surrounded by bitter adversaries, who, though of his own blood, treat him as if they were strangers. From the straitness and danger of his circumstances the hunted man looks up to his Almighty Friend, and builds his hopes of deliverance on God's manifested character; for God's Name is God's self, set forth in the full enumeration of His attributes. Believers, see to it that men only hate you because of your identification, in some small measure, with the cause of God, so that you and He may stand together.

4-7. This prayer is immediately followed by the assurance of victory. He has put God, as a shield, between himself and his foes, and knows that among all the loving souls that gather around him God is chief and best. The others are raised up on his behalf by that same almighty care. The tone of these verses seems to fall below the level of Matt. v. or 1 Cor. xiii. But we may at least learn to mingle holy indignation at the sin with pitiful love for the sinner; and to rejoice when God vindicates His righteous government of the world by the overthrow of wrong-doers. Be sure, when God has saved you by His Name, to return to give thanks to His Name (1, 6).

David had not, in point of fact, as yet been perfectly delivered from his enemies. They were defeated and disappointed for the time, but they would come around him again with their traps and stratagems. Yet he was able to say, "He hath delivered me out of all trouble, and mine eye hath seen its desire upon mine enemies." It is good sometimes, in faith and assured hope, to walk beside the sea of glass, on the shores of which all the tyrant evils that now curse our world shall be strewn, like the wreckage of the sea, when morning smiles after a wild night. Yes, we shall forget our miseries, and think of them only as waters that have passed away.

And a new song is in my mouth
To long-loved music set,
Glory to Thee for all the grace
I have not tasted yet.

Other Lands.

On French Rivers and Canals.

FOR over eleven years our boat, Le Bon Messager, has been working along the rivers and canals in France, and the accounts published from time to time have shown how great has been the blessing attending this method of evangelization. In April of last year we started our second boat, La Bonne Nouvelle, a beautiful boat built through the gifts of friends, chiefly in America. It is longer and somewhat narrower than the old boat, and has better accommodation for the "captain." The meeting-hall is about the same size as the other; but there is more standing room, and more persons can be crammed on board.

The boat began work at St. Mammés, not far from Fontainebleau, and then took its way southwards, stopping for a month or more at each place. The meetings were well attended, and at Nemours we had to stay for eight weeks, so great was the interest raised. Since leaving, some Christian ladies have arranged for a meeting to be held every fortnight, on Sunday afternoon, and many attend this gathering, one of our workers being there each fortnight. Not a few were, we believe, brought to Christ there, and

THE WORK IS GOING ON MOST HOPEFULLY.

At the villages of Crouttes and Cepoy the interest was remarkable, the boat being often overfilled, and the people following on from place to place, some coming by train, others on foot or on bicycle. At the little town of Montargis, where there is a Protestant church, blessing was also very manifest. Professor Dardel says:—

"The last meeting at Cepoy we shall never forget. A boat crammed with a congregation almost entirely composed of Catholics, who, up to its arrival, hardly knew what a Protestant was perhaps—attentive, thoughtful, sympathetic, singing the hymns with delight and with energy. . . . The whole scene touched us deeply, and seemed to show us the promise of the day when the Gospel proclaimed in its simplicity and purity will lay hold on the Catholic and free-thinking multitudes in our France, and bring many as captives to the feet of the Saviour. Since then the boat has left Cepoy, but deep work has been wrought there.

"We write after it has been anchored for four weeks in our town of Montargis. We cannot say that it has always been crowded, as in the beginning of the year, owing to the fêtes and to the great cold, the attendance was not large. But many a time there was hardly an empty chair, and we have seen this sight, quite new to us, of men, women and children, who never troubled themselves to come near the Protestant church, shaking off their indifference, and coming, some of them with an entire absence of religious conviction, and others again, notwithstanding their prejudices and preconceived opinions, to listen to the truths proclaimed on board.

MONSTERS OR MEN?

"Another remarkable fact was the quietness and attention obtained from the very first. All listened with respect and sympathy. It is a treat for Protestants to be present at such meetings, and to see in a community so opposed to the Gospel, apparently, such an awakening to take an interest in subjects hitherto entirely neglected by them. Truly, good has been done at Montargis, as elsewhere; and thanks to the sojourn of the boat in our midst, we have felt, as it were, a gentle breath of the Holy Spirit who will one day cause the dry bones of the House of Israel to live." The boat is now on the canal between Montargis and Orleans, and all along great encouragement has been met with. One man summed up his experiences in this concise manner: "At first I thought that you were monsters; then I found you were men; and now I find that you are my brothers."

Large sales of hymn-books and Testaments have been made, and copious distributions of tracts.

We have a colporteur, M. Boutmy, working with the Geneva Society, who is fixed at a central point, and who goes on his bicycle all round, thus preparing the way for the boat, and following it up also. His visits have been productive of much good.

We commend the work on board our two boats to the prayers of our friends in Britain. The opportunities of evangelizing are boundless, especially in the country districts of France. We go to villages and hamlets where the Gospel is an unknown story, and where hundreds are glad to listen to the simple testimony of the evangelist, and where we trust not a few receive it to the salvation of their souls. Pray on, then, for Le Bon Messager and for La Bonne Nouvelle!

Figueras Mission.

IN an interesting account of the operations of the Figueras Mission, in the province of Gerona, written as the result of recent personal observation in Spain, Lieut.-Colonel Alves calls special attention to the difficulty put in the way of workers by the fact that no meetings can be held in the open-air. Rooms must be hired everywhere, and this is very seldom an easy matter, the people refusing to let them not only for that purpose, but even for the accommodation of evangelists. The native Christians suffer considerable persecution before the Christian life becomes "a living epistle known and read of all men." That epistle can now, however, be read in the worst towns in the province.

On the subject of the reception of converts, Colonel Alves emphasizes the fact that while evidence of change and public profession are always necessary, in Roman Catholic countries it is necessary for a convert to leave his old communion. In the Figueras Mission the evidence of a Christian character is carefully weighed before the profession of faith is finally accepted. Besides this, every accepted convert is required to sign an abjuration of the errors of Rome. If a priest, he has, in addition, to make a public recantation of his orders, and this renunciation is published. The way into the Protestant fold is not made easy for shallow converts, either in doctrine or practice.

The Catalans who inhabit the province are a superior people, who are eminently worth seeking for the sake of others, as well as for their own. They are clean, sober, industrious, thrifty, and generally honest. A recent Government order compelling the use of Castilian in the schools, instead of the Catalan or other local dialects, will give trouble at the outset; but it is believed that the compulsory use of one language will enable evangelists to enlarge their sphere of usefulness.

The three English ladies who render valuable help at headquarters find most of their time taken up with the necessary correspondence and clerical work in English. If they could be set free from this they would have their hands more than full of Gospel work in connection with the Medical Mission. Communications should be addressed to the honorary secretary, Madame Lopez Rodriguez, Figueras, Prov. Gerona, Spain. The honorary treasurer in England is General Battersby, Lyncroft, Weybridge.

Tunis.—Mr. Arthur V. Liley writes:—"In answer to kind inquiries made by several friends respecting the work among the seamen, I should like to say that, since December 1, thirty-four ships have been visited, and the crews personally spoken to, and when allowed on shore a number of the men have come to the reading-room. The work, apart from seeing souls saved, has been most encouraging. I do not know of any ship which has left the port without some Christian literature being placed on board. I fear, however, it will be imperative for me to close the reading-room on account of lack of funds for rent and other expenses, for which I am wholly responsible. In the past these have been raised by my doing a little photography, supplemented by gifts from personal friends."

Conventions in India.

MANY friends in the homeland have been uniting with us in prayer at this time for blessing on the annual conventions held in these lovely hills during May. We now ask them to unite with us in praise to God for answered prayer. The Ootacamund Convention was the first to take place, the speakers being Rev. T. Walker, Rev. E. Carr, Rev. A. N. Storr, Rev. S. Price, of the C.M.S., with Pastor W. Mallis and Mr. Geo. Wilson, of the Ceylon and India General Mission. The last named conducted the early morning prayer meetings. The Bishop of Tinnevelly, who occupied the chair for one day, remarked that it was owing to a convention in England that he was working in India as a missionary-bishop at the present time. It was evident from the prayers of some who attended that the Holy Spirit had done a deep work in their hearts.

The Coonoor Convention was characterized by a deep spirit of unity among both speakers and hearers. The messages were clear, true, and deep; and were delivered with a freedom and power which made one forget the speakers, and brought God very near. The speakers were Rev. R. J. Ward, of Madras; Rev. W. Boggess, of the American Baptist Mission; Rev. T. Walker, of the C.M.S.; Pastor W. Mallis and Mr. G. Wilson, of the C.I.G.M. The afternoon Bible-readings, delivered by Rev. T. Walker, on the Book of Haggai, were most searching and inspiring.

The missionary meeting on the closing afternoon was greatly appreciated, the first address was given by Rev. L. B. Butcher, of the C.M.S., who, instead of speaking of his own work, gave a very interesting account of the work of Pandita Ramabai, remarking that he had often visited her institutions at "Mukti," and had always returned to his own station, which is quite near, refreshed and strengthened by witnessing the wonderful work of faith and the beautiful, consistent life of the Pandita.

Miss Wilson-Carmichael spoke of the difficulties and triumphs of the work in Tinnevelly, and gave instances of how the Holy Spirit had invariably laid a great burden of prayer upon her and her workers before a season of blessing. Miss Carmichael closed by making an earnest appeal to missionaries, planters, and others, whatever their position in life, to be soul-winners. Mr. Davis, of the Canadian Baptist Mission, gave an account of how a revival broke out in his station, and was carried on by the Christians themselves in several villages around. We feel sure that a true, deep work was wrought by the Spirit of God at this Convention, and more than twenty persons testified at the praise-meeting to blessing received.

Strangers at Port Said.

AFTER nearly two years assisting Mr. Locke at the Seamen's Rest and Strangers' Welcome, Port Said, I would give some account of the Lord's doings. We have many and varied opportunities of conversations with sailors and others. Just now we are praising God for several young fellows who spend an occasional hour with us in reading and prayer. A few months ago, while a beautiful yacht was here, an officer, aged fifty years, decided for Christ, saying, "Praise God for His long suffering." Then we had a native of India (educated in English); he came to the door begging, found the Saviour, and when, after some weeks, he left for his native land, he said, "Many, many thanks for introducing me to my Saviour." We pray that his return may mean the salvation of many of his own countrymen. Then at our English hospital several have professed; also backsliders have been restored, and a good, quiet work is going on. We distribute tracts and booklets in some fourteen different languages. Results are not lacking. News has recently come to hand of six or eight conversions on a man-of-war which was supplied with some of Mr. Dyer's purity books, and on several ships passing, many have expressed thanks for blessing received.—Yours, &c.,

J. D. McGregor.

*Caste at Work in India.

By Miss AMY WILSON-CARMICHAEL.

A STUDY of caste from an Indian point of view is a study from which you rise bewildered . . . . For example, take a kitchen and cooking, and see how caste rules there. For cooking is not vulgar work, or infra dig., in any sense, in India; all caste women in good orthodox Hindu families either do their own or superintend the doing of it by younger members of the same family or servants of the same caste. "We Europeans cannot understand the extent to which culinary operations may be associated with religion. The kitchen in every Indian household is a kind of sanctuary or holy ground . . . . The mere glance of a man of inferior caste makes the greatest delicacies uneatable, and if such a glance happens to fall on the family supplies during the cooking operations, when the ceremonial purity of the water used is a matter of almost life and death to every member of the household, the whole repast has to be thrown away as if poisoned. The family is for that day dinnerless. Food thus contaminated would, if eaten, communicate a taint to the souls as well as bodies of the eaters, a taint which could only be removed by long and painful expiation." Thus far Sir Monier Williams (quoted as a greater authority than any mere missionary!). Think of the defilement which would be contracted if a member of the household who had broken caste in baptism took any part in the cooking. It would never be allowed. Such a woman could take no share in the family life. Her presence, her shadow, above all her touch, would be simply pollution. Therefore, and for many other reasons, her life at home is impossible, and the Hindu, without arguing about it, regards it as impossible. It does not enter into the scheme of life as laid down by the rules of his caste. He never, if he is orthodox, contemplates it for a moment as a thing to be even desired.

COOKING IN A HOUSE OF THE SHINAR CASTE.

Cooking and kitchen work may seem small (though it would not be easy for even the greatest to live without reference to it), so let us look out on the world of trade, and see caste again as a doer there. If a merchant becomes a Christian, no one will buy his goods; if he is a weaver, no one will buy his cloth; if he is a jeweller, no one will employ him. If it is remembered that every particular occupation in life represents a particular caste, it will be easily understood how matters are complicated where converts from the great trade unions are concerned. Hence the need of industrial missions, and the fact that they exist.

A man wants to become a Christian, say, from the blacksmith or carpenter caste. As a Christian he loses his trade, and he has been trained to no other. His forefathers worked in iron or wood, and he cannot attempt to learn other work. Let the Christians employ him, you say. Some do; but the question involves other questions far too involved for discussion here. And even if we discussed it, we should probably end where we began—facing a practical problem which no one can hope to solve while caste is what it is.

Just now this system is in full operation in the case of a lad of the brassworker caste. He is a thoughtful boy, and he has come to the conclusion that Christianity is the true religion; he would like to be a Christian; if the conditions were a little easier he would be enrolled as an inquirer to-morrow. But here is the difficulty. His father is not strong, his mother and little sisters and brothers are his care; if he were a Christian he could not support them; no one would sell him brass, no one would buy the vessels he makes. He knows only his inherited trade. He can make fine water-pots, lamps, vases, and vessels of all sorts, nothing else. He is too old to learn any other trade; but supposing such an arrangement could be be made, who would support the family in the meantime? Perhaps we might do it; we certainly could not let them starve; but it would not do to tell him so, or to hold out hopes of earthly help, till we know beyond a doubt that he is true. This is what is holding him back. He reads over and over again, "He that loveth father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me," and then he looks at his father and mother and the little children; and he reads the verse again, and he looks at them again. It is too hard.

It is easy enough to tell him that God would take care of them if he obeys. We do tell him so, but can we wonder at the boy for hesitating to take a step which will, so far as he can see, take house and food and all they need from his mother and those little children?

These are some of the things which make work in India what is simply called difficult. We do not want to exaggerate. We know all lands have their difficulties, but when being a Christian means all this, over and above what it means elsewhere, then the bonds which bind souls are visibly strengthened, and the work can never be described as other than difficult.

More Missionaries for Guatemala.

DURING recent years, the patient labours of Gospel workers among Spanish-speaking people in the Latin-American States have been bearing fruit in many directions. The Training School for Christian workers, conducted by Friends in and near Los Angeles, California, are specially desirous of putting forth some young Friends who feel called of God to go as missionaries to East Guatemala, where there is a remarkably needy idolatrous people, but very accessible. The foundation of a work has already been laid by Bible colportage, and tract distribution.

The Training School is at present in rented quarters; but it is hoped, with the assistance of friends, that the institution will shortly have a permanent home. The superintendent is Mr. J. H. Cammack, East First Street, Los Angeles, California.

A Mission to Druses.

NOTWITHSTANDING the unfavourable weather there was a fair attendance of friends and supporters at the annual meeting of the Palestine and Lebanon Medical Mission in Baakleen, held at Exeter Hall. It was truly a praise meeting. Three new workers are going forth in the autumn—one of them is a missionary clergyman, with zeal for souls and a knowledge of the language, who can give the message of salvation to the men. This Mission is to the Druses, and the only one to them especially. Women have held the fort for Christ in Baakleen for ten years, with a Christian native doctor to help them, and now are earnestly praying for the help of a godly minister, for "How can they hear without a preacher, and how can they hear except he be sent?" Rev. F. Paynter was the chairman.

Mr. J. W. Peake stated that there is no debt. The committee work "from hand to mouth," and carefully administer the funds. There were fifty-six patients in the Cottage Hospital last year, and 3,933 attendances at the dispensary, where every morning the Gospel is faithfully impressed on the waiting sick.

Rev. C. H. V. Gollmer, the missionary going out to Baakleen, gave a striking address on the solemn responsibility of all Christians to help missions. He spoke on our privilege, our responsibility, our aim, and our yoke. We should pray earnestly, and labour together in love and peace, for the great purpose of winning souls and extending the Kingdom of Christ. Lebanon is a grand outpost; "how beautiful upon the mountains are the feet o :Him that bringeth good tidings . . that publisheth salvation." The office of the Mission is at 143, Clapham Road, S.W.

"Room in West Canada."

I HAVE received a large number of inquiries from readers of The Christian in response to my letter in your issue of March 26. There are two points which I should be very glad to be able to make more generally known to those interested in Britain.

(1) I think it is a very great mistake for a large party to go to an entirely new district. Speaking generally, new comers know nothing and need everything. When a few go to a comparatively settled district they have no difficulty in getting everything they need at very moderate prices; they also find the other settlers able and willing to help them in many ways quite free of charge. In an entirely new district, however, supplies have to be brought a long way, with the result that everything must be very dear.

(2) I wish I could say something sufficiently strong to induce some thousands of good, sensible, womanly women to leave their present poverty, and come out to this land of plenty. Such could, immediately on arrival, get employment at good wages in healthy surroundings. They are wanted to work in the home, and practically there are no other openings. A good housewife, even if her hair is turning grey, need not fear to come, for she would get a hearty welcome.—Yours sincerely,

R. J. Masters.

Friedenheim Hospital.

"GOD has been gracious to this hospital"—says Miss Davidson, in her annual report of this "Home of Peace for the Dying"—"in supplying every need, and we close the year with a voice of thanksgiving, not only for temporal abundance, but for spiritual blessings vouchsafed.

"Of the 150 patients who were in the Home for longer or shorter periods, eighty-two have passed away. Of most of these we feel humbly confident that they had at least 'touched the hem of His garment,' and been received by the Saviour of sinners; while, of some, with joy we can testify that they have gone in 'to see the King in His beauty,' whom here they loved and trusted.

"A young man who had been at Friedenheim for over two years was one of these. His spine had been injured by a terrible fall from a housetop while painting, and he was quite paralyzed, and only able to use his hands and arms. When first he came, he told us that all was very dark, but gradually the light was revealed to him, and he was enabled to accept God's will for him to be laid aside.

"One day, shortly before he was called 'up higher,' he told the nurse: 'I know now why God allowed me to come here, for when the surgeon told me I should never walk again, I was in despair; but the two years spent here have been such happy ones, and if I had not had a place like this to go to, I don't know how I should have borne it all.' Once when his friends were leaving him, and he was asked if he would like them to remain longer, he answered so sweetly, 'No, nurse; all I want is Jesus.'

"About three hours before he died, morning prayers were held in the ward as usual, and the hymn, chosen by himself, was 'Peace, perfect peace.' As the others were singing it, the nurse standing by him slowly repeated the words, and he just nodded his head, and whispered softly the word 'Peace,' and then relapsed into unconsciousness. He was quite unaware of the influence for good he exerted in the wards, and the love his fellow-patients bore him was most touching.

"In the Women's Ward we have also had tokens of blessing to encourage us. Mrs. B., the mother of a large family of grown-up sons and daughters, came to end her days at Friedenheim. She was suffering from that painful disease, cancer. It was here she first began to think of the life that is unseen, but very real. She seemed troubled because she could not see things, and one morning she fell asleep and dreamed a dream that was the turning-point in her spiritual life. Telling her dream, she said:—'I thought I was dying, and was trying to see Christ, when I heard a voice say to me, "'We walk by faith, and not by sight,'" and then it all seemed clear to me how I had been trying to see Him instead of trusting Him. "Day by day she tried to learn more about the Lord Jesus, laboriously spelling out her New Testament; and when any special verse came home to her, she always liked to share it with someone else.

"A sweet young girl on the day of her death said to the nurse, who was telling her about Tennyson's 'Crossing the Bar,' 'I do not like so much to think of crossing the bar, as of going to my Father's Home!' Such incidents could be multiplied, but these will be sufficient to show the reality of the faith of those who pass away, and that the 'anchor holds.'"

For the Sick and Helpless.—I have frequently been granted the hospitality of your columns, in which to plead the cause of the sick and helpless amongst whom we have so long been permitted to labour; and the liberality of your readers has enabled us to send annually, at this season of the year, considerable numbers of children and adults down to our holiday and convalescent homes at Maldon in Essex, for a fortnight's holiday or more. We work among some of London's poorest and most needy denizens.

Diligent for the Lord.

THE LATE Mr. EDWARD TROTTER.

ON June 8, 1903, Mr. Edward Trotter, third son of the late Captain Trotter, of Dyrham Park, Barnet, passed suddenly and peacefully away in the garden of his home at Pinner. Many who knew him and loved him may care to know that six months ago a gentle message of warning came as to heart weakness, but no one knew how near the translation was—from the service of earth to the manifestation of the presence of the Lord.

Though engaged in business for twenty-five years or more, Mr. Trotter's evenings were spent in many forms of Christian labour. He was one among the many who learned the heavenly art of winning hearts to Christ during Mr. Moody's missions, though long before that he had laboured in night schools, boys' homes, &c., and little village mission rooms. His bright and simple faith, and kind and gentle manner, were much used by God, and often overcame stubborn opposition. With his friend, Henry Drummond, he laboured incessantly in the inquiry rooms, and later in the streets, where night after night he brought in men of every class and kind to Exeter Hall. His holidays for many years were spent in blessed and fruitful work among French sailors at Honfleur, Flemish workmen at Brussels, French soldiers at Granville, and very specially in Sweden, when the wave of blessing first began to be felt. Many were won to the Lord, not by any special gifts of speaking, but by his love, his happy faith, his readiness to spend and be spent in the service of others.

Perhaps one lesson from his life might be:—Do not wait for great gifts or large opportunities: only be faithful and put the five loaves and two small fishes into His hands, who will bless, break, and give back to distribute. In the year 1883 a new service opened for him in connection with Emigrants' Homes at Blackwall. Here for seven years he laboured with his dear friend and helper, Mr. Wilke, in close co-operation with Lord Radstock, Mr. T. A. Denny, and others. No words can describe the blessing of those days. There were gathered from every part of Europe men, women, and children, separated from their homes, setting forth into the unknown, with hearts bewildered and oppressed. They often arrived in companies of from 700 to 800, and it is safe to say no ship sailed during those years without a praying band on board—a nucleus of praising and grateful hearts who had found Christ, and been cheered and comforted by human love in that Home. Polish Jews, German and Swedish peasants, Highlanders, and Welshmen, from every part and land they came; and passing through London—principally to Australia—carried with them that which, while life lasted, would be a memory of practical love. I think none of the many thousands (the record speaks of ninety thousand) who passed through that Home would ever be able to say "no man cared for my soul."

In 1886, a year spent in New Zealand and Australia led him into fresh fields and still more blessed experiences. He and his friend, Hon. G. Waldegrave, who had gone for health, without any intention of evangelizing, found the field so prepared that ten to fifteen meetings a week were often held, and countless calls from needy hearts, delayed their return from month to month. There was no great hall taken, nor gathering of thousands. The messengers in consciousness of great weakness, simply yielded their own plans and themselves to the guidance of the Divine Master from day to day. On returning and being questioned as to the marvellous beauties and interests of that new world, only one answer could be given—"We saw God's work."

In this work Mr. Trotter laboured and rejoiced. Later, when the Government no longer sent the emigrants through London, he threw his interest into the homes for working men, initiated by Lord Radstock and others. Here again with his friend Mr. Wilke, he gave "and spared not" until the end. The humblest detail, the dullest routine of figures, were as lovingly undertaken and as faithfully carried out as the more congenial work of witnessing for Christ, or dealing with individual hearts, many of whom owed their new hopes to his earnest, loving words.

Mr. Trotter was a trustee of the Mildmay Conference Hall, with which he was peculiarly linked in love through his beloved father's early work and association with Mr. Pennefather. He took a very deep interest in temperance work and in Gospel work among working men, for whom in numerous ways he interested himself, spending his leisure time on their behalf. In all these things he approved himself as a true servant, not in brilliant gifts of speech or insight, but "in much patience, . . . by pureness, by long suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned." Friendless No Longer.

A LARGE company assembled at the Homes, 5 and 7, Parsons Green, Fulham, on Saturday last, in connection with the summer meeting of the Homes for the Friendless and Fallen. Christian workers whose labours chiefly lie in rescuing young women and girls must have been deeply gratified with what they saw of the work of training carried on inside the Homes.

The young girls of the Jubilee Training Home exhibited some capital specimens of cookery and laundry work, sang a selection of pieces, and went through their musical drill in a way that spoke for itself of the ability of their teachers. The young women of the Rescue Home adjoining also sang several anthems, and in other ways contributed to the success of the gathering. One cannot help asking the question, What would have become of these poor girls if the Christian public had not had pity on them, and for Christ's sake stretched out the hand to save them?

One was the young girl referred to in the report of the Homes, who, before her admission, was known to have picked scraps out of the gutter to eat, because her drunken parents did not give her food. All had been rescued in various ways from the depths, but are now bright and happy and on the way to a fresh start in life. A few well chosen words were spoken to the inmates by Mr. C. H. Marten, and prizes were given to those whose conduct and work in the Home was the most satisfactory. No one could have been present at this gathering without feeling that the Homes are doing a good work. Mr. W. J. Taylor, the esteemed secretary, and those who co-operate with him are to be congratulated upon the success attending their efforts to save young women and girls. C.

The Weaver Brothers.

WHEN, in 1891, a man of business on the Manchester Cotton Exchange—Mr. Bewley F. Weaver (son of the late well-known evangelist, Richard Weaver)—heard the "call," and undertook the work of assistant evangelist to "The Imperial Mission," he did so with a desire to gain fuller experience and knowledge of such work, before launching out into a larger and freer sphere of labour. He saw enough of the working and power of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of men during his eighteen months' stay in the Potteries to cause him to long for a larger field; he felt the impelling force of the Master's words—"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel." While evangelizing in Hanley, and during the period of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's last great mission in Great Britain, Mr. Weaver was invited to hold his first mission, in Paisley, and Mr. Moody, hearing of this, met him at Edinburgh for an interview. To the older evangelist's question: "Will you go to America with me for twelve months' training? and then I will find you a church, or send you out into this work," the younger man at once answered "Yes." Arrangements were made; but, having in the meantime engaged himself to marry, he gave up the idea and remained in England.

Owing to the serious illness of his father, which prevented his fulfilling an engagement in Nottingham, he stepped into the breach. After a brief consideration, he said: "Father, I will go and take that mission for you;" and so the thing was settled, and he was again in harness. His brother Frank heard Bewley's offer to take their father's place at Nottingham, and said, "If you go to Nottingham, I will accompany you, and will sing for you." The young evangelist gladly accepted his brother's companionship, the two starting at once on their first tour as evangelists. Naturally, great disappointment was felt that Richard Weaver could not hold the mission; but the blessing of the Lord was with his sons, and His Name was glorified among men.

Then came an invitation to hold a mission for six days in the north of England from one who, without knowing of Mr. Weaver's prayer that a new way might be opened out before him, and that he had given himself to God for the furtherance of the Gospel, had heard him and been blessed on the previous Sunday at his brother's in Shropshire.

Here Mr. Weaver saw the hand of God pointing the way. "Will you go with me?" he asked his brother Frank.

"Yes," was the instant reply, "and if there is blessing, I will leave business and accompany you to sing."

Thus began their partnership in the work of saving souls. Not for six days, but for three busy blessed weeks, did they stay at Mealsgate, and many of the coldest hearts and blackest characters yielded themselves to God and still stand firm by His grace.

The next call was to the Tolbooth Hall, Glasgow; following that they held a six days' mission in Carlisle. The Lord was verily on their side, the church was crowded, and nearly two hundred souls were led by the Holy Spirit to seek salvation and peace.

One who was there thus wrote of this mission:—"On the Sunday, at all the services, the melting power of God was felt, and during all the week, 'the place was full of His glory.' . . . Pharisees and prodigals, all coming to Jesus." At the great praise-meeting on a snowy Saturday morning in February, the church was filled by 6 a.m. for a farewell meeting and testimony; 120 rose to give the latter, and the whole meeting became one great outburst of joy."

Newcastle was the next scene of their labours in the cause of Christ; then Kentish Town. At the latter place the present writer was much struck by the demeanour of a youngish man who was leaving one of the meetings—he walked as one under the influence of alcohol; but at the question, "Have you received blessing?" his face became illuminated, he pulled himself together, and, like one just awakening out of a long sleep, he said:—

"Yes, I've received the blessing of Christ—a new heart."

"Did you know anything of the way of salvation before to night?" he was asked. All this time he was trembling with emotion, and asked permission to sit for a few moments on a low wall.

"Yes," he again answered, "for I have a godly mother. But I never saw or felt the way of salvation until to-night, when that man looked at me and said: 'Christ is for you, my brother.'"

"Come back with me, and let us tell him so," was proposed.

"No," was the reply, "I couldn't do it; I'm not made that way; and, another thing, I shouldn't like my mother to be bothered by strangers just now, as she is just recovering from an operation. But here's my address, if you'll be good enough to regard it as private; for perhaps you'll like to know how it turns out after to-night." For two years the writer was in touch with this man, who was the means of the conversion to Christ of the girl to whom he was engaged, who married, and who went to New York after the death of his mother, still confessing Christ. If J—— L—— should see these words, the writer would like to tell him that he is still remembered in prayer.

In connection with their mission at the Edinburgh Castle, it is interesting to note that Dr. Barnardo had intended that it should continue only for a month; but "so mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed," so deeply did the Holy Spirit enter into their work, that the doctor was impelled to get all their engagements for the next month cancelled, that the work of grace at the Edinburgh Castle might be continued, as it was, for two months.

The ensuing winter found the brothers actively at work, and always with a great ingathering of souls for the heavenly garner. At this time the Great Assembly Hall at Mile End was in the hands of the decorators. Mr. Charrington, therefore, hired the Paragon Music Hall, and here, for four Sundays, the poor had the Gospel preached to them. Crowds of people who never saw the inside of a church attended the meetings; refreshment bars became inquiry rooms, and in the tawdry surroundings of this so-called place of amusement, dozens of sinful souls, touched by the hand of God, found pardon and peace.

In Scotland the Brothers Weaver are well-known and liked, being held in much esteem. During one of their missions in Aberdeen they were asked to address the Synod of the Free Church, while a year or two ago, during the Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign, they took a position of great prominence in that work. To God, and not to men, be all the praise and glory! Dr. Howie, of Govan; Dr. Alex. Whyte and Dr. John Smith, of Edinburgh; Dr. Hastings, Kinneff; Dr. Black, Inverness; Dr. Crerar, of Leith; and the late Principal Brown, of Aberdeen, are among the well-known men of religious influence in Scotland with whom the brothers have been in fellowship.

Shoreditch Tabernacle, with its 3,300 seats, and its difficult sphere of labour, has been one scene of their labours. Here Mr. Bewley Weaver took a chill during the Mission, and, travelling in this condition to Wingate, Durham, to inaugurate the provincial work for the Free Church Council, developed pneumonia. His life hung in the balance for several days; but prayer ascending from faithful souls all over the country, received its answer in an almost miraculous recovery. At Wishaw, in May last, a blessed Revival sprang up. Crowded churches, aisles, windows and stairs, filled by men, and at one church by women, showed that the simple Gospel has not lost its hold upon the hearts of the people. M. B. G.

Mr. Bewley Weaver recently arrived home at Hanley just in time to be present at the deathbed of his father-in-law (Mr. Edward Walley), who passed away very suddenly. This unexpected event has brought about a change in the Weaver Brothers' future, as, after mature deliberation, Mr. Bewley feels it to be his distinct duty to remain at home and continue his father-in-law's business. This step has not been taken without waiting for guidance and the advice of well-known workers. He will, however, still keep in touch with the Lord's work, and be open to give his Sabbaths to the preaching of the Gospel. Mr. Frank Weaver, who possesses the gift of speech as well as a beautiful voice for singing the Gospel, will continue the work in the future. It is with mutual regret that they part in this way; but each feels that it is the right step to take, and no doubt God will be able to own Mr. Bewley's testimony as a business man, and Mr. Frank will find effectual doors opened to him in the evangelistic world.

Mr. Frank Weaver's next mission is at the Great Assembly Hall during the month of July, when the prayers of God's people will be highly valued. His address is 4, Sophia Road, Leyton, Essex.

Christ is Mine.

Who can, like Christ, the spirit cheer,
With love Divine?
I need not entertain a fear
Since He is mine.

My sorrows He hath made His own,
Why then repine?
Right gladly will I make it known,
That Christ is mine.

It is my joy to walk with Him,
When light doth shine;
My path is safe, tho' sight be dim,
Since He is mine.

I look around me and above,
Glad to resign
My all to Him, whose name is Love,
For He is mine!

I cannot find in all I read
One single line
That need disturb my hopeful creed,
While He is mine.

He is the Way, the Truth, the Life,
The Lamb Divine,
And I shall conquer in the strife,
For He is mine!

What heavenly joys my soul await,
What bliss Divine!
My Lord will open wide the gate,
Whose life is mine!

The Obedience of Faith.

At the annual meeting of the United College, Bradford, on June 24, the address to the students was given by Rev. J. P. Gledstone, who took for his theme "The Obedience of Faith," and pointed out that faith in Jesus as a personal Saviour prompts an obedience which is of the very essence of apostleship and service. Experience, which is the result of faith, is the flavour of the ministry, the attestation of the truth, the "I know" of St. Paul and St. John. The ministry of Paul began at the point of personal faith in Jesus and knowledge of Him. We have not to construct a faith for to-day, but to receive that which was given once for all, and then preach it as we know it. This can never become too narrow for any soul; none can outgrow it. "Views," opinions, the structure of the Bible, may be interesting to some persons; but in dealing with them a steady eye must be kept upon moral and spiritual results. The ministry is one of emancipation from sin and misery, and of judgment for such as go on in their evil ways. An inexorable materialism must not be allowed to supplant the righteousness and redeeming love of a personal God. Better the Calvinistic God, so much spoken against, who, at any rate, had some mercy, than a mere blind force that exacts the uttermost farthing of retribution, but never forgives or saves.

EXPERIENCE NOT SUFFICIENT.

The ministry is not to be limited by the minister's experience; it is not to be a mere reflection of himself, even at his best. "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord." "We preach the unsearchable riches of Christ," and not simply that part of them which has been appropriated and is enjoyed.

A GREAT FAITH.

Only a great faith is equal to the demands of the Gospel, great in the truths it receives, in the objects it looks to, and in the living, loving, Almighty God it depends upon. A particle of faith that unites a man to infinite love, to infinite wisdom, and to infinite power, may be the vehicle of immeasurable blessings to the world. The world has need of men of faith to unite it to spiritual things with which it has lost touch, and to God from whom it has gone astray. Their faith must encounter opposition, and may, in some places, have to face death.

PRACTICAL PREACHING.

The difficulty of practical preaching requires constant and simple faith in God. Even earnest Christians find the precepts of the Gospel very trying to the flesh, how much more those who live far from God, and have a feeble sense of what they owe to Christ. The latter incline to the world, object to "narrow Puritanism," and plead for "broad charitable living"; but such professors would hardly have relished the company of the Master Himself, who spoke parables against His hearers' sins which were directly personal and disturbingly true. Broad living is not exactly Christian, neither is broad thinking

"BREADTH."

Why should certain views be called "broad" which eliminate from Scripture as many facts and as much of the Divine as they can? Some would broaden religion by omitting the miracles. The effect of that upon the Gospels would be to make the narrative portions meaningless, and much of the teaching would stand like the lonely walls of a house in ruins, unable to impart either shelter or warmth or comfort. To delete the miracles is not enrichment, increase, breadth; it is diminution, impoverishment, narrowness. "Prove all things." Test the affirmations and negations, the theories and views of men who would reshape the Gospel. Verify the quotations and Scripture references of writers who are free in the handling of Scripture. Subject the articles in Bible dictionaries to examination. Simple honesty to God and to the souls of men requires ministers and students to do their best to understand the Scriptures, but not to cut and carve them in order to accommodate them to critics and foes. Accommodation would have led the Apostles to remove the Cross from their Gospel and be silent about the Resurrection; for the Cross was a stumbling block to the Jew and to the Greek foolishness, while the Resurrection was always provoking mockery. But if we believe the facts of the Gospel to be true and their meaning divine, we must be obedient to our faith and preach them. And so also must the precepts be declared. The Sermon on the Mount requires as much faith to receive it as the third chapter of John's Gospel; it cuts right across ambition, selfishness, pride. Gospel morality never was popular. A modern caustic author speaks of a class of persons who "would have been equally horrified at hearing the Christian religion doubted and at seeing it practised." Wise men want to know what will happen to society if the teachings of Jesus are carried out. But the preacher is not called upon to show what changes will follow—he cannot; this he knows, that "the foolishness of God is wiser than men." It may not seem wise to lay up no treasure on earth, but such is the precept to be practised and preached. If fewer Christians were running after fortunes, more would be running to the prayer meeting. It has a peculiarly strange look for a minister who began life with nothing to die leaving a fortune. The obedience of faith will save from worldly-mindedness, and from a ministry that is conventional or formal or merely intellectual.

Glasgow Bible Training Institute.

The eleventh session of the Bible Training Institute, Glasgow, was brought to a close by a series of interesting meetings on Wednesday and Thursday, June 24 and 25. A reunion of the students of former years had been arranged for, and many labouring in different parts of the country were present. With the eighty-six present students, about 200 were present, a few being at home on furlough from foreign and colonial fields, and a time of real fellowship was enjoyed.

The services opened on Wednesday morning with Principal Anderson in the chair. The subject for consideration was: "How can we best promote personal spiritual life, and gain increased fitness for our service?"

Pastor J. W. Kemp named three things:—(1) Cultivate dependence on the Lord Jesus Christ—not on circumstances; (2) Maintain a strong and passionate love to the Lord; (3) Gravitate into solitude, and be much in prayer with the Lord.

Many other former students took part, Mr. Flett, from South Africa, telling how he had often found it necessary to shut the door, pin himself to a promise, and wait on his face before God for needed help. The daily noon prayer-meeting was taken by the students.

At a garden party later in the day, Lord Overtoun addressed words of welcome to the assembled company, and thereafter several brief addresses were given. Rev. Dr. Howie commended the work of the Bible Training Institute, and said that practical training should be given to all students for the ministry similar to that given at the B.T.I. He affirmed that practical work in connection with the 1859 revival did more to fit him for the years of his ministry "than all the prelections of learned professors;" and he maintained that if men "were not prepared to go in for winning souls they had better keep out of the ministry altogether." Rev. J. Bell Henderson, Glasgow, Rev. Dr. Gray, from Pretoria, Rev. Dr. Meiklejohn and Rev. Mr. Roberts, from Australia, Sir Samuel Chisholm, Bart., and Mr. John Anderson also spoke.

On Thursday morning a pleasant time was spent in conferring and reporting about work. Later in the day tokens of love and esteem were presented to Mr. Anderson.

In the evening a large public meeting was held in the Christian Institute, at which Mr. Anderson gave a statement of the year's work, addresses being delivered by Rev. Dr. Meiklejohn, Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of Australia, Rev. Dr. Rainy, and others. J. C.

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

JUNE 24-26.

THE annual Conference at Mildmay, so eagerly anticipated by many of the Lord's people, has again maintained a high level of spirituality. Captain Dawson presided, and by his earnest and thoughtful words of introduction, and his careful guidance of the meetings in the spirit of prayer, did much to render the Conference helpful to souls. Colonel Morton and other friends took active part, as usual. Following the first session, which was reported in our last issue, there was a Bible Reading by Mr. George Soltau, who depicted, with the aid of a diagram, Time as an island in the ocean of Eternity, and showed the dealings of God with men, stage by stage, culminating in the triumph of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

The subjects for the subsequent days were—Wednesday: True Discipleship (Eph. vi. 6). How should it be manifested? Thursday: Equipment for Service (2 Tim. iii. 17). How can this be secured?

A striking feature was the Bible Reading on Wednesday afternoon by Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas. His subject was "Why did Jesus die?" The close association of our Lord's sacrifice with His service was clearly shown. The sacrifice is the crowning service. In the picture of the servant of Jehovah in Isa. xlii. to liii. the varied aspects of His service culminated in the sacrifice of chapter liii. So, in the record of the Gospel narrative, the service of Jesus of Nazareth was crowned by Calvary. Indeed, we may go further, and say that in the Epistles the stress is so clearly laid on the Cross that it might almost seem as though that were the only service Jesus ever rendered, the only thing He ever did. In view of this, the question, "Why did Jesus die?" becomes of great importance, and the speaker dealt with the position, the purpose, and the power of Christ's death. The New Testament teaches us that there is one great correlative to the death of Christ. That is faith. Faith in us answers to fact in Christ. Trust in man answers to truth in God. Faith is our response to God's revelation. Faith is concerned with every aspect of the Cross, and exercises itself in various ways on the death of Christ, or rather on the Christ that died. Well might the Apostle exclaim, "God forbid that I should glory save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."

TUESDAY.

The Exalted Servant.

(Heb. vii. 25.)

By Rev. E. W. MOORE.

How wonderful that the service of Christ did not cease with the termination of His life on earth! The thought of humiliation is no longer united with that of service, for the time has come for the Son of Man to be glorified. Yet at the right hand of the Majesty He serves; and next to the preciousness of the death of Christ is the preciousness of His life. "For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son, much more being reconciled we shall be saved by His life." I want you to fix your thoughts upon the wonderful revelation of the service of Christ in Heaven.

The Epistle to the Hebrews is a book of contrasts. It has often been said that the keynote of it might be found in the word "better"—the better covenant, established upon better promises, which it reveals. The writer of the Epistle had no easy task before him, for he had to convince those to whom he wrote of the superiority of our Lord Jesus Christ to all that was most cherished in the thoughts and minds of the Jews.

To begin with, he had to convince his readers of the superiority of Christ to angels, and angels played a great part in the Old Testament economy. The thought of the guardianship of angels was no small privilege to the Jews. Had they not received the Law by the disposition of angels? Had not their prophets been waited upon by angels? Had not Elisha been guarded by the chariots and horses of fire? Had not an angel descended to prepare breakfast for Elijah in the wilderness?

Still more difficult, the writer shows the superiority of our blessed Lord to Moses. Now Moses was a name of might to every Hebrew; and it is to-day. In the east of London they will tell you, very much in the language of the Pharisees of old, "We know that God spoke unto Moses." We shall find in the third chapter how delicately but wisely he exhibits Moses as faithful in all his house "as a servant," but yet only as a servant.

THE PRIESTHOOD OF CHRIST.

Another step, and he is face to face with the great question of Judaism, that of priesthood. The priest was the pivot upon which the machinery of the Mosaic ritual revolved. A man could not approach God except through the instrumentality of the priest. In the seventh chapter the writer deals with that mysterious personage Melchizedek, that figure which flits across the page of history, apparently without ancestry. Of him it is witnessed that he lives, and so he is a type of Him who is the true Melchizedek, whose priesthood far excels the priesthood of Aaron, and of whom it is written that "He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them."

Let us think of this salvation which Christ, in His service to men as the ascended Lord, is able to bestow:—

(1) In its Subjects. Probably every Christian worker here has used this text in preaching to the unsaved. We are not to limit its application. We are assured that it has a message to the soul that is farthest from God. The wording teaches us, however, that it is not in the first instance applicable to wanderers, but to worshippers. Mark what is said, "Able to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by Him"—them that come. In Heb. x. 1, we find comers are worshippers. The sacrifices of the Law could never "make the comers thereunto perfect" regarding the conscience; for, if so—comers and worshippers are identified—"the worshippers once purged would have henceforth no more conscience of sin."

FOR WORSHIPPERS AS WELL AS WANDERERS.

There is a salvation for worshippers as well as for wanderers. This is a mighty word. It looks back to Him who hath saved us and called us with a holy calling. It embraces the present, that we may receive the end of our faith, even the salvation of our souls, in the present tense—receiving, every day we live and every hour, salvation, not from the wrath to come, but from the sin which defiles the Christian's life.

Then there is a salvation yet future, a salvation of which He speaks in 1 Pet. i. 9, a "salvation ready to be revealed in the last time," when it shall be completed, and this poor body shall be fashioned like unto His glorious body.

(2) In its Extent. Mark the extent of this salvation. Taking all together, no better rendering could be given to the most remarkable word that is here employed, to indicate the extent of Christ's power to save, than that which we have in the famous expression of the Authorized Version, "to the uttermost." The Greek word is a compound one, and has a double thought in it, suggesting the idea of completeness and also that of duration. Was there ever a gladder, greater message than this of a complete salvation?

This is something to encourage us, and to make us strong. It is salvation to the uttermost depth of human need; and when we remember how needy we are, we may well wonder at a revelation like this. Oh, how needy is man, how weak, how empty himself! Yet, shallow as he is, how profound! Why, there is a gulf in us, a depth that all the prizes and gifts of earth can never fill, something that can never rest with any created thing! What a proof that we were made for God! We are undone for ever if we cannot have fellowship with God; and here is a promise to meet the need. He will not leave us half-way. When the shadows begin to thicken, and the days to darken, and the strength to weaken, and the heart to fail, then Christ is still able to save.

CHRIST'S ABILITY.

(3) In the Grounds upon which it is Secured to us. Now what are the grounds of Christ's ability to save? That word "able" is a good one. Ability inspires confidence. It commands respect. You like to hear of an able lawyer, or administrator, or soldier; but here is ability that transcends all human power. How is it that he is able?

(a) First of all, He is able to save because of the perfection of His character. A priest is a man clothed in symbolical purity, and ready to transact business between God and the human soul. That is the idea which has been so associated with oppression and degradation, and which survives to-day because it appeals to human nature.

There is no man who has not at some time had a sense of guilt. He has the conviction that he is wrong. He has some sense that God is holy, and he needs a priest. If a human priest comes and says, "I understand your position, put yourself in my hands, I will undertake for you; you are not holy enough to go to God, but I will do it; leave yourself with me and all shall be well"—the man who does that shows that priesthood meets a deep want in human nature, and there never was a time when it was more necessary than to-day to have clear views of the priesthood of Jesus Christ. We have a High Priest, and we need no other priest. The Lord Jesus Christ is the Priest for poor sinful men and women. His purity is not symbolic, but absolute.

(b) There is a preciousness in His blood. If the blood of bulls and of goats sanctified "to the purifying of the flesh, how much more should the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God." The blood of bulls or goats could not take away sin, but the precious blood of Christ can cleanse from every stain; and it is that blood that is able to save.

THE PLACE OF INTERCESSION.

(c) Then there is the place in which He administers the priesthood. He would not be a priest if He were on earth, seeing there were priests according to the Law, but now Christ is in heaven. He is glorified, and He wants, by virtue of His Heavenly Priesthood, to bring us into the sanctuary of God, into the heavenly life. The life He would have us lead, is a heavenly life. Because He is in the sanctuary we can live so that we may continually dwell in the holy place, and abide, and go no more out. It is the place in which He ministers that gives power to His intercession.

(d) There is the perpetuity of his intercession. There was perpetuity in Aaron's sons, yet it was a succession of men, and each man died; but this Man continueth, for He dieth no more. What an unspeakable blessing to have a friend who never dies. Jesus Christ can save, because He "is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life." "Because I live, ye shall live also." He intercedes personally. He does not depute the work.

The Lord Jesus Christ never has lost and never will lose a case, and it will not be by any technicality of law, but because of the righteous Advocate, and because He is able to plead His own finished work, that you shall be acquitted, and your soul released from guilt and fear.

He is able to save because of the power of His Spirit. Have you remembered that it is the great prerogative of the risen Christ to send upon men the Holy Ghost—that He may receive gifts for men, for the rebellious also, that the Lord God might dwell among them? Because He still baptizes with the Holy Ghost and with fire, He will send upon the waiting heart the purifying baptism of the Holy Spirit. While you are in the midst of the toil, and suffering, and temptation, He is able to save to the uttermost all that come.

Characteristics of the Servant.

By Pastor ARCHIBALD G. BROWN.

The first word in this chapter is "Behold." As Delitzsch says, this "Behold" is in grammatical contrast to the "Behold" in the last verse of the previous chapter. The prophet of the Lord has thrown down the gauntlet. "If the idols be gods, and their servants really prophets, then let them foretell the future as I do." But they were powerless to do this, and Isaiah adds, "Behold they are nought, their idols are no gods." Then, in splendid contrast, we have this verse.

The others were frauds. They failed absolutely. They were as the breath of wind; but in chap. xlii. we have a mysterious, yet glorious Character somewhat dimly portrayed, and in order to detect His beauty and glory we have to look narrowly and carefully into the words. The individuality is far too strong to allow of the idea that the "Servant" is simply Israel personified. There are strong personal traits. He is a transcendent character, blending with Israel, yet distinct from Israel, and ultimately rejected by Israel.

SERVING MEN INSTEAD OF GOD.

True, Israel's national vocation was to be the servant of the Lord. That was God's ideal concerning His chosen people, but how miserably they failed to reach the standard; and, therefore we have these strangely suggestive words. "Nevertheless they shall be his servants; that they may know My service and the service of the kingdoms of the countries" (2 Chron. xii. 8).

The Lord was going to hand Israel over into the hands of Egypt. "They would not be My servants," says Jehovah, "then they shall be the servants of Shishak, and they shall learn by experience how vastly different is the loving service I ask of them from the service which will be demanded by an earthly power."

Although Israel failed in this way, the calling of God is always without repentance, the vocation cannot fall to the ground; and therefore, though the ideal is not found in Israel, it is found in One who is the Son of Abraham. Just as the perpetuity of David's throne and of the Aaronic priesthood is found in Jesus, so the reality of the service which Israel was to have bestowed was found in Him.

In this chapter we have Him introduced with a trumpet note—"Behold," and we catch occasional glimpses of this wonderful Servant until we reach chapter liii. After that He disappears; the last view we have of Him is, "He shall see of the travail of His soul, and shall be satisfied; by the knowledge of Him shall My righteous Servant justify many, for He shall bear their iniquities." He disappears because He has done His work. From chapter liv. to the end of the book we have the word "servants," always in the plural, because it was promised to the righteous Servant that He should see His seed, and the seed of "the Servant" is found in "the servants" of the Lord.

THE WORK SET BEFORE THE SERVANT.

What was the work of this "Servant" of Jehovah? It was to do the will of God, to magnify the Lord, and yet to save the very men who had dishonoured and broken that law. In xlii. 21, we have a notable passage. The herculean task given to this righteous Servant is that He is to "magnify the law, to make it honourable;" and yet He is to provide a justification for the very men who had broken it. As we see in the last sentence that we have regarded Him, He has accomplished the task, "He shall justify many," for He bears their iniquities.

(1) The first characteristic of the Servant is that He is "elect." Christ, as Jehovah's Servant, was no afterthought, and Calvary was no desperate expedient to meet an unforeseen crisis; 750 years had to pass when this phrase is uttered, and yet we will see that Jehovah gazes upon this One and says, "Behold my Servant whom I uphold; mine Elect." It is all according to the eternal programme. With God there is no past or future; He is the Eternal Now. Put side by side with that xlix. 1, and we see the portrait more complete. There it is the Servant of the Lord singing.

(2) He is the Well Beloved: "In Him My soul delighteth." This word carries the force of "He whom My soul accepts. I am delighted with Him," says the Father, "delighted not only as a Son, but as a Servant." I do not think the Father has ever been able to say this of any other servant. He bears with us and forgives us, and in His grace He accepts the poor service we render. God has only had one Son without sin, and one Servant without imperfection.

(3) He is Spirit-clothed: "I have put My Spirit upon Him." Christ took the same place which, in dependence upon the Holy Spirit, we occupy now; and what Jesus did, He did, not in the power of absolute Deity, but in the power of the anointing of the Holy Spirit. How sweetly that comes out in the New Testament (Luke iv.). All the way through we have the link maintained.

A WORLD-WIDE SERVICE.

(4) His service was not to be confined to one nation. "He shall bring forth judgment to the nations." Although of the seed of Abraham, His service is not limited to the nationality of that descent; it is to "the nations," in the plural. In xlix. 6, we have the words "unto the end of the earth." There is no other frontier to the realm of our Lord's service. It is intensely interesting to find that in Luke ii. 32 you have a Jew (Simeon) saying that which should have been the last thing a Jew would utter. Note the order, "a light to lighten the Gentiles," and afterwards he adds, "the glory of Thy people Israel." The explanation is that he was filled with the Holy Ghost.

(5) His service was to be marked by peculiar quietness and gentleness (xlii. 2, 3). "He should not cry," in hopeless grief; "shout," that is, in ostentatious triumph. There was no parade, no show in our Master's work. Our Lord seemed really to shrink from the public gaze. Oh, the gentleness of it! You could not have anything weaker than a bruised reed. Somebody has broken it, and it is lying down in the mire. When the perfect Servant of the Lord comes, He does not put His foot upon it.

In l. 4, "the tongue of the learned," does not mean the clever and highly educated; it means the tongue of a scholar, of one who is learning how to speak a word in season to him that is weary. O blessed Servant of the Lord, who knows how to whisper with infinite tenderness into the heart of the weary one! Jesus Christ is the beautifully footed servant (lii. 7). He comes with beautiful and gentle step, and with loving touch.

GENTLE BUT NOT WEAK.

(6). Yet He was full of holy resolution and courage (xlii. 4 R.V. marg.). He is very tender to bruised reeds, but He is not a bruised reed Himself. Read xlix. 4. It is quite true that our Lord in His perfect humanity felt all the force of seeming failure; and it is the Servant of the Lord who says, "I have laboured in vain, I have spent my strength for nought, and in vain"—but He does not stop there. "Yet surely my judgment is with the Lord, and my recompense with my God." There is that magnificent "yet." He felt the force of the opposition. He was not unacquainted with depression of spirit. Side by side with that look at l. 7—"For the Lord God will help me; therefore shall I not be confounded; therefore have I set My face like a flint."

There are some people who have a face like butter, but a heart like flint. Jesus Christ had the flint in His face, but not in His heart. He was no poor, weak character. There are leagues of distance between a gentle character and a weak one. This Servant of the Lord is faithful unto death. He passes through chapter liii. He not only did, but He bore the will of God; which is even harder.

In liii. 11, that last glimpse, why shall He "justify many"? Not because He was a servant, or because of His ethical teaching, but because he shall "bear their iniquities." By His perfect life He is a burnt offering; as the sin offering He puts away the sins of His people.

WEDNESDAY.

True Discipleship.

By Rev. GORDON B. WATT.

In considering how discipleship is to be manifested, let us look at Rev. xiv. 4, "These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth." To follow the Lamb is discipleship; to follow Him whithersoever He goeth is the test of the reality of discipleship. I heard a missionary from the West Indies say last week that they have need of no more preachers and missionaries in Jamaica; they have enough. I venture to say that what we want in our own country is not more workers or preachers, but men and women who are prepared to follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth, and take the risks and consequences of that following. The most eloquent preaching is the preaching of a life absolutely true to the Lord Jesus Christ, and the most successful work is that of the man who dares to be true to the Cross and who follows the Lamb.

The late Principal Brown of Aberdeen once had a caller at midnight, requesting him to visit a dying woman. As the man unfolded his errand, it occurred to Dr. Brown that his visitor was under a misapprehension, and should have consulted a neighbouring physician of the same name. In answer to the Professor's inquiry, the man replied, "It is the Dr. Brown who practises I want, not the one who preaches." Jesus Christ requires of us that we should be practisers.

The first question before us is, "Who can follow the Lamb?" And the answer is given in the same verse, "These were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits unto God and to the Lamb." And here I want to put a personal question, "Are you redeemed?" A redeemed soul is much more than a pardoned or justified soul. A redeemed soul is a delivered soul, in which the character of Jesus Christ has become manifest. The word "redeemed" takes us back to the old days, when the master went down to the market place and chose his slave, expecting him to follow him. It would have been a poor recompense to the master if the slave went with another man. Jesus Christ comes down into the market place of the world where men are chained and buys them. He paid the price of His own precious life's blood for us, and surely it is a poor recompense to Jesus Christ if we are remaining still servants of another master. The proof of our redemption lies in the fact that we have accepted Christ as our new Master, and entered into newness of life and service.

Another question is, "Where are we to follow the Lamb?" Whithersoever He goeth. I want to put another text into this passage from Luke xxii., "Ye are they which have continued with Me in My temptation." If it was the will of God that Christ's life should be full of tests, it must be the will of God for Christ's disciples also.

I want to point out some of the crises in our Lord's life to show you what will be the experience of the disciple. In Matt. ix. 10, xii. 10, xv. 2, Luke vii. 39, and John iv., we have occasions on which here might have come to Jesus the temptation to stand aside from those who were the outcasts of society, but He risked His reputation as a Teacher and a Jew to save the lost. The same temptation comes to us to-day. So much is due to custom. "You will be certain to lose in your business." The question you and I have to decide is: Are we prepared to follow the Lamb, even though it be at the risk of our reputation? To Christ there came the temptation to shirk the cross. Does not the same temptation come to us? Again and again the cross is presented to us—do we shirk it or carry it? In Mark i. 38 we read: "And He said, Let us go into the next towns that I may preach there also." The temptation that might have come to the Lord was to stay where He was. The people were ready to listen to Him. Does not the same test come to us? God calls a man from the centre of popularity, and then there comes the crisis whether he will follow the Lamb whithersoever He leadeth. The call to us from the Lord is: "Go where the world's need is the greatest."

Another test is found in John vi. 15: "When Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take Him by force to make Him a king, He departed again into a mountain Himself alone." Here was Jesus Christ refusing a kingly power. It was not God's will for Him to take it at that time and in that way. The throne awaited Him after the cross. The same temptation comes to the disciple to take a path that is easy; but there is no easy path in following the Lamb. The true disciple must dare to follow Him however rough and winding the path may be.

These are some of the crises of Christ's life, and the question for us to decide is, are we prepared to answer His call and refuse to follow in any path that is not clearly the path of God? What will be the result? "Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve Him day and night." That is what God is bringing us to. If you ask, "How shall I follow the Lamb?" look back to John i., where we see the dove resting upon the Lamb. We want the Lamb life and the dove life, then we shall have the gift of Divine power.

In the Footprints of the Lamb.

By Mr. MAX REICH.

Shall we turn to some passages in the Gospels in which we see indicated our Lord's teaching concerning discipleship. In Matt. x. He has chosen His disciples, and is about to send them forth, giving them as the motto of their life and testimony, "The disciple is not above his master, or the servant above his lord." In the same chapter He says: "He that loveth father and mother more than Me is not worthy of Me; and he that loveth son or daughter more than Me is not worthy of Me; and he that taketh not his cross and followeth after Me is not worthy of Me." In Luke ix. our Lord was speaking about six days before His transfiguration, which marked a distinct moment in His public ministry. In full view of that transformation, our Lord says: "The Son of Man must suffer many things." Turning to John xii. we find our Lord on the threshold of Gethsemane and Golgotha, giving His final words concerning His ministry.

The resurrection of Lazarus had made a profound impression on the people. Certain Greeks were moved with wonder at this Jesus, whose name was in every mouth. So they come desiring to see Him, and be introduced to His presence. Mark what our Lord said: "Verily, verily, the hour has come when the Son of Man should be glorified. Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit. He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal. If any man serve Me let him follow Me, and where I am there shall also My servant be; if any man serve Me, him will My Father honour."

What did the Master mean by "glorified"? He did not mean glory such as this world counts glory. The Greeks used that word very freely: but that which they looked upon as glory and that which Christ regarded as glory represented ideas diametrically opposed. Christ's idea of glory was to lay down His life and be led as a lamb to the slaughter. Where was He led? First, to be tempted of the devil, then into poverty, shame, loneliness, midnight watches by the mountain side, into Gethsemane, to those trying hours in the High Priest's Palace. Only a dove could lead Him, and that Eternal Spirit to whose still small voice He had listened led Him to the Cross.

There is to-day a great cry for the fulness of the Spirit. If you want to know the fulness, power, and supremacy of the Spirit of God expect to be led in that pathway in which you can see the footprints of the Lamb. Do not expect the Master to be led in one way, and you who call yourself His servant to be led in another. The disciple is to become perfect as his Master, who was only made perfect through suffering. In the blood of the Lamb we have a sufficient title to heaven; but there are lessons to be learnt which can only be learnt down here. There is not a spot too holy, too sacred, or too Divine into which the blood does not give us full and unquestioning liberty of access, and because of the infinite value of that blood we might have been taken to heaven the first day we trusted in it. God did not choose to take us because we have lessons to learn and experiences to enter into which could not be learnt or entered into in heaven. The disciple has to learn down here, through crucible to crucible, from furnace to furnace, lessons which prepare him for the service committed to the Church in the ages to come.

We are going to be ascended with Him, when He begins to rule, according to the glory of God the Father. There is going to be a help-meet brought into the presence of the Holy One by the Holy Ghost; there is going to be a bride standing by the side of the Lamb, who is going to share with Him His regal honours and glory, and subdue all things under His feet, till the utmost bounds of creation shall be brought back to blessing, and the kingdom handed back to God the Father. How can we be associated with Him in His future service and ministry of blessing to this groaning creation unless we walk in the footprints of the Lamb? There is no other path in which you can make progress, no other path in which your life will be fruitful. And fruit is more than success. Most people desire success. Did the Cross look like success? The weeping women thought the Cross the greatest calamity. Ask Mary what she thought of the Cross. Did she look on it as a successful issue of the life of the One she had carried in her arms? What did the mob think of it? With what eyes did they watch Him? "They look and stare upon Me." Did the Cross look like triumph, glory and victory? And yet it was the crown and climax of that wonderful life. What would the life of Jesus have been without that crown upon it? Wrapped up in that shame was glory. That which looked like defeat was victory.

If your life is to bring forth fruit that shall remain—and not wither away in the Day of Christ—have the stamp of eternity upon it, you must let the Spirit of God lead you in the footsteps of the Lamb. If you follow the Lamb, He will teach you to live the life of love and service. Jesus knew how to bind up the broken heart, speak the right word to everyone. He served us by His words. Do we look up to Him with the prayer that the words of our lips may be agreeable to His will? Do we serve one another with our words? But, above all, He served us by His example. He said: "I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you." Those difficulties of your life give you opportunity to walk in the footsteps of the Lamb, and there you will learn wonderful lessons of discipleship. "Let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow Me." These three things go together; you cannot have one without the other. When you determine to deny yourself, you will be tested by all those little things of which your daily life is composed; when you are in earnest the cross will meet you. Do not allow it to block your path, neither drag it behind you in discouragement. Many know there is a cross in their lives but do not take it up.

I read a little book in Switzerland and learnt a few things about cross-bearing. Said this writer: "Do not carry the cross in front of you, making a show of heroism. Do not show it to your neighbour or seek to enlist the sympathy of the preacher; but put the cross on thy shoulder, then God will see the greatest part of it, and you will see the smallest." Many people confound their cross with their burdens. But there is a great distinction. We are to carry our cross, but put our burdens where God has put our sins. We sometimes sing, "I lay my sins on Jesus"; but I think if we had to do that we should probably not lay them all there, forgetting some of them. So I believe with the prophet Isaiah, "He hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." He has not laid our burdens there; we have to do that ourselves. Look once more at the Divine order: "Let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow me." You cannot live that life of self-denial unless you follow the Lamb.

THE MISSIONARY MEETING.

The chairman of the missionary meeting on the Wednesday afternoon was Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who read 1 Thess. i., and pointed out that the church at Thessalonica was a missionary church, and at the same time "waited for the Son of God from heaven." It has been said that to emphasize the duty of waiting and watching for the Master's coming is likely to stay missionary work, but the opposite is the fact. Let us not separate these two things: looking forward to His coming; and seeking to evangelize the world.

THE REAL JAPAN.

Rev. Barclay Buxton (Japan), said that Japan, as a whole, does not present a very bright picture. Many books have been written about the country by those who speak of its picturesqueness, and set forth glowing stories, but they tell little of the reigning heathenism; of sorrowful hearts and burdened consciences; of faces darkened by the guilt of sin. Oh, that we may get a glimpse of the real Japan, and have our hearts stirred for its people! Why should not the Japanese, having access to some of the far Eastern countries in a way that the British cannot have, become the great light of Christianity in the East, the great missionary race by whom the people may be won for Christ?

But idolatry reigns. You see almost everybody—including educated young men, trained in England or America—taking part in idolatrous festivals. Where idolatry is, there is open sin and deep darkness; moreover, where you find a temple, there you find a high seat of sin; in whatever neighbourhood the priests live you find sinks of iniquity. Such is the real Japan. One describes it, not to give a hard picture of the people to whom one goes, but to arouse the Lord's followers to fervent prayer for the heathen.

Then, there is physical suffering. The hospitals are "paying" ones, and the doctors all accept fees—with some noble exceptions. The poor—who are terribly poor—can therefore get no medical advice or help, and keen suffering prevails in many places. On one occasion, after a flood, the workers at a particular station went out among the people to explore on missions of mercy; on returning, they said that although they had laboured in the town for some time they had no adequate idea of the awful misery that existed, and which, so to speak, was "drowned out" into notice.

THE BRIGHTER SIDE.

On the other hand, there are souls being won for Christ, as the missionaries deliver the Gospel message. God is true to His word. Among both the upper and lower classes converts are being made. The outcasts, with whom the other classes never mix, dwell outside the cities, separated by barriers of caste, but some of these have proved the power of the precious blood of Christ, and meet on equal terms at the Lord's table with some of the high officials and townspeople. There are splendid opportunities for the evangelist. Indeed, the Gospel can be preached more freely in Japan than in Ireland. Anywhere in the open air one can tell the heathen of Christ. The people gather as they hear the concertina or the singing, and listen as they are told of peace and joy and the salvation of God who loves them—things quite new to them in a religious connection. A man came forward at one place and asked, "Did you say God would receive sinners?" The man had never heard the like; it was a marvellous thing to him. There was a fisherman who, from hearing the Bible read, gave himself to God. His joy was running over. He witnessed among his fellows, but gave up his trade connection with them rather than go fishing on the Lord's Day. Through that fisherman there was brought to Christ a young priest who burned his various diplomas and papers, was baptized, and witnessed for God in the village where formerly he was priest.

Mr. Barclay Buxton added an interesting story, further illustrating the fact that there is an open door in Japan for the truth. He told of a travelling ironmonger, who was converted, through reading a tract, and commenced to take Gospel portions and tracts with him on his journeys, testifying for Christ and awakening the heathen. As a result of his work there has been blessing in several places.

PROGRESS IN ASIA MINOR.

Mrs. Constantine (Smyrna) was the next speaker. She said that many in Asia Minor are nominal Christians; yet they are in darkness. The Bible is read in ancient Greek, and therefore is not understood by the people. As to Smyrna, there has always been a light there since the days of Polycarp. As it is the port of the Levant, there are regularly many sailors in the town, and among these the Gospel is preached. Mrs. Constantine works chiefly among the sailors at the Rest, but she referred also to meetings for Greeks who, as in Paul's day, are ever eager to hear "a new thing." (In their churches they have neither preaching nor Sunday-school, and therefore the Gospel comes with freshness.) Despite opposition, the truth has made its way, and the Greek Evangelical Union has taught its converts both to witness and give. There are five such stations in Asia Minor, with a little band of Christians, who have turned from the ignorance and superstition of the Greek Church to worship Christ in simplicity. At Smyrna there is an earnest, Spirit-filled pastor in charge, who, with his wife, has been much blessed during his twelve years' ministry. Crete, Mitylene, and other islands have also been itinerated.

BATTLING WITH ROMANISM.

Pastor Fliedner, of Madrid, followed. He referred to the crushing of the Reformation in Spain, and the darkness that was upon the land until, in 1868, it was thrown open to the Gospel, and Bibles were brought in. In 1870 the late Pastor Fliedner (father of the speaker) founded four congregations; from these the work has expanded, and the institutions include a hospital, schools, and an orphanage, while there are teachers and preachers telling forth the good news in various parts of Spain. Mr. Fliedner related, with much force, the memorable story of the erection of the College by his late father, showing how the land was obtained, plans drawn, and the premises erected, in spite of clerical interference, official delay (dictated by the priests), and even of a letter from Cardinal Rampolla to the Queen of Spain stating that the building should be hindered.

The last speaker, Pastor Emilio Olsson, spoke of his travels and preaching tours in South America. Thousands of people have heard the Gospel for the first time. The Word of God is prized, and Mr. Olsson generally carries with him Bible portions in several languages and dialects. Romanism is losing ground, and the authorities stand by Protestant missionaries.

OTHER MEETINGS.

The gatherings at the various home and foreign missionary meetings were of deep interest. The Bible Society, the South American Missionary Society, the Young Abstainers' Union, the Women's Protestant Union, and the Protestant Reformation Society, held well-attended meetings.

The Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. had a joint conference in the grounds under the presidency of Sir George Williams, who was supported by Mr. J. H. Tritton and other well-known friends of the movement. The world-wide character of work on behalf of young women was spoken to by Mrs. George Campbell, President of the Y.W.C.A., and Miss Picton Warlow, Secretary of the Simla Association. Mr. Oliver H. McCowen, who recently returned from Rangoon, gave a deeply interesting account of work for young men carried forward in the principal cities of India and Burma. Mr. W. H. Seagram, chairman of the Y.M.C.A. Foreign Committee, and Mr. W. Hind Smith, Organizing Secretary, gave accounts of extensions of work in the home field among volunteers and throughout the army, as well as among boys, and Mr. Thornton Pearson, General Secretary at Melbourne, spoke of the progress of the movement in the principal cities of Australasia.

Another interesting gathering was that in connection with Miss Smyly's work in Dublin. Miss Smyly said that it is thought by many people that the Roman Catholics of Ireland are allowed to read the Bible, but the fact is that the Catholic population really knows little or nothing about the Word of God. Miss Smyly went on to explain that the "Bird's Nest" is the largest of the Homes, and there are now 200 children in it. In another Home there are twenty baby children, and a third institution in County Galway is specially set apart for boys who are kept there until they are ten years of age, and then transferred to another home in Dublin, and there placed under more strict supervision. Girls are cared for in another Home, and after being properly trained are sent out to service. Altogether there are about 600 children in the Homes. In addition there are boarding schools where young people are taught and fed and clothed, who otherwise would have to go to the poor-house.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

BELFAST.

DR. HENRY and Mr. T. Armon Jones are continuing their mission in Belfast with marked tokens of the Divine favour. The tide of blessing has been rising, and the joy among workers and young converts has been increasing. In the heavenly land there must have been rejoicing, too, for many have been seeking and finding the Saviour under the canvas roof where God's servants are labouring.

On Monday week the city was visited with a heavy downpour of rain, and the approaches to the tent were with some difficulty reached. The rain, however, ceased that night. In the service, which was largely attended, the discourse was based upon the well-known passage, John iii. 16, and was a tender, loving, and able exposition. Dr. Henry also made a total abstinence appeal.

Dr. Henry gave a telling Gospel address on the Tuesday evening, based upon the cure of the blind man, and deeply interested the large congregation by his fresh and forceful presentation of the truth. At the close there was a very gratifying response, for a regular stream of men, chiefly young, were seen making their way to the front for personal conversation. In addition to this many were dealt with all over the tent, so that a very happy and hopeful evening was spent among the seekers.

Dr. Henry has continued his brief five or six minutes' temperance talks, urging all, especially Christian people, to sign the pledge as a protest against the drink, and as being one way, and an important way, of showing that they mean to have no complicity with this great evil. There has been every night a most gratifying response. Young converts who came into the light during Dr. Torrey's mission and those who are coming now all get, and are accepting, the opportunity of registering themselves total abstainers.

Dr. Henry has conducted two Bible-readings in addition to other engagements, which have been greatly appreciated. He had also the opportunity of addressing the Wesleyan Conference which last week was in session at Belfast. He delivered a very powerful address, and made out a strong case for a complete separation between the drink traffic and the Church. He was thanked heartily for his stirring words by the vice-president of the Conference, Rev. Wesley Guard.

Dr. Henry's power as an expositor of Old Testament characters was well illustrated in two notable addresses, one upon Manasseh, and one upon Abner—over whose remains David spoke the words, "Died Abner as a fool dieth?" On Sabbath last two memorable meetings were held, and the capacious canvas structure was taxed to its utmost capacity. The evangelist delivered in the afternoon an instructive address based upon the meaning of the names given to the cities of refuge. Numbers waited for conversation and spiritual help. The evening address was a most moving deliverance, the title of the sermon being, "The Funeral of the Soul." The great mass of people listened with the most absorbing interest to the solemn appeals all of them based upon Scripture to yield in time to the claims of Christ.

Mr. Armon Jones sang with great pathos the "Ninety-and-Nine," and, as the verses proceeded, inquirers (those who had determined to live a new life) came silently up the aisles, shook hands with Dr. Henry, and sat down on the seats prepared for them. There was a hush; God was manifestly moving in mighty power among the people. With every verse the crowd increased, until about sixty persons, the majority of them men, had come forward in token of a desire to begin the new life. It was a blessed sight. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

Hearing that Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones could stay an extra two days, the congregation, by a hearty standing up, invited them to remain, and so the work went on till July 1.

H. M.

It is evident that Belfast has been deeply moved by the Mission. Among other testimonies, a correspondent writes of the Sabbath night meeting:—"The workers stayed at the tent until nearly eleven o'clock, being kept busy dealing with the sin-stricken and listening to the joyous cry of the newly converted."

The Northern Whig says:—"Throughout it has been an ideal mission. Dr. Henry's appeals on behalf of total abstinence . . . have been most effective, resulting in nearly 1,400 signing the pledge forms."

The Y.M.C.A.

MEXICO CITY Y.M.C.A. has four hundred members, and has just opened a new building.

The Y.M.C.A. in Philadelphia is starting a movement for the opening of special branch associations for all the great industrial establishments of that city.

At Shanghai the Y.M.C.A. has enrolled 1,084 young men. It conducts twenty-two religious meetings and Bible classes per week, and is described as having also "the best all-round athletics of any club in Eastern Asia."

Sir George and Lady Williams celebrated their golden wedding a few days ago, and received hearty congratulations from a wide circle of friends, resident in all parts of the world. In the morning they received two deputations. The larger, which represented the National Union of Young Men's Christian Associations, was led by Lord Kinnaird, and, in the name of the National Council, presented a very handsome silver-gilt centre-piece. The deputation of the London Central Association, led by Mr. M. H. Hodder, one of the oldest members of the Y.M.C.A., presented a finely-chased silver-gilt mirror, inscribed and accompanied by an illuminated address. An address was also read on behalf of the World's Committee of the Y.M.C.A., whose headquarters are at Geneva, acknowledging the great benefit that the work of Sir George Williams had conferred upon young men throughout the world. The Archdeacon of London wrote "with sincerest wishes for the prolonged life of one of our greatest national benefactors." Communications were also read from Mr. William Creese (one of the first secretaries of the Y.M.C.A.), Mr. S. Hope Morley, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., Mr. F. A. Bevan, and Lord Overtoun.

How a City Was Saved.

THERE were over 120,000 children! What a crowd! Imagine a procession of them. I wonder how far it would extend! But these children were not in a procession—and for a good reason—they could not walk. Some of them, perhaps, could toddle; the rest were babes in arms.

Who were they? What were their names? That I cannot tell you, but God knew them, every one, and for their sakes He saved a city. Does that give you any clue? If not, turn to Jonah iv. 11. There we read of "Nineveh, that great city, wherein are (or were in Jonah's time) more than six score thousand persons who cannot discern between their right hand and their left." If, as is generally understood from this sentence, there were so many quite young children in the city, you can imagine what a large population it contained.

You know the story how Jonah was sent by God to warn the inhabitants that unless they repented of their sin they and their city would be destroyed in forty days; and how, when they repented and God said He would spare them, Jonah was angry because he thought the people would call him a false prophet, and, worse still, might think that God did not keep His word. Then God said that as they had repented, He would spare them, if it were only for the sake of the little ones.

How kind God is! So many times in the Bible He shows His love for children. And even when Jacob's sons and grandsons had grown up big, and with their families had become a great nation, they are still spoken of as "the children of Israel," as if, in spite of all their waywardness and sin, God could not forget the day when their ancestors—two little boys named Ephraim and Manasseh—had stood by their dying grandfather's bed, as he placed his hands upon them and blessed them, saying, "The Angel that redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads!"

Then Moses, Samson, Samuel were each singled out by God from babyhood for His service; Gideon and David too, both of them the youngest in their families; and you remember how He showed His love to the Shunammite's little boy, and to the little captive maid in Elisha's time. Also in the New Testament, how tender Jesus was to children, and used them to illustrate His teaching.

Have you ever thought why God thinks so much of you? Some of you perhaps think a good deal of yourselves, but that is a very different thing! God thinks of you because of what you are—and still more, because of what you may become.

I wonder what sort of men and women those children of Nineveh grew up to be. Their parents had had the goodness of God brought home very near to them, and I should hope that most of them, at any rate, explained it to their little ones when they were old enough to understand.

Now, if God thinks so much of you, ought you not to think about yourselves? I do not mean in a conceited or selfish way, but ask yourself: "If God cares so much for me, ought I not to think how I can please Him best?" And the only right answer is, "By giving myself and my life to Him, that He may make me useful and good, for the sake of Jesus who gave His life for me."

A very great deal depends on you, dear boys and girls. If you are spared, you will grow to be the men and women of the future, the citizens, fathers, and mothers of our beloved land. Think of that—that upon you will rest the management of homes, of businesses, and, in some cases, of matters in Parliament and in the Church of God. Try and realize, then, how important it is for you to prepare for those great days.

Some of you may have to make laws to govern the nation; others will, I hope, become preachers of the Gospel, and missionaries in foreign lands. Thousands of lives may depend upon how you live your own. Therefore, I pray you, give earnest heed to the call of God while you are young, not only for your own sake, but for the sake of the great work you may do for Him in days to come. Will you?

It is impossible to tell how much our large cities—like London, Liverpool, &c., or even small towns and villages—owe to the children who live in them, or how far God extends His mercy for the sake of the little ones. At any rate many a home has been blessed, and the parents' hearts turned to God, through their simple faith and love. You come as God's little messengers, and every time you do a kind and thoughtful act, or speak a polite and gracious word, you are uttering a message from Him to those around you.

Perhaps you do not often have it put before you quite in this light, and you are apt to think that as you are "only children" you must wait until you are big before your life can be worth much. But I want to tell you that what you will be then may depend very much upon what you are now, and during these next few years. Of course, you must not "think of yourselves more highly than you ought to think," as the Apostle Paul says (Rom. xii. 3; also Gal. vi. 3), nor become puffed up with pride. Ask Jesus to keep you humble, but at the same time try and realise that even as children God has a use for you.

There are some of you, I know, who are weak in body, crippled, or in ill-health. Has God a work for you? Yes, dear child, your patient endurance of suffering rises like a sweet perfume to Him, and spreads to those who live around you. Edith Gilling Cherry, whose exquisite poems are to-day charming a multitude of readers, wrote many of them when she was but a crippled child; and although God has now called her home to Himself, her sweet messages are going ringing round the world. Here is one of them written, at the age of twelve, on the idea contained in the hymn, "I want to be with Jesus":—

I can wait till beneath the weary load
Of many years I bow;
I can wait till my hair is silvery white,
And crowneth a wrinkled brow;
I can wait till sorrow pales my cheeks,
Or suffering steals their bloom;
I can wait till then for my Saviour dear
To beckon my spirit home.

But I'd rather go while I'm yet a child
To that beautiful land on high;
Where I never should grieve my Saviour more,
And never should weep or sigh.
I'd rather go while my brow is smooth,
And my heart untouched by care;
E'er years of sorrow, and toil, and woe,
Have left their impress there.

And yet—there is many a wayward heart,
Grown weary of folly and sin;
And Jesus might use me to lead such souls
His sheltering fold within.
And yet—there is many a weary heart,
Whom a word of mine may move
To leave the world, with its pleasures false,
And taste of a Saviour's love.

And yet—there is many a mourning one,
Whose eyes with tears are dim;
And I might whisper a word of cheer,
Or message of grace from Him.
Then, how can I wish for that beautiful house,
When there's so much work for me?
Dear Saviour, I will not dare to choose,
But I leave the choice to Thee.

God help you to give your grand young lives to Him who died to redeem your life from Satan and your soul from eternal death. Thus in the only true sense will you be able to realise the use, the importance, and the dignity of childhood. UNCLE TOM.

Endeavourers and Public Life. (Neh. v. 1-13.)

NEHEMIAH, the simple-hearted and devout Jew, whom God used so wonderfully for the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem, was possessed of private wealth, which he used with noble generosity, for the maintenance of his court and the relief of his brethren from absolute want.

One of his first endeavours was to raise again the ruined walls and put up the gates—a work for which it was impossible to remunerate the workers. Whilst some of these volunteers were well able to support themselves, others were reduced to the direst straits for themselves and their families, and for the payment of the taxes demanded by the Persian Government. The urgency of their need ought to have led to the raising of a public fund, out of which grants could have been voted. There were rich men in Jerusalem who should have headed the subscription list with handsome donations.

Instead of this, the wealthy classes seized the chance of self-aggrandisement, and drove hard and shameful bargains with the starving workers. No money was forthcoming except in return for mortgages on the farms, vineyards, oliveyards, and homes of the peasant proprietors. All the title-deeds of their small possessions and holdings passed into the hands of these unpatriotic money-grabbers, and in many cases the sons and daughters were practically sold into slavery to obtain bread for their families. Loans were thus accumulated, which could never be paid off, and the chattels and children of the poor virtually became the property of their rich compatriots. It was a shameful piece of selfishness.

Such greed on the one side and poverty on the other aroused Nehemiah's strong indignation. He called together the wealthy usurers, told them his mind, and appointed a general meeting of the citizens. There he declared what he had done in redeeming Jewish slaves from the heathen, while they were reversing the process and enslaving their brethren. He entreated them at once to cancel all obligations, restore the property to the poor peasant owners, and abandon all thought of interest. If he, with his assistants, did not demand money and corn, surely they might refrain. The offenders were then shamed to promise a better course of conduct, and were bound by a solemn oath ministered by the priests (12). Nehemiah ended the convocation by shaking out his robe, and asked that God would shake out of house and home all who did not stand by their promise.

The work which Nehemiah did was all the more remarkable, because he made no kind of pretension to genius or greatness. He was simply one of the people. It is not necessary to be a great genius. If only our eye is clear, and our motive pure, and if we are possessed with a resolute determination to meet great abuses with the purity and truth of God, we shall effect a great work in the world, which will live long after we have passed away.

It would almost seem that Nehemiah felt that he must include himself in this self-denying ordinance. Notice the R.V. rendering of v. 10; notice the force of let us, albeit that we do not forget vv. 14, 15. The Mosaic law forbade the Israelites to take usury of their brethren (Ex. xxii. 25; Lev. xxv. 36; Deut. xxiii. 19). Probably Nehemiah had lent money on the surrender of deeds of property, though not on interest or usury. But there is no comparison between the excessive rate of usury, which is exacted by the tyrant usurer, who has got some poor victim into his power, and that legitimate payment for the use of money which the commercial man knows best how to manipulate for himself and the investor.

Let it be part of our life-work to take up the cause of the weak and oppressed. Remember how Cobden aroused John Bright from the anguish caused by bereavement to work for others. Only see to it that your hands are clean, and that you remember that it is not enough to secure wholesome, pure laws, you must seek the dynamic of the Holy Spirit. Men need not only a new order of things, but to become new creatures in Christ Jesus. F. B. M.

International S.S. Lesson.

Saul Chosen King (1 Sam. x. 17-27).

Golden Text (Is. xxxiii. 22).

ISRAEL'S determination to have a king like other nations, contrary to the Lord's prophetic warnings (1 Sam. viii. 11-18). (1.)

(2). The Lord's selection of Saul through His servant Samuel (1 Sam. ix. 15-17).

(3) Private anointing (1 Sam. x. 1).

(4) Public election by the national assembly at Mizpeh (1 Sam. x. 24.) ("God save the King!" heard for the first time). Decided probably by casting of the lot (Lev. xvi. 8; Num. xxvi. 55; Prov. xvi. 33; Acts i. 26).

4. Samuel drew up a charter of the constitution. Principles based on the law given to Moses (Deut. xvii. 14-20).

To Mizpeh before the Lord.

Mizpeh, with its hallowed memories! (1) Israel had been gathered there before (1 Sam. vii. 6)—the only time this rite is mentioned. Had tokened their helplessness and sin. (2) Samuel prayed there (1 Sam. vii. 9), one of the giants in prayer (Jer. xv. 1). (3) The Lord delivered Israel in battle, a proof of His power and care. (4) Ebenezer, hitherto hath the Lord helped us.

Mizpeh (1 Sam. x. 17). Folly, self-will, pride, ingratitude, rebellion. Rejectors of God! who had—(1) Brought them out of Egypt, the place of bondage and darkness. (2) Delivered them out of the hand of the oppressor. (3) From surrounding nations. (4) Given them civil liberty and Divine kingship. "I" and "ye": "delivered," "rejected" (v. 18, 19). Omnipotence rejected for frailty.

King Saul.

Of commanding stature, markedly handsome, prudent, modest, self-controlled, humble, respectful, and submissive to Samuel. Proved attractive to some of the truest hearts among the people (v. 26). Not without enemies and opposers. Was not arrogant or pushing or quick to take offence. Made a good beginning.

"See ye him whom the Lord hath chosen, that there is none like him" (1 Sam. x. 24). Of Jesus our King we can truly say He is "the Chiefest among ten thousand," "altogether lovely" (Song Sol. v. 10, 16). "God hath made that same Jesus, both Lord and Christ" (Acts ii. 36).

Special Points.

1. Samuel took his slight and displeasure to God, received Divine sympathy, guidance, wisdom, and help to carry out the Lord's hidden purposes (1 Sam. viii. 6, 7, 21; ix. 15). Elijah under the juniper tree (1 Kings xix. 4). Moses rejected (Ex. xix. 11, 12), Nehemiah ridiculed (Neh. iv. 2, 4). Disciples of John the Baptist in bereavement and fear (Matt. xiv. 12). Two sisters in sorrow (John xi. 3, 20, 29, 33). Jesus troubled (John xii. 27, 28, with Heb. iv. 15). The best and safest place to go, when we are angry, or offended, or ridiculed, or slighted, or when we are sorrowful, or merry, is, where we can have "a little talk with Jesus."

2. God works out His plans by very ordinary means. The people thought they were electing the king, but the Lord had selected him (1 Sam. ix. 16). What a blessed service Samuel would have missed if he had allowed his offended feelings to deafen his ear from listening to what the Lord wanted him to do and say for Him (1 Sam. ix. 15). "None of self but all of Thee." The love of Jesus "shed abroad in the heart" is like His "Peace, be still," to the roughest waves of temper or self-will.

3. Saul began well. It is not enough to begin the Christian race well, we must "so run that ye may obtain" (1 Cor. ix. 24-27). "Lay aside every weight, and run with patience" (Heb. xii. 1). "Press toward the mark for the prize" (Phil. iii. 14). But,

"Never lose sight of Jesus!
Day and night He will lead you aright;
Never lose sight of Jesus!"

4. Our unbelieving hearts often cry out for something we can see and touch in worship. We cannot "see Him who is invisible," except by faith, which is the gift of God; but we can help our sight by (a) reading our Bibles "before the Lord," and listen as to His voice speaking the words to our souls. (b) "Praying in the Spirit" (Eph. vi. 18), asking Him to help us (Rom. viii. 26). He will reveal Jesus (John xvi. 14). (c) Singing "unto the Lord" believing He listens to praise which comes from the heart (Acts xvi. 25). (d) Working for Him. And if for Jesus, we must be working with Him, and He calls us "fellow labourers."

5. 1 Sam. viii. 19. To have our self-willed prayers answered is often the sorest punishment. Saul proved a self-willed king.

6. Have I received Jesus as the King of my heart and life—to lead me, to deliver me from my enemies, to command my loyal service, as gladly and heartily as Israel did Saul? If so, have I proclaimed Him? (Ps. xliv. 4, then Rev. iii. 21).

DEVOTION TO KING JESUS.

During the Spanish persecutions of the seventeenth century, one Francis Romanus became a Protestant. He was seized by the Inquisition, and condemned to the flames as a heretic. Having been placed on a pile of faggots, the fire quickly reached him, when he suddenly lifted his head. The priests, thinking he meant to recant, ordered him to be taken down. Finding, however, that they were mistaken, and that he still retained his constancy, he was again placed upon the pile, where, as long as he had voice remaining, he repeated, "O Lord, my God, in Thee do I put my trust. My defence is of God, who saveth the upright in heart." The martyr had made a definite choice, and was able to express himself in the spirit of the Golden Text: "The Lord is our King; He will save us." To us, as to the men of Israel and martyrs of later days, comes the day of choosing. Right and wrong are before us; truth and error. King Jesus asks our allegiance, and the claims of the wordly kingdom are forced upon us. May we have the grace and courage to surrender ourselves, body and soul, to Christ, and never be tempted to dethrone him from our hearts' affections.

BASE INGRATITUDE.

In 1759 Sir Edward Hawke was engaged in warfare against the French fleet. During a heavy gale the vessels of the enemy succeeded in escaping from a blockade by the English, and news of the affair was conveyed to London. A mob gathered in the streets and excitedly burnt the effigy of Hawke, because he had allowed the enemy to escape. They little knew that at that very time Sir Edward was overtaking and defeating the French fleet, despite the tempest which was still raging around the coast. Base ingratitude marked the conduct of the people. The children of Israel displayed a similar spirit when they rejected God, who Himself had saved them out of all their adversities and their tribulations (v. 19). We, in our day, need to be careful lest we forget God's past mercies to us, and in seeking earthly guidance bring dishonour to the name of our Heavenly King.

A GOOD START.

At Queen Victoria's first council she spoke of the loss which she and the country had sustained by the death of King William. "This awful responsibility," continued Her Majesty, "is imposed upon me so suddenly, and at so early a period of my life, that I should feel myself utterly oppressed by the burden, were I not sustained by the hope that Divine Providence, which has called me to this work, will give me strength for the performance of it." Saul at his election displayed a like humility, for when they sought him he could not be found (v. 21). Had he continued as did Queen Victoria, in real dependence upon God, he would have made a fine king, and proved himself a worthy leader of the people. Our success in life depends upon where we place God, and how closely we follow Him.

THE TWO KINGS.

In acclaiming King Peter, the new Servian monarch, the people of that land have sought to cover the deliberate murders of their former King and Queen. The freshly elected sovereign has stepped into a very difficult position, and one is reminded of the action of the Israelites in seeking an earthly monarch to lead them instead of God Himself. The people rejected Jehovah, and desired another to reign over them. The Lord, overruling their wilfulness, and permitting the choice of Saul, displayed His long-suffering; and when all the people shouted and said, "God save the King" (v. 24), many of the shouters must have thought of the inner meaning of their act. God desires our whole-hearted allegiance and devotion, which will not permit of any room for a rival.

Irish Methodist Conference.

LAST week Irish Methodists assembled at Belfast for their annual Conference. Rev. Dr. J. Shaw Banks presided, and several things tended to make the Conference historic. One was the celebration of the bicentenary of the birth of John Wesley. During his pretty frequent visits to Ireland, one of Wesley's favourite stopping places was the house of a Mrs. Gayer, at Derryaghy, about five miles from Belfast. Here, in 1775, he got laid up with fever, but in answer to the prayers of his friends, who asked that, like Hezekiah, he should be restored to health and fifteen years added to his life, he was raised up and lived for fifteen years and seven months afterwards. To this picturesque spot the members of the Conference and their friends, to the number of several hundreds, made an excursion, and held an open-air service for praise and prayer.

A lengthened discussion took place in reference to the grant which has been given annually by the Wesleyan Missionary Society in London for the past seventy-five years, with the object of carrying on mission work in the south and west of the country, which grant it was now proposed to considerably reduce, if not withdraw altogether, on the ground that the Irish Methodist Conference is quite able to look after the work. The conversation on the subject, however, helped to clear away various misconceptions, and to show that Protestantism in these districts is becoming weaker and weaker year by year—is, in fact, being quietly crushed out of existence—and that there is no hope for it except in the combination of its forces, or in assistance received from without. Of itself it is not capable of maintaining an organized life. Eight young men who had satisfactorily passed through the usual probationary course were ordained to the full work of the ministry. An able and impressive charge on the occasion was delivered by Rev. J. S. Banks, D.D. A new Orphan Home, surrounded by 124 acres of land, the gift of a gentleman, had been opened.

"A Mission of Mercy."

SUCH is the title which a local newspaper, The Argus, gives to the work of the undenominational Christian Mission, Pontymoile, Mon., the twenty-fifth anniversary of which was celebrated by largely-attended meetings on Thursday and Friday of last week, and on Sunday and Monday of the present week. At the first two Mr. Henry Varley gave remarkably powerful addresses on the Resurrection and the Lord's Return. The ministers of the neighbourhood were present in force, and though they were not prepared to endorse all that was said on the second occasion, they, together with the whole congregation, were evidently impressed.

On Sunday Mr. R. C. Morgan preached morning and evening. On Monday evening a public meeting was held, over which Mr. Richard Cory presided, and gave excellent counsel to those assembled. The Church of England was represented by Revs. A. W. A. Williams, rector of Panteg (of which parish Pontymoile forms a part), and Joshua Evans, vicar of St. James's, Pontypool; and the Free Churches by Rev. J. Howell Rees, of Pontnewydd. All expressed the warmest appreciation of the work of the Mission and of its founder and hon. superintendent, Mr. Wintle, and heartily congratulated him and his helpers on the signal blessing which God has given on their manifold operations during the past five-and-twenty-years.

The late Mr. William Collingwood.—Christian society in Bristol is poorer through the recent death of Mr. William Collingwood, a retired member of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours. Prevented by the ecclesiastical test from pursuing his education at Oxford, he found his vocation as a water-colour painter. In Liverpool, Bristol, and other districts there are fragrant memories of a life lived to the glory of God. We hope to give a fuller account of his career, with portrait, in an early issue.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Rev. John McNeill at Blackpool.

ALTHOUGH the season has not begun in Blackpool, Rev. John McNeill received a warm welcome on Sabbath last, when inspiring crowds assembled in the Tower Pavilion to listen to the evangelist. There were three services arranged. The afternoon meeting was advertised for "Men only," but by general request this was made an open meeting also. The addresses were pointed and searching, and abundant evidence is forthcoming as to the faithfulness of the preacher. This beloved worker very evidently retains his hold upon the people; and the local Y.M.C.A., under whose auspices these summer services are being arranged, had the joy of seeing the finest building in the town filled for the Gospel message. The work has had a distinct impetus given by this visit of Mr. McNeill, and the workers generally are looking forward to Sunday next, when the services are to be continued in the Hippodrome. Blackpool being such a popular holiday resort for Lancashire, Yorkshire, Cheshire, and the Midlands, the Sundays, July 5, 26, and September 6, 13, and 20, devoted by Mr. McNeill to Blackpool, will give ample scope for a very wide sphere of usefulness, and prayer is asked on behalf of this effort to reach and influence with the Gospel the 200,000 visitors —the average weekly number from July to September.

Jottings from Ascot.

Mr. Bob Johnson, the converted "minstrel," sends the following brief jottings of his work at Ascot Racecourse:—

Tuesday.—Started booklet distribution on the course at 9.30 a.m., and continued until 4 p.m. Songs of praise and thanksgiving till 10 p.m., at Winkfield. Wednesday.—Was led to attack the large gatherings around the tipsters' rings (tract distribution and testimony), and then the carriage people, until 3.30. p.m. A nominal Christian defended betting and racecourse pleasuring. He was defeated, and admitted it. At 4.30, started from course by conveyance to Windsor Union Infirmary. Sang the Gospel and spoke to the people. Thursday ("Gold Cup," or very fashionable day).—Started distribution of "Weaver" leaflets around the tipster rings and at the carriages along the course. Sang some of my Gospel hymns to two troupes of my old comrades, who ceased from entertaining in order to listen. Gave each minstrel one of my song books. Truly, it was a great day.

At Newcastle Races.

After a fruitful soul-winning campaign at Ascot, nine evangelists of the Open-Air Mission proceeded immediately to a great work at Newcastle-on-Tyne, where the race week brings an enormous concourse together and presents such a field for Gospel effort.

Led by the secretary, the meetings commenced on Saturday evening, June 20, by a gathering in the Bible House to meet the local Christian workers. Much prayer was offered, and the Lord's blessing was earnestly sought. He did not withhold it, for the very next day, Sunday, June 21, a stream of blessing began to flow. The meeting that morning on the quayside, where the Lord's Day is so fearfully desecrated, was marked by the conviction of many. One sceptic went away in tears, and others were deeply impressed. The whole day was crowded with meetings and with evidences of the Divine favour, culminating in an evening service in the Bigg Market, at which seeking sinners knelt at the platform, and there were some hopeful cases of conversion. North Shields and Whitley Bay were visited on the Monday, and at each place a time of refreshing was experienced.

Every race-day the Town Moor, where thousands gather to a great fête and fair, was visited in the forenoons. Large meetings were held, and at every one blessing was given. The same may be said of the afternoon meetings on the racecourse, where in spite of the tremendous gambling influence which is there at its height, God's Word went forth with power, and larger numbers gathered to hear it than ever before on that spot.

The evening meetings in the Bigg Market crowned all. Souls were saved every night. Seeking souls were dealt with. Penitent ones knelt in the face of the whole throng. One was a "bookmaker," who cried out in agony of soul.

The closing meeting on Thursday night being interrupted by rain, an adjournment was made to the Bible House, where the room was crammed. Five souls sought the Saviour; among them was the brother of one who had been converted on the Monday night. The father of these two young men gave thanks to God for his two sons, for whom he had been praying ever since his own Christian life began, seven years ago.

Altogether more than a hundred anxious souls took the convert's cards of the mission, and of these many have already been returned, signed, with the names and addresses of those who have accepted the Saviour. The heartiest local co-operation was again experienced, hospitality being given to all the evangelists, and the arrangements were admirably carried out by Mr. C. J. Dymond, to whom our warmest thanks are given.

Frank Cockrem, Secretary.
Open-Air Mission, 11, Adam Street, W.C.

Rev. James Lyall in Australia.

Rev. James Lyall has concluded his tour of Australia and New Zealand with a mission at Bendigo, which attracted large audiences. At the final evening gathering, the Princess Theatre was crowded in every part, when Mr. Lyall gave a powerful address. Early in the proceedings the preacher asked all those who had received a blessing during the mission to stand, and there was a large response. This was followed by a request that all the young men and women who would be willing to go to the Foreign Mission field, if the way were opened for them, would indicate it in the same way, and about a score at once complied. Mr. Lyall gave an address on Rom. xiii. 11, 12, and at the conclusion a number of seekers were pointed to Christ.

Oxford Notes.

THE Council of Mansfield College has appointed Mr. Alexander Souter, M.A., of Aberdeen University, to the Yates professorship of New Testament Exegesis in the place of Dr. Massie, who has resigned.

St. Aldate's Parish Church received its share of University honours on Thursday. Rev. C. I. Casher, B.D., received the degree of Doctor of Divinity, and two Sunday-school teachers, Mr. W. Badcock, of Lincoln College, and Mr. A. T. Bernard, received the B.A. degree.

The Commemoration Festivities during the past week were favoured with brilliant weather. Among the visitors were the Duchess of Albany and Princess Alice, who were the guests of the Dean of Christ Church. The Commemoration Sermon was delivered to a crowded congregation in St. Mary's Church by the Bishop of Oxford. The text was, "Yea, I have a goodly heritage." The sermon was an appeal that Oxford might cease to be before it ceased to be Christian.

At the twenty-seventh annual meeting of the Girls' Friendly Society some deeply-interesting statistics were given. The number of members on the books is 247,268, among them being 7,000 teachers, 18,000 young women in business-houses, 57,000 servants, 39,000 living at home, many in cultured families. During the past year 13,000 mistresses applied for G.F.S. servants, 4,000 girls in workhouses were cared for, £2,600 was spent in helping G.F.S. girls in sickness, and £1,300 paid for invalid girls to learn suitable trades and professions.

Welsh Notes.

AN occurrence of considerable interest to all temperance workers has just taken place in Carmarthenshire. One of the best known of Welsh ministers, Rev. B. Davies, D.D., of Newcastle Emlyn, having lately changed his sphere of labour, wished to secure a house in the village of Capel Iwan, and eventually succeeded in purchasing the village public-house. The conversion of a public-house into a minister's manse is an unusual occurrence. Needless to say, the village of Capel Iwan will greatly benefit by the transformation.

It has been decided to change the date of the annual meetings of the Young People's Christian Union of Wales. Instead of being held this month (July) they will take place on September 30 and October 1 at Morriston. A movement is on foot in Bangor to invite the Welsh Congregational Union to hold its meetings there next year. This year the Union meetings are held at Dowlais, Glamorganshire. As a rule the Welsh religious assemblies meet in North and South Wales alternately.

It is announced that Rev. J. Landel Jones, of Blackheath, has been granted permission to speak at the forthcoming meetings of the Congregational Union of Wales in reference to the formation of prayer circles. An outline of Mr. Jones' plan appeared in THE CHRISTIAN for December 25, 1902. Briefly, it is that small circles of believers should meet to pray for revival. The late Hugh Price Hughes, M.A., expressed his strong approval of the idea, and it is also favoured by Rev. F. B. Meyer, and many others.

Personalia.

Bishop HARTZELL was expected in Liverpool on June 24; he expects to come to London shortly, when his address will be 2, Talbot Road, Highgate, N.

Mr. F. SPENCER JOHNSON has successfully undergone a slight operation in Guy's Hospital, and is now rapidly regaining strength. No anxiety need be felt, and Mr. Johnson desires heartily to thank the many friends who prayed for his recovery.

Pastor TH. FLIEDNER, director of the work founded by his revered and lamented father, Rev. Fritz Fliedner, in Madrid, is on a visit to England. He hopes to stay with us during the month of July, and to have opportunities of seeing friends and addressing meetings on Gospel work in Spain. His address is—care of Mr. E. A. Rusher, Christ Church Cottage, Hampstead, N.W.

Church of England.

Rev. H. E. Eardley, vicar of St. John's, Tunbridge Wells, has undertaken the management of a temperance hotel which the directors have been unable to make a financial success. Mr. Eardley proposes to personally supervise the hotel for twelve months by way of experiment, as a counter-attraction to the public-house.

In referring to the need for church extension at Southend-on-Sea, the Bishop of Barking recently spoke of the extraordinary growth of the town, which in 1842, when St. John the Baptist Church was erected as a chapel-of-ease to St. Mary's, Prittlewell, was a mere fishing village with a population of 1,100, whereas now the population of St. John the Baptist parish alone is more than 14,000, exclusive of numerous visitors who are coming each year in increasing numbers.

The Bishop of Manchester's Commission for the provision of sites and buildings for additional churches and mission-rooms in the five rural deaneries of Manchester and Salford has issued an appeal which contains the report of the Commission on the needs of the diocese, and points out that not more than about half the amount originally required has been raised, and the Commission in the grants already voted have exceeded the funds at their disposal by £1,600. Proposals for six additional new parishes are now under consideration, for the carrying out of which large sums will be required.

In the parish of Stanwix, Carlisle, there died recently a child whose parents were too poor to defray the cost of a funeral of the orthodox type. Rev. C. D. Fothergill, curate in charge, was asked to lend the money for the hiring of a hearse, a promise being given that repayment would be made. At the risk of seeming hardhearted, he refused to encourage this improvidence, but, as an alternative, volunteered to carry the coffin himself. His offer was accepted, and the unusual spectacle was witnessed of the curate carrying the coffin from the home of the deceased to the cemetery, a good half-mile away.

The Church Missionary Society has issued an appeal for 500 more missionaries and an income of £400,000 this year, rising to half a million a year in five years' time. The Society's missionaries have increased from 280 in 1883 to 953 in 1903, or more than threefold in twenty years. The clergymen then numbered 223, now 422; laymen (including doctors), then thirty-four, now 189; single women, then fifteen, now 382. Besides these there are 375 wives of missionaries. The Society has also 378 native clergymen and 7,673 native lay agents. Its missionaries receive into the Church nearly 10,000 adult converts per annum.

Congregational.

After a ministry of nearly fourteen years, Rev. C. Silvester Horne, on Lord's Day last, closed his pastorate at Allen Street Church, Kensington, W. Mr. Horne enters in September upon the charge of Whitefield's Tabernacle, in Tottenham Court Road, London, and Rev. James Holmes, of Gunnersbury, secretary of the Young People's Union will be associated with him.

Three missionaries are just retiring from the foreign field after years of service in connection with the London Missionary Society. Rev. Thomas Trotter Matthews was ordained in 1870 to work in Madagascar, and has laboured in the capital and also in the Vonizongo district. Rev. John Brown, who was ordained in 1865 to service in South Africa, labouring at Kuruman and other stations. One of his sons (Rev. John H. Brown) is labouring at Berhampur, in North India. Rev. V. A. Barradale, who went out four years ago to Samoa, is returning to England, on the ground of ill-health, and his resignation has also been regretfully accepted by the directors of the society.

The hundredth annual meeting of the Hackney College, closing the session, was held on Thursday last at the College, West Hampstead. Dr. McClure, headmaster of Mill Hill School, presided, and among the other speakers were the Principal, Dr. P. T. Forsyth. The annual report referred to the recent negotiations for union or co-operation between the committees of Hackney and Cheshunt colleges. The whole subject is now being considered by the latter, and any proposal will be received in a sympathetic spirit. The committee pointed out that the centenary of the college coincides with new opportunities for considering the question of a great Free Church Divinity School in connexion with London University. A centenary fund has been opened for the removal of an accumulated deficit. The college preaching list has been very satisfactory, and seven stations in connection with the college itinerancy have been supplied and superintended by the students.

Baptist.

The chapel in the village of Sydenham, Oxon, having been practically closed for some time, at the request of many friends, Rev. W. Chambers, of Thame, has consented to take the oversight and find supplies. Re-opening services have been held, and it is hoped that the cause will now revive and much good be done.

A very successful start has been made in launching the bold and well-conceived scheme of the St. Mary's Baptist Church, Norwich, of occupying two important suburbs in that city. It is an interesting feature of the movement that one chapel is to be erected in the densely-crowded artisan district, and the other in a very fine position in one of the most attractive and beautiful residential suburbs.

The second anniversary of Pastor F. H. King's settlement at Stroud Green, N., was celebrated recently. Rev. Archibald G. Brown delivered a striking discourse on Psa. xcii. 3. At the public meeting it was stated that fifty-three members had been added during the year. Rev. Forbes Jackson (Harley College) gave a forcible address on "The Minister and his People" and Rev. Chas. Brown (Ferme Park) spoke upon Baptist principles.

The tenth anniversary services in connection with St. Paul's Church, Skegness, were brought to a close with a public meeting. Mr. W. B. Baggaley, of Nottingham, presided, and he was supported by Revs. Geo. Goodchild, G. Howard James, of Derby (acting president of the East Midland Baptist Association), E. Allport, and Mr. Geo. Burnett. Mr. Goodchild spoke on the extension scheme. A freehold site has been secured, and it is hoped soon to commence building.

The annual meeting of the Baptist Mission Hall at Codicote, Herts, has been held. A service in the afternoon was conducted by Rev. W. A. Coventry. At the public meeting, under the chairmanship of a generous supporter of the cause, Mr. A. Lockhart, an encouraging report of the year's work was presented by Mr. Robert Wright, the evangelist working Welwyn and Codicote. The day's gatherings were attended by a large number of friends from surrounding places.

In connection with the recent annual meetings of the Bedfordshire Union, two sermons were preached by Rev. John Thomas, M.A., of Liverpool. In the afternoon he took for his text Num. ii. 33, and spoke upon the necessity of absolute surrender to God, with the danger of relying too much upon the material in all aspects of national life, and putting too little dependence upon the spiritual. In the evening he took Matt. xiii. 17, for the basis of his remarks, and spoke of men with spiritual visions.

In connection with Rev. Dr. Clifford's church at Westbourne Park, W., there is a flourishing mission in Bosworth Road, Kensal New Town. New premises having become necessary, Dr. Clifford and his friends started upon a large rebuilding scheme at a cost of £3,000. The stone-laying ceremony took place a few days ago. According to the secretary's statement, there is still a sum of between eight and nine hundred pounds to be raised, so that the buildings may be opened free of debt in the autumn.

Methodist.

The Wesley Guild will have a good report to make to Conference. Last year the numbers were over 96,000, and and now the 100,000 has been passed. Encouraging as these figures undoubtedly are, there is still much ground to be covered.

The Stoke Newington, N., Wesleyan Sunday-school, which lately held its eighty-seventh anniversary, has the splendid record of 141 scholars over fifteen years of age out of a total of 419. All the teachers (thirty-nine) and ninety-seven of the scholars are members of society.

Here are some of the items to be included in the Wesleyan Devon and Dorset Mission Report:—An area of 400 square miles, 3,000 preaching services, a mileage of 23,000 miles for ministers and laymen, congregations varying from two to 350 on Sundays, and from four to forty on weeknights; united class-meetings of over seventy, ordinary class-meetings of all sizes, in one case thirty-five members meeting and testifying.

On Saturday last the Wesleyans of Barrow-in-Furness inaugurated their extension scheme by a stone-laying ceremony in connection with the new church which is being built in Greengate Street. The scheme also includes the erection of a large mission hall and a new church at Vickerstown, the whole costing about £14,000. So rapid has been the development of Vickerstown North and Vickerstown South, on Walney Island, that all the churches are making preparations for erecting places of worship.

The plan of the Wesleyan Conference official and other religious services is now issued. The conference in its representative session is to open at Camborne on Tuesday, July 21. The induction of the new president, Rev. Marshall Hartley, of London, takes place that day, after the constitution of the legal conference. Nearly fifty young ministers who have completed their probation are to be received into full connection. Rev. Dr. J. Shaw Banks delivers the ordination charge at St. Mary's Church, Truro, on the Tuesday following August Bank Holiday. Rev. Bishop Hoss, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States, will attend as the representative of American Methodism.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. J. Monro Gibson is having a cordial reception in Canada. Though a native of Whithorn, in the South-west of Scotland, yet he was trained for the Presbyterian ministry in Canada, and graduated at University College, Toronto. He was ordained at Montreal, and for ten years laboured in connection with Erskine Church. His presence in Montreal has been very welcome, and all denominations have shown their appreciation of the man and of his work. He preached in Zion Church, and later gave most interesting reminiscences of the "Old Zion" as he knew it nearly forty years ago.

The Salvation Army.

The wife of the Governor of Western Australia has opened the Army's new Maternity Home at Perth.

The authorities of the Republic of Ecuador have communicated with the Salvation Army's headquarters with a view to ascertaining whether Salvationist nurses can be spared to work in the hospitals in that country.

About 500 men attend the Army's free breakfast for entirely destitute and homeless men on Sunday mornings at Blackfriars. Hundreds of this class have been received into the Army's workshops for the poor during the year.

During the last few weeks important meetings have been held at the Obelisk, Lewisham, on Tuesday evenings, in connection with the Protestant Reformation Society, when addresses have been given on various subjects by Messrs. J. J. Bamford, the Society's missionary in South London, G. A. Couch, the Society's missionary for West Kent and district, and others. The Roman Catholics have been very much in evidence, and on each occasion have asked many questions, which were readily answered.

For some years past mission work has been carried on in a very poor part of Dover in a hall built by Miss Loud. Ritualism is rife locally, and the need of pure Gospel preaching and teaching is urgent. Miss Loud has a flourishing Sunday-school, and the Gospel meetings are regularly held. God has greatly blessed the work, and the numbers have so increased that the building is no longer large enough to hold those desirous of attending the various meetings and the school. A few days ago a very enthusiastic meeting of the poor people was held, and those attending were eager to do what they could towards enlarging the hall. They could not promise much money, but there is a high bank at the back of the hall which must be excavated before anything can be done, and sixteen volunteers offered to do this in their over time, and another offered to cart away the earth free of charge. About £200 is required. Miss Loud's address is 110, London Road, Dover.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—Colour-Sergeant J. Moore, K.O. Yorkshire Light Infantry, Malta (illustrated); Mr. William Bilton, Gospel Tent, Standbridge, Leighton Buzzard; Mr. Sydney E. Hallam, 78, High Street, Homerton, N.E.; Mr. Arthur S. Wright, 319, Nechells Park Road, Birmingham; Mr. L. Kirkland, Sheffield, 11, Janson Street, Sheffield; Mr. F. J. Hortop, Luanza, Darracott Road, Pokesdown, Bournemouth.

The Directory of the Devout Life. We bespeak the earnest attention of our readers to the new series of papers by Rev. F. B. Meyer, begun in the present issue. The Sermon on the Mount is no novel theme with our friend; for years he has had it before him, and has been speaking and writing about its teachings. As "The Directory of the Devout Life," it will, we trust, be studied to spiritual profit by many of our readers, along the lines of Mr. Meyer's suggestive papers.

Prayer. It gives us joy to know that many of our readers have warmly appreciated Rev. F. C. Spurr's articles on Prayer. Dealing with the subject in a manner designed to assist the doubter as well as to encourage the believer, the writer has put a large amount of prayerful labour into his work. We hope in our next two issues to give the remaining papers of the series.

England and France. The hearty reception accorded to the President of the French Republic during his brief sojourn in this country, was a fitting sequel to the enthusiasm with which King Edward was greeted a few months ago on his visit to the French capital. This manifestation of deep feeling on the part of the British people, is at once a tribute to the merits of the worthy man who has risen to the headship of a great State, and a token of friendship towards the nation which he so honourably represents. We may hopefully anticipate that the visit of M. Loubet may hasten the conclusion of an Arbitration Treaty between the two countries, and thus help to ensure the permanence of international peace and concord. There is, however, another duty to be fulfilled on this auspicious occasion. It is to evince the sympathy of Evangelical believers with M. Loubet in the brave stand which he and his Cabinet have made against militant Ultramontanism, and the uncompromising firmness which they have shown in dealing with the swarms of monks and nuns under whose galling yoke the French people have suffered for so long.

The Problem of London. In bringing to a close his monumental labour, Mr. Charles Booth has issued a concluding volume on "The Life and Labour of the People of London." It is noteworthy that although he is able to record a slight improvement, due to the disappearance of the worst kind of slums, he is still forced to lay stress upon the terrible disintegration of the family life, due to the miserable housing of the poor and the consequent forced "street life." So, too, he records the vanishing of "the English Sunday," the dreadful development of betting, which, he says, upon police testimony, "is increasing out of all proportion to other forms of vice," and also the growing habit of drinking among women. What Mr. Booth has to say and to suggest as to the drink evil will not be satisfactory to the brewers and distillers; for, believing that "the root of all that is best and worst lies in home life," it is quite impossible that he should regard with anything but bitterness the drink traffic and its agents.

Christian Citizenship. The "Citizen Sunday" Committee has sent out an appeal to ministers of all denominations to preach sermons on October 25 next, upon one of the many social sides of Christian truth, that of "the necessity of all Christians performing the duty of citizens." It almost goes without saying that with an increased sense of responsibility in this regard, we should soon have different conditions in our social life, many of those barriers being removed which now stand in the way of the development of the Kingdom of Heaven upon earth. It is for the Christian, working in this as in all other directions in the Master's name, to labour to bring about good administration in municipal and national affairs; and those who fail to use their powers at the present juncture, when the powers of evil seem to be marshalling their forces more assiduously than ever, certainly are not faithful to that world-wide brotherhood which has its centre in Jesus Christ.

The Education Rate. There are commands of men in authority to which the answers of Peter and the other Apostles to the rulers and priests are the only fit replies: "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye." "We ought to obey God rather than men" (Acts iv., v., throughout). There are demands of men in authority to which the example of our Lord, when He paid tribute for Himself and Peter (Matt. xvii. 24-27), may apply. Also the directions given in Rom. xiii.—"Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers . . . Whosoever resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God." And those in 1 Peter ii., iii.—"Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake . . . king . . . or . . . governors." The above Scriptures, prayerfully and patiently considered, are sufficient to enable us to form a right decision as to payment or non-payment of the Education rate. It is too important a subject to act without deliberation. "Let everyone be fully assured in his own mind." "Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and be ready always to give an answer to everyone that asketh you a reason."

Betting and Gambling. Scarcely a day passes without a prisoner being brought before the magistrates and charged with dishonesty, which he attributes to betting and gambling, and we are not without judicial statements as to the growth of the betting evil among women and comparative children. Add to this the impressive words of the Lord Mayor to His Majesty's judges at a recent official dinner, and the indictment against the second national evil certainly does not need strengthening. Yet when the fate of the Betting Bill had to be decided in the House of Lords recently, only four of the bishops were in attendance, a fact which was not without influence in the rejection of the measure. The prospect does not seem a very bright one, but that is just the very reason why the efforts of those who wish to protect the people against themselves, and against the unhappy influence of example, should be unceasingly vigorous.

A Notable Development. Those who, during the past two or three years, have been lamenting over the alleged decadence of the Sunday-school, may well take heart again upon reading recent returns regarding the Sabbath schools in connection with the Wesleyan Methodist body. In 1900 a decrease of 7,000 scholars was reported, but in the last two years there has been an increase of over 22,000, the total number of scholars now being 986,000, or 15,000 above the total of any previous year. Of these, 70,000 are in adult Bible classes. Naturally there is an addition of nearly 7,000 teachers, and an increase of 1,100 to the number of "those teachers who are church members." The prayerful consideration of the falling-off evident in 1900 has led to renewed effort and more earnest supplication, the result being a development that is almost startling in its suddenness and its extent. The lesson is an obvious one, and it is to be hoped that the example will be followed all round in confident expectation of similar blessing.

The Sunday School in America. In an interesting and suggestive paper on The New Century Sunday School, dealing chiefly with the demand in America for a revision of the teaching plan, Rev. Dr. Hurlbut incidentally gives high praise to the Sabbath School as a powerful factor for good in American life. He says that the Sunday School since 1872 has kept before it one definite aim, and only one, the teaching of Holy Scripture; that it has called into its service the thoughts and pens of the ablest scholars of the age, and a noble army of workers, a million and a half in number; men and women, the cream of the churches in character, in devotion, and in willingness to labour for Christ.

> It has gathered together for the study of the Scriptures, in the American continent alone, a host of 14,000,000 men, women, and children. . . . One sixth of the American population is enrolled in the Sunday School. All classes from the highest to the lowest, and all races, for in such a cosmopolitan city as New York, where the ends of the earth are assembled, there are schools studying the Bible in twenty different languages. It has wrought a work greater than any already named . . . it has given to the church ninety per cent of its members. It is not decadent, it is growing, keeping pace, and out-stripping the growth of population upon the continent.

Iona. It is some time since a body of Carthusian monks invaded Sussex, and it may be assumed that they are satisfied with the full liberty which they enjoy in England, as a still larger number of them, expelled from France, have been in treaty for the purchase of the Island of Iona. Probably it was thought that the place would be a suitable one for the manufacture of the liqueur upon which their repute chiefly depends, and from the sale of which the French Government recently estimated the monks were deriving a profit of £100,000 per annum. From the temperance as from wider and even still higher points of view, it is satisfactory to learn that the negotiations have fallen through, owing to the fact that an arrangement under which the old ecclesiastical buildings upon the island had been secured to the Episcopal Church of Scotland "for ever" could not be abrogated.

More Refuge Scandals. Naturally, after the judgment was given in the case of the Nuns of the Good Shepherd order at Nancy, the Roman Catholic journals stated that the case was an isolated one and without precedent. Unhappily for them, two similar ones are now being proceeded with, and in regard to that against the Sisters at Tours, the Public Prosecutor compared the régime of the refuge to that of a gaol, with the drawback that in gaols, punishments were legal and less severe, and the prisoners were protected, whereas in the refuges the girls were without protection against the "mediæval penalties" and "others borrowed from the code of the Inquisition," which had been revived there. If there had been nothing more than the sweating system pushed to its extreme limits in these convents, the matter would have been bad enough. When we read, however, of girls being compelled to make the sign of the cross upon the dirty floors with their tongues, and of the other degrading brutalities introduced by the nuns, it is not pleasant to remember that regiments of sisters expelled from the Continent are founding their institutions in these islands, and that there will not be any inspection of the establishments.

A Modern Fairy Tale. An appeal which appears in the Catholic Times is sufficiently surprising to make one ask, "Are we, indeed, living in the twentieth century?" A friar officiating in this country offers to forward to those who send a small offering a picture of the Madonna of Good Counsel that has touched the miraculous original at Genazzano, a picture which has been made the base of a society, particularly favoured and commended by the Pope.

Of this original the friar narrates that on a certain feast-day the people saw a moving white cloud, and from it emerged "a beautiful fresco of the Immaculate Mother, holding the Divine Child in her arms." A few days afterwards, two men arrived, who were natives of Scutari in Albania, from which place they had followed the fresco over the Adriatic, never losing sight of it until they had arrived under the walls of Rome, when it disappeared from their sight, to be found again by them when news reached Rome of the strange event at Genazzano. The friar remarks:—

Rather than permit the picture to fall into the hands of the Turks, it pleased Almighty God to transfer it to another land, where it should be honoured as it deserved.

And this picture is made the foundation of an Association, to the members of which the Pontiff grants liberal indulgences.

Dr. Maclaren's Farewell. Very quietly has the venerable Dr. Maclaren taken leave of the people to whom he has ministered for forty-five years. Preaching his farewell sermon in Manchester, he took occasion to say a "last word," which at once summed up the character of his ministry, and offered a manifesto on the chief subject matter of preaching. He concluded with the words:—

To all of you my last word, which, perhaps, may gain some force because it is my last word as pastor of Union Chapel, is, "I declare the Gospel which I preached unto you, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." Dear brethren, I beseech you to accept it with a deliberate faith, and to cleave to it with lifelong energy. By it and by it alone, you will stand; by it and by it alone, you will be saved.

Earlier in the discourse Dr. Maclaren laid emphasis upon the fact of the death of Christ, that the Gospel is the proclamation of a thing that did happen in this world. It ought to be superfluous to say that; but recent "criticism" has made it clear that Christian teachers cannot be too emphatic about what my seem to be the simplicities of faith, for they are all challenged to-day.

Facts and Theories. We turn from Dr. Maclaren's sermon to a brilliant article elsewhere, in which it is sought to belittle, if not entirely to dispense with, the definite teaching of Christian truth in any creedal form. We are told that we need a programme which the Church must "apply," so as to develop institutions and create character, and that all a missionary needs is the love of God and his fellow, and the mind of Christ and the Spirit's energies, for the winning of new victories of faith. To us, all this is a mere collection of words, without living force. We do not understand the attempt to retain all the effects of the spiritual life and to ignore their causes in history. Jesus died for our sins; that is, as Dr. Maclaren puts it, "the thing that did happen." Christ rose again for our justification; that is another "thing that did happen." Why seek to disconnect these facts from their consequences in life and godliness? We need to beware of the subtle mysticism which uses all the Christian words, and seeks to possess all the Christian forces, while belittling the great underlying facts.

A Criticism of the late Cardinal. It is remarkable that in face of the almost gushing eulogy from Lord Halifax, the Church Times had an obituary notice of the late Cardinal Vaughan which can only be regarded as depreciatory. Remembering the trend of much of our contemporary's teaching, it is surprising to find the late Cardinal referred to as the head of "the Romanist mission to this country," as in no sense comparable to his predecessors Wiseman and Manning, as showing "amazing credulity" in the affair of the alleged St. Edmund relics, as revealing incapacity for high office in "the Church," and as of a general attitude of mind "not to be connected with an intellect of high order." That, despite "the terrible struggle of the mission priests to make both ends meet," Cardinal Vaughan yielded to the temptation and the ambitious desire to place the seat of his authority in surroundings of material magnificence, most people know; but it is startling to find the Church Times alluding to the "gigantic central chapel for Westminster" as having "the appearance of public baths." The sop to Cerberus comes, however, in the writer's concluding assurance that "we can join with his followers in their prayers that his soul may have light and refreshment."

By Lieut.-Col. SETON CHURCHILL.

THERE is another aspect of this question which the more extreme advocates of Heredity too often overlook, and that is Environment.

I remember an able article, which appeared in The Christian, by Dr. Barnardo, in which he showed that heredity could be neutralized by environment, and certainly no man in England has more right than he to speak on this subject.

He started life as a medical man, and so is able to look at the question from the scientific, as well as from the Christian and the philanthropic standpoint. During the last twenty-five years he has had upwards of 47,000 boys and girls pass through his hands, picked up from the streets and gutters, often the offspring of very degraded parents. He claims that out of that large number only something like 5 per cent. have turned out failures, whereas if they had been left in their old surroundings the great bulk would probably have joined the criminal classes. So far as heredity is concerned, everything was against these children turning out well, as they were handicapped on entering life. But surrounded with Christian environment, cut off from their painful past, being taught prayerful habits, and having a deep belief in God inculcated in them, the results have been perfectly marvellous. As Dr. Barnardo well says, his work among boys and girls is a splendid object-lesson to the world at large, and is

"A MESSAGE OF HOPE TO THE RACE."

Those who have read the interesting biography of that great and good man, the late Earl of Shaftesbury, who was a leader in all that was noble and good, will remember the remarkable facts of his life. He was not only the son of a father who drank hard, and used very bad language, but his mother was also a worldly, selfish woman, who utterly neglected his training. Not only was the seventh Earl of Shaftesbury likely to turn out badly from hereditary causes, but also from environment. His mother's neglect was, however, the cause of his salvation; for he was committed to the care of an old nurse, who was a true Christian, and who, in his early youth, instilled her Christian principles into his plastic mind; thus counteracting for good the mother's evil influence, and sowing the seeds in his young heart of that noble character which, in after years, made him do so much for his country and poor suffering humanity around him. Heredity was adverse, and environment was bad, but faith was stronger than both together.

It is not a little remarkable that another striking personality, well known as an earnest Christian man and a great philanthropist, had an experience similar to that of Lord Shaftesbury. I refer to the great Wilberforce, whose name was so closely associated with the liberation of all the slaves belonging to the British Empire. He, too, had a worldly, selfish mother, whose one object it was to push him on in the things of this world. She not only neglected his religious training, but actually opposed anything of the kind, and would rather he had turned out a man of the world than a Christian man. In spite of his hereditary taint, and in spite also of his environment, an apparently accidental acquaintance at the University led him to take up the nobler and better life, and to be to the world an object-lesson that a living faith in Christ can make us "more than conquerors."

THE SPIRITUAL V. THE NATURAL.

The truth is that these illogical advocates of the irresponsibility of man, on account of the inherited tendencies to evil which he has received from his ancestors, overlook the spiritual nature of man, and the enormous control that our spiritual powers, rightly used, possess over our physical natures. It is quite true that we may inherit the evil tendencies of our ancestors with our physical life, but we have each one of us a certain spiritual power which may be cultivated on the one hand, or neglected on the other. Thoughtful scientific men recognize this, and dare not omit this very strong ingredient from among those forces which go to make up human character.

Though addressing a strictly scientific audience, and not a religious one, Professor Sir William Turner, in his paper read as President of the Anthropological Section of the British Association, to which allusion has already been made, closes with the very remarkable words: "Man is also endowed with a spiritual nature. He possesses a conscious responsibility, which enables him to control his animal nature, to exercise a discriminating power over his actions, and which places him on a far higher and altogether different platform than that occupied by the beasts which perish. The kind of evolution which we are to hope and strive for in him is so that the standard of the whole human race may be elevated and brought into more harmonious relation with that which is holy and divine."

It is true that there are great mysteries in life, and not least among them is that of heredity; but it is satisfactory to know that no one in the first class of scientific men has lent his name to the theory of the irresponsibility of man. Like the bird in the cage, with which illustration this article began, we may have, appointed by Nature, certain limits beyond which we cannot go, but we have a certain margin within those limits, and our Creator will hold us responsible only for the right use of the powers we possess. Some may be able to soar like larks, as they may be endowed with greater powers, but we shall not be held responsible because we are unable to follow their example. Our limits may not be very extended, but we shall be held responsible for the proper exercise of the powers that are given to us.

It is surely a very one-sided and illogical view of life to look only at the physical part of our nature, which we may have inherited from a corrupt set of ancestors, and at the same time to overlook the spiritual faculties with which we are endowed by our Creator, but which we do not inherit with our physical nature. The world, the flesh, and the devil may be, on the one hand, very strong forms of temptation to us, as indeed they have been to many of the Christian heroes of the past; but science and religion alike unite in pointing to those who now wear the victor's crown, and tell us with no uncertain sound that "this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

Nursing the Sick.—A lady nurse suggests to ministers and others that when they pray for the sick and suffering in our hospitals and elsewhere, they would also remember those who attend them. We who are nurses (she says) need much patience, strength, and wisdom to fulfil our high calling, and much grace and courage too, to be able not only to minister to the bodily needs, but to speak the word of comfort and healing to our patients, and it would be a source of great encouragement to know we are sometimes remembered by God's people in His own house.

Building a Christian.

By Rev. T. L. CUYLER, D.D.

"I NEVER let fools or bairns see my work until it is done," said a famous Scotch painter; he knew that no production of human art could be rightly judged until it was completed. I remember that when I first saw Cologne Cathedral, nearly fifty years ago, it had a stumpy and unimpressive appearance, for it was towerless. The next time I saw the edifice, it was disfigured by scaffoldings on which workmen were busy. But when, in the summer of 1894, I beheld the completed towers in their flashing splendour, I felt that it was a magnificent poem in marble.

That illustrates the way in which the Master builds a true Christian. The Bible declares that the Christian is "Christ's workmanship, created anew unto good works." Anyone who looked at a company of church members in a prayer-meeting or at the communion table, might say that some of them were quite imperfect specimens of workmanship, as he could testify from intimate acquaintance. Very true; but if that same person wished to purchase a melodeon he would not go into the manufactory where the different parts were being fashioned; he would go into the sale-room and inspect the completed instrument. This world is the great workshop in which Jesus Christ by his Spirit constructs Christian character. "Ye are God's building," wrote the Apostle Paul to his brethren at Corinth. Of himself he wrote at another time: "Not as though I have already attained, either were already perfect." He was still in the hands of his Divine and loving Architect. The scaffoldings were not yet taken down, and the work of grace was not yet completed.

BUILDING WITH POOR MATERIAL.

It is easy to discover some flaws in even the best men and women; but the critic must consider what materials our Master has to work with in frail and fallen human nature, so often disfigured and defaced by innate depravity. Napoleon used to say that "he had to make his marshals out of mud." Certainly no power less than that of the Holy Spirit could have constructed such a conscientious and effective Christian as John Newton, out of so hardened and desperate a sinner. A very eloquent and spiritually-minded minister once said to me: "Before I was converted, I wonder how anyone could live in the house with me."

During my forty-four years of pastorates, when I received converts into the church, I often recognized the fact that one candidate for membership had been reared in a frivolous and worldly family—and another had a naturally violent temper—and another was constitutionally timid and irresolute—and still another had to contend with hereditary sensualities of temperament or practice. Some of the over-hasty and headlong had to be held back and tested, and some desponding doubters had to be encouraged. A study of the experience of our blessed Lord, in building twelve disciples out of the material that came to His hand, is full of solemn suggestion, and one of those twelve tumbled into ruin under the very eyes of the Master Builder.

THE CONDITIONS OF PROGRESS.

Character-building is like cathedral-building—a gradual process. No Christian is born full-grown, else there would be no sense in the Divine injunctions to "grow in grace" and to "press towards the goal of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." The corner-stone of every truly regenerated character is the Lord Jesus; other foundation can no one build on, without risking a wreck in this world and eternal ruin in the next. The first act of saving faith is the joining of the new convert to the atoning Saviour. Then upon that solid foundation must be added the courage, the meekness, the patience, the conscientiousness, the honesty, the lovingkindness, and the other graces that make for godliness. Let no young beginner be disheartened. Oaks do not grow like hollyhocks. A solid Christian character cannot be reared in a day—nor is it to be done simply by Sunday services or by sacraments. Some poor pumice-stone has to be thrown out, and not a little bad timber rejected in spite of the varnish on it.

The Bible is the only plumb-line to build by, and it must be used constantly. All the showy ornamentation that a man can put on his edifice amounts to nothing if his walls are not perpendicular. Sometimes we see a flimsy structure whose bulging walls are shored up by props and skids to keep them from tumbling into the street. I am afraid that there are thousands of reputations, in trade, in politics, in social life, and even in church life, that are shored up by various devices. No Christian can defy God's inexorable law of gravitation. It is a mere question of time how soon every character will "fall in," if it is not based on the rock and built according to Jesus Christ's plumb-line. It may go down in this world; it is sure to go down in the next. Let everyone, therefore, take heed how he or she buildeth, for the last great day will test the work, of what sort it is.

THE MASTER'S PLAN AND TOOLS.

Finally, let us all bear in mind that, if we are Christ's workmanship we must let our wise and loving Master take His own way. We must allow Him to use His own tools. Oh, how much cutting and chiselling we often need! How keen, too, and sharp is the chisel which He sometimes uses! The sound of His hammers is constantly heard, and, with it, are also heard the wondering cries of some sufferer, who exclaims: "Why art Thou applying to me the file, the saw, and the hammers?" Be still, and know that "whom He loveth He chasteneth"! If we are Christ's building, then let Him fashion us according to His Divine ideal of beauty, at whatever cost to our selfishness, or pride, or indolence, or vainglory. Christ working in us and upon us—and we working with Christ and for Him—that is the process that produces such structures as He will present before His Father and the holy angels.

Nothing is too small, and nothing is too great, that involves a Christian's influence before a sharp-eyed world. We are to be his witnesses; Jesus Christ builds Christians to be looked at and to be studied. He rears us to be spiritual lighthouses in a sin-darkened world. Michael Angelo said that he "carved for eternity." In an infinitely higher sense is every blood-redeemed Christian carved and fashioned and upbuilt to be a habitation of God through His Spirit, to His praise, and unto His everlasting glory.

The Vision of Glory.

When the golden gates are opened,
And I enter into rest,
And behold the blessed Saviour,
And am folded to His breast—

When this weary way has ended,
With its conflict sharp and long,
And the peace and joy of heaven
Fills the heart and tunes the song—

Then the promised rest and glory
In fruition shall be known,
And the long-imagined splendour
Into knowledge shall have grown.

Oh! but 'tis the One in glory
It will be so good to meet,
And to cast my crown before Him
Down at His beloved feet.

And for ever bear the likeness
Of the Lord who died for me,
And for ever join the chorus
Of the ransomed and the free.

Seven Scripture Looks.

A Bible Reading.

1. Look to Christ for salvation (Isa. xlv. 22).
2. Look at Christ for sanctification (2 Cor. iii. 18).
3. Look for Christ for glorification (Phil. iii. 20).
4. Look not back; it will hinder steadfast service for Christ (Luke ix. 62).
5. Look not behind; a solemn warning (Gen. xix. 17).
6. Look straight before you; an exhortation (Prov. viii. 32-34; xiv. 15).
7. Look up for Divine guidance (Psa. v. 3).

THE

Directory of the Devout Life.

INTRODUCTORY (Matt. v. 1, 2).

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

ACCOMPANIED by His newly-acquired disciples, our Lord had travelled throughout Galilee, hastening from place to place, from one synagogue to another. Everywhere He proclaimed the Glad Tidings of the Kingdom, and accompanied the preaching by mighty deeds. He healed the sick and cast out demons, dispelling every form of infirmity and disease which He encountered in His triumphal progress. On the sunlit path of the Prince of Life all the sad results of human sin fled, as the wreathed mists of morning before sunrise.

It was a morning without clouds. His fame spread far and near throughout all Syria. The people, who, between the exactions of the Pharisees and the hair-splitting of the Scribes, were like harried sheep, welcomed His advent with a great outburst of joy. On the one hand, He was so accessible in His sympathy, on the other so transcendent in His purity and grace. A general impulse of hope and expectation was diffused abroad, and they sought out all who were sick and diseased in mind and body, to bring them into His gracious and health-giving presence. In addition to these crowds of sympathisers and friends, were groups of curiosity-mongers and sight-seers, of inquirers and devout souls, who followed Him, with a great expectancy in their hearts, from Decapolis, Jerusalem, Judæa, and beyond Jordan.

When He saw the crowds increasing thus, He felt that He must withdraw temporarily from their pressure. He could not permit the seasons of holy fellowship with His Father to be broken in upon even by eager appeals for sympathy and healing. Besides, He had reached a decisive moment in His career, when, as His answer to the increasing malice of the leaders of Judaism, it became necessary to organize His followers, and secure the consolidation and perpetuation of His work. A forward step was to be taken, which demanded that He should give Himself to prolonged intercessory prayer, so that He might do nothing of Himself, but only what He saw His Father doing. He was to choose the men, whose names, long afterwards, were to be engraven on the foundation stones of the New Jerusalem. He must, therefore, give Himself to prayer.

The scene of this midnight vigil, and afterwards of the Sermon on the Mount, is an upland rather than a mountain, which rises to about a thousand feet above the level of the sea, and is distinctly marked out from neighbouring eminences by the two horns which crown its summit.

Let us follow the Master's steps, as he ascended by a long and easy slope of unfenced common land, the grass of which was embroidered with daisies, white and red anemones, blue hyacinths, and the yellow-flowered clover, and on which the brown cattle browsed. After a gradual ascent of three or four miles he reached at length a great crater-like space, with a slightly hollow floor, set in a frame of rough crags, and strewn with boulders and fragments of black basalt—as if they had been rained on the earth in a terrific shower (Dr. Geikie). Above, the hill rose up into two high, grassy knolls, some sixty feet in height, known as the Horns of Hattin. This is the spot, so tradition says, where the Master continued all night in prayer to God. He may have selected for His oratory the summit of one of those grassy knolls, whilst the disciples occupied some lower ridge, and at dawn the people began to gather from the neighbouring villages, where they had spent the night, to crowd the vast audience-chamber, hollowed out as an amphitheatre below. On the south-west the huge cone of Tabor; to the north the majestic snow-crowned summit of Hermon; below to the east, the glittering waters of the lake; far away on its other side, the precipitous cliffs of Gadara, rising sheer from its shores; no signs of human habitation; no sound of earthly toil; no fear of intrusion save from the feathered and furred denizens of air and earth, the free pensioners with the lilies on His Father's care—such was the oratory, whose soft grass was trodden by those blessed feet, or indented by that kneeling form.

It was on the mountain, as Luke tells us, that He prayed (Luke vi. 12, 13). As the dawn broke over the hills, He called His disciples from their slumbers, and chose from them twelve that they might be with Him, and that He might send them forth to preach, and to have authority to cast out demons (Mark iii. 13-15). He then appears to have sat down, after the recognised Eastern fashion, opened his mouth, and taught (Matt. v. 1, 2). Through paragraph after paragraph which were to mould the minds of men after a new fashion, and influence the course of coming centuries more powerfully than those of Plato and Aristotle, his speech moved with the transparency and brightness of the River of Life which proceedeth from the throne of God and of the Lamb. Then, descending with His chosen band of Apostles, and accompanied by the rest of His disciples, He descended to the level place where the vast congregation was awaiting Him, and lifting up His eyes with special tenderness on the inner circle, but in tones audible to the furthest extremities of the crowd, He repeated in a shorter form the marvellous discourse which He had already delivered (Luke vi. 17-20).

This discourse, laying the foundation of the Kingdom of Heaven, may also be called the Directory of the Devout Life, and we can wish for nothing better than to drink into its spirit, and realize its exquisite ideals. Whilst it is, in a literal sense, "the Sermon on the Mount," because uttered on one of the great natural altars of the world, may it not be called so in the symbolical and metaphorical case? Our Lord was standing on the very summit of spiritual experience. His own soul was fragrant with the Beatitudes which He uttered for His disciples. He possessed in living human experience all that He inculcated. With exquisite naturalness and simplicity, He was describing His own experiences, was revealing the secrets of His deepest nature, and was delineating in colours that can never fade the features of His own face. From the heights He was calling to men in the lowlands of error and sin, to summon them to His own standpoint. This is emphatically the sermon of the mountain heights.

The close similarity and contrast between this sermon and the giving of the Law from Sinai has often been discussed, and we need do no more than note the points that have been made. There the great prophet of the Old Covenant received God's Law by the mediation of angels, and his feelings must have been elevated far above their ordinary level; here the Prophet of the New Covenant utters the revelation of God from the depths of his own heart, from the matured experiences of His own habitual condition. There the Law was accompanied by the roll of thunder and the blinding lightning flash, here the accompaniments were soft breezes, the blue canopy of heaven, the lilies and the birds of the air. There the Law was written on tablets of stone, here on the fleshy tablets of the heart. There the Laws were Prohibitions, here Beatitudes. There the first tables of the Law were shattered because of the disobedience of the people, and the second form was equally stern and exacting; here, out of tender compassion for the weakness of the people, our Lord repeats the sermon with a somewhat slighter texture. Moses constrained to obedience by pronouncing the disobedient accursed, whilst Christ attracts to loving loyalty by pronouncing the blessedness of the citizens of His Kingdom. Men were not to be driven by terror, but attracted by winsomeness and sweet reasonableness.

This was the third discourse. The first had been to Nicodemus, the master in Israel, on the necessity of a spiritual union with God—this is the beginning of the devout life. The second had been to the unnamed woman at Sychar's well on the nature of spiritual worship—this is the nurture of the devout life. The third is on the rule and direction of the healthy and holy soul—this may therefore be called the directory of the devout life. It has been said that there is nothing of the Cross or of Pentecost in this discourse. But each of these is required to transform these precepts into living and gracious experience. There must be for each sinful soul that forgiveness and cleansing which are possible only through the blood of the cross, or it can never enter through the white gates of pearl into this city of God. For each, too, there must be the in-breathing of the new life—the being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible—before that life can be cultured and moulded into the developments of which this sermon gives outline and model.

"How," asks the disciple in one of old Jacob Behmen's treatises, "shall I be able so to live as not to lose the eternal peace amid anxiety and tribulation?" To which the Master answers: "If thou dost once every hour throw thyself by faith beyond all creatures into the abysmal mercy of God, into the sufferings of our Lord, and into the fellowship of His intercession, and yieldest thyself fully and absolutely thereto, thou shalt receive power from above to rule over death and the devil, and to subdue hell and the world under thee." Yes, and we may add, then thou shalt be able to realise the noble ideal which is presented in this incomparable directory of the devout life.

All One in Christ.

"One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren" (Matt. xxiii. 8).

One name, to every Christian dear,
Should join all hearts in one;
Who draw to God the Father near,
Through His beloved Son.

One Saviour only do we own,
The wellspring of our joy;
Who only could for sin atone,
And Satan's power destroy.

Oh what a bond of union sweet
Our faith in Christ should be,
As round one common mercy-seat
We humbly bow the knee!

May we, as branches of one Vine,
Cleave to the Parent Stem;
As sunbeams may we ever shine
Around one Diadem!

Should coldness sever hearts on earth
That seek one Home above,
Who own one Saviour's matchless worth,
And share His constant love?

My brother, let me clasp thy hand!
If we in Christ are one
Should we not thus as brethren stand,
And cheer each other on?

One Lord, one faith, one cleansing blood
Should all true hearts unite
In holy Christian brotherhood,
Most precious in God's sight!

United Kingdom Alliance.—The jubilee of the United Kingdom Alliance is to be celebrated this year. The occasion is being marked by an effort to raise a special education fund of one hundred thousand guineas. By means of this fund it is hoped to be able to strengthen and extend the work of the organization throughout the country. The effort to collect this sum is to be spread over five years, but the jubilee year itself is to be commemorated by great gatherings in October, in St. James' Hall, Manchester.

The War Bill.—The noteworthy article by Mr. Sydney Buxton, M.P., in the current National Review, on "The War: Its Cost and Finance," is a strong argument in favour of peace. Mr. Buxton has nothing to say as to the terrible loss of life in the cruel South African struggle, but what he says as to the monetary side of the subject is painful food for thought. It appears that the war and its aftermath have cost up to date £224,000,000 (£37,000,000 of which the Transvaal will contribute), and that the National Debt, which from 1815, when it was £900,000,000, had been reduced in 1899 to £635,000,000, has now gone up to £800,000,000—"the patient saving of two generations having been dissipated at one fell swoop." The cost of war is not, however, confined to its direct outlay, there are a hundred side channels. Who shall venture to estimate what might have been effected if this huge amount had been expended in missionary and philanthropic effort?

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, July 12. Psalm lv.
The Litany of the Oppressed.

WHETHER the traitor referred to in the twelfth and following verses was Ahithophel, it is impossible to determine, but this Psalm evidently belongs to the period of Absalom's rebellion. The king was still in the city, but the treason was growing daily bolder, compelling him to face the necessity of flight.

1-8. The moan of the troubled heart. The Psalmist is distracted with anxiety as he broods over his troubles. He fills the air with his groans. Deadly terrors have covered and enwrapped him round—not so much the pressure of the present as the anticipation of the future. Then there breaks from him that inimitable strain which so exactly expresses our hearts' longing under similar oppression. The storm-driven soul longs for the wings of some migratory bird, which is away to the summer lands as soon as the winter blast begins to make itself heard and felt. Of course it is best to stand to our post, even though it be a cross. But what a comfort it is that God's noblest saints have been most human and most touched with the feeling of infinity.

9-15. The hard sayings of the wronged and indignant soul. At that time the streets and open spaces of Jerusalem were filled with a motley crew of conspirators. Violence, strife, iniquity, deceit, and oppression, were in force. But the treachery of some Judas was worse than all. Then follows the outbreak of expressions, which are immeasurably unlike Matt. v.; and even if they be partly elicited by the thought of the rebellion against God which was being manifested, still what a chasm between them and "Father, forgive!"

16-23. The voice of confidence and hope. Blessed is the soul that retires from strife into the secret place of the Most High, and learns to cast its burden on the Lord. Our burden is that which God has given us to carry (22 marg.); let us roll it back on Him. If He does not take away its pressure, He will sustain us beneath it.

MONDAY, July 13. Psalm lvi.
A Psalm of Assured Hope.

The superscription takes us back to David's sojourn at Gath. He feigned insanity and scrabbled on the walls, that he might save his life under the veil of the reverence with which the Orientals of that day were wont to invest the insane—since, in their opinion, they were possessed of a divine spirit. Notice the refrain, which is repeated twice, and divides the Psalm naturally into two stanzas.

1-4. We sometimes stand in just this position. On the one hand are the plottings of men or the machinations of evil spirits, who pant after us and would gladly devour; and on the other is our God. Let us not look at the many who hate, but keep our eyes steadfastly fixed on Him who stands at the helm of our life, who knows where the deep water lies, and is pledged to guide us through rocks and shoals to the haven. It has been said by one, that, Good though it be to trust in the day of fear, it is better to trust and not fear. "I will trust and not be afraid."

5-11. In the second part the Psalmist reiterates his complaint. "They wrest my words" may be, "they torture me with words." Whether we are to take literally the description of the furtive assembling, the stealthy setting of spies who watch his heels (as about to spring from behind), it is impossible to tell, but no imagery could better describe the hatred of our spiritual adversaries, or the necessity for watchfulness and prayer. How tender that eighth verse: the hunted soul realizes that God knows every step of his wandering, and treasures every tear as it drops from his eye. Soul, entrench thyself in God, and thou shalt want neither for succour nor sympathy.

12, 13. Already the Psalmist prepares his sacrifice of thanksgiving. But how appropriate these words for us—God has delivered us from death eternal; may we not trust Him to keep our feet from stumbling, so that life may be spent in light, here and hereafter?

TUESDAY, July 14. Psalm lvii.
The Song of the Steadfast Heart.

This Psalm is related to vii., and others which date from the Sauline persecutions, and it may have been composed at Adullam or Engedi.

1-5. God is our Refuge. He is like some mountain fastness, impregnable and inaccessible; or like the wings of a mother-bird, stretched out over her young. Ah, what a comfort it is to leave the stress and strain of life on Him, and believe that He accomplished all! What perfect peace comes when the soul can say, "I cannot, but Thou canst perform these things for me," and then to wait in assured certainty that God will send out His twin-angels, Lovingkindness and Truth! Do any who read these words dwell among men whose teeth are spears, and their tongue a sword? Let them be of good cheer! God can send an angel to shut the lions' mouths.

6-11. How often in life we see illustrations of v. 6. Haman is hanged on the gallows he had prepared for Mordecai. The destroyer of the bell of the Inchcape Rock perishes there. "The Selah at the end of the verse gives time for spectators to gather around the sight of the ensnared plotter, lying helpless at the bottom of his pit, with his net wrapped round his limbs." The heart which is welded to God becomes fixed, steadfast, and immovable, as He is. We may lie down among lions, but we shall awake the dawn with praise, and those two angels shall bear back to heaven tributes of our gratitude (10 and 3).

WEDNESDAY, July 15. Psalm lviii.
A Psalm of Judgment.

The Psalmist has had a glimpse of the evil of the world—the injustice and oppression which are constantly being perpetrated, the corruption which soils the white ermine of the judge, the bribery which deflects the judgment of the arbitrator, the poor man's wrong, the rich man's contumely.

1-5. A picture of abounding evil. The word gods simply means those who are entrusted with supreme authority. The Psalmist passes on to consider the condition of wicked men in general—astray from the birth, venomous with poisonous hate, wrapped like a deaf adder in the folds of their selfishness, in spite of the mellifluous notes of Gospel grace.

6-9. A cry for retribution. What a wealth of imagery is here. The crushing of the beast of prey, the drying up in summer of the tumultuous water-course, the falling of pointless arrows, the slug which dissolves as it crawls, the disappointment of a premature birth, the expiry of the flame from the swift-burning thorns before the water is boiled or the meat is cooked. These metaphors are heaped one upon another to show the short-lived term of injustice and corruption in God's world.

10, 11. The vindication of righteousness. There are abundant evidences that there is a just God before whose judgment seat men are standing, and who is awarding good or evil according to their deeds. Let us not fret to avenge ourselves—vengeance is His. But Pentecost preceded the destruction of Jerusalem!

THURSDAY, July 16. Psalm lix.

The superscription carries us back to the Sauline persecution. It is, therefore, in close harmony with lv. Hence, also, the picture of enemies patrolling the city, and the fear of the assault of the violent.

Notice the double refrain (9, 17), and the significant alteration in its phrasing.

1-9. The Psalmist, conscious of his innocence, asks God to look upon the design of his enemies. His way is beset with plots and stratagems, that often break out into open assault. His peril drives him to prayer. Very expressive is that appeal! (But Thou . . . . But I, 16). What a remarkable cluster of the Divine names! Again the Psalmist considers his foes, who resemble the gaunt, masterless, and savage curs which infest Eastern cities, feeding on garbage, and filling the streets from end to end with clamour; and again he turns to God, "But Thou." So the believing soul settles down in the sure consciousness that God is its Strength and High Tower, for whom it must quietly wait.

10-17. A marginal reading in the Hebrew commences this division of the Psalm, "My God with His lovingkindness," &c. Hence a suggested rendering, of much interest:—"My God shall meet me with His lovingkindness." It has been truly said that there is nothing more awful in the imprecations of the Psalter than that petition that a swift end of their miseries may not be granted. Let them be as Cains, fugitives and vagabonds on the earth, bearing the brand of God! In vv. 14, 15, the dogs come back from their rounds unsatisfied, but the Psalmist, safe from their reach, sings. In the first setting of his refrain he said, "I will wait"—now he says, "I will sing." What tender names for God—my Strength, my Stronghold, the God of my lovingkindness!

FRIDAY, July 17. Psalm lx.
A Hymn of Defeat.

Israel has gone out to war with Edom, but has met with defeat, but her soldiers are still on the battlefield. As the Psalmist meditates on God's promises, he anticipates victory—Jehovah will deliver His beloved ones and save them by His right hand.

1-4. The People. The opening verses sadly describe the various ingredients of sorrow, which had mingled in Israel's bitter cup. The very banner, which had so often been the rallying point for victory, had now been reared to lead off the troops from before their victorious foe.

5-8. The King. Victory had been assured by the Divine Voice, and as the singer dwells on that blessed assurance, he exults, with as much certainty as though victory were already his. Shechem on the west of Jordan, and Succoth on the east; Gilead and Manasseh, the great Trans-Jordanic tribes; Ephraim and Judah, in close proximity to the metropolis, were all in the possession of the Prince of the House of David. There is no division of interest. The Nation stands fast in its indissoluble unity. As for the heathen Gentile nations, Moab is the basin for washing the feet; Edom is the household slave, to whom the master casts his shoes as he takes them off; while Philistia is sarcastically summoned to repeat her former boasts, if she can.

9-12. God, who had already given great victories, might now be reckoned on to help against the adversary. Happy is the soul that, having learned the vanity of human help, turns to God alone.

SATURDAY, July 18. Psalm lxi.
A Royal Prayer.

The royal singer, as in lxiii., is an exile longing for the sanctuary. The Psalm presents also many similarities to xlii. and xliii.

Towering above his head the Psalmist sees a great cliff, the summit of which would remove him from every assault of his foes. But it is too high for him to reach, and so he pleads that God would lift him thither. He thanks his Divine Protector for having been his place of refuge, and asks that he may be permitted to dwell as a guest for ever in God's tent and under the covert of His wings. "The guests in God's dwelling have guest-rights of provision and protection. Beneath His wings are safety, warmth, and conscious nearness to His heart." Is not this the heritage of those that fear His name? Are you enjoying it? Have you reached that soft, warm nesting-place? Are you consciously there now? You say that such is your ideal, but that you cannot realise it. Is the Rock higher than you? Ask to be lifted to it.

If the King is the singer, the last stanza is a prayer for himself, in which each true heart could join; and shall we not each ask that God's twin angels, Lovingkindness and Truth, may guard our life before and behind. F. B. M.

Home Missions.

Glimpses of Slum Life.

AT the Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson Grove, W., Miss Meredith Brown continues her beneficent operations among the poor, and in her annual report gives a fascinating account of the varied operations among both young and old in the slums of West London.

"The work among factory girls shows a decided advance from last year, but comparing it with the work of past years—the years of noisy games—the change is more marked. Factory girls are easily won by kindness, and they are strongly affectionate: they consider 'their ladies' their friends. Perhaps the most noticeable sign of advancement is not so much the increase in numbers, although the classes are considerably larger, as the regularity of attendance. The average is much higher than it was at this time last year; thus they clearly indicate by their constant attendance their appreciation of these evenings in contrast to those they would spend at home or most probably out of doors "larkin' with lads."

"ABLE TO KEEP."

"Some have come out and have been kept amid severe home trials. The miserable home of L—— G—— was not caused by poverty, for the father earns good wages, but by gambling and drinking. The parents are strict Roman Catholics, and even after a night of rioting and drinking the mother never fails to attend Mass. Father, mother, sisters, brothers, and a young man all occupy one room, and all drink. Last Christmas, on going home one night from the club, she found every one in the house drunk, and not a bed to lie upon. Amid all this her lot is cast, but we are thankful to say she has been kept by the grace of God. She goes regularly to church with one of the deaconesses on Sunday morning, and on this account she has had to endure much persecution.

AMONG SLUM CHILDREN.

"Slum children have no home example; they know not the first rules of obedience. When told to sit, they stand; when told to go out, they remain; when told to keep silent, they delight in making a noise. Therefore, the work needs ladies who have a strong love for the little ones, and yet who are able to hold a rein, and if necessary, a curb rein over them. Such we have resident with us as workers for the children. Four hundred children attend weekly. They are devoted to their ladies and to the 'Night School,' a large number have not missed a single night. The employment for the infants is the Kindergarten system, plain and fancy work, singing, and Bible story.

The Women's Shelter is described by those who find a home within its walls as "such a blessing." A number of the women are employed at Covent Garden Market in shelling peas, picking gooseberries, and bundling asparagus, and for this work they go out at five in the morning. Prayers are conducted daily. On Sunday mornings there is a little meeting in the Women's Hall, taken by one of the heads of the work.

THE GIRLS' TRAINING HOME.

"The girls who are received into the Clarendon House Training Home come through various channels; some are sent by ladies who have the interest of certain girls at heart; some are brought to the Home by parish deaconesses; when visiting they meet with young women who are on the verge of ruin through the influence of evil companions; again, mothers or step-mothers ask us to take their daughters, who have not been able to keep any place, owing either to entire ignorance of work, or because of rudeness to the mistress, the latter caused by the lack of proper home-training and bad example; but the largest proportion of girls this year have been brought by police-court missionaries—cases which have been discharged under the "First Offenders' Act."

OUT-OF-WORK MEN.

Some typical cases of help will illustrate the character of the work for men:—

"G—— G——, a farm labourer, was out of employment. When he came to us he was unfit for work, being quite a wreck from want of food, and his clothes were almost in rags. He said he found at the Shaftesbury Institute a most comfortable home, a good bed, and good food; now he is well and strong. He has got a situation as kitchen porter in a hotel, and is giving satisfaction.

"R—— H——, from Galston, Ayrshire, a respectable grocer, lost his business through strong drink; found his way to London, and after selling everything he had for food and lodging, and at last walking about all night, he came to us. He did extremely well, and was most useful. He had charge of our Men's (small) Shelter, and he also acted as door-keeper."

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

A large company gathered on Tuesday week at the house of Sir James Blyth, 33, Portland Place, W., on the occasion of the annual meeting. The Earl of Aberdeen, who presided, heartily expressed his appreciation of the work of those who all the year round maintain these arduous efforts in the slums. This work has a special claim, for it deals with the heathen of our own land. Miss Meredith Brown followed with a vivid description of the Lisson Grove district. Canon Barker maintained that, while there is still a vast mass of people untouched, yet we must not be discouraged because a work is not universal. No; our Lord said, "there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." Let us seek the "ones." A striking feature of Miss Meredith Brown's work is the deep gratitude manifested by those who are helped.

The Bessbrook Homes.

ONE of the ever-present and urgent problems of our day is how to deal with London's great army of unemployed men. Among those earnest workers whose sympathy has been drawn out to do something for this class are Mr. and Mrs. G. P. H. Maynard. The object with which they founded the Bessbrook Homes was to give a chance to men of all classes who are down in the world, and are anxious to retrieve their position.

Situated in Queen Square and Orde Hall Street, the Homes hold out a helping hand to men of the poorest class by acting as an employment agency. Sandwich-men, as a rule, receive but woefully small payment; but at the Bessbrook Homes they never receive less than 2s. a day, besides many advantages which their ordinary position does not afford. Another form of advertizing is that of handbill distribution. But there are many poor fellows who are not physically fit to bear the strain of walking the streets, and are only too glad to get a chance of doing some work within doors; and for these employment is found in circular folding and envelope addressing.

Mr. Maynard and his co-worker, Mr. Maynard Hare, are constantly encouraged by seeing their labours bearing fruit, light following darkness, and victory succeeding defeat. The following are typical cases:—

One man, well brought up and intended for the Christian ministry, enlisted, and was dismissed the Army. After spending some time in the Homes he obtained a good situation, and is much valued by his employers, and is an earnest Christian worker. Two men from America found their way to these doors of hope, leaving their bad companions behind. They are both in permanent situations now.

One of the frequent victims of the drink curse found in these Homes the means of his restoration, and is now a commercial traveller, doing exceedingly well; another, whose character for sobriety had quite gone, became one of the inspectors of the business of the Homes, and is now in a most respectable position, and engaged in Christian service in his spare hours.

But the Homes are, above all, Christian. The spirit of a real, practical religion pervades every department; and the new hall for worship built at the rear has been the scene of many conversions.

"Formation and Reformation."

UNDER this suggestive title the St. Giles Christian Mission sends forth its forty-third annual report. The year 190[illegible] has proved one of the most eventful in its history, for at the beginning of the autumn the historic chapel in Little Wild Street had to be vacated, and the building has now been taken down on behalf of the new street from Holborn to the Strand. Dating from 1787 and occupying the site of an older chapel which had been put up in the grounds of Wild House by Roman Catholics, the building had been occupied by the Mission for thirty years, the reopening sermon being preached by the late C. H. Spurgeon.

The spiritual work continues to have first attention. At five centres ranging from Caledonian Road to the Strand, Sunday schools are carried on, one of these centres being the Olympic Theatre in Wych Street which has now become associated with classes for young people and Gospel meetings. Though poor, ragged, and rough in many instances, these girls and boys often turn out well and soon learn to like the school.

To very many this mission is chiefly known on account of what is done for discharged prisoners, and for the reclamation of boys or juvenile first offenders, whom magistrates hand over to the homes maintained for that purpose and thus avoid sending them to prison. In the various London courts Mr. Wheatley has come to be a veritable friend in need in this respect, and what was recently said by Sir A. de Rutzen, of Bow Street, and Chief Metropolitan Police Magistrate, would be subscribed to by all other occupants of the Bench:

MAGISTERIAL TESTIMONY.

"From day to day we have brought before us poor unfortunate children, who have not been guilty of what you may call any crime, but ofttimes of misfortune—turned out into the streets to get a living as best they may, with hardly any way to turn for a crust of bread. They are brought in by the police, and it is well for them, because we always know that if they go to Mr. Wheatley, that is the first step up the rounds of the ladder, and many and many a one blesses the day when he first saw the inside of the St. Giles' Christian Mission Hall."

During the year 1902 there were 31,000 persons discharged from the London prisons, this being an average of nearly 100 for each weekday morning. More than two-thirds of these were supplied with breakfast outside the prison gates, and the Christian advice given to them was supplemented by offers of assistance to turn over a new leaf. There can be no more effective method of checking crime than this, and probably the best testimony to the success of the method is the fact of its having been adopted in the United States as well as at home:—

"Since the prison work was started in 1877 a considerable number of agencies have come into existence, with the purpose and aim of saving discharged prisoners from despair, from their own evil inclinations, and from the continuance of criminal careers. If the direct work of the Mission should cease to-morrow, it would still live in the numerous agencies which owe their inception and inspiration to the pioneer work of the St. Giles' Christian Mission."

The numerous letters received from those who have been assisted, are not only remarkable in themselves; they afford many vivid glimpses into various phases of London life—that daily round in the too little understood byeways of an oftentimes unknown world—which proves that truth is generally stranger than fiction; and that writers of fiction frequently draw upon real life for their more sensational passages. An hour or two of observation on any week day at the chief office in Brooke Street, Holborn, would hardly fail to prove this to a demonstration to anyone who might choose to make the experiment.

"The Welcome," Portsmouth

IN his fifteenth annual report Mr. Thomas Hogben raises a joyful note of praise for what the Lord has wrought in the salvation of many during these past years. Scarcely a week has passed without the "joy of harvest." In social efforts much has also been done; but this work has always been subservient to that of leading men into living union with Christ.

A special feature of the work last year was the distribution of 7,000 to 8,000 copies of the New Testament, or portions, among the men of sixteen nationalities who came to celebrate the crowning of King Edward. Dinners were also given to 200 men from the Japanese warships, and light refreshments to a large number of the men who visited Portsmouth from other countries, in order to secure the opportunity of preaching Christ to them in their own tongues. There is reason to believe that some among the "Japs," Germans, Portuguese, and Greeks, not only heard but received the truth. The story of this work, told in the Coronation booklet, can still be had from Mr. Hogben (6d. post free).

THE NEW BUILDINGS.

The new Mission premises, which are in the course of erection, are to be completed by October next. The earnest desire is that they should be opened free from debt. About £500 is still needed.

The following touching letter reached Mr. Hogben on January 18, 1903, from an entire stranger:—

"Christian Brothers,—Kindly note this is one day's pay, as a thank-offering from a brother, or one who believes in answer to prayer. Being out of work for over two months, and now just finished one week (at 18s. a week, to keep a wife and four children on), I gladly give the enclosed 3s. for the good of the Lord's work in this corner of His vineyard, and would be glad if prayers were made on my behalf, in order that I may have more strength and grace given me to resist the great temptations of my everyday life.—One who believes in Christ."

There are interesting stories, too, of impressions received through the meetings, as well as by visitation and tract distribution. One man said that "he was passing a mission in a distant town, and, feeling very tired, thought he would go in and rest, and see what it was like. He thought that the gentleman who was speaking knew him, for he seemed to talk about everything he had done in his life. This so frightened him that he got up and left before the close of the meeting. He asked the man at the door who the speaker was. He said, 'Mr. Hogben, from Portsmouth.' To drown his thoughts, he went and got drunk, and led a reckless life for some months. One day he felt he could not live any longer. He went into a shed; shut himself up; got on his knees, and told God what a bad one he had been, and asked Him to forgive, and make him a better man. He soon saw that Jesus died for him, and came out of the shed praising God."

"LOST, BUT JESUS FOUND ME."

"C—— was passing the mission one Sabbath, when a sister gave him a tract, and invited him to the service. He took the tract laughingly, and said that he had an engagement and could not come in. He glanced at the tract, and the words caught his eye, 'Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out.' He put the tract in his pocket, and thought little more about it.

"For six months after that he went on living for self and pleasure, until one day he again passed the Mission, outside which an open-air meeting was being held. The speaker was earnest, and he thought, 'That's the real thing. If ever I go in for that, I'll have the real thing.' Then followed the thought: 'Why, this is the place where they gave me that tract! I'll go in there when I have nothing else to do.'

"He turned out the tract after that, and read it. Later on, out of mere curiosity (as far as he knew), he attended one of the meetings, and there (as he expressed it in a fellowship meeting some months later), 'I found the Lord, or He found me. I don't know which. Life has been very different since.'"

Harley House Activities.

THE midsummer gatherings held at Harley House, Bow, E., last Friday brought together a large number of missionaries and their friends. After Mr. James E. Mathieson had led in prayer, and Rev. Dr. Grattan Guinness had read John xvii., Rev. F. B. Meyer (as chairman of the afternoon meeting) gave a deeply-interesting address, in which he summed up the principles for which the many-sided organization centreing in Harley House stands. (1) For an invincible faith in the adaptation of the Gospel to the whole world, that the Gospel is to the hearts of men what corn is to their physical being. India is the seat of ancient civilization and religion. On the Congo we come into contact with man in the lowest stage of barbarism. In South America we are dealing with a decadent civilization, which the Roman Catholic Church has done more to corrupt than to help. Yet diverse as these fields are, removed as far as possible from one another, the missionaries get the same training before being sent out. (2) For winnowed wheat—that the men and women who are to fall into the ground and die should be chosen and elect spirits; and that they should receive such winnowing, discipline, and training as it is possible to get. (3) For belief in the Second Advent, for the cord by which the sacrifice is bound includes that golden strand. (4) For faith in a living God, who is the answerer of prayer. (5) For ministry to the great world around. Too often people intensely interested in home work forget the foreign, and those who are occupied with the foreign forget the home. The proper balance is kept here.

Referring to the manner in which leaders for the work had been raised up, Mr. Meyer spoke with evident personal satisfaction of the association with the management of three additional directors—Rev. Dr. George Hanson, Pastor Wright Hay, and Mr. George E. Morgan.

In making a brief statement of the work accomplished, Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness mentioned that forty-five workers had been helped out to the foreign field during the twelve months. The band of ten who hope to proceed to the Congo in September next is the largest that has ever gone forth to that mission. Special emphasis was laid on the present joint effort of special prayer at home and activity in the field already referred to in our columns. The students at Harley House number forty-three, the deaconesses at Doric Lodge twenty-six, and the nurses at Bromley sixteen. The income has been maintained, but the work has grown; and though financial considerations have never been allowed to limit progress, the position calls for prayerful consideration.

As representing the different groups of outgoing missionaries, a few hearty words were spoken by Miss Alice Smith, who goes to Argentina; Miss E. Prout, whose field of work is to be in India; and Mr. C. Padfield, who joins the band of workers on the Congo.

An excellent missionary address was given by Dr. Whitfield Guinness, who testified to the privilege of meeting in various parts of China early Harley students, men now in the forefront of the battle against heathenism. Memories of the Boxer troubles were touchingly recalled, and gratitude to God expressed for the encouragements which come in the midst of difficulties.

The keynote for a farewell message to the missionaries was found by Mrs. Howard Taylor, in the words, "Those things which are most surely believed among us . . . the certainty of those things" (Luke i. 1-4). After congratulating them, and pointing out the precious help and inspiration which may often be found in the parts of the Bible where we might least expect it, Mrs. Taylor pointed out the lines along which she had personally experienced much help and joy through laying hold of the spiritual certainties in times of great need. I have never, she said, needed Jesus Christ without finding Him near, and when I needed Him most He has been nearest to me. Take the certainty of His presence with you, and let it so fill your hearts every day that those around you may also be convinced of that blessed certainty. It will be your life behind the message that will bring certainty to the hearers.

A large gathering in the open air was addressed by a number of missionaries at home on furlough from China, North Africa, and the Congo region. In the evening the main feature of the closing service was a résumé of the work from the beginning, given by Rev. Dr. Grattan Guinness. Among the other speakers were Mr. A. E. Ruskin, who is about to proceed to the Congo for the third time; Mrs. Bishop, the well-known traveller, and Dr. Howard Taylor.

Ministering to the Needy

IN LIVERPOOL.

FEW places where the hapless victims of poverty and sin congregate present a more pitiable spectacle than the waiting-room of a medical mission. Spiritually dead, physically suffering, temporarily destitute, and mentally hopeless, pictures the condition of many of those whom sickness has forced to seek medical advice. The Liverpool Medical Mission has a record of thirty-nine years' strenuous endeavour among the poor of the city. Some idea of the extent of its operations may be gathered from the returns of 1902. At the three dispensaries and mission halls, the individual cases dealt with number 11,308, and total consultations 40,764.

The Medical Mission waiting-room is one of the best possible fields for personal Christian effort. Those who attend know fully the character of the work, and many welcome gladly the words of spiritual help and exhortation to which they listen. Poverty, with the kind of existence which it induces, leads to an apathetic outlook on the future as well as the present; and demands on the part of the poor the straining of all their powers to supply the wants of the body, to say nothing of the wants of the soul. When sickness comes instantly the character of the outlook is altered, for a comparatively trifling ailment makes them ofttimes apprehensive of danger. They are rendered more willing to hear the Word of God, and are more amenable therefore to the working of the Divine Spirit; more susceptible to any influences for good that may be brought to bear upon them.

THE GRATITUDE OF PATIENTS.

Again and again this has been seen in the history of the Liverpool Mission, and it is no unusual thing to hear patients thanking God for the illness which has brought them to a place where they have learned to know Him. As one poor woman remarked to Dr. Bond, with a sob in her voice, "I think, doctor, God took away our little boy just that He might lead the father and me to Himself." Into no method of mission enterprise does the element of personality enter so largely. It is not simply that the poor obtain medicine when they visit the Society's centres—they experience in the skill and care of the physician and his co-workers a form of service which they feel instinctively to be the outcome of Christian sympathy and love, and their hearts are touched.

It is no small testimony to the patients' appreciation of what is done for them, that their contributions last year amounted to nearly £200. There is, however, a balance due to the treasurer, and the committee is making every endeavour to secure for the Mission that wider support which its ministry merits. Rev. C. H. V. Gollmer has been appointed organizing secretary, and will be glad of opportunities of arranging drawing-room and other meetings in Liverpool and district, with a view to stimulating interest in the work. Mr. B. F. Babcock continues to act as chairman, the hon. secretary and treasurer being Mr. John C. Proctor, 16, Brunswick Street, Liverpool.

Rev. Colin Sinclair,
OF INVERGORDON.

THE subject of this sketch was born in the small crofting hamlet of Melvich, in Sutherlandshire, in 1828. He was fifteen years of age when the great upheaval in the Church of Scotland culminated in the Disruption of 1843. At that time feeling was keen, and the people of Melvich found themselves deprived of their school. Money was not to be had, but a school must be provided, and, nothing better being available, the teacher and pupils took possession of a sheep cot. The walls were of dry stone, without mortar, and the wind whistled through, so that what shelter the cot afforded was not much better than the lee of a field dyke. But, nothing daunted, the teacher and pupils went up the hill-side to collect moss, with which they carefully stopped all the crevices from the inside, and made their sheep cot into a rustic summer arbour. To this day Mr. Sinclair looks back with almost boyish glee to the days they spent in making their new school-house habitable. It had no floor except the bare earth, and no windows; but what cared hardy Highland boys and girls for that?

From this rustic academy, Colin proceeded direct to the University of Edinburgh. Travelling in the north was not so comfortable and convenient as it is now. The young student journeyed by a small coasting vessel from Wick to Leith. There was no accommodation for passengers, and the journey was extremely uncomfortable, but this did nothing to daunt the ardour of young Sinclair; and from the first he was able to take his place with credit among young men from the best schools in Scotland. He studied divinity at the New College, Edinburgh; and, having completed his term of attendance with great credit, was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Tongue, in 1855, beginning his ministry with the reputation of a well-equipped theologian.

For nearly two years Mr. Sinclair was engaged in connection with the Highland Committee of the Free Church, which at that time was putting forth every effort to overtake the enormous amount of work thrown upon its care by the almost universal adherence of the Gaelic-speaking population to the Evangelical party. But he could not be long engaged in such work without vacant congregations hearing of him, and desiring his services permanently. So two years after he received licence he was ordained as minister of the Gaelic Church in Aberdeen. While still a young man, and but recently settled, his fame as an Evangelical preacher spread through the Highlands. More than one vacant congregation looked towards Aberdeen, but he continued steadfastly at his work with marked success, gathering together a large congregation. More gratifying to the earnest preacher was the profession on the part of many persons of faith in Christ as their Saviour.

After a fruitful ministry of five years in Aberdeen, a call came to him from the newly-formed congregation at Invergordon. This he felt he must accept, and was translated, as they say in Scotland, to his new charge in 1862. There he spent thirty-nine years—a period fruitful in spiritual ingathering. During the whole of that time he exercised an ever-widening influence among his fellow Highlanders throughout the north of Scotland.

On his arrival at Invergordon Mr. Sinclair found that a handsome church had been already erected, but that it was heavily burdened with debt. There was no manse, and to pay the debt on the church and provide a suitable manse were among his first cares. This was done with characteristic energy, and in a few years the young congregation found themselves growing in numbers and influence.

When the late Mr. D. L. Moody first visited the North in 1874 he received no warmer welcome than that accorded to him by the Free Church minister of Invergordon; and during all the years since then he has cherished the same feelings of deep regard and esteem for the American evangelist and his memory with which he first welcomed himself and his message.

Mr. Sinclair has all his life long been singularly open minded. Catholic charity has been one of the leading characteristics of his life as a Christian minister. Living in a part of the country where such movements as that resulting from Mr. Moody's visit were viewed with suspicion, and at times vigorously denounced in the pulpit and on platforms, he went quietly on his way welcoming them as from God, and using all his influence to promote and extend them. Only those familiar with the Highlands thirty years ago can understand what this meant.

For Church controversy he had no liking—perhaps no great aptitude—but few were more in earnest in promoting all that tended to the good of the people and the advancement of the Kingdom of God in their hearts. His has been outwardly an uneventful life. But behind this there lay a great spiritual force; a force which told immediately within the sphere of his own congregation, and indirectly over a great area of country. Many young men and women left Invergordon during the period of his ministry, and carried with them the healthy spiritual teaching they had received. These, in many cases, became an element of moral and spiritual strength in the congregations they joined both in our own country and in our colonies and dependencies.

With advancing years the labours of his life began to tell on even his lithe and vigorous frame, and just before he reached the three score years and ten he applied for a colleague. Since then Mr. Sinclair, who had suffered from throat symptoms, has devoted himself to preaching where his services may be of special benefit, and with much fruit. He now spends the afternoon of his life in the same hamlet where fifty-eight years ago he helped to convert the sheep cot into a summer arbour. He still retains the erect soldier-like bearing of his youth, and with a face both strong and handsome he presents a striking figure of the ancient patriarch as his glowing sentences fall upon the ear and move the religious emotions of the hearer. He has lost none of the arts which in younger days made a boy, now a man in a responsible position in England, listen to the story of David slaying Goliath with such rapt attention that at the end he jumped up, utterly oblivious that he was in church and listening to a children's sermon. His family are all grown up, and filling useful spheres—one daughter being in the mission of the United Free Church in Madras.

Mr. Albert Midlane.—Friends in many lands will learn with pleasure that last week the proceedings in the bankruptcy of Mr. Albert Midlane were annulled, by order of the Isle of Wight County Court Judge. The solicitor stated that the debts had been met in full, friends of Mr. Midlane having raised a sum sufficient for this purpose. The official receiver took occasion to remark that the proceedings were creditable to the bankrupt and his friends.

THE LATE
Mr. William Collingwood.

WILLIAM COLLINGWOOD was born at Greenwich, April 23, 1819, and educated at Oxford, where his grandfather was printer to the University. At Christ Church School he showed great aptitude for classics, but when he was offered a place on the foundation of the College, he was not able to accept. His father's friend J. D. Harding, and his cousin, Collingwood Smith, encouraged him to become an artist, and he rapidly came to the front as a painter of interiors and landscapes. In 1839 he settled at Liverpool as a teacher of drawing, and after election to the membership of the New Water Colour Society, he quitted it to join the Old (now the R. W. S.), of which he was hon. retired member at his death.

For some time he attached himself to Dr McNeile, of St. Jude's, at Liverpool, a then famous Evangelical churchman. Later he became acquainted with Lord Congleton, George Müller, and other leaders of a movement which aimed at the union of Evangelical Christians. In 1844 he joined the late John Price, of Chester, John Plunkett, Thomas Porter, and a few others in meeting on undenominational principles at Back Canning Street, Liverpool. From this arose a church in connection with the Brethren, which afterwards met in the Crown Street Hall, built by Mr Collingwood, who took a leading part in the oversight until he left Liverpool in 1884. He was a strong supporter of the original principle of open communion, and a friend and fellow-worker of all active Evangelicals.

In 1850, under the influence of Dr. Gutzlaff, he proposed to go out to China in the double capacity of artist and missionary. This was prevented by his marriage in the next year with Marie Imhoff, daughter of a notary at Arbon, Switzerland, and by family cares ensuing; but he became an earnest supporter of the China Inland and other missions, and his house was the resort of many missionaries outward and homeward bound from the port of Liverpool. In 1890 he settled at Bristol, where he attached himself to Bethesda Chapel, and his old friend George Müller, spending his leisure in writing many papers and booklets, among which were "The Bible its Own Evidence," "The Brethren: an Historical Sketch," &c.

Mr. Collingwood's reverential love for the Word of God was a conspicuous feature in his character. So absorbed did he become in its treasures that the din of controversy and criticism scarcely reached him. In fact, the realm of controversy was uncongenial to him for his spirit was gentle and loving; but when he did enter it he showed that he could do so with telling effect. A little pamphlet issued only a few months before his departure, on the subject of "Doctrine," shows how much importance he attached to the practical teaching found in the New Testament. He considered that the word "doctrine" is often misunderstood and misapplied, and that in the New Testament it generally relates to teaching in regard to practical duties, rather than to formal statements of truth. He was accustomed in his later ministry to urge the importance of presenting these teachings continually, as a corrective to the careless and worldly behaviour so often found among professing Christians.

To those who were about him in his closing days, the spirit of contentment with and acquiescence in the will of God were very noticeable and beautiful to behold. As late as Whit-Sunday, May 31, he was present at the morning meeting in Bethesda Chapel, though too feeble to take any audible part. On the following Saturday a stroke of paralysis laid him low. But his mental powers remained clear, and his spirit was bright and strong with faith and hope. A slight rallying raised hopes of partial recovery, but on June 25 a change for the worse occurred, and in the afternoon of that day he fell asleep in the eighty-fifth year of his age. The funeral service was held in Bethesda Chapel, Bristol, on Monday, 29th, and the interment took place in Liverpool on Tuesday, the service being conducted by Mr. Glasgow.

The Gospel in Spain.

A TALK WITH PASTOR THEODOR FLIEDNER.

THE story of the suppression of the Reformation in Spain, with its characteristic accompaniment of Romanist savagery, is a sad page of history for evangelical readers. Since those dark days when superstition was so firmly enthroned on the south of the Pyrenees, the nation has become more and more amenable to Papal government, and, at the same time, more and more lacking in the qualities which make a nation great. It is recognised that the Spaniards, as individuals, have admirable qualities. Freed from the paralyzing system of Rome, the people might well manifest the energy and skill of former days; hence there will be strong sympathy in this country with all movements that make for the emancipation of the Spaniard. And believers, especially, eagerly scan the horizon for signs of spiritual awakening, anticipating the happy day when the land shall be fully evangelized.

Among those undertakings which rivet our interest is the well-known work commenced by the late Rev. Fritz Fliedner, of the German Mission, who, it will be remembered, passed to his rest in March, 1901. His son, Pastor Theodor Fliedner, is spending a few weeks in London, with a view to arousing a larger measure of interest in the operations; and, with a view of ascertaining facts regarding the present position of the Mission, a representative of THE CHRISTIAN had an interview with this devoted upholder of Protestant truth.

THE LATE MR. FLIEDNER.

Mr. Fliedner spoke first of the incessant labours of his late father, and of the peaceful end to his busy life. "At four o'clock in the morning, we waked all in the house because the end was near. The orphan boys sang at the door of his room his own translation of the hymn, 'To the sky, to the sky, fain to Jesus would I fly' ('Á la luz, á la luz, al encuentro de Jesus'). Afterwards all walked quietly past his bed to take leave of him with a last look. He recognised and kissed his children. When I repeated the words, 'For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord; whether we live therefore or die, we are the Lord's,' my mother saw his countenance light up with heavenly joy, and saw his face as 'if it had been the face of an angel.' With his face turned to the bright morning light, he bowed his head, and his spirit returned to Him who gave it. The heart which had beaten so warmly for every human being with whom he came in contact stood still. Sacred peace rested on the whole house."

GOD'S GUIDING HAND.

"And the work came under your direction, Pastor?'

"Yes, and it is wonderful how God has sustained the work, even after the death of its founder. The most important enterprise is the Missionary College in Madrid, and the story of its erection is full of encouragement. One can trace the guiding hand of God, stage by stage. Our mission house was too small for a training college, but such an institution was necessary, and the Lord gave it to us. But hear a scrap of the story as my father used to tell it: 'First, the porter of the house in which we rented the second floor, who for years had been unfriendly, could not resist our continued friendliness, and became friendly himself. Then, the administration of the Madrid register of property was transferred to the first floor of the same house; these two things had to work together for good. Three people from Santander inherited ground. They came to Madrid and wanted to sell. They were standing on the floor of the house, speaking to our now friendly porter, when I happened to pass, on my way to a meeting of the Religious Tract Society. The man, who a few weeks before would not have saluted me, said: "Don Federico, do you want to buy a site?" I looked at the plan and said: "I do not know this part of the city." "You might go there at once with these gentlemen." "Impossible; my time is already engaged." At this moment a messenger arrived with a letter from the secretary of the Tract Society, saying the meeting had to be postponed. If this servant had come five minutes sooner, as he should have done, he would have met me upstairs, and I never would have seen the ground. Now I could go with the men and see the site, in the highest part of Madrid, in a beautiful situation, of 180,000 square feet. The price which they asked was very low, £1,800. A short time before, £1,000, which had been placed on good security, was returned to us. When I offered this sum, the people laughed me to scorn. However, they received no other offer at all; they must go back to their home in Santander. So they sold the land to me.'"

DISCOMFITING THE PAPAL NUNCIO.

"And the College?"

"Was duly erected, and as Christians in England, I hope, are aware, is a bulwark of Protestant truth. Our transactions with the architects and authorities were remarkable manifestations of providential care. The workmen were stopped on several occasions through priestly machinations. The Archbishop of Madrid and the Nuncio of the Pope (Monsignor Cretoni), when they heard that we had got the permission, were furious. They telegraphed to Rome. Cardinal Rampolla wrote in the name of the Pope to the Queen Christina of Spain, that she might hinder the building, but, ultimately the workmen resumed their labours and finished the college."

PASTOR THEODOR FLIEDNER.

"Has the result justified your expectations, Mr. Fliedner?"

"Amply. We have, for example, one lad with us who was formerly in the Jesuit schools. This is what my father hoped would come. Among the scholars who have passed through, one is now a University Professor, and another is director of a college. To realize the value of such work from a religious point of view we need to remember that the Bible is the foundation of our teaching."

"You have stations in various parts of Spain?"

"Madrid, of course, is our chief centre; but we have stations at Camunas, Besullo, Granada, and other places. On the whole we have to sustain, including the orphans, more than 180 persons. We have forty fellow-workers, evangelists and teachers, and 500 children in the day schools, with over 100 in the night schools. The amount needed for salaries, Bible and tract work, schools and orphanages, is £5,000, of which nearly the fifth part is contributed by the poor evangelical Spaniards themselves."

"POST FATA RESURGO."

"You spoke of orphans?"

"Yes. We have, as many friends are aware, an orphanage in which we train more than sixty boys and girls, who are divided into four families. Then there is the house in the very ruins of a convent at the Escurial, whence Philip II. (who married your Queen Mary) directed the building of his great palace, and issued his orders to fight against the heretics and burn them at the stake. God's providence has converted it into a 'holiday home' for Protestant orphans in the hot summer, and we call it Paz—i.e., Peace. The emblem of the village of the Escurial is the sun rising behind the clouds, with the motto: 'Post fata resurgo'—'After many misfortunes I rise again.' And this may fitly be taken as the motto of the whole work of evangelization in Spain. There, where more than 10,000 martyrs were burnt alive, where during 300 years the power of the Inquisition and spiritual tyranny destroyed all Christian life, the Gospel shows now its power. Some children of the village visit our day-school, and the night-school counts from twenty to thirty scholars. It is at the same time a mission station which is visited every week from Madrid."

"Then is there not a hospital?"

"A hospital was a necessity, so my father began one in a humble way. Protestants were so persecuted in the Romanist hospitals that the sisters went from bed to bed asking if each patient had taken the Communion. If any had not, the sisters would not even change the bedclothes. All agreed that we must have a hospital, but my father said, 'I do not move a finger for this purpose, if you do not begin yourself.' 'We are poor!' was the answer.' Well, but you must do something, otherwise I shall not move.' Then an old woman came and brought a mattress, probably older than herself; afterwards a man came and brought a bed with three legs, but we procured the fourth leg. Gradually we furnished three good-sized rooms. We have now eight beds, patients coming to us from the various congregations."

ROMANISM DECLINING IN SPAIN.

"Do you consider that Romanism is declining?"

"Undoubtedly. I think 50 per cent. of Spanish priests would leave had they some employment to go to. Clericalism is universally detested, and there is increasing interest among intelligent people in all things Protestant. For example, a certain marquis sent to us asking that a Protestant minister might be sent to a certain village. We sent one, and crowded meetings were held in one of the marquis's houses. 'I want the people to know that the Protestant religion is the true one,' said the grandee. Again, the Duke de la Victoria used to come to our meetings in Madrid. He was not a member with us, but undoubtedly had lost sympathy with Romanism. His funeral was conducted by a bishop and priests, but very coldly. There was a great crowd at the graveside, including many state dignitaries. Paternosters were said, and the Miserere sung, but there was no consoling word. I quietly went to the front, feeling that at least a few sentences from God's Word should be said as he had been a Protestant in secret, and recited John xi. 25 and 26. An old woman in the crowd said, 'Amen.' I heard, subsequently, that the Duke's son wished to know the words, for 'they were so very beautiful,' and he would like them inscribed on his father's tombstone."

PROTESTANT LITERATURE.

"Do you make progress with the distribution of the printed message?"

"Besides the splendid work done by the Religious Tract Society, we have bookshops in Madrid and Barcelona, whence we supply colporteurs and friends in all parts of Spain with books, tracts and periodicals, and send these winged messengers to Mexico and to Spanish South America. We publish two Protestant periodicals, El Amigo de la Infancia and La Revista Cristiana, in which we try to reach the educated classes in Spain. By the kind assistance of the American Foreign Sunday School Association, the former of these meets its expenses. The Revista Cristiana is a paper for the better educated Spaniards, and of great importance for introducing the Gospel into new spheres of society."

"And the outlook?"

"Is such as to encourage us in looking to the Lord. The ways He has led us are wonderful indeed. I would like to add that an important feature of my father's later work was the organizing of various churches into an association for co-operation and fellowship, called the 'Iglesia Evangelica Española.' Conferences are held from time to time, and in this union we have the germ of a national Protestant movement. As to our own operations, there are heavy burdens to be carried; the maintenance of a large and many-sided Protestant undertaking calls for liberal support, and during the brief time that I remain in your country I prayerfully look for the sympathy of evangelical Christians, and hope to have opportunities for speaking on the work that God has put into my hands."

Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander in America.

THE first public meeting at which Dr. Torrey was present after his return to Chicago was the usual weekly gathering for prayer in Chicago Avenue church. Hundreds of people crowded the hall, and from first to last the service was full of inspiration and interest. Everyone testified their delight at the safe return in health and strength of the pastor, and their gratitude to God for the thousands of prayers which have been abundantly answered in the tour around the world. On the same day, Dr. Torrey met the officials of the church and offered to resign the pastorate, as he had been absent eighteen months, and would shortly expect to be absent for another long period; but they refused to entertain the idea, although they have agreed to select a pastor who can undertake the oversight of the church temporarily during Dr. Torrey's absence. Nothing has delighted Dr. Torrey more than the continuous blessing which has descended on the work of the church during his absence.

Sunday, June 21, was a beautiful day, both as regards weather and the experiences of Chicago Avenue Church. In the morning there was not a seat vacant, and without doubt the largest congregations which assembled anywhere in the city were those which welcomed Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander. The preacher's subject in the morning was "Personal Work," and he related several instances where the individual worker had been able to accomplish what the preacher had failed to do. He recalled how Mr. Moody had said that he had often failed to touch the man in the congregation because the man would hand it back to the person behind him, and he in turn would hand it back to the man in the seat behind him, until at last the message meant for the individual in front had been handed out the door! Mr. Charles Alexander sang "He knows." When he had concluded, it was evident that the words had gone home to many a listener. In the afternoon, Mr. Alexander addressed the splendid Sunday-school which assembles under the superintendence of Mr. A. F. Gaylord.

In the evening the church was thronged to its utmost capacity, there being certainly over two thousand persons present. Dr. Torrey preached most solemnly, and at the conclusion a prayer meeting, attended by about eight hundred, was conducted by Mr. Alexander, while twenty-five persons came forward to confess Christ.

Chicago's welcome to Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander could not have been more enthusiastic if they had been, as the chairman (Hon. Luther Laflin Mills) suggested, "soldiers of the country returning from a righteous war." For an hour and a half before the doors were opened, a huge crowd of people anxious to obtain admittance to the Auditorium caused excitement among the passers-by, and drew forth many queries as to what could possibly be attracting such thousands. "If President Roosevelt had been going to speak, we should not have had a bigger crowd," said one journalist as he pressed his way with difficulty through the throng. The building has more than 4,000 seats; and in addition a great sloping platform had been built to accommodate the 600 singers whom Prof. D. B. Towner had trained for the occasion. At half-past seven the doors were opened, and with one mighty rush a sea of humanity spread itself in waves of colour all over the hall, till you could not see a vacant seat. Still, thousands were disappointed, and had to turn away homewards without the joy of being present at this memorable gathering.

"THE HOLIEST OF WARS."

The Hon. Mr. Mills is a brilliant orator at the bar, as well as a man keenly interested in Christian work. He spoke with great power and charm. "Spontaneously in this magnificent place of assemblage you come together, thousands of the people—to greet a mighty captain in the holiest of wars, and his worthy comrade beside him, and with one voice express to them your gratitude and love. They return from a world crusade, in which the Sword of the Spirit has been the weapon of their endeavour, the sacred banner of the Cross their symbol, and the victory gained the uplifting of men in countless numbers from the sordid, the selfish, the sinful, into the higher life of a conscious relationship with God." Mr. Mills paid a high compliment to the whole-hearted devotion to the truth which had characterized Dr. Torrey's teaching, and to his labours in the institute founded by D. L. Moody, "whose endeavours for the good of men are a precious jewel in the treasure house of humanity's grateful memory." He described Mr. Alexander as "the sweet Gospel singer, the echoes of whose music of the soul linger in human hearts throughout the world."

The great moment came when Dr. Torrey rose to tell the story of his tour. He was cheered to the echo, and then, when all was quiet, he led the audience in earnest prayer that many might be led to Christ that very night, and that the faith of all might be strengthened. For one hour he held the close attention of the people as with rapid steps he traced his journey of 35,000 miles, with the outlines of which our readers are familiar. He (Dr. Torrey) proved how the Word of God and prayer had again been proved to be the only weapons for warfare against the powers of evil under whatever sky he preached. When he had finished his wonderful narrative, Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman concluded a historic meeting with prayer. DAVID WILLIAMSON.

Forward Movement in Central Italy.—In the annual report of the Forward Movement in Central Italy, Rev. J. Campbell Wall says: "We greatly appreciate the many opportunities which have been granted to us, and which we have utilized to the best of our abilities. In many small places we can now have a room for the asking; sometimes it is only a shop or even a private chamber, but occasionally we are enabled to use the schoolroom or even the club of the village. In one of the villages in the Abbruzzi a poor man offered to pay the rent of a hall if we would undertake regular and frequent services: I regret that as yet we have been unable to accept such an offer, but its significance is most encouraging, and it shows very clearly the value set by some of the people upon our religious teaching. Such experiences are of course quite exceptional up to the present; but if, as we hope, this work may be continued and extended, there is every reason to believe that within a few years we shall have a great increase and be in a position to preach in the majority of places we visit. The correspondent in this country is Mr. T. H. Engall, Newcourt, Acton, London, W.

A Disappointing Situation.

WRITING from Cracow, Galicia, M. L. Zeckhausen, a missionary of the London Jews Society, tells of a disappointment which has overtaken the work among Protestant settlers in Poland. Of late the Government (at the instigation of the Jesuits, it is thought) has discontinued its grants to private schools. Protestant communities are thus compelled to bear the expense of their schools, and some of the poorer ones have had to close them altogether.

One such colony is Deutsch Lednica. Its Protestant community consists of some 150 souls. For the greater part of a century they possessed a wooden structure that served as a school and chapel. Eventually it became useless. For more than seven years the colony has had to do without a school and place of worship. All this time the poor people have been saving and collecting with the object of erecting a brick building. The estimate cost was to be £335, and half this was raised by the colonists, the remainder to be loaned on a piece of property presented by a German society, as an endowment towards the salary of the schoolmaster.

It now appears that the plot of land is inalienable, and cannot be used for any but the original purpose. The disappointment which this unforeseen circumstance has brought about is keenly felt. In spite of the difficulty, hopes are entertained that the project will yet be accomplished. Were not these Protestant settlers providently scattered over this Romanist country to be light-bearers to millions without the true Gospel.

The Kischineff Massacres.

I FEEL it to be a matter for deep thankfulness that readers of THE CHRISTIAN have so generously responded to the needs of the victims of the outbreak against the Jews at Kischineff. Added to what has come in otherwise, there will, I anticipate, be something over £550 to send to the Relief Committee on the spot. There is a delay for the moment in communications, but I purpose to accompany the remittance with a message of sympathy in the name of believing Christian friends of Israel, this to be published in a Jewish paper, circulating in Russia.

Beloved Pastor Gurland, of Odessa, writes me somewhat downcast, that while so much is being done by many for the Kischineff sufferers, several poor Jewish believers in Kischineff and Odessa are in great want, and no one seems to care for them. They have suffered only indirectly by the persecution, and of course, the Kischineff collection is quite special. Still, it may well be, that as a considerable sum has been raised as an expression of loving Christian sympathy with the sufferers at Kischineff, and of protest against "Christian" Jew-baiting, those who purposed to contribute, but have not yet done so, might like their offering to benefit needy ones of the household of faith in the same country and district. If so, I can assure them of careful and wise use of the money through the workers of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews in Russia.—Yours very truly, SAML. H. WILKINSON.

Shalom, Brentwood.

[Since receiving the above, we have had a deeply-interesting interview with Mr. Wilkinson. It has been felt by several friends concerned for the well-being of Israel, that, as the money raised has assumed such encouraging proportions, it would be wise for Mr. Wilkinson to visit Kischineff again, so as to be able to witness the distribution of the fund and report on the same. He left England on Thursday last, kind friends having co-operated with him in making this possible without any charge on the generous gifts received in aid of the Kischineff sufferers. Mr. Wilkinson will value the prayers of our readers for special grace and guidance, so that the Christian gift and testimony which he bears may be used of God for the disarming of Jewish prejudice and the pointing of sinners to the Son of God.—ED.]

MILDMAY CONFERENCE ADDRESSES.

Hindrances to Service.

By Rev. E. A. STUART.

WELL do I remember that, some eighteen years ago, the Mildmay Conference considered this subject of Service under six heads:—The Preludes, Principles, Pattern, Pathway, Privileges, and Prospect, of Service. To these I ventured to add, in speaking upon the subject to my own people, a seventh—Power for Service.

Now, Power depends on position. It is only when we depend on our King that we are fitted for His service. I propose, therefore, to deal with some Hindrances to Service. "What doth hinder?" We long to serve; we love our Master. What are the hindrances that trouble us? I suggest the following:—

1. Want of interest in the service. Imagine a man with some great project before him, planning, aiming, working for it for years, and yet able to carry it through to completion only through the labour of other men. In order to succeed, must he not, first of all, infuse those men with enthusiasm for his object, and make it the centre of their thoughts and prayers? For, unless this be so, he cannot anticipate that his efforts will reach fruition.

Let us take our thoughts back to the beginning. We see the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. His one object, as He comes down from heaven to die, is the salvation of the world. Yet, in His inscrutable wisdom, it is ordained that this shall be carried out through instruments. What, then, must follow? That they, too, must make all things subservient to that great object. Is it so with us? How many really look upon it as the one great ambition of their lives, and say, "The zeal of Thine house hath eaten me up"?

THE PATH OF OBEDIENCE.

2. Want of consecration to the work. If the man we have imagined is to be successful, his followers must be absolutely obedient to him, otherwise there will be imperfection in carrying out the design. The great Designer well knows how to use each of us, and failure on our part means to mar His plan. And why are people not consecrated? First, because they do not realize truly that they are His. If we said the more, "Whose I am," we should say the more, "Whom I serve." Do we realize that the time, the money, at our disposal are not ours, since we are "bought with a price"? Again, men do not realize God as their Father. "Wist ye not that I must be about My Father's business?" As our Father, He loves to use us; as our Master, He claims us. I once heard a young lady say, giving an excuse for non-consecration, that she "feared God would send her to China." But God will set the task that is best.

3. Want of sincerity. "No man can serve two masters." I remember Dr. Pentecost telling a story of a ticket collector at a railroad depôt, at a time when an order had been issued for all tickets to be inspected at the barrier. The collector met with abuse. "Young man," said a passenger, "you do not seem popular with this crowd." "I don't care for that," was the reply, "so long as I'm right with the superintendent up there." If we endeavour to serve two masters we are necessarily insincere. Let us be right with our Superintendent and serve Him.

4. Want of Purity. Paul, in 2 Tim. ii. 20, describes a house in which are different kinds of utensils. There are articles in the kitchen, useful in their way, but you see broken pieces of such outside on a rubbish heap. On the other hand, the gold and silver vessels are kept for the Master's use. You have the "hall mark" in verse 19. "The Lord knoweth them that are His," and "Let everyone that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity." Those who do are "vessels unto honour," and, being cleansed, are "prepared unto every good work."

5. Want of humility. We need the spirit that says, "Whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose." We are not fit to speak to the thousands if we are not willing to speak to a few old people in a small meeting. He that is faithful in little is faithful in much.

6. Want of nearness of abode. You go into a conservatory and see a plant languishing for want of water. You have a water pot somewhere, but you cannot find it, so you use instead an old cracked saucer that happens to be there. Why? Because it is ready to hand. So God uses, not of necessity those who are greatly gifted, but those who are in close communion with Himself. In 1 Sam. ix. 15, we read that "the Lord told Samuel in his ear." The prophet must have been walking close to God to have heard the whisper. So, if we are close to Him we shall hear a voice saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it."

7. Want of food. It is a law of God—"If any will not work neither should he eat." There is a passage in the eighteenth of Numbers in which God says, speaking to Aaron—"All the best of the oil, and all the best of the wine, and of the wheat, the first fruits. . . . them have I given thee." O Christian soul, get your food! We are apt to read the Bible in order to get "points" or to have a sermon ready at hand, but let us seek a portion each for his own soul.

CHRIST AND HIS WORKERS.

There are two passages of John's Gospel which give a picture of what service ought to be: xvii. 18, and xx. 21. At first sight these passages may seem very similar, but there is a difference. In the first instance, Christ had just prayed, "Sanctify them." That was not a prayer for their holiness, but for their separation to service. He prays that as truth possesses them, they may be set apart, and He so prays because He sees the mission on which He is about to send them. "As Thou hast sent Me, even so send I them."

We notice that in the Gospels of Matthew and Mark Christ speaks only once of being sent. In Luke there are two other instances. Turn, however, to John iv., v., and vi., and observe the difference. For example: iv. 34; v. 30; vi. 38, 57. Then, in chap. vii. he uses His mission as an argument: "My doctrine is not Mine, but His that sent Me." And when rejected by others, He points to the "Father who sent Him" (viii. 16, 26, 42). Again, in ix. 4, he explains zeal in service: "I must work the works of Him that sent Me." I want us to see, in this Gospel of His Deity, that His encouragement, joy, and power, are found in this, that His Father sent Him. And then He turns to His disciples: "As I was sent, you now are sent."

The second passage, xx. 21, carries us a stage further. We have not only similarity, but identity; for, "when He had said this, He breathed on them, and said unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost." We notice in Acts i., "The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach." He is still doing and teaching; but it is through His servants.

When the eternal Son of God took up His abode in the body prepared for Him, He was able to manifest God in this world. Does the eternal Son of God want to manifest the condescension of heaven? He touches and heals the miserable leper with the hands of Jesus of Nazareth. Does the eternal Son of God desire to manifest the great love of the Father? The body of Jesus of Nazareth affords Him hands to touch, eyes to weep, a heart to be moved, ability to manifest God to the world. That sacred body died on the cross, was laid in the tomb, and raised from the dead. Now "we see Jesus"—dust of earth glorified—"crowned" with "the glory and honour" prepared for the eternal Son of God. He is no longer manifested on this earth. He can, then, touch the leper and weep over the sinner only with your hand, your tears. As at the resurrection He breathed into His disciples, imparting to them His own risen life, so you are to do His work, run His messages. Christ dwells in you as you live by faith, and uses your hands, your feet. On the earth Christ was the one branch; now He is the vine stem, and "ye are the branches."

True Discipleship.

By Mr. G. SOLTAU.

We have been given, in the various meetings of this Conference, visions of our Lord Jesus Christ. We saw Him back in the beginning, the great Creator; we saw Him descending from the right hand of God to this world of sorrow, and being the Master Workman. We saw Him coming from ruling the universe to touching diseased ones, raising the dead, washing the apostles' feet. We saw Him dying, dead, buried, then risen, and exalted. We see Him in the service of intercession sustaining His people by the word of His power and the Spirit of His grace. He is the Master Workman at the right hand of God and among sinners. We fall at His feet and cry, "Woe is me, for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King" To-day we have been thinking more especially of the disciples of the Lord and their qualifications for service. The terms disciples and servant have been used interchangeably. Let us keep them quite separate.

CONDITIONS OF DISCIPLESHIP.

There are three conditions of discipleship given in Luke xiv. from verse 25 to the end of the chapter. Great crowds went after our Lord, and there seemed to be a revival, but He said to them, in effect, "Come no further." Why? Because He knew they were not useable material. How far are we ready to be, not merely a multitude, but His disciples? The first condition is (v. 26): "If any man come to Me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be My disciple." In v. 27 we have the second condition: "Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after Me, cannot be My disciple." The third condition is in v. 33: "Whosoever he be that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be My disciple." Here we have the Teacher teaching, laying down the rules to which the pupils must subscribe.

HOW TO OBEY.

(1) The first condition touches the heart, the closest ties of nature. Christ lays down this command, but has He not shown us how to obey? Yes, He had come from the wondrous ties of the eternal home to do the will of His Father. He puts God first, and therefore has both the ear and eye of the disciples as He says, "Do as I have done." (2) The second condition shows the forsaking of self. What is "myself"? It may mean my strength of will, my ambitions, energies, tastes, and habits. The Teacher says that to be disciples I must put these aside, and have, instead, His tastes and ambitions. He wants us, then, to be handed over absolutely, that He may reproduce, in us, what He is and what He has done. Did He do this, also? Yes. He bore the shame and ignominy of the Cross.

(3) The third condition involves the forsaking of "all that we have." Did Christ do this? Yes, "though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through His poverty might be rich." We conclude our services with a benediction; if we began them so, and had "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ" at the beginning, revival might come. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son"—can you receive this benediction and give your son? A benediction makes a beautiful end to a service; it brings a solemn hush, but, if you really receive it, then go out to bear that benediction of God where hitherto it has not gone. All Christ had, He gave, Himself included. He took the lowest place: "Friend, come up higher." We have an example of our Lord's teaching in Simon's house, where, carrying out His own word, He brought one up to a higher place, and won a soul.

Notice the servant as described in Rom. i.

GREEK AND BARBARIAN.

1. In verse 14 Paul describes himself as "debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians." He has to pay debts every day, for he owes something to everybody, bond and free. What does he owe them? The knowledge of Christ. He has to meet his liabilities and give to those who need. An old college principal was once visiting a university to speak to the students. He was met by a professor who owed him, humanly speaking, everything. The professor said subsequently, "We had a blessed evening together, and I cared for him with all the devotion of which I was capable. Suddenly there came a knock at my door, when a young barbarian of a student burst in to ask a question. My first thought was to send him out; but I reflected, 'I am debtor both to the Greek and the Barbarian,' so I said to the rough young student, 'What can I do for you?'" There are none but we owe something to. That child or that cultured adult, can I pay them? I am debtor to no particular class or sect, but to all, the wise and unwise.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY SERVANT.

2. "I am ready" (15). A rare word! What does it mean? How does the twentieth century servant stand as compared with the one of the first century? Here is Paul tugging at the chain of hindrances, to get to Rome, to take the risks of persecution. "But the pagan Emperor is there!" The answer is, "I am debtor, I am ready." Some twentieth century servants say, "When you send a first-class railway fare, and take plenty of my books to sell in the lobby, then I am ready for a mission." May God deliver us from this. Christ was ready—ready for Galilee and Samaria; and when the time came to turn to Jerusalem He was ready for Calvary, for the sin-bearing, and the sacrifice.

3. Lastly (v. 16), Paul was "not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ." For what was the Gospel? "The power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." There is a remarkable man who conducts the M'Auley Mission, New York, where a blessed work is being done. One day, addressing a meeting of ministers, he spoke on the words, "Whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them." He said he had been in doubt as to the meaning of the words, but thought he had learned it through the following story: There was a degraded woman taken by the police, raving, to a cell. A lady who saw her being carried along, bloated and screaming, asked the officers whither they were taking the woman. "To the police cell," was the reply. The lady went with them, and said, "I will come again in the morning, when she is sensible." In the morning the lady was there again, she threw her arms around the prisoner and kissed her. The poor creature was amazed. "Do you know the wreck I am?" "Yes," was the reply. That kiss was as "the remission of sin." That is, it said, "I love you in spite of your sins, and appeal to you to let me help you all I can." That was the first gleam of awakening in that poor woman's soul.

PUPILS FOR THE HEAVENLY TEACHER.

Lastly. A leading surgeon in America, when he travels, manages to get a private talk with some other man on the car, and says: "I am making a research and want a few facts. Can you help me by telling me what is your ideal of a Christian?" The man then gives the best description he can of his ideal. Then the surgeon asks, "Are you one of this kind yourself? I am collecting information, you know." So he leads the man to conviction. We might often do similarly, but we fear to speak, perhaps, because we are "not introduced." Let us remember it is our business to introduce the Teacher to new pupils. Let us be the Lord's bond-servants as we never have been before. Let us throw aside concealment of the truth, and seek equipment for service, for the reproducing of the lessons as He teaches them.

Equipment for Service.

By Rev. R. C. JOYNT.

It has become one of the commonplaces of our age that there never was a time when organization and apparatus for Christian work were so immense and manifold as they are to-day. Yet I have thought that side by side with this tremendous development of rails along which the work of God is to travel, there is something seriously lacking in our Christian life and service. That need is expressed in the cry of individuals and assemblies of God's people, and in the formation of little circles throughout our land for the purpose of praying for an outpouring of God's Spirit upon His Church. When we look out on our parishes and districts we feel there is something missing. The mountains are travailing, but there is very little coming forth.

I want to speak with extreme simplicity on several thoughts suggesting themselves in considering equipment for Christian service. The first part of this equipment is that the soul should be possessed of life not only in name, but in a definite and true sense. It is possible for external appearances to be right while the soul is almost dead. The very first essential is that we ourselves be really alive unto God. There is a danger of being sickly and feeble, while it is possible to be full of life. A man in the prime of his days, with a clear, steady eye, firm step, muscular limbs, health on every feature of his countenance—we know that such a man lives in the open air, taking plenty of exercise. And there are analogies to this in the spiritual life.

The one indestructible medium by which life is imparted to the soul is the same as in the days of James: "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. Of His own will begat He us with the Word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of His creatures." We remember, too, that this spiritual life is not merely imparted through the medium of the Word, but sustained and nourished by the same. Before Ezekiel is to be the messenger to his fellow-countrymen he is to eat the inspired scroll. So let us see to it that we are alive to God. Christ's words are: "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it abundantly;" "I am the Way, and the Truth, and the Life;" "He that hath the Son hath life." We are alive spiritually only in so far as Christ dwells in us. How Christ illustrates this for us: "I am the Vine, ye are the branches." Wonderful, precious truth, that these branches possess the life of the Vine. You may be a very little branch, but if you are in living union with Christ His life is in you.

Another obvious equipment is the enduement of power which our Lord has promised to His people. You remember that Jesus told His disciples to tarry in the city of Jerusalem till they were endued with the gift of this power. These men had been associated with the Lord Jesus Christ for some time, and had a unique knowledge of Him, yet were not ready to go out and speak what they had seen and heard till they were endued with power from on high. They were to wait a time that was not fixed. It might have been ten years, but it turned out to be only ten days. Souls were passing out into eternity, yet these men were to wait till they were endued with this power. The reason why so much of your speaking and praying has not borne the fruit you longed for is that you have not learned Luke xxiv. 49. One of the things I often hear, and with which I never agree, is that Christ can do without us. He wants ambassadors, messengers, vessels, to carry the Water of Life to others.

The third feature in this Divine equipment is knowledge. We need knowledge of men, of God, and of His Word. From my own experience I am convinced that a great deal of our service fails because we do not know the people to whom we speak. You will never be a blessing to others till you feel you know them; till you can enter into their feelings and difficulties. It is this equipment that has led men to stoop to the level of the lowest ranks to uplift and save others. St. Paul, who was endued with all the learning possible in his day, tried to get into the hearts of the people. I see that great man, Elisha, the prophet of God, desiring to give life to the dead child. He goes down to that little one's condition and position, contracting himself to the child's dimensions, and the dead comes to life. Those young men we desire to bring to Christ; do we put our hands to their hands, our eyes to their eyes, as we ought to do?

Again, can we say, "I know God"? How can we get to know Him? We must spend much time with Him. Here also is where Christian labour often largely fails. We are not intimate with God. It is only when we are living a life of secret communion with God that we are in any sense equipped, and able to bring blessing to others. Resolve that henceforth there shall be in your life more silent waiting upon God than there has been in the past.

Everyone coming to Mildmay may be assumed to be a student of the Bible, yet when one hears some of the ideas abroad, one may be forgiven for putting in a plea for a more earnest study of the Word of God. Determine to know your Bible well. These may seem simple truths, but they are of great significance to me.

Further, Christian workers should really aim at being attractive to others. What an attractive life our Lord's was. "Then drew near unto Him publicans and sinners:" men and women of all ranks and degrees gathered to hear Him. Fellow-Christians, get rid of unreality. Feed yourselves upon His Word, drink in His Spirit, and you shall be made beautiful through being in conscious, constant touch with God. Once more, it cannot be repeated too often that our need of needs is to be filled with God's Spirit. I do not understand a great deal that is said on this mysterious subject, but I do know that if a ship is to travel from haven to haven its sails must be spread; and so I would pray that my sails might be spread open day by day, that the breath of God might blow upon me and fill my life, making me a blessing to others. Let us remember the great fact that God's power through His Spirit is promised to us, and if we claim that Spirit and ally with it the desire that God should glorify Jesus Christ in us, our service will not be in vain. Last summer I stood at the gate of a field of corn ripe for harvesting. A terrible storm had raged during the day, and the corn was now lying waste on the ground. The owner of the field joined me at the gate, and I remarked to him, "What a pity the corn was not cut before." Never shall I forget the look of disappointment and pain on the man's face as he replied: "I cannot get labour." As our Lord looks upon the field of the world to-day, and into the faces of the members of His Church, alas that He should have to say, "I cannot get labour."

Will you not kneel before Him this morning and say, "Take me and use me till the time shall come for Thee to call me to Thyself"?

The Servant's Fitness.

By Dr. HODGKIN.

Any message that I speak this morning is more particularly to the young among us. How often do we who are called to service stand before it, and hesitate to go forward because we are confounded by our own weakness? We call this humility Self-consciousness is not humility, and God calls us to positions from which we would gladly escape. The truest test of humility is to go forward, remembering that God is before us. True humility forgets self, and only remembers the Lord.

We have read how Gideon was called forth by God to a great work. God called him, not because he was strong, but in his weakness God said, "Go in this thy might." When the Lord wanted to save Israel, there were many whom He might have chosen. But He chose an unknown man, and by His Spirit brought him forward. The first equipment we need is a sense of our own weakness. God calls us to work which we cannot do ourselves, but through the grace which He bestows we can accomplish His purposes. If we feel our weakness, how much keener is the sense of our failure and sin?

It is not only the lack of mental equipment that we feel, but also a consciousness of spiritual defeat. Look at our Lord's way with Peter. Look at his life, lived close to the Master. He was being led on from truth to truth when confronted by the very temptation beneath which he fell. Think how he came out of that temptation, how he felt under the look which the Master gave him, how he went and wept bitterly. Deep in his conscience there burned the sense of his own failure. He who had been so privileged, so prayed for, had fallen. The Master came to him just at this moment when he lay under a sense of his awful sin. The next time he saw the Master the words he heard were, "Tend my lambs; feed my sheep."

Think of Saul on the way to Damascus, regarding himself as a Pharisee of the Pharisees, learning that he was the chief of sinners. The command of Christ was, "Go forth unto the Gentiles": and he rose up to go forth.

Another equipment needed is that of the broken heart. How we do need this! We need to be burdened with a sense of our own sin, and a consciousness of how far we have fallen away. If God calls us it is because He has found in us the broken and contrite spirit. But this is not enough. What was it that Jesus Christ first desired of the repenting Peter? "Lovest thou Me more than these?" There must be love—a love which springs from an overpowering sense of His love in forgiving us. When we see Him crucified for us, the Just for the unjust, when we say with the Apostle Paul, "He loved me and gave Himself for me," there must needs be love. It may be that our poor lips can but utter the words, "I love Thee." Yes, the equipment which Christ seeks to assure us of is the equipment of a constraining love. He longs to find in us the word and act of love, the upward look, and the broken heart. Without these we have no fitness for the work to which He calls us, for we have no goodness of ourselves.

How sad it is to see men and women doing some of the highest work, and yet not in the spirit of love. Oh the pity of it, to think that so much is undertaken without love, this love. No service is true unless it springs from the place of repentance, at the foot of the cross of Christ. We cannot get the equipment of the Holy Spirit unless we are conscious of our own weakness, the broken heart and a constraining love.

O Master, when Thou callest,
No voice may say Thee nay.

If the Master calls us, it should be sufficient. If He bids us go forward, He has made it certain that the power and fitness which we need shall be sure.

Intra Muros.

Another spirit entered in,
And sweetly loosed from pain and sin;
Another loved one called to die,
And join the brotherhood on high.

Another link of heavenly gold,
To make faith's chain more firmly hold;
Another treasure from our store,
Transferred across to Salem's shore.

Another vision from the skies,
To raise aloft our earth-bound eyes;
Another check to bid the mind
To carnal things be deaf and blind.

A door in heaven is opened now,
And in His love will God endow
Our hearts with senses new and keen
To fellowship with saints unseen.

Mrs. George C. Needham.
Philadelphia, U.S.

Walworth Crèche.—In her annual report of the work at Walworth Crèche, Mrs. F. Kinghorne states that the past year has been a very trying one. "The suitable premises—which we spoke of last April—have not yet been secured, but as it will mean a far heavier rental than at present, and as our removal is not compulsory until after September next, we thought the wiser plan would be to go through the summer here, be looking about for 'exactly what we want,' and start freshly in the autumn."

Miss de Broen's Work.

In the last number of The Christian, you struck a note of "gladness," caused by the good feeling now existing between France and England. I would like to re-echo your words! Only those who have felt the pressure of the political and social friction of recent years can realise the relief of the present change, and can praise God, who has answered prayer.

Miss de Broen's Mission at Belleville, Paris, consists of sewing classes for aged women, night schools for young men and women, Gospel and temperance meetings, Sunday-schools, house-to-house visitation, distribution of tracts and Gospels, library, &c., sanitorium (near the sea) for delicate children and mothers during the summer months.

An infidel one day, going along the Paris streets, saw a printed leaf lying on some rubbish; he picked it up, and read part of one of the Gospels. He was so much interested by the words, that he spoke about the leaf to some of his friends. "Ah! they said, go to the Rue Bolivar (they meant the mission hall built by Miss de Broen); they speak of it there." So he came to the Gospel meetings, though often the worse for drink. However, by God's goodness, through constant visiting and prayer, he gave himself to the Lord, and became an heir of His Kingdom. It requires much sympathy to deal with men and women who are struggling with unbelief, but if there is bitterness and rebellion, there is also loneliness and need.

To such the lovingkindness of the Lord is declared. "That is what I have been in search of all my life," said a man, brought by a friend; and it was well he did find it, for his life was soon afterwards cut off by an accident. "I have heard in the mission hall what I could understand," said another, accustomed to connect religion only with mysterious rites. "I am hungering and thirsting for the treasure possessed by the children of God; the key of it is at my disposal, and you have taught me how to use that key—prayer; and how to ask the Giver of all grace for His Holy Spirit." Thus wrote one of the men of the night school to Miss de Broen. "God has opened my eyes," confessed a woman, "to see the difference between error and His truth, and He has given me His Holy Word, which is my treasure."

The fruits of our Sunday-schools are often most encouraging, and many instances could be given. Sometimes it is very difficult to retain the children as regular scholars on account of their parents' constant change of residence, and so we lose sight of many. One of the boys attending our Sunday-school became a priest, and was ordained to the Belleville Church; but the seed sown in his young heart grew, and brought forth fruit. He is now an earnest Christian, and is going as a missionary to Madagascar. One evening he invited some of his relatives, pious Roman Catholics, and old friends, to meet him in Miss de Broen's Hall, where he had been taught the truth as it is in Jesus. Calmly, but very firmly, he denounced his past errors, and praised Him who had become His Life and Light.

Will readers of The Christian pray that Miss de Broen may be sustained in her work of love to bring souls to the Saviour? She has passed, in more than one way, through the fire of affliction; and needs, more than I can tell, all our help and Christian sympathy. Through political and social friction there has been a great falling-off of financial aid. For two years Miss de Broen has been in a delicate state of health, caused by two accidents, from which she has, thank God, now recovered. During her great trials of faith, I feel it is my duty to say, she has never relaxed for one day her responsibilities and supervision of the work for the Lord which He called her to establish thirty-three years ago! Having lost many friends and subscribers through death, the work is in great need of Christian support. Friends visiting Paris should look in at 3, Rue Clavel, Belleville. Mary L. Douglas,

OUTLINE BIBLE-READINGS.

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, B.D.

8.—A LESSON ON HUMILITY.

From the mount of Transfiguration to the valley of duty. After high communion and new teaching comes daily living. Our Lord's "Training of the Twelve" is now concerned either with the Cross or with the true spirit and character of His followers. Lessons on humility are specially prominent. Study carefully Matt. xvii. 24-27, R.V.

I.—THE TAX.

1. What it was. See R.V. and study Exodus xxx, 11-16; Exodus xxxviii. 25-28; Neh. x. 32. The tax was religious, not civil; Jewish, not Roman; and was the regular tribute to the Temple worship.

2. What it implied. The acknowledgment of God's claim, the duty of God's people to uphold their sanctuary. In our Lord's case the contrast between the Transfiguration and taxation is striking and suggestive. It was, indeed, a call to humility in a definite shape and concrete form.

II.—THE TAXGATHERER AND PETER.

1. The taxgatherer's question. (a) Was it sincere? It may have been asked in strict official duty and with proper courtesy. Rabbis were known to claim exemption as teachers. Did Jesus make the same claim? (b) Or was it to entangle? If the payment were admitted how could He claim to be "greater than the Temple" (Matt. xii. 6)? If declined, how could He be a true Jew and not support the Temple?

2. Peter's answer. (a) Its motive was good. Zeal for his Master's honour, as though to say, "Of course He pays the Temple tax. He will not be behind others in legal and loyal action." (b) Yet its unwisdom is evident. It failed to remember and recognise his Master's true position as "Son of God" after the transfiguration (Luke ix. 35), and what was involved in it (see below on v 25).

III.—THE MASTER AND THE DISCIPLE.

1. The Conversation. (a) Our Lord took the initiative (v. 25) in order to teach Peter a special and needed lesson. It was not an argument against paying the tax so much as a reminder about the right meaning and motive. (b) Our Lord's question needs careful consideration. The point of it is that kings do not demand taxes from their own children, but from their subjects. (A prince, as a boy, would not be expected to pay taxes to his father, the king.) N.B.—No reference here at all to Jews (sons) and Gentiles (strangers). Peter's reply shows that he understood what his Master meant. "From strangers," i.e., those outside the family circle. "Then are the sons exempt." Mark the significant claim made by Jesus here, to be occupying an unique relation to God as compared with other Jews. He the Son; they the subjects!

2. The Command. (a) "Go . . . and take . . . . and give." Note the "Me and thee." How beautifully the Master associates Himself with His disciple and yet distinguishes ("Me and thee," not "us." Cf. John xx. 17). (b) "Lest we cause them to stumble." "Peter had committed his Master, but his Master would not commit Peter." Liberty asserted and yet set aside.

THE MEANING.

1. Our Lord's genuine humiliation. He fulfils every requirement of earthly law to its last detail. (See Matt. iii. 15.) Thought not equality with God a prize "to be retained" if He could by humiliation win men (Phil. ii. 6, R.V.) What was a tax of half a shekel (15d.) in this connection!

2. Our Lord's supreme claim. Yet in His humility there is majesty. He deliberately distinguishes Himself from the Jews. Though He is a Jew by birth, He is uniquely "Son" of God. Study His claims in St. John's Gospel.

3. Our Lord's unerring wisdom. He will not be, or put a stumbling-block (Luke vii. 23). His humility prevents Him from taking offence by Peter's too-ready answer to the collector. His love prevents Him from giving offence by withholding the tax. "Let not your good be evil spoken of" (Romans xiv. 16). "Woe . . . because of stumbling-blocks" (Matt. xviii. 7).

4. Our Lord's perfect knowledge. He knew where the fish was, what was in the mouth, and that it would meet the need exactly; half a shekel for each.

5. Our Lord's wonderful power. All nature at his command. Time, place, circumstances, all arranged. Bengel calls attention to six points in this miracle (1) Something was caught, (2) Caught quickly. (3) Money in a fish. (4) In a fish's mouth, and so easily available. (5) Just what was needed. (6) A Roman silver coin and so current.

N.B.—The only miracle worked for our Lord's own benefit. Can we not imagine the profound impression made on Peter? "What a Master we have!" "What a marvel He is!"

Hymn: Sacred Songs and Solos. No. 323.

RECENTLY I was staying in a very beautiful part of England, in a cottage at the entrance to a wood, and the days I spent there were full of delight. When I awoke in the morning I could see from my windows great stretches of alternating hill and meadow, ablaze with a profusion of golden buttercups and pink clover; in the heat of the day I could wander for miles through the woods, with their leafy shadows and the soft music of the rustling leaves; in the cool of the evening there were long walks by the river, which the rays of the setting sun touched with a crimson glory, and as night came on the moonlight fell on the rippling water, transfiguring it with a silver light.

One day I was sitting in the wood reading, when, chancing to look up, I saw three little fairies coming swiftly along. Somehow I did not feel in the least surprised to see them, for they were quite in keeping with my beautiful surroundings.

When they reached me, the tallest of the three said, "Come, we have something to show you." She waved her wand over me, and in a few minutes I was standing in a crowded city. The calm and beauty of my former resting place gave way to din and turmoil. Men and women were hurrying to and fro, all was rush and bustle. Soon the crowd became denser, and my fairy guide led me up a narrow court into a dingy house. How stifling it was! I felt I should choke. We entered a room, which evidently served as bedroom and sitting room, and though the window was open as far as it would go, the heat was intense. Seated by the window sat a little girl of about eleven, and at her feet crouched a boy of some nine summers. "Listen," said my fairy guide, "I want you to hear what they are saying." The boy was speaking:—

"Oh, Cissie, tell it me all over again, how you went to the country, and what you did."

Nothing loth his sister related her experiences. It was a novelty to her to pose in the light of a traveller, and her little hearer had implicit faith in her descriptions.

"First of all," she said, "we 'ad four meals every day, Tommy, fancy that!" She ticked them off on her fingers—"breakfast, and there was jam as well as bread and butter! dinner, and we always 'ad meat and puddin'; tea," her eyes grew bright with excitement—"and supper; and we could eat and eat until we could not eat any more!" Here the speaker became so eager that she tumbled over the words, and it was difficult to catch their meaning.

"Then we was out in the fields all day, and we picked great bunches of flowers, and we larfed and shouted, and nobody said 'Hold yer noise!' and two of us 'ad a bedroom all to ourselves, and we thought we was duchesses. We didn't want to play at mother and father quarrelling when we was in the country, but we played at mother and father being good, because it was all so nice."

Here I lost what the child was saying, for a sudden violent knocking and shrieking were going on in the court below. Father and mother were evidently quarrelling. When next I could hear distinctly, the boy was saying, "Cissie, my 'ead aches, and this hot weather makes me feel so tired, and it is so noisy in the streets and such a long, long walk to the Park. Cissie," the little voice grew very shaky, and a tear trickled down the child's face, "can't I go to the country?" "No, Tommy, you can't; wish you could," was his sister's reply, "but mother ain't got no money to spare for holidays." The tears came faster at this.

Turning to the fairy who brought me, I said, "I did not think a holiday meant so much to these children." "Ah!" she replied, "That is the pity of it, for

> Evil is wrought by want of thought
> As well as want of heart.

My name is Fairy Thought, and I try so hard to get into the hearts of the people who think only of themselves and those whom they love, and never of the sad and sorrowful world outside."

Fairy Thought then whispered something to her two companions, at which one stepped forward towards the children, and the other vanished out of the room.

The tears were still running down the little face, as the fairy reached him. "There! there!" she said, tenderly, laying her cool hand on the hot forehead. "Don't cry; I'm so sorry, so sorry!" But though the sobs grew less violent as the soft hand stroked his cheek, the tears would come.

"Who is she?" I asked my guide. "Fairy Sympathy; and dearly is she loved," was the reply.

"But where has the other fairy gone?" "Go and see," said my guide. I hastened out to seek her, and after crossing a few streets I found her, her little arms full of pieces of white cardboard, and round her slender body boxes were slung. "Whatever have you here?" I queried. With a merry laugh she said, "Collecting cards and money boxes, and they come from the Ragged School Union, and the Children's Fresh Air Mission, and I am also collecting money which is to be distributed by Messrs. Morgan and Scott." "Dear me, how interesting." "He who gives quickly gives twice," was the fairy's response, "you take this card and get as much as you can, and don't despise small contributions, for they tell up in a surprising way!" "May grown-up people share in the funds?" I asked. "Certainly! Many a tired mother, and over-worked father have benefited by these country holiday collections, even if only able to leave their work for one day's outing."

Up and down the streets went Fairy Help (for I discovered that was her name), and soon men and women and boys and girls were taking the cards and boxes almost more quickly than she could supply them.

At last we returned to the alley. As we entered the room, the little voice was saying, "Cissie put me to bed, take me up in your arms." For the first time I saw that the boy was a cripple. "I'm too hot to go to sleep, and I can't eat that bread, but tell me about the country all over again, and perhaps by-and-bye I shall dream about it." Fairy Help rushed across the room. "No!" she cried, "you shan't dream about it, you shall go there for yourself, for, see, I have collected 12s. which will take you away for a whole fortnight." Tommy sat up hastily, and rubbed his eyes. It was too good to be true. Then, as the full delight of it burst upon him, he gasped, "And mother, what about mother?" "Mother shall take you down," was the glad reply, "and have a lovely long day in the country, and father shall fetch you home; and Cissie, well, though she is not ill like you are now, if we can get enough money she shall go too, and have at least one fortnight of real happiness."

I saw the little faces aglow with joy. Then it all grew dim through the glad tears that came to my eyes. When I had brushed them away I was sitting once more in the wood, and the fairies were fast disappearing. "Dear fairies of Thought, Sympathy, and Help, don't all go away," I called out. "Nay," they answered, "we must not stay, and we always work together. Singly we should fail. We have so much to do and so many people to visit; but tell Uncle Tom's Searchers where we took you and what you saw."

Hand in hand they departed, and as they went I could hear them singing:

> "There are lonely hearts to cherish
> While the days are going by.
> . . . . .
> Oh, the good we all may do
> While the days are going by!"

A Unique Garden Party.

THE lovely home of the Earl and Countess of Warwick was very bright and gay on Saturday last week, for not only was Nature at her best, but several hours of gladness came into the lives of a company of guests whose opportunities of seeing her beauties are very limited indeed.

Nearly a hundred crippled members of the Guild of Brave Poor Things (London branches), and some 200 very active little girls belonging to the Guild of Play, partook of the generous hospitality provided by the Earl and Countess. A special train conveyed them from Paddington to Warwick, where the Castle grounds were at their disposal; boats on the lake delighted those who cared to patronize them; large marquees provided ample meals, and when I tell you that all the guests belong to the very poor, you will understand how much it meant to them.

The Guild of Brave Poor Things has branches in various towns, and is designed to brighten the lives of crippled children and adults whose deformities prevent their following the ordinary occupations of livelihood. They are taught to make baskets, mats, and other articles, and also instructed and encouraged in Christian living—all of which helps them to enter into the spirit of the society's motto, "Lætus sorte mea" (Happy in my lot).

The Guild of Play is an organization in connection with the Bermondsey Settlement. This Guild, like the other, was founded by Mrs. Kimmins (better known as "Sister Grace," formerly of the West London Mission). Its object is to teach the poor children of city slums how to play healthy and wholesome games, which is a very valuable and practical form of Christian philanthropy.

They were invited to Warwick that they might give a display of their ability to the guests of a large and fashionable garden-party held at the Castle on the same afternoon. The games selected were of the old-fashioned English type, which are perhaps unknown to many of you, but which delighted thousands of children on country village-greens in days gone by. The children were dressed in "Puritan" cotton frocks—red, blue or mauve—surmounted with large white collars and caps, producing a very quaint and pretty effect as they went through their evolutions.

It is not often that titled people combine pleasure and philanthropy in such a happy and generous manner, and I am sure you will join me in the hope that well-to-do ladies and gentlemen who witnessed the display, will themselves take some practical interest henceforth in the thousands of little ones thronging the dark places of our great cities.

The Indwelling Spirit (John xiv. 16-26).

THIS sublime paragraph begins with And. There are some conditions for us to obey if we are to unlock and enjoy the heavenly treasure. First we must believe (1), next love (15), and last obey (21). All these are the work of the Holy Spirit in our hearts, and they prepare us for receiving Him in a more full and glorious manner.

"I will pray the Father." The gift of the Holy Spirit in His Pentecostal fulness was due to the intercession of our Lord, and the Apostle Peter refers to it when he says, "Having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost" (Acts ii. 33). It was as though, when our Lord reached His Father's side, the first thing that He asked was that the Father would grant to Him the right and power in His Divine human nature to receive and transmit the Holy Spirit's indwelling to His waiting Church. Our High Priest passed within the veil, bearing in His hand the offering which He had made on the cross, and by reason of that offering and the energy of His intercession all the gracious influences of the Holy Spirit are available for each of us. Have you, dear fellow Endeavourer, entered into the enjoyment of all that the Lord Jesus has obtained for you?

"Another Comforter." In 1 John ii. 1 that word is translated Advocate. It is a great word. It means, "One who makes us strong by His presence, as helper, guide, and instructor." Think what this means to have always beside us, not a vague influence, but a Divine Person, who waits to be our strength in weakness, our peace in trouble, our wisdom in perplexity, the conqueror in our temptations, the consoler in our sorrows. The Lord meant that He should be to us all that He Himself had been, this is the meaning of another. There are two Advocates, or two Paracletes. When the one went back to the glory, the other descended into the hearts of believers. "He abideth with you, and shall be in you."

"The world cannot receive Him." The "world" is the whole mass of men who are living apart from the Father (1 John ii. 16). To these the Holy Spirit is a convicting power (John xvi. 8); but they cannot receive Him as an indwelling presence. Just as the brutes, being destitute of the artistic faculty, are unable to perceive natural beauty, so worldly men are destitute of the organ which enables them to perceive the Divine Spirit, or receive His gracious influences.

"I will come to you;" "I in you;" "We will make Our abode." He had been speaking of sending another, now He says "I am coming Myself," so that we learn, what other parts of the Bible teach us, that He is so indissolubly One with the Spirit, whom He sends, that the coming of the Spirit is His own coming. Do not look for something extraordinary and startling—that coming is gentle as the dawn. Do not look for the Spirit apart from Jesus. As the sun comes in the light, so does Jesus come in the Spirit. When we are more filled of the Spirit, we shall not think of Him, but of Jesus to whom He bears witness; and when our hearts are fullest of the Lord, we may know that we have received Him, who is the Gift of Gifts. Open your whole nature to the entrance of the Holy Spirit. Unblind every window, unlock every door, that entering He may fill you with the Divine and glorious indwelling of the Father and the Son. "I will prepare a mansion," Jesus said, "and we will make the holy soul Our mansion."

"He will teach." He teaches us because He is the Spirit of Truth, i.e., He is in us as the Truth. He does not teach us from books, or demonstration, what the laws of light are, but He is Light; and we know, not by the hearing of the ear, but by the direct perception and enjoyment of the heart. He gives us that which others endeavour to teach us about.

"He shall bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." His lesson-book is the life and words of our blessed Lord. We may think that we are fully informed of all that He has said, but the Holy Spirit brings us back to them again and again, always showing new beauties, and undreamt-of depths. Never let a day pass without reading some of the words of Jesus under the teaching of the Holy Spirit.

C.E. NOTES.

New Zealand Endeavourers, who number 10,000, now have an official organ. It is a handsome quarterly, whose editor-in-chief is Rev. Hugh Kelly. The capital name, the Burning Bush, has been chosen for it.

There is much activity among the Swiss Societies, under the leadership of that earnest Christian merchant, Charles Briquet, of Geneva, who was largely inspired to take up the work by the visit of Rev. Horace Dutton, of Boston. An important evidence of vigour is the publication of the first number of the Swiss National Christian Endeavour organ, L'Activité Chrétienne. The contents of the initial number are full of interest and of practical value.

Samuel's Farewell Address (1 Sam. xii. 13-25).

Golden Text.—1 Sam. xii. 24.

THE period of the Judges closed when Samuel resigned the office (Acts xiii. 20), and Saul was proclaimed king in Gilgal (1 Sam. xi. 15; xii. 1). Between this public proclamation and the election of Saul as king at Mizpeh (x. 24) he had showed military skill in relieving the hardly-pressed citizens of Jabesh-Gilead, and defeating their enemies the Ammonites; also forbearance to his personal opponents (xi. 11-13). At Gilgal (Jos. iv. 19; v. 9-13) the people gathered to offer thanksgiving for victory, and Samuel used the occasion to "renew the kingdom" and announce his own abdication as judge in Israel.

Samuel's Address.

1. He called on the people to witness to his own integrity as citizen and judge.

2. The people's ingratitude and perverseness.

3. The faithful providence of Jehovah in teaching, guidance, and deliverance.

I. Warning. II. Comfort. III. Help.

I. Warning. King and people must fear, serve, and obey Jehovah, their Supreme Ruler. "Him who is invisible." Blessing to follow obedience; punishment, disobedience. National prosperity or Divine chastisement.

The Miracle (vv. 17, 18). (1) A sign that God heard and approved Samuel's words of condemnation. (2) That the people, though valiant and strong in battle, were powerless before the forces of nature under the command of the Creator. (3) That the Lord hears and answers the prayer of His servants (John xv. 7, 16).

II. Comfort. Confession must come before pardon (1 John i. 9). "Blessed is he whose sin is covered" (Ps. xxxii. 1). "I press toward the mark" (Phil. iii. 13, 14). "Vain things" v. 21, are the enemy's bright bubbles to attract the foolish. Love, not fear, is the spring that never fails, v. 20 "from the heart" (Deut. vi. 5, 6; xi. 16-18), fed by God's Word (John xv. 7). "A peculiar treasure" (Ex. xix. 5). But they had wanted to be "like other nations" (still Deut. vii. 6-10).

III. Help. When Samuel ceased to govern he did not cease to pray. No longer judge, still prophet and priest. "God is love." "Our God is a consuming fire" (Deut. iv. 24).

Lessons.

(1) "Behold the King" (wilfully chosen, vv. 12, 13). "Behold your King" (wilfully rejected, John xix. 14). "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

(2) Though Samuel had been treated harshly and ungratefully by the nation, yet it was his own hand that poured the anointing oil on the head of his successor, and his lips that gave the first kiss of allegiance, and pronounced the Lord's benediction on Saul (1 Sam. x. 1). How? 1 Sam. viii. 6, 7, with Heb. iv. 16, "Grace to help in time of need." Can I have equal help? 2 Cor. xii. 9, "My grace is sufficient for thee." Rom. xii. 10, "in honour preferring one another."

(3) "Stand still" (ix. 27, xii. 7, 16). To hear what the Lord has to teach us by His Word, and to think over His signs of guidance and grace, and to seek help from Him is never time lost.

THE UNDOUBTED KING.

At the Coronation of King Edward, the Archbishop of Canterbury, accompanied by the Lord Chancellor and other dignitaries, turned to the congregation and presented to them "the undoubted King of this realm." While the princes, peers, and others present shouted with one accord, "God save the King!" the new sovereign rose from his chair, and turned to the congregation, that he might be seen of all. Samuel impressed upon the people of Israel that though they had chosen an earthly monarch, God was still the undoubted King (v. 14).

GOD'S POWER DEMONSTRATED.

A short time ago the power of God and the powerlessness of man were displayed, when continuous rain fell for some days together. With man's many inventions and his knowledge of science, nothing could be done to stay the downpour. Whole districts were flooded, and boats were, in many cases, used to get from house to house. To-day, as in the days of Samuel, we may stand and see the great things which the Lord can do, and in every storm and lightning flash the power of the Almighty is unmistakably witnessed (v. 18).

THE POWER OF PRAYER.

Cromwell's habit of prayer was a notable feature of his character. All his great enterprises were commenced with prayer. In dark times his officers and he used to assemble and pray alternately for hours and even days, until some definite resolution was come to, and some "door of hope," as they termed it, disclosed itself. It has been said that Cromwell's prayers were eloquent and much more than eloquent. His was the heart of a man who could pray. As the prophet was the advocate with God (v. 23), so we have an advocate in Christ Jesus, who will plead before the Father on our behalf. May we have the grace to fear the Lord and serve Him in truth, knowing as, did Cromwell, that in all times of trouble we may approach the mercy seat, and there discover a "door of hope" in our anxiety.

"A Prize."—Rev. H. E. Stone, St. John's Wood, writes:—"Some books for the young are a weariness to read, In School and Playground, by Mr. G. E. Morgan, is alive with pure thought, moral teaching, Evangelical truth, through which runs that manly tenderness so captivating to the young. Teachers will find it a prize. (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

Nurses' Missionary Union.—The increasing number of openings for trained nurses in connection with foreign missions has led to the formation of the Nurses' Missionary Union. The objects are (1) the bringing of the need before hospital nurses; (2) the seeking of a deeper and wider interest in the extension of the Kingdom of God; and (3) to help them in special preparation as well as in the cultivation of habits of prayer, and of systematic and devotional Bible study. Meetings will be held inside hospitals only, and will be arranged to suit the special circumstance of the nurses. The Union has been suggested by the experience of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, and the two organizations will have a close relation. Full information may be obtained from the General Secretary, 23, Grange Road, Ealing, W.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

BELFAST.

DR. HENRY and Mr. Armon Jones regard the recent meetings at Belfast as the crowning series of their campaign. Most remarkable were the gatherings in many respects, especially when it is remembered that they came at the close of the Torrey-Alexander Mission, when the hot weather had commenced, and the holiday season was occupying the attention of many people.

In twenty-five years of public work Dr. Henry has never witnessed such a tender and melting spirit on the part of all classes both to accept and acknowledge Christ as Saviour and Lord. Not only did the meetings increase, as regards numbers and in interest, but the number of seekers increased in a greater proportion until, on the last evening, there were between eighty and ninety open avowals of belief. Another striking feature was that of those who made profession of faith, a large proportion were youths and men, ranging from fifteen to seventy-five years of age. The dinner-hour meetings at Queen's Island and the tent were most interesting and profitable to the men.

More than 2,000 people took the total abstinence pledge in connection with the mission. To a great extent they were converts of the Torrey-Alexander meetings, and of those of Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones in the tent.

Those present at the closing service will never forget the moral and spiritual impression. It began at 7.45 p.m. and lasted until eleven. Though there were frequent opportunities to leave, more than 2,000 people remained for the consecration service. The large audience rose with great enthusiasm to invite the missioners to undertake a return visit as soon as arrangements could be made.

A WARM TRIBUTE.

Mr. William Wilkinson, the esteemed secretary of the Irish Temperance League, writes as follows:—

"I have taken part in many temperance missions, but never in one that gave me such entire satisfaction as that which has just been concluded in the city of Belfast by Rev. Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones. Not only were over two thousand new signatures obtained to the total abstinence pledge, but the circumstances under which they were given added considerably to their value, for the intense Christian earnestness of Dr. Henry's appeals so impressed his audiences that one realized the names were obtained as the result of deep conviction, and as the expression of a fervent desire on the part of those who signed to do what they could to roll away the reproach that strong drink has brought, both at home and abroad, on the name of Christ.

"There can be no doubt but that the influence of Dr. Henry's teaching on what should be the attitude of Christians towards the drinking customs of society and the traffic in drink will never be effaced from the church life of Belfast.

"The preaching of Dr. Henry—his marvellous command of language—must have been a revelation to many. Neither it nor the powerful singing of the old Gospel story by Mr. Jones will ever be forgotten by those privileged to hear them. We shall all welcome back, and that at as early a date as possible, these gifted servants of God."

A SPLENDID SUCCESS.

Rev. John Pyper writes, in the course of a fervent letter:—

"The Henry-Jones Gospel Temperance Mission in Belfast was, through the Divine blessing, a splendid success. The missions of these gifted evangelists to this city last year, with Dr. Henry's brilliant oration to the Presbyterian General Assembly, made a deep and abiding impression of the most favourable character. Hence the hearty welcome accorded to them on their return visit this year, following in the wake of the great Torrey-Alexander mission.

"It was perfectly obvious throughout the entire mission to every enlightened Christian temperance worker that the two (supposed) separate and distinct movements, evangelism and temperance, are not really two, but inseparably one.

"As a lucid, persuasive preacher of the Gospel of the Grace of God, Dr. Henry's words will, I feel convinced, be appreciated by all Christians who are Temperance reformers. That a full hearing may be providentially obtained for him in an ever-widening sphere, and that health and strength may be graciously vouchsafed to him for his most onerous work is now the daily fervent prayer of an ever-increasing number of the most earnest Evangelistic and Temperance workers of the United Kingdom, as well as of the United States."

THE "EDINBURGH CASTLE," E.

Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones commenced a month of services on Lord's Day last. Large gatherings attended throughout the day and listened to the Gospel message, delivered with eloquence and the Holy Spirit's power. At the close of the evening service several professed anxiety of soul. Mr. Jones' singing of the Gospel was most effective, marked by culture and pathos. The singer knows of whom he sang. Such sweet testimony must be blessed. Pray for us! W. N.

One-by-One Working Band.

MEETINGS have been addressed at West Kirby by the deputation secretary, Sister Vera Edmeades, thanks to the kind interest taken by Mrs. Geddes (hon. local sec.), whose efficiency in railway mission work is so well known, she being hon. superintendent of that at Birkenhead Dock, and having many stations under her spiritual oversight.

Sister Vera spoke at the Christian Institute on a Sunday afternoon, Dr. M'Afee (a devoted One-by-One member) presiding, and at night at the Railway Mission Dock Station, where, on the following afternoon, she addressed a gathering of women. On the Monday night "One-by-One" members and others gathered to hear the second address on "Prayer and Work," at West Kirby, and there was warm interest expressed.

Dr. E. Lucas Hughes (hon. local sec.), Liverpool, kindly exerted himself to obtain a hearing for Sister Vera at the Young Men's Rally, Y.M.C.A., Mount Pleasant; at the Mission of Love (Rev. H. Wood's), the Pentecostal League Prayer Meeting; and Gordon Hall (Mrs. Stephen Menzies). A drawing-room meeting was addressed at Liscard with much cheering response to the subject.

Friends who desire to arrange for addresses by Sister Vera should address Mr. Thos. Hogben, Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.

Personalia.

Mr. F. E. Wootton, well known for his untiring labours for the troops encamping at Lydd, has recently removed to Maidstone. The Lydd Soldiers' Home has been reopened after an interval of a few weeks, and is now in charge of Miss Jeram.

Dr. Baedeker leaves for Germany on the 16th inst., and hopes to take part in the Blankenburg Conference. Proceeding afterwards to Hungary, he purposes to return to England through Switzerland.

Miss Albina L. Cox, of the North Africa Mission, Sousse, Tunisia, hopes to arrive in this country before the end of August, and will be glad to undertake deputation work during September and following months. Friends able to arrange for meetings should address the Secretary, North Africa Mission, 34, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Through the passing into other hands of the Victoria Hall, Wandsworth, Mr. Edward Hurditch is once more free—after a considerable period of pastoral work—to devote himself to more general evangelistic effort. He is anxious to help workers in towns and districts seldom visited by evangelists; and will be pleased to hear from friends desirous of arranging for missions of one or two weeks' duration. Address, 97, Melody Road, Wandsworth Common, S.W.

The Late Rev. W. Guard Price.

MUCH regret is felt by a wide circle of friends at the death of Rev. Wm. Guard Price, Methodist minister, Bangor, co. Down, who has passed away in the seventy-seventh year of his age, and fifty-third of his ministry. Mr. Price, who was a native of Newtownards, was an able preacher and speaker. He was twice elected vice-president of the Irish Methodist Conference, and on various occasions was chosen chairman of his district. Nearly his whole ministry was spent in the large centres, such as Cork, Waterford, Dublin, and Belfast. His power in prayer was remarkable, and he took a deep interest in foreign missions, one of his sons being for some years a missionary in India. He had been an invalid for some time, and he looked forward to death with joyful anticipation. He was a prominent, useful man, and his end was peace.

The Y.M.C.A.

A COMMENCEMENT of the work has been made at Deal.

A new association has been formed at Mansfield, Notts.

A proposal is on foot to add to the branch associations in the suburbs of Bristol by the formation of a Y.M.C.A. for Bedminster.

The World's Committee of the Y.M.C.A., which has its headquarters at Geneva, completes its twenty-fifth year of service during the present summer. A remarkable work has been done by the committee, particularly on the Continent of Europe, where there are now over 100 well-equipped association buildings, and more than 100 secretaries giving their whole time to the work.

Bolpur, India.—Rev. J. Culshaw of the M.E. Mission, Bolpur, writes:—"We are settled down in a station just about 100 miles from Calcutta. In the district we have over 900,000 people, and there is only one other missionary in this immense field. There cannot be more than 400 Christians at the outside."

About Books.

FOR PREACHERS AND TEACHERS.

The Captain on the Bridge. By Newton Jones. (1s. 6d. Sunday School Union.) Christian workers, among young and old alike, will do well to use this book. The addresses are only given in outline, so that there is scope for individual thinking. The diagrams are useful as showing how, by object teaching, we may impress the young mind.

Vision and Duty. By Rev. Granville Sharp, M.A. (1s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell.) A volume of good sermons, possessing considerable literary merit, and evincing clearness and a measure of originality of thought. The sermon on "The Divine Triunity" will be read with special interest. In theology they incline to be broadly evangelical; in spirit they are earnest and devout.

We cordially welcome another edition of Criticism Criticized. It furnishes a complete record of the various addresses delivered at the Bible League Conference last year, and is edited by the Dean of Canterbury. The discourses throw much light on recent criticism, and its disastrous effects in giving rise to unbelief in the minds of many. (1s. Bible League.)

Mr. H. R. Allenson has issued a substantial volume for Christian workers, with the title, The Preacher's and Teacher's Vade-Mecum: a Second Series of Outlines and Illustrations (2s. 6d.). It contains three books which have been much appreciated in separate form—Mr. J. Ellis's "Evangelist's Wallet," and "By Way of Illustration," and a collection of Outline Sermonettes for children by well-known preachers. A glance at this very useful book will suggest profitable trains of thought to many a busy worker.

The Unexpected Christ, by Rev. Louis A. Banks, D.D. This volume of thirty evangelistic sermons bears the impress of the author's well-known style of presenting the Gospel. The central theme is Christ, man's relationship to Him, and the hope and way of salvation through Him alone; but scarcely any outstanding incidents in the earthly life of the Redeemer are left unexpounded. Every strong personality has power to exalt or depress those who are weaker; but Dr. Banks shows that to Christ alone belongs the power to arouse the human soul to its loftiest courage and noblest devotion. (6s. Funk & Wagnalls Company.)

The spiritual lessons of the Tabernacle are an inexhaustible store; and Deputy Surgeon-General Partridge has drawn from it to good purpose in The Tabernacle, and Other Bible Object-Lessons. (1s. Holness.) As the outcome of a thorough study of the subject, it is shown that God's way of salvation, and his directions for those who are saved, as revealed in the New Testament, were clearly foreshadowed in the Old; the Tabernacle being simply an object-lesson by which the Jews were taught concerning things to come. There is much guidance given for hours of profitable meditation; and teachers and others will turn to it again and again for help. A striking cover and good illustrations add to the attractions of a book that calls for general attention.

MISSIONARY BOOKS.

A vivid story of girl life in the East is Daughters of Darkness in Sunny India, by Beatrice M. Harland. The writer, who has a gift for picturesque description, and brings to her task an evident desire to shed light upon the darkness of heathen life and custom, is a Christian missionary. (3s. 6d. net. Revell.)

More suffering for Christ in connection with the "Boxer" massacres in China is vividly described in Two Heroes of Cathay. (3s. 6d. net. Revell.) One native Christian student tells his own story of leaving all and counting not his life dear for the sake of his Lord, while that of another is supplied by Miss Luella Miner. Both survived; and a pathetic interest attaches to the narrative of the difficulties placed in their way by American law when they sought in a Christian land the education which would fit them for greater usefulness among their own people. The volume claims a place of honour among the memorials of that great time of testing of the Church in China.

A fresh illustration of the community of interest between the British and American peoples is given by the fact that one of the best treatises on the religious condition of India has just come to us from the other side of the Atlantic. India's Problem: Krishna or Christ? (5s. net. Revell) contains the gist of a course of lectures delivered by Rev. Dr. John P. Jones (of the A.B.C.F.M.) last autumn, at Andover Theological Seminary. The land and its people are ably passed under review by a keen observer, also gifted with a strong analytical faculty. Students of missions will find that in these pages the veil is lifted from matters which stay-at-home readers find very difficult of comprehension. The high tribute paid to the government of the country is specially welcome as coming from an outsider, and will help to reassure those whose minds are exercised over the frequent publication of adverse criticisms of British rule. After an exhaustive examination of the various religions, attention is specially directed to Hinduism, which is contrasted with Christianity as under a microscope. Among many deeply interesting points, we were specially attracted by the proof supplied of the development of conscience where it was unknown. While Dr. Jones knows no real distinction among Protestant workers, his strictures on the principles and results of "faith missions" call for the most careful consideration alike by their supporters and their critics. Such a book as this strengthens the hands of every missionary organization, vindicates and encourages the workers themselves, and places Christian people more frankly than ever face to face with their great privilege and duty.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Faith: What it is, and what it leads to. By C. H. Spurgeon. (1s. Passmore & Alabaster.) A new edition of a little work of sterling worth. It should prove helpful to inquiring souls.

Moses and the Wilderness. By Mrs. E. R. Conder. (1s. 6d. Stock.) A book for boys and girls, telling in simple language the Bible story of Israel's deliverance from Egypt and journey to Canaan. Young people will delight in the book, and find it as instructive as it is interesting.

The Midsummer Volume of Little Folks maintains in every way the high level of its predecessors. Boys and girls of every age, from the youngest readers to those who are about to leave school, are all alike catered for. Stories, poems, and music are bright and interesting; and a few pages are devoted to pleasantly written papers for Sunday reading. (3s. 6d. Cassell.)

In many parts of the world there are those to whom Professor Amos R. Wells is known for his valued contributions to expository and devotional literature. His latest work—Help for the Tempted—should appeal to a wider constituency than anything that has yet come from his pen, and find appreciative readers among Christians of all names. Dr. Amos writes on Prayer, the Bible, Recreation, Conscience, the Presence of Christ, and kindred subjects with a freshness and fervour that cannot fail of the object he has in view. Rev. F. B. Meyer, in a prefatory note, says:—"It is impossible to turn over the pages for a moment without alighting on some sentence which falls on the soul like a shaft of light." Such, we venture to think, will also be the verdict of all who peruse these chapters, for the author touches life at every point, and opens up some of the themes which should form the subject of thought and reflection in the meditations of the quiet hour. (2s. 6d. Isbister.)

STORY BOOKS.

Jim and Jeanie. By Cairnie Hill. (1s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell.) A healthy story of a boy from the country, who, fortified by strong principles, resisted the temptations of city life, and became an earnest Christian worker.

Jill's Red Bag, by Amy le Feuvre (2s. Religious Tract Society) is a natural story of family life, told in an excellent way. It will probably serve its best end by lifting the thoughts of the young from the things around them to spiritual ideals.

In Mary North, by Lucy Rider Meyer (3s. 6d. net. Revell), a terrible indictment is lodged against the sweating of women workers in American cities. Some of the dire results of an unprincipled commercialism are exposed in the most scathing terms.

The Christian Problem and Its Solution. By Adelphe. (1s. 6d. net. A. H. Stockwell.) Five stories, said to be founded on fact, in which the writer lays bare some of the causes of failure in Christian work. These are found rather in the inconsistencies of Christian living than in defective organization. The stories are interesting, and are exceedingly well told. The book is entertaining, instructive, and full of suggestion.

The men and women presented to the reader of From Crooked Roots, by John Ackworth (3s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Son), are near of kin to us all. Their battles and difficulties are our own, under different dress, and their experiences are well calculated to afford guidance or warning. The view presented of Nonconformist church life reveals the secret of much of the moral strength of the British people; and even if the story be read only for entertainment, it will arouse highter thoughts, and leave a residuum of solid teaching.

The worst phases of the slum property question are forced on the reader of The Hebrew, by John A. Steuart. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) While every true man may well hope that the description is overdrawn, we are by no means sure that such landlords do not exist. There are, of course, rifts in the cloud; but when will the wrongs of the down-trodden really burn their way into the conscience of the nation? What an amount of tragedy underlies the phrase "key-money" only the poor of London and those who labour among them can appreciate. Powerful description abounds in these pages; and we earnestly trust it may be productive of more than entertainment.

Modern Scepticism and Christianity. By H. T. Nicholson. (6d. A. H. Stockwell.) A useful little pamphlet in which the thought is clear and the argument forcibly expressed.

In addition to being "a romance of modern Methodism" of considerable merit, The Seekers, by Rev. W. Kingscote Greenland ("W. Scott King"), is a powerful exposure of the Romanising influences at work within the Church of England.

The natural and engaging manner in which Agnes Giberne has told the Stories of the Abbey Precincts will secure for her work the appreciation of those who are looking for a delightful gift book. The characters are well-conceived, and the engravings add much to the attractiveness of the volume. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

What Baptists stand for; and Gleanings in the Field of Baptist History. By Rev. Alfred Phillips, of Leamington Spa. (1s. 6d. net. A. H. Stockwell.) This should be good reading for Baptists, as well as informing for those who may not be acquainted with their history and principles. A modest statement of facts and an apology for consistency.

Practical Hints for Travellers in the Near East, by E. A. Reynolds-Ball, F.R.G.S., contains general notes, hints for explorers, medical hints, shifts and dodges for sportsmen, campers-out, &c., in Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, Egypt and the Nile, Palestine and Syria, Cyprus and Malta, Turkey and Greece. It should serve as a useful companion to the ordinary guide-books. (2s. Marlborough.)

Under the title of Three Coronations, Lieut.-Colonel Mildred Duff, of the Salvation Army, has written biographies of three women officers who have passed to their rest—Mrs. Major Smith, Staff-Captain Stabb, and Major Deva Vadivu. The book affords interesting glimpses of various departments of Salvation Army work. (6d. and 8d. Salvation Army Trade Department, 79, Fortess Road, N.W.)

The testimonies of forty men and women, rescued from intemperance and converted, are quoted by J. F. Shorey in What Jesus is Doing (2s. post free. Holness), to show "why regeneration by the Holy Spirit destroys the appetite for strong drink." No pains have been spared by the author in the verification of the cases. The result is a book which will strengthen the faith of God's people, and serve as a fresh reminder to workers that there are no "hopeless" classes.

Prison Industries. By Edward Grubb, M.A. A thoughtful pamphlet dealing with an important subject, issued by the Howard Association, of which the author is the secretary.

The Church's Forgotten Hope; or, Scriptural Studies on the Translation of the Saints, by William Bramley-Moore, M.A., has reached its second edition, revised and enlarged. (3s. 6d. Pitman, 140, Gower Street, London, W.C.)

The "Promise Boxes" prepared by Mrs. Caswell, 4, Brothertoft Road, Boston, Lincs., continue to meet with much acceptance. They are plain boxes, fitted with small rolls of paper, on each of which is a Scripture promise. In wood, 1s. 1½d. post free, or cardboard, 7d. post free.

Under the title, "The Handy Theological Series," Mr. H. R. Allenson is issuing a collection of notable theological and semi-theological works. The first volume to appear will be Mr. R. E. Welsh's highly successful "In Relief of Doubt," and this will be followed by Bishop Phillips Brooks's "Lectures on Preaching."

The Westminster Helps for Sunday School Teachers meet the needs of every grade, from the infant class to the most advanced. The Junior, Primary, and Senior Quarterly Papers (3d. each) are bright and attractive in every way. The Westminster Teacher (3d. monthly. 14, Paternoster Square, E.C.) is one of the best magazines of its class. All are edited by Dr. J. R. Miller.

The Great Eastern Railway Company's freshly illustrated Tourist Guide to the Continent, gives among many other features particulars of new tours in North Germany and in the Tyrol, in the Luther Country, and the Thuringian and Hartz Mountains. There is a series of Continental maps, and a chapter giving particulars as to the cost of Continental travel. (1s. 30, Fleet Street.)

As the Mother so is the Daughter. (1d. Author, 7, Woodville Gardens, Ealing, W.) Timely words of practical counsel to parents. Evangelists at Work.

A Mission in Hyde Park.

HOW to reach the masses? Go to them! "Attendance at places of worship," we are told, "is on the decrease, and Sunday is now the great holiday where once it was the Holy-day." The classes can afford to spend the week-end out of town, but the masses must be content to spend the Sunday either on the electric tram, or at the seaside by one of the cheap excursions provided by the Sunday League. Of those who remain in London, thousands frequent our parks, and it was with the hopes of reaching many of the non-church-going people that we arranged a month's mission in Hyde Park. The weather at first hindered us, but the last three weeks found us there nightly, and without exception when we have adjourned to Hyde Park Hall the place has echoed to the cry of the penitent men and women who have been awakened in the Park. Mr. J. B. Wookey and myself, with our noble band of workers and choir, have been greatly cheered by the success of "the glorious Gospel of the blessed God," preached in all simplicity, and with faith in its saving power. I append the following from a gentleman in one of our large West-end firms, who says:—

"I have been quite a different man since I have accepted Christ; my happiness has known no bounds. The booklet 'God says I am saved' has helped me to see things plainly; and by God's help I will do what I can to let others know of the great joy, and mercy, and goodness there is in taking Christ as Lord and Master.—Sincerely yours, J.K., a Park convert."

A lady who was blessed the same evening also writes: "I came to Hyde Park on Monday evening, and at that service was awakened to see my lost condition; if you remember, a man disturbed the meeting, but said to the speaker, 'Well, I admire you for your work,' and was met by the reply, 'I don't want you to admire me, I want you to admire my Master.' Those words were the turning point in my life. I turned away from the meeting broken-hearted, and I for one wanted to admire Him."

A clerk at a Metropolitan bookstall writes:

"I went to Hyde Park on Sunday evening to hear the preaching, but I heard God speak, and now bless Him that I am saved by His grace, for I had trifled with salvation for some time. Thank you for the little books; they have enabled me to see how simple is the great salvation. God help me to tell others of His wonderful love, for I am the only one in our family of eight who is on the side of our Lord. Pray that God may save them all!"

The week-night meetings almost surpass in interest the Sunday evenings, for they are quieter and the vast majority are men.

We recently dealt with two Welshmen, two Germans, and a Dane, and also gave thanks for two backsliders restored.

On Thursday evening, in the after meeting at the hall, we failed to find any anxious or seeking souls, and as it had been an unusually good meeting were surprised, till one and another rose and said, in effect, "I trusted Christ as I stood in the park while the preachers were exalting the Lord."

We are continuing these special efforts, as we have been so greatly encouraged. Mr. Frank Weaver, who was with us last Sunday, is coming to us for three weeks presently.

Mr. Wookey is a most pathetic preacher, and has a large store of experience and incidents to draw on by reason of his valued service in the past, and he won the hearts of all our friends, especially our young men.

It has been a splendid sight at the close of the out-door service to see at least nearly a thousand men raise their hats as we have closed with the Doxology—a magnificent testimony to the influence of the name of Jesus and the power He still wields o'er the hearts of men. "Praise ye the Lord." Chas. Cook.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Blofield.

Mrs. Baeyertz began her ten days' mission at Blofield, near Norwich, on June 14. It was a real time of revival, the same power being manifested as at Norwich, only in a far deeper degree. Twenty-six seekers were dealt with the very first night, and we have never seen such a move here before. People came from long distances, many over twenty miles. It was most cheering to see all classes flocking down the lanes and across the fields to be in time to get a seat; while on the high road carts, bicycles, and even motor-cars were used to bring the people to the hall. Large numbers came over from Norwich in vans, &c., and when one well-known servant of Christ was asked what brought the people day after day in the busiest month of the year. "Oh," she said with a bright smile, "The Presence."

Over a hundred precious souls were dealt with in the ten days; whole families were brought to Christ, some for whom we had prayed for years, and they were testifying by their bright faces to the reality of the work. Verily, the reaping time has come after years of sowing.

We desire most heartily to thank God for the definite blessing we have received, the oldest and the most deeply taught Christians as well as the young, and we thank God for the faithfulness that in this wicked generation denounces sin, both in saved and unsaved. Many times such a solemn awe fell upon the people that one felt that they were brought under the power of the world to come, and it was just the same in the Bible-readings. We love Mrs. Baeyertz and wish her God-speed "until the day break and the shadows flee away."

O. Jarey.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

Mr. E. P. Telford has just concluded his last mission in England before starting upon an evangelistic tour in the United States of America. His month's services in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E., have been marked by exceptional blessing. A favourite with the East End through many years, he is always a welcome missioner. There is nothing indefinite about his utterances. The Gospel of the grace of God was forcibly delivered, and his constant appeal to the hearts of the unsaved was such that the most hardened listened and afterwards wended their way into the inquiry room to be dealt with about eternal issues. Night after night during the month witnessed men and women yielding to the entreaties of Christian workers to decide for Christ, and some very interesting cases of conversion were the result.

Mr. Telford's closing address was to Christians. He urged them to continue in the work that had been such a blessing to the East End of London for so long. For twenty-seven years he had been coming to them for a month, and never had he seen the work in a more prosperous condition. From the very first service he felt the Spirit of God had been with them; no wonder they had seen such results. Workers who were growing old in the service were, he saw, working in the after-meeting with as much zeal and determination to win souls for Christ as when he first came among them. Such faithfulness God always blessed, and although the speaker missed many who had gone to be with the Lord, others were filling their places, and he hoped the future work would be even more blessed than the past.

A Deserted Chapel Filled.

Tuesday night of last week was the closing evening of a mission which has been held for six months at Barnsbury Chapel, Islington. There was a crowded attendance, and it was evident that there was a mixture of sorrow as well as gladness in the tone of the meeting. A stranger was not long in learning that night after night for six months (Fridays excepted) a vigorous Gospel work had been going on, conducted by Mr. Leonard Weaver. At the time of the mission commencing, according to the statement of one of the trustees, the congregation consisted of twelve to twenty. Mr. Weaver and his friends set about raising a Gospel work in the place, and God blessed their efforts; the congregation increased until the place was filled. Several friends have assisted in the work, especially Mr. Bennett Anderson; also Mr. Henry Varley, Lord Radstock, Mr. Bradbrook, and other friends.

On the closing night already referred to many testified to the blessing the services had been to them. One said: "Eight of my family have been converted, four here and four in the tent, so I have much to praise God for." An old preacher rose with much emotion and said he had been restored after backsliding for a long time. A fine white-haired man said: "I thank God for my son who has been brought to the Lord in these meetings. I myself feel twenty years younger." A middle-aged man testified: "My wife found Christ first, and then I was led afterwards. Thank God for the deliverance from the curse of drink. Our home is now a home of peace."

It was with much thanksgiving that we looked upon the congregation, so large and so bright; and I am quite sure that all present were feeling that this was a clear demonstration of how a crowd may be attracted by the simple Gospel, earnestly preached, and that in a chapel which had, for some years, been practically a failure. The chapel has now been bought by the Congregational Union, and was reopened on Sunday with a full congregation.

Several friends addressed the meeting. At the call of Mr. Weaver, nearly the whole of the congregation rose upon their feet to testify that they had received special blessing during the meetings. A great number of these were new converts.

Although not counting heads, doubtless a very large number of people have been brought to the Lord during this six months' mission. There is remaining also a crowded and happy meeting in place of a desolate church. I pray God that much more of this kind of work may be seen in London. Arthur Garstin.

Protestant Mission at Liverpool.

A fourteen-days' open-air Gospel mission has just come to an end in Liverpool. The evangelist was Mr. Ernest P. Luce, and the gatherings were held under the auspices of the British Protestant Union. The average nightly attendance was about 2,500. Meetings were addressed in many parts of the city, and the people generally enthused and urged to renewed exertions for the sake of Christ.

On Sunday morning, June 20, a huge crowd assembled at 11 a.m. on the Haymarket in Birkenhead—according to a local paper there was a congregation of something like 30,000 people. Hymns were heartily sung, and a stirring and spiritually-rousing address was delivered. Four Liverpool bands, in connection with various religious organizations, led Mr. Luce and a large party of Liverpool friends back to the ferries, three of which had been specially chartered, and so on to the Lancashire side of the Mersey.

In the afternoon a men's Bible class, numbering close on 500, was addressed, and in the evening again at Dacy Road. A women's Bible class was addressed on the Monday afternoon, the encouraging meeting of 300 women testifying to a good work done.

Hospitals, the sick and dying, &c., have been visited in the daytime, so that those unable to hear the precious tidings of eternal life outside have had it brought to them. Letters and messages have been daily coming in from Roman Catholics and others, testifying to spiritual benefits received.

Mr. Luce has now secured the co-operation of Mr. David Hughes, a silver medallist soloist, as Gospel singer. A prolonged evangelistic tour has now been arranged for Canada, the United States, and other lands. The earnest prayers of readers are requested for this enterprise.

Tent Mission at Edinburgh.

A fruitful tent mission has just been brought to a close in the Morningside district of the city. Through the kindness of Mr. Bartholomew, a splendid site was secured for the tent in the grounds of Falcon Hall, and Mr. A. Y. McGregor, the evangelist, soon proved himself to be "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." The meetings, small at the beginning, grew mightily in numbers and blessing. The first week was of a preparatory character, and both reason and conscience were appealed to in the searching, pointed addresses. While no undue pressure was brought to bear upon the people, numbers signified their desire to trust the Saviour at almost every meeting during the last three weeks.

On the final Saturday a Conference of Christian Workers was held; the subject, "Partnership with God in Service," was ably dealt with by several speakers, among whom were Mr. Muston and Mr. B. McCall Barbour. Seldom, if ever, have we been in such a gathering. From beginning to end the presence and power of God were manifest. A. Fyfe.

Dugdale Street Baptist Church, S.E.

The Brixton Male Choir, under the direction of Mr. Brown, sang and preached the Gospel at Dugdale Street Chapel, Camberwell, during June, with sweetness and power; and I believe the secret of the sweetness and power of song and testimony lies in the fact that the choir is composed of converted men; they put their soul into it as well as their voice. Mr. Brown's short talks are clear, pointed, and winning.

It has, indeed, been a month of revival for the saints, and some of the unconverted have professed to take Christ as their Saviour.

The stirring addresses of Messrs. Crow, Gregory, and Sawyer were very refreshing. Mr. Brown's stalwarts can work as well as sing; for they took it in turns, two by two, to carry our heavy organ, intended for inside use, to various points in the neighbourhood.

Almost as soon as the singing commenced in the streets passers began to gather round, and open windows and doors revealed little groups of men, women, and children as eager listeners, especially when the "Glory Song" was being sung.

One feature of the open-air part of the work was that those who came remained, until a good crowd had assembled. Mr. Crow's open-air speaking certainly holds the people. Man's sin and God's grace are set clearly before the people. John Waite, Pastor.

The Tent Missions at Cardiff are far reaching in their effects, people coming four and five miles. We are having crowded meetings, and blessing is given. On the Sundays there has been a great spirit of inquiry. Pray for us. ALEXANDER CLARK.

Mr. JAMES GARRIOCH, of Glasgow, has conducted mission services at the Baptish Church at Bloemfontein. Some of the college boys who attended the services were connected with the students Christian Association, lately formed in the town. They re-requested the pastor of the church (Rev. Ralph Holme) to arrange for Mr. Garrioch to speak to the boys one Sunday afternoon. Cards of invitation were subsequently issued in the name of the Association and distributed by the boys themselves in Grey College and the Girls' High School. About 400 young people gathered, and a service was held which will long remain in the memories of those present.

Mr. JOHN ELLIOTT, of Torquay, is so much better in health he is able to take occasional open-air meetings as well as preaching on Sundays in various buildings. He has just returned from Bournemouth, where he has been for a month, having meetings in the Central Hall at Pokesdown and the People's Hall at Mooredown. One Sunday evening, at the hearty invitation of the Bournemouth Y.M.C.A., he preached to a large congregation on the sands, from a platform which is used on week-days by the nigger minstrels. A large crowd of some hundreds of pleasure-seekers soon gathered round and listened very attentively. Last Sunday Mr. Elliott preached again at Dartmouth. There are two good open-air meetings held in Torquay every Sunday night at which Mr. Elliott is often asked to speak after preaching in one of the halls in the town.

In connection with the Eastern Valleys, Mon., Free Church Council, Rev. J. TOLEFREE PARR conducted a most effective tent mission at Pontnewydd, June 27-July 3. As a result of the lecture on "The Down Line" (at which Mr. R. C. Morgan presided), upwards of 100 temperance pledges were taken. On Sunday the tent was crowded. The power of God was manifest. The impression made was real and deep. Night after night the tent was well filled, many coming who seldom, if ever, attend a place of worship. Mr. Parr concluded his work with a mass meeting for men. Many thought this would prove a failure. It was the crowning success of the mission. Fully 1,000 men assembled to listen to a stirring and heart-searching address. In response to Mr. Parr's invitation, about 800 stood and repeated a pledge to abstain from and to do all in their power to suppress the evil of gambling so prevalent in the neighbourhood. About 150 entered the inquiry room. To God be the glory!

C.

Mr. FRANK PENFOLD, of Hove, has conducted a month's mission in a tent in the lowest part of Luton. Trophies have been won through the grace of God. Hundreds who do not attend a place of worship have flocked to the tent. About forty of the roughest characters came in their shirt sleeves straight from the public-house to the tent on Sunday afternoon, and at night returned to hear Mr. Arthur Seabrook, who was for many years a poacher and "notorious character." He found Christ during the first week of the mission, as also did his wife and his son (who was following hard in his father's road of folly). His two daughters have also decided for Christ. As Mr. Seabrook gave his experience on Sunday night it had a telling effect upon the audience inside and outside the tent. Alderman George Warren, of Luton, was so moved upon by the talk of the converted poacher (whom he had had before him several times in the court) that he rose to his feet and thanked God, adding, to Mr. Seabrook: "The days of miracles are not yet passed. I have pleasure in shaking hands with you as my brother in the Lord, and you are only one out of many through this mission. Mr. C. H. Osborne (mayor of Luton, at whose invitation Mr. Penfold undertook the mission) also spoke words of appreciation and encouragement.

The Churches.

Church of England.

The report of St. John's, Upper Holloway (vicar, Rev. Herbert Dudley Lampen), records encouraging progress in the last year. The vicar notes with thankfulness the magnificent congregations which during the past year have crowded the parish church, and especially the numbers of young men who attend. But beyond mere numbers or gratifying statistics, spiritual blessing has attended the work, and the workers have been encouraged by proofs of God's converting grace and power.

Bishop Oluwole gave an address recently at the St. Peter's, Highgate Hill, Men's Service. Between 500 and 600 men listened with great interest to the bishop's graphic account of the work done by the C.M.S. in West Africa, which had led to the formation of native churches with native bishops and clergy. The bishop concluded with an earnest appeal for Christian men—artizans, mechanics, railway men, and others—to go out, as there is a large and promising field of work open to such.

The Bishop of Durham entertained at Auckland Castle, a few days ago, the Auckland Clerical Brotherhood, which for many years has been accustomed to meet on that day. It consists of those who have been trained for the ministry by Bishops Lightfoot and Westcott at Auckland, and seventy-eight clergy were present on this occasion. At Bishop Moule's invitation it was resolved that the brotherhood should be perpetuated, and that the men ordained from the hostel should continue to be incorporated in it.

The Bishop of Liverpool has decided to issue monthly a list of subjects for thanksgiving and intercession for use in public or private worship. The first list includes the following subjects:—"For the cause of education, that all things may be ordered for the good of the children, the welfare of the people, and the maintenance of true religion; for the success of present efforts to restrict Sunday trading and for the better observance of the Sunday; for every effort made to bring home the message of Christ to the hearts, the consciences, and the wills of our people."

The annual report just issued by Prebendary Eardley Wilmot in regard to the work of the year at St. Jude's, South Kensington, is singularly interesting as showing what may be done by an earnest congregation which has freed itself from that incubus of the local spirit which so frequently is permitted to hamper Christian effort. Out of the voluntary contributions of nearly £7,000 for the year, £1,181 was devoted to home missions, and £880 to foreign. For the relief of the poor and sick a sum of £2,191 was set aside, and it is pleasant to find that the parish also supported a mission in Whitechapel, and found a band of regular visitors to the poor in the East End.

Congregational.

Rev. C. Silvester Horne will take a well-earned rest before entering upon his new work at Tottenham Court Road, which, as already announced, is to be inaugurated on September 22 by a representative public meeting.

Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., in the course of a sermon at Carr's Lane Chapel, Birmingham, on John Wesley, said:—"For the last three weeks, when thinking of to-day's service, I have tried to discover what are the characteristics of John Wesley. May I give them in a summary? These are: his conception of the all-sufficiency of faith; his intimate sense of Providence: his saving common-sense; and his conception of the sanctity of time. These, I think, are the primary characteristics of John Wesley's journal and life."

Baptist.

Rev. Frank Russell has resigned the pastorate of Kirkdale Tabernacle, Liverpool, which he has held for nearly nine years. Mr. Russell was formerly minister of Beverley Road Chapel, Hull.

For upwards of nine months services have been conducted in the Hoe Street district, Walthamstow, with a view to the formation of a new cause. The services have been well attended, and much of the Divine blessing has been enjoyed. The friends have now secured the Forest Road Board School in which to carry on the work commenced in a small room.

On Sunday, June 28, the Sunday School anniversary was held at Shefford, Beds, when Rev. John Mitchell (author of "Silver Tongues," &c.) preached. The services were of a most encouraging nature; at the close one soul confessed Christ, and others were under deep conviction. On Monday, June 29, a public meeting was held when Mr. G. Russell, of Hitchin, took the chair, supported by Revs. J. T. Evans, of Shillington, and F. E. Hall, (pastor). The collections were far in excess of the previous year.

The anniversary of the settlement of Rev. A. T. Greenwood at Welbeck Street, Ashton-under-Lyne, has just been held. The pastor preached on "The Responsibility of the Pew" and "The Message from the Pulpit." A public meeting was also held, one of the speakers being Rev. H. J. Morley. The reports were presented by the various secretaries, the one from the church, showing that thirty-six members had been received into fellowship during the year. A new mission work has been commenced with very promising results. On Sunday week the pastor baptized four candidates.

The members of the Southport Baptist Tabernacle are pushing forward in mission work. For many years they conducted a mission in a small room. A good site was secured for new buildings, and on June 23 the Lecture Hall was opened under very encouraging and promising circumstances. In the afternoon a dedicatory service was held, conducted by Rev. Robert Lewis, of Liverpool, at which Rev. Rhys Davies said that room meant intense joy to those who had been worshipping there, and he had no doubt it augured well for the future of the Baptist Church in the town. The cost is over £1,200, including land and buildings.

Farewell services have been held in connection with the relinquishing by Rev. R. Walker of his pastorate at Chesham for the new church at Hither Green, London. The circumstances were of more than usual interest. In almost every town and village in Bucks some Baptist cause exists, and probably no town of its size in England can beat Chesham in its adherence to Baptist principles. It has four Baptist chapels (and stated pastors), three of them erected in recent years. Mr. Jonathan Bunker, senior deacon, well known among Baptists for full three-score years, presided in a most affectionate manner, and Mr. George Freeman, a veteran colleague, was by his side.

Methodist.

A new Wesleyan church has been opened at Petersfield. The dedicatory service was preached by Rev. Marshall Hartley.

Twenty-one years ago the Birmingham branch of the Theological Institution was opened, and the first re-union of past and present students was held a few days ago. Old Handsworth men gathered from near and far, and Rev. Dr. Dawson gave an address.

The Wesleyan Methodists of Romiley, Lancs., opened their commodious new chapel and schoolroom on Thursday last. Rev. W. L. Watkinson preached in the afternoon on words, "And everything shall live whither the river cometh" (Ezekiel xlvii. 9). Mr. Watkinson declared that spirituality is the master force of civilization. Noble character is above genius, and noble character must have a spiritual basis. Some people think you have only to show a man that it is to his interest to be moral, and the whole thing is done; but such people reckon without the influences of passion, egotism, and impotence of will. Mr. Watkinson, speaking at a subsequent public meeting, enforced his text of the afternoon by quoting an expression of wonder on the part of Huxley that George Fox, "a man without a single original idea," had moved the world, while Benjamin Franklin, an intellectual giant, had almost passed out of the public memory. Mr. Watkinson accounted for this on the ground that the founder of Quakerism had a spiritual idea and sought to bring fire from heaven itself, while the inventor of the lightning conductor was a materialist, and was content to bring down fire from the clouds.

Presbyterian.

A new English Presbyterian church at Wepre, Connah's Quay, was formally opened a few days ago by Miss Evans, of Liverpool, in the presence of a large assembly of ministers and laymen. The building has involved an outlay of upwards of £3,000.

The annual report of the Latymer Road Mission, Notting Hill, W., tells of good work in many departments. The Sunday evening services have been carried on with their usual quiet persistency. Mr. Moody, the City missionary, has from time to time had the help of several friends to address his people. The crèche, the boys' shelter, the girls' shelter, and the Temperance Society, encouraging intelligence is given. The wood-yard is a very useful adjunct to the Mission, as it enables the friends to deal in an effective way with some of the deserving poor.

The annual report of the Town Mission, Hyde, Lancs. (Pastor J. B. Lomas) states that every year the influence of the Mission is more widely felt. "For eight years we have had our stand in Hyde Market during the summer months. Saturday nights and Sundays, after a short evening service in the Mission Hall, crowds are attracted by the singing, and listen attentively to the Words of Life. Some get blessedly saved. From surrounding localities we frequently hear most cheering accounts of men and women receiving blessing at these meetings. The indoor Gospel services still continue to attract a great many inquirers at these services who have never previously been connected with religious bodies; they look upon the Mission as their home, and in turn many become useful Christian workers."

Fallen Asleep.

Friends of the late Rev. E. Paxton Hood will learn with regret of Mrs. Hood's death on Saturday last at Brixton, where she had resided since the loss of her husband, eighteen years ago. Mrs. Hood shared with her gifted husband the warm esteem of a very large circle of those who came under the influence of his attractive ministry in Manchester and Brighton, and also at Offord Road and Falcon Square in London.—At Belfast, Mrs. OLIVER, wife of Rev. John Oliver, Methodist minister.—At Gorum, Mrs. BECHER, wife of the incumbent of the parish, and an earnest Christian worker.

Harley House Students.—During the summer months a number of the students at Harley House are open to take duty throughout the country in charge of congregations, tent missions, &c. Communications may be addressed to Dr. Harry Guinness, at the College, Bow, E.

British College Christian Union.—Hitherto the office of general secretary of the British College Christian Union has been held for a period of one or two years only, but these repeated changes have hampered the work. It is, therefore, a source of satisfaction to be able to report that Rev. Tissington Tatlow has accepted the post for a period of several years. Mr. Tatlow has himself been at different periods an arts, engineering, and theological student, having completed all these courses in Trinity College, Dublin. He has attended all the Conferences of the Union since its inception, with two exceptions; has been a delegate to student conferences in America, France, and Germany; and hopes to enter upon his duties at 22, Warwick Lane, E.C., on October 1, 1903.

Notes & Comments

 Messrs. Morgan & Scott receive, acknowledge in The Christian, and transmit, donations sent to them in aid of any accredited Societies and Missions. To avoid misapprehension, it is added that no charge of any kind is ever made on such donations.

Prayer for the Spirit. There is much prayer of this nature. But is it not certain that a multitude of Christians cannot, in this land, receive the fulness of the Spirit, because God wants them in other lands, and they have never seriously yielded themselves to obey the last commission of their Saviour and Lord, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature"? God has promised the Holy Spirit "to them that obey Him."

A Lesson from the Census. Among the many lessons which may be drawn from the Religious Census of London, just completed by the Daily News, none is more important than one which is well emphasized by the chief superintendent in his suggestive article in Thursday's issue of that paper. About sixty per cent. of the population of this great city show a stubborn distaste for public worship. Our duty, as they will not come to us, is to go to them; in other words, to develop the art of open-air preaching to a very much greater extent than is done at present. This was the method by which the Christian faith first established itself in the world; this was the weapon by which the Wesleys reconquered England in the 18th century; and it is the only way to renew the flame of vital religion in the 20th century.

The Importance of Street Preaching. The writer referred to (Mr. Mudie-Smith) suggests that "street-corner preaching" should become an integral part of the programme of our leading ministers, and that it would be well if prominent men would, on fine summer evenings, close their churches, and, accompanied by their congregations and choirs, take possession of the open spaces in London, there to hold forth the Word of Life to the passing multitudes. If this were done "the provinces would follow suit, the villages in turn would respond, and there would be such a shaking of the nation as has not been witnessed since Wesley's death." We have often appealed for a more frank and general use of the method of open-air preaching, and we are glad to find such an influential echo of our contention.

An Unwarranted Charge. At the same time, is Mr. Mudie-Smith justified in his severe strictures on those who have, up till now, endeavoured to follow the apostolic custom of open-air preaching? He writes:—

> It is to me an amazing thing that a method of reaching the people adopted with such success by Jesus Christ and His disciples should be left to those least able to make efficient use of it.

He charges street preachers, on the whole, with having zeal "not according to knowledge," and as being as earnest as they are often unwise. Granted that many open-air preachers have deserved such censure, we are convinced that these are in the minority; certainly there is no monopoly of unwisdom or ignorant zeal among them. At the least they have attempted to fulfil a duty too often neglected by the regular ministry, and have among their number some of the most intelligent as well as zealous Christian workers. We trust the time will come when our theological colleges will include in their curriculum a thorough training in open-air work. Lack of experience and practice are the chief reasons why so few ministers venture to preach out of the pulpit.

A Call for Compassion. No true Christian can flatter himself that things are all right in view of the census figures, however generously interpreted. Those who do not attend religious worship are either antagonistic or indifferent towards the Gospel. The many, without doubt, have no sense of God or eternity. A great number are "freethinkers" in one sense or another—they either repel or mutilate the Gospel, according to their caprice. And many others belong to the sad company of "lapsed members." It seems to us that God is calling His Church to face her failure in carrying out the great commission. If all the seats were free to-morrow, with every class distinction removed, and the churches open all the week, then the real problem would remain unsolved. The truth is, that Christian service is in the hands of the few, when it ought to be undertaken by the entire Church—clerical and lay. We are not responsible for the conversion of men, but we are responsible for evangelizing men. Only the few seem to believe that. When, with the compassion of Christ, the whole Church yearns for the salvation of men, we shall see an eagerness to hear the Word of God once more.

Christian Endeavour Progress. The International Christian Endeavour Convention, held at Denver last week, was made the occasion of launching a ten years' campaign or forward movement. The vitality of the movement has, it is a pleasure to know, received fresh illustration during the past months, and the great hope of the future lies in its manifest adaptability to various and even changing conditions. There is true insight in the call to add to the younger members. Dr. Clark has no respect for a uniform age-limit, which is a crude and mechanical device, fraught with weakening influences; but alongside elasticity in this respect care must be taken that older members do not occupy themselves with what might be done by their juniors. The associate membership, which brings in undecided friends, has all along presented a serious problem to many of the best workers, and, while the enlargement of it will undoubtedly constitute a good field for personal effort, much wisdom will be needed by leaders in order that there may not be a reflex influence on the active members, who accept the pledge with its call to personal service for Christ.

Two Dangerous Bills. The great national protest to be made in the Albert Hall next Saturday against the Bills now before Parliament, introduced by Mr. Butcher and Sir William Hart-Dyke, on the licensing question, should have the earnest support of all temperance workers. The former creates a continuous vested interest in liquor licences, and the latter aims at seriously restricting the discretionary power of the magistrates to refuse renewal of licences except on definite grounds of misconduct. Both Bills are "flank movements" against the cause of temperance and sobriety, and are a serious attempt to set back the clock of reform. Mr. Butcher's Bill has already passed its second reading; but there is yet time for a vigorous and we trust successful protest against both Bills being passed. The meeting is held only in the nick of time, and deserves the united backing of all who hold the good of the people at heart.

The Physical Decay of the Nation. The recent debate in the Lords on this subject brought out some painful and incontrovertible facts as to the deterioration of the rising generation. The conditions of entrance into the Army have recently been seriously lowered, and yet we are told that fully 50 per cent. of the candidates for admission have during the past year been rejected because below the standard. There is no doubt that the chief reason for this deplorable state of things is the housing problem, together with the large proportion of the population who live habitually near the margin of extreme poverty. A better distribution of wealth, and more room and air to live in, are among the remedies. The social question is ever with us, and while the difficulties to its solution are many and grave, they should not be allowed to stem the reforming zeal of good men in all parties.

A Movement for Peace. The striking success of the Socialist party in the recent German elections certainly shows that during the last few years they have grown from a Parliamentary fragment into a great power, perhaps now the strongest in the Reichstag. In some respects the Social Democratic programme cannot be approved by Christian men and women; but, from one point of view at least, the result of the late national poll affords ground for sincere satisfaction. Undoubtedly it points to the fact that the great masses of the German people are sick of militarism and the burdens which it imposes upon them. This feeling has deepened, if not because of, certainly in spite of, enforced military training, and it makes for peace. In that respect, therefore, we may be thankful for the change in popular representation; and if the party should evince any practical leaning towards irreligion, we can but beseech God to overrule their action to the widening of His Kingdom.

The Congo Charges. It is a little difficult to forecast what Belgium really means to do respecting the Congo atrocities. The debate in the Chamber was a piece of contradiction, one party speaking of the "superhuman efforts of the Belgians in the Congo," while the Minister for Foreign Affairs declared against Belgian interference with the Congo, "excepting in cases of glaring contraventions of the Berlin Convention." If the frightful atrocities which have disgraced white men in Congoland are not "glaring contraventions of the Berlin Convention," we should like to know what would be. The Belgian rulers must not play the game of hide and seek in this matter. For the moment, public attention is not directed towards the Congo; there is, we hope, no new list of horrors to be published. But the cause of the villanies with which we have been made familiar still exists, and Belgium, together with this country, must see to it that the abomination is dealt with at the root.

Cruel Cheapness. Some of our leading social reformers, it would appear from their platform utterances and their writings, fail to recognise the fact that in all our large cities there are many female workers, whose incomes, if at any time sufficient to enable them to live "honourable lives," during times of depression and slackness of work leave no means of escaping starvation, except the dread life of the streets. The fact that several such poor creatures have recently committed suicide, rather than yield to the dire temptation, may well emphasize the close connection which exists between "starvation wages" and the spread of immorality. Miss Irwin, the secretary of the Scottish Council for Women Workers, stated recently before a Commission that many female toilers in tailoring work in Glasgow make only about 7s. a week in the best times, and that their earnings often fell to 2s. 6d., or fail altogether. In other trades the average earnings were from 1d. to 1¾d. per hour. What the "homes" of such people must be, it is not easy to imagine. That they are highly insanitary, and that there is great risk of the dissemination of disease from them, goes without saying; but Miss Irwin adds further evidence:—

> Frequently one found the shirts, trousers, and vests doing duty as bedclothes for a sick person.

Failing of Fatness. We have had quite a stream of works of fiction dealing with slum life and the crushing influence of poverty and unhealthy surroundings, but it is unusual to find one treating of "twisted lives" under the pinching and deteriorating influence of that prosperity which so frequently has injurious effects not only upon individual, but upon national character. In a recent study of this latter type, Mr. Vachell takes for his motto the verse: "And the prosperity of fools shall destroy them" (Prov. i. 32), and he insists that the English-speaking races are rapidly reaching a stage similar to that in the history of the people of whom it is recorded that God gave them their hearts' desire, "but sent leanness into their soul" (Psa. cvi. 15). The two extremes of our civilization, the lavish wealth, in so many cases built upon a foundation of human misery, and the biting poverty with its animal struggle for bare life, are as full of warning as the dread handwriting upon the Babylonian wall. The struggle, however, is not simply one between the poor and the rich, it is between God and evil, and there can therefore be no doubt as to the victory.

The Prayer of Forgiveness. Rev. Dr. Wayland Hoyt, in dealing with a subject for a Prayer Meeting Service, comments upon the wonderful words of Christ, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do" (Luke xxiii. 34). He remarks incidentally that whilst other teachers taught more loftily than they themselves acted, Jesus did as loftily as He taught. Emphasizing very forcibly the argument of the prayer, "for they know not what they do," Dr. Hoyt says:—

> Oh, how small our hardnesses, because of the petty slights done to ourselves, appear in the light of the petition of this prayer. The best way of treating those who injure us is forgivingly to pray for them. . . . I think this prayer must have been answered. Among the 3,000 who shortly after accepted Christ as Saviour, let us believe were numbered these crucifiers.

It may be noted, too, that Christ has commanded that there should not be any haughty waiting for offenders to confess their wrong (Matt. vi. 12; v. 44).

The Rod of Moses. Rev. Dr. Carson, in a recent sermon, deduces two striking lessons from Ex. iv. 2: "And the Lord said unto Moses, What is that in thy hand? And he said, A rod." The preacher urges that God calls into his special service men who are faithful in their daily work. Moses was quietly shepherding his sheep when God called him to the leadership of his people; and he was as much the servant of God when leading the sheep of Jethro as when leading the people. Further, a man is always equipped for the service to which God calls him.

> What is that in thy hand? A rod, a shepherd's crook, a stick cut from an acacia tree, but that is to be the implement which Moses is to use in his great work. It was something which Moses had at the time of his call . . . The great trouble with many is that they long for something which they have not, and do not use what they have. Because a man cannot speak eloquently he will not testify for Christ. What is that in thy hand? Your business, give it to God; your social influence, sway it for Jesus Christ; your political privileges, exercise them for the glory of God and the advancement of His Kingdom. You have your present equipment for present service.

"How Are We Made Holy?"

By faith in the threefold work of the Triune God.

THE work of our salvation from sin, its penalty, its power, and its presence, originated in the only wise God our Saviour, who so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life.

The work of our salvation is accomplished through the incarnation, life, death, resurrection, ascension, glorification, and heavenly priesthood of Jesus, the Son of God.

This work, foretold in the Old Testament and recorded in the New, by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, is revealed to the believer by the same Spirit, who takes the things concerning Christ and shows them to us.

They who receive His testimony are numbered among the "holy brethren, partakers of a heavenly calling." And in proportion as they yield themselves, in the obedience of faith, to His instructions, they become practically and experimentally holy—separated from the world, separated unto God, in accordance with the prayer of their Lord, "Sanctify them through Thy truth: Thy Word is truth."

The Employment of Epileptics.—At the tenth annual meeting of the National Society for Employment of Epileptics, the report of the hon. medical staff was presented, showing that four patients had been cured during the year, while many others had so far recovered as to leave the Society's colony at Chalfont to resume their occupations in outside life. The report of the Executive Committee shows the past year to have been one of progress and extension, two new homes having been opened at the colony, while another (for twenty-four patients), which has been provided specially for the benefit of Hampshire cases, is nearly completed.

Words on Service.—1.

By Captain W. H. Dawson.*

1.—CHRIST "THE LORD'S SERVANT."

IT seems to me that we have in our subject—(a) The Pattern for service; (b) The Persons for service; (c) The Power for service.

Here are three links in the chain of service which cannot be separated. The first link, the Person of Christ, the third link the Power of the Holy Ghost. The second link, the servant's place in between the other two links, the middle link, often the missing link, united to the first and third links; linked to both by faith and prayer in order to manifest true discipleship as the servants of God.

In the first link, the Person of Christ, we have God's first great gift, His Son among men. In the third link, God's second great gift, His Holy Spirit to dwell in men. As the middle link, we are to manifest these two great gifts in service.

THREE KEY WORDS.

The first link, the Pattern for Service—Christ—Contemplation. It requires time—"Consider Him."

The second, the Persons for Service—Manifestation. This needs love—"By this shall all men know" (John xiii. 35).

The third, the Power for Service—Appropriation. This wants faith—"Ye shall receive power." Receiving is more than asking, it is taking, appropriating by faith.

As the Son of God was sent to save, so the sons of God are saved to serve. God's order—salvation, then service; sonship is the true ground of service. Our salvation—we use the words with reverence—is God's business; remember His sovereignty. His service is our business, we must not forget our responsibility. The first recorded words of the service of Jesus "My Father's business." The motto for the servant is "Whose I am, and whom I serve" (Acts xxvii. 23). "I believe and I belong," then "I serve."

We must begin with the Person of Christ in order to be brought into touch with Him and kept in touch with Him. We must "consider Him" the Perfect Servant, so that each one may become "a servant of Jesus Christ," and "serve Him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before Him, all the days of our life" (Luke i. 74, 75).

Then let us ask and expect wonderful revelations of the Lord Jesus Christ; let us listen in silence for His words and orders for service, "In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength." "Blessed are all they that wait for Him." May the Holy Spirit, the life-giving Interpreter, so reveal the living Word, Christ, in the written Word, the Scriptures, that we may be endued with power for service, recognise God's claims upon us to be His loyal subjects, His faithful followers, His obedient servants, so that His will may be done in our lives and He Himself glorified.

As we think of the Pattern Servant, may we prove by happy experience, "My meditation of Him shall be sweet," "shall be sweet unto Him" (R.V.). Service is doing the will of God; then we must be wholly yielded. But we must not forget, in that is included bearing the will of God. If the one reminds us of the active, the other emphasizes the passive.

Service is witnessing for Christ, "for ye serve the Lord Christ" (Col. iii. 24). Salvation first, then sanctification; after that comes separation for service. "Separated for the work whereunto I have called them" (Acts xiii. 2). "Being sent forth by the Holy Ghost" (v. 4). The sovereign call—"He calleth unto Him . . . and they came unto Him." Communion—"He appointed twelve, that they should be with Him." Commission—then sent forth on service, to proclaim as heralds, and to have power (Mark iii. 13-15, R.V.).

For service we must study the Word of God, for the truth which the Word of God reveals is the will of God for man. Sanctification by truth is bringing man into the will of God; service is carrying out through man the will of God. "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done."

"And Went Not!"

(Matt. xxi. 30.)

TO CONVENTION VISITORS.

By A MISSIONARY IN THE FIELD.

"On earth peace" (Luke ii. 14).
"The Dayspring from on high hath visited us . . . to guide our feet into the way of peace" (Luke i. 78, 79).

Peace, pledged at last, to man!
Oh! if there only ran
Thrill of such surety through one human soul,

Would not the swift joy start
From beating heart to heart,
Lighting all lands, leaping from pole to pole?

Nay, if it be—alas!
A vision, let us sleep and dream it true!
Or—sane and broad awake—
For its great sound and sake,
Take it, and make it earth's; and Peace ensue!

E. Arnold.

WHY have I come to this Convention? This is more difficult to answer than I thought, yet I ought to be ready to answer. Not that I am obliged to give my reasons to any human inquirer, but I owe it to God. He it is who has permitted me to come, and therefore I expect He has a purpose in bringing me.

Do I understand the chief object for which this Conference is convened?

The holiness of God's people. Need I remind myself that it is God's voice that He has brought me to hear? His voice through whomsoever it may come. He may speak through one of the most gifted speakers, or through a private conversation, a hymn, a prayer, or even a silent influence—the behaviour of one of His children. It is His voice for which I am to listen, and to hear which He has brought me to this place.

This little essay may be God's messenger. It is His voice which reminds me once more of a command so familiar, yet so sadly neglected; so simple yet so tremendous are the issues dependent on its being obeyed or disobeyed.

Let me briefly recall the circumstances of its giving.

The Lord Jesus had lived a life of abandonment to God—His one object the will of the Father. He showed us how to do God's will. Then He died that death of Love that passeth knowledge, that He might win us to do God's will. After His resurrection He left us this last command, the obeying of which can be the only means (as far as we know) by which He can win what He purchased "at such tremendous cost."

Then He ascended to the Father, and sent us the power to enable us to do His will and obey His command.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature" (Mark xvi. 15). "Lovest thou Me?" "Lord, Thou knowest all things; Thou knowest that I love Thee." "If ye love Me, keep My commandments."

Can there be true holiness if I have in any way neglected this command? Am I awake to the terrible responsibility which will be mine when I realize that I have neglected, disobeyed, or failed adequately to obey the last great command of Him who has saved me, and to whom I have sworn allegiance?

This is the question which the devil does all in his power to keep in the background. A thousand other questions receive attention, occupy the intellect, and absorb much of the wealth of the Church, not only in addition to (that might be right), but to the neglect of this chief of all questions.

"If a man has no passion to convert, he needs converting."

Is it not a grievous fact that instead of candidates for the foreign field increasing there is a decided decrease; that our Missionary Societies have to record a deficit at the end of the financial year; that in some cases workers are tried through shortness of funds even at their posts? There is a talk of the "heathen at home," as if the sending of more missionaries abroad would deprive these of the Gospel! Depend upon it, it would be a blessing—perhaps the commencement of a great revival in the homeland, if there could be a great outgoing of Christian workers at home to other lands where the people "sit in darkness." Even then would not the proportion of workers be far greater at home than abroad?

Think of the Mohammedan world, the most neglected of any field, with one worker to a million souls!

By what method of computation of proportion can we justify the distribution of our resources as Christ's followers, in the face of such a fact?

But though much more might be said, the sum of the whole matter is this—that God's voice is saying to me, as clearly and as truly as when Christ uttered the words, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Obey I must. How? God will reveal to me. I obey as I go myself or by proxy. Even the word "proxy" may mislead me, for though to obey may not mean in my case that I go personally (God will show me), it does mean a going out of myself. For to obey must mean sacrifice—it will cost something.

It will mean some, who have never thought before that they could leave their spheres of labour, giving up themselves to follow the Lamb to Africa, to India, to China, or elsewhere. It will mean some who cannot go themselves giving to the Lord what may cost them something, to send their representative or representatives to be God's voice to the heathen, Jews, or Moslems.

It will mean all giving themselves to prayer—constant, intelligent, believing prayer, and doing all that they can that the command may be obeyed.

True holiness of heart and life must result in obedience, and when "this Gospel shall have been preached for a witness unto all nations, then shall the end come" (Matt. xxiv. 14).

"To obey is better than sacrifice."

"To feel is but to dream, until we do."

"Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, . . . but he that doeth the will of My Father." "Who will have all men to be saved and to come unto the knowledge of the Truth" (1 Tim. ii. 4).

"How shall they hear without a preacher?" (Rom. x. 14).

"God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself . . . and committed unto us the word of reconciliation" (2 Cor. v. 19).

"Lovest thou Me?" (John xxi. 16).

"If ye love Me, keep My commandments" (John xiv. 15), and

"Preach the Gospel to every creature" (Mark xvi. 15).

"Jesus Wept."

(John xi. 35.)

Tune—"The Christian Choir," No. 160.

Draw near, ye weary, bowed, and broken-hearted;
Ye onward travellers to a peaceful bourne;
Ye, from whose path the light has all departed;
Ye who are left in solitude to mourn;
Though o'er your spirit has the storm-cloud swept,
Sacred are sorrow's tears, since "Jesus wept."

The bright and spotless Heir of endless glory
Wept o'er the woes of those He came to save;
And angels wondered when they heard the story,
That He who conquered death wept o'er the grave.
For 'twas not when His lonely watch He kept
In dark Gethsemane that "Jesus wept"—

But with the friends He loved, whose hopes had perished,
The Saviour stood, while through His bosom rushed
A tide of sympathy for those He cherished,
And from His eyes the burning dewdrops gushed:
And bending o'er the tomb where Lazarus slept,
In agony of soul, then "Jesus wept."

Lo! Jesus' power the sleep of death has broken,
And wiped the tear from sorrow's drooping eye;
Look up, ye mourners, hear what He has spoken—
"He that believes on Me shall never die."
Through faith and love your spirits shall be kept;
Hope brighter grew on earth when "Jesus wept."

Simon Peter.

OUTLINE BIBLE-READINGS.

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, B.D.

9.—A LESSON ON FORGIVENESS.

IMMEDIATELY following the lesson on Humility comes one on Forgiveness. Study Matt. xviii. 21-35. Note carefully the deep underlying connection between Humility and Forgiveness. (Bruce, Training of the Twelve.) Pride and vindictiveness go together. Personal ambition is usually very sensitive to injuries, quick to take offence, slow to forgive.

I.—PETER'S QUESTION.

1. How it arose. See v. 15. "Thy brother." Probably asked for guidance in the practical application of our Lord's counsel (vv. 15-17). Or possibly it may have been due to resentment consequent on the taxgatherer's question (xvii. 24), which seemed to reflect on his Master.

2. What it showed. (a) Was it prompted by any suppressed feelings of resentment? Consider previous dispute about "greatness" (xviii. 1-4) and the new teaching about the Cross (so foreign to Peter's prevalent ideas). Recent journeys of Christ and Apostles had been in private in North Palestine. Peter preferred popularity and crowds, and his feelings may have been hurt by question about the tax. (b) Or was it not rather a genuine desire to learn the Master's will on this matter? The Jewish custom was to bear injuries three times, and then to regard duty as done. Peter wanted light on the subject. Note the mixture of childlikeness and childishness. Childlike in the earnestness and sincerity which would go up to seven times. Childish in the thought that a repetition so many times and no more would be really magnanimous. Note the precise form of the question, "My brother"—sad that brothers should do thus. "Sin against me." But may it not be that I sin against him?

II.—OUR LORD'S REPLY.

1. The Meaning (22). Seventy times seven meant unlimited forgiveness. Cf. Hebrew of Isa. lv. 7, "He will multiply to pardon." This is God's method of forgiveness, what has been well called the "celestial arithmetic" of forgiveness. How surprised Peter must have been by this difference between seven and four hundred and ninety times! How puny and poor was his own love.

2. The Illustration (23-34). Note three contrasts in the parable. (a) The Debts (£2,000,000 and £4). (b) The Creditors. (c) The Doom.

3. The Application (35). (a) Reason of forgiveness.—"His brother." (b) Thoroughness of forgiveness.—"From your hearts." (c) Certainty of retribution.—"So also." (d) Universality of retribution.—"Everyone."

III.—FORGIVENESS IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

1. Its prominence. (a) In our Lord's ministry (Matt. v. 23, 24; v. 39-48; vi. 12-15; Mark xi. 25; Luke xvii. 3, 4). (b) In the early church (Rom. xii. 14, 17, 19; Eph. iv. 32; Col. iii. 13; Philem. x. 18; 1 Pet. iii. 9).

2. Its necessity. Study the Lord's Prayer. Condition of blessing being realized by us. Unforgiving spirit and harbouring of grudges fatal to spirituality.

3. Its Meaning. Three words used in the Greek. (a) Negative—aphièmi, to let go, remit; apoluó, to dismiss, send away, i.e., to remove the trouble; (b) Positive—charizomai, to act graciously, i.e., to show a positively Christlike loving spirit and not merely to ignore the past wrong. In Hebrew, three words for forgiveness—(1) to cover; (2) to lift off; (3) to send away.

4. Its Secret. Eph. iv. 23; Col. ii. 13; and iii. 13. The realization of what God has forgiven us is the only way of maintaining a forgiving spirit to others. "Keep yourselves in the love of God" (Jude 21).

Modern Soothsaying.—The fact that crystal globes, and other paraphernalia for the use of those who desire to look into the future, are now exposed for sale in West End windows does not say much for the intelligence of at least a section of "society." The other day a woman who had been professing by means of palmistry to unveil the future to a number of servant girls, was sent to gaol by a London magistrate to perform a month's hard labour. Her plea that others were permitted to carry on the nefarious business openly—a plea supported by the evidence of the advertisement boards of the fortune tellers located in fashionable streets—may well give rise to a question—upon what principle these restricted and isolated prosecutions are made. Undoubtedly it would be far more effective to deal with the soothsayers of the fashionable thoroughfares, but such a step would be quite out of keeping with the justice which provides for the due punishment of lads who play at pitch and toss in a back street, and leaves the gambler in the ring severely alone.

THE

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Oh the Blessedness!

Psa. xxxii. 1; (Heb.); Matt. v. 1-12.

THERE is a condition of soul which may be experienced and enjoyed by every child of our race, which the Master calls Blessedness. He uses the same word to describe it as is employed to set forth the Being of God, and the Life of the Saints who have passed beyond the vail:

Blessed are ye (Matt. v. 11).

The Gospel of the Blessed God (1 Tim. i. 11).

Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord (Rev. xiv. 13).

This condition of soul, however, need not be postponed until we too, in our turn, pass the Gate of the City, and find ourselves amid "the solemn troops and sweet societies" of eternity. It may be entered here and now. The fragrance of this garden steals through the crowded and noisy cities of our modern civilization, like the morning air laden with the scent of new-mown grass. The gates of this city stand open, night and day, for lonely souls, in country and sequestered places, where the noise of our city-life cannot reach, and at any moment they may tread its thronged streets, listen to its murmured speech, and join in its vast convocations, of which it is written: "Ye are come to Mount Sion, the City of the Living God, to Myriads of Angels, to the General Assembly and Church of the First-born."

. . . . . .

Blessedness does not depend on outward possessions, such as worldly goods, or lands, or high birth, or erudite culture. Indeed, there are words of Christ which suggest that they who stand possessed of these things will find it harder to find that Paradise which has not yet faded from our world, and to pass through the gates of that city which are before our eyes, if only they were opened to discern them. When he repeated this Sermon of the Mountain-Heights and of the Dawn, to the multitudes that stood breathless beneath its spell, our Lord said, "Woe unto you that are rich . . . Woe unto you that are full . . . Woe unto you, ye that laugh." He did not mean that such would be necessarily excluded, but that entrance into blessedness would be harder for them; as when, after dusk, a camel strives to get through the needle-eye-gate, placed in the city wall for belated pedestrians.

There is no soul of man so illiterate, so lonely, so poor in this world's goods, so beset with hereditary sins and demoniacal temptations, that may not at this moment step suddenly into this life of blessedness, begin to drink of the river which makes glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High. It is not necessary to ascend into Heaven to bring it down, or to descend into the Depth of the Abyss to bring it up; it has not to be wrestled or wept for; it is not to be obtained by the merit of holy deeds or as the guerdon of devoted service; it is not a reward which comes after long years in the council chamber or on the tented field. We have not to do, or feel, or suffer, but only to be; to cultivate certain dispositions; to possess a nature, here carefully defined: and instantly blessedness begins—an earthly light breaks on the soul, which is destined to increase into the full radiance of Heaven's high noon. "Come in, thou blessed of the Lord" (can you not hear the angel voices?) "wherefore standest thou without?"

. . . . . .

The Ingredients of this Experience are enumerated thus . . .

First, it is blessed to belong to that invisible Kingdom, which is already in our world, including within its ever-expanding circle all gracious souls of every race and age, breathing the ozone of Heaven into the stale and exhausted atmosphere of earth, its King the Enthroned Lamb, its subjects the child-like, the forgiving, the gentle, and the pure; its laws love; its advances soft, sweet, irresistible as the dawn; its duration eternal. It is a blessed thing to know that one has the franchise and freedom of that kingdom, that one need never go out from its holy and strong embrace, and that men like John the Divine may greet us thus—"Your brother and partaker with you in the Kingdom which is in Jesus" (Rev. i. 9).

Second, it is blessed to be comforted with the comfort which only God can give. When the eyes are wet with tears that refuse to be staunched, to feel a hand soft and strong wiping them away, and to discover that it is

> The Hand that can ruffle an evening calm,
> And bears Calvary's mark on its pierced palm.

When the face is buried deep amid the dried flowers and leaves of departed joys, to hear a whisper which thrills the sense, growing fuller and clearer, like a flute, and to detect in its syllables the assurances of the Comforter Himself; when the sepulchre seems to hold all that made life worth living, to become suddenly aware that there is a presence near at hand, and to find that the Gardener Himself is at hand to lift the drooping plant of life, unfurling its petals again to the light; to be strong in God's strength, comforted with the paracletism of the Paraclete, to drink of the brook by the way:—here is blessedness which eye hath not seen, neither the ear of ordinary men heard, nor the unregenerate heart perceived. Even the bereaved and lonely heart, sitting amid the wreckage of all its joys and hopes, may be aware of this.

Third, it is blessed to inherit the earth. When that condition of soul is reached of which the Master is speaking,

> Heaven above is softer blue,
> Earth around is sweeter green,
> Something lives in every hue,
> Christless eyes have never seen.

There is a new rapture in common sights, a new meaning in common sounds; lilies are robed more sumptuously than Solomon; the winged and furred denizens of the woodlands become, as St. Francis found them, "little brothers and sisters." As Cowper said, such a man may be poor compared with those whose mansions glitter in his sight, but he calls the delightful scenery all his own. Every wind wafts him blessing. All things work together for his good. Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all things bring their tribute to the man who has learnt Christ's secret, which, like the fabled philosopher's stone, turns everything into gold. What inheriting the earth means, is shown in the words of one of Christ's most proficient pupils, when he said: "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." You may own vast estates, and get nothing from them.

Fourth, it is blessed to be filled. In this life, as well as in the next, it is possible to hunger no more, neither thirst any more. Not to hunger for the husks that the swine eat, because filled with the provisions of the Father's table! Not to thirst for the heated pools at which the children of the world seek to quench their thirst, because the well of water, that springs up to eternal life, is within! Not to clamour for the flesh-pots of Egypt, because there is so plentiful a provision of manna. Oh, it is a blessed thing to be filled with the Spirit, to be full of joy and peace, to be fulfilled with God's grace and heavenly benediction, to be filled with the fruits of righteousness, to be filled with the knowledge of His will, to be filled "unto all the fulness of God." Tennyson says that the babble of the Wye among the hills lasts until the tidal wave fills up its channels to the brim; and the heart is restless till it is full; but when it has realized this blessed fulness, dipped deep into the fulness of God, and lifted out dripping with flashing drops, ah, then, evil has no lure to charm, the fear of man cannot intrude, the charms and blandishments of sense are neutralized. What more can the soul want than to be filled with Thee, O God, who didst make us for Thyself? Cannot a flower be satisfied which has a sun to shine on it, and a glacier-fed river to wash its roots!

Fifth, it is blessed to be the recipient of mercy. There is never a moment of our life in which we do not stand in need of mercy, both at the hands of our fellows, and, above all, from the hand of God. There is no saint in the heavenly Kingdom, who does not, at some time or other, need to appropriate the petitions of the man after God's own heart, and say, "Have mercy on me, O God, according to Thy loving-kindness, according to the multitude of Thy tender mercies."

We need mercy from little children, startled by our harsh tones; mercy from our servants and employés, hindered by our inconsistencies, our quick temper and imperious tones; mercy from husband or wife, brother or sister, neighbour or friend—above all, mercy from the Most Merciful; and it is blessed to know that we have it in Heaven's own measure, full, pressed down, and running over. So far from it making us lax in permitting sin, it predisposes us to more mercy towards the failings of others, more mercilessness to ourselves.

Sixth, it is blessed to have the vision of God. Not to terrify, as when Moses hid his face, and Elijah went into the covert of the cave, and John fell at His feet as dead; but more after the fashion of Mr. Hewitson's experience, when he says: "Our Redeemer is no mere abstraction, no ideality that has its being only in our shifting thoughts. He is the most personal of all persons, the most living of all who live. He is 'the First and the Last, and the Living One.' He is so near us, as the Son of God, that we can feel His warm breath on our souls, and as the Son of Man He has a heart like these hearts of ours—a human heart, meek and lowly, tender, kind, and sympathizing. In the Word—the almost viva voce utterance of Himself—His arm of power is stretched forth beside you, that you may lean on it with all your weight; and in the Word, also, His love is revealed, that on the bosom of it you may lay your aching head, and forget your sorrow in the abundance of His consolation. To the Living One, who died, we must look, that we may be weaned and won over to God, that we may be strengthened, spiritualized, and sanctified." Who would not desire a life like this, in which God should be the one dear Presence, the one familiar and ever-present Object of thought, the Friend with whom an increasing dialogue is maintained? A young girl, employed in a shop, told me the other day that her consciousness of God and her converse with Him had now lasted for three years, and that difficult things had become easy, as though He arranged all and smoothed out the creases.

Seventh, it is blessed to be recognised as the sons of God. Some are undoubtedly children of God, who are not like God. It would require a good deal of scrutiny to detect His image and superscription on their face, or the tones of His voice in their speech. The manners of the Heavenly Court are not evident in their demeanour. The courtesy and thoughtfulness that characterized the Son are not characteristic of their behaviour to the poor and timid, to little children and women. They too often break the bruised reed and quench the smoking flax; they strive and cry and cause their voices to be heard in the street; they do not bear, believe, hope, and endure all things, and elicit the love of men to Him whose name and nature they bear in every lineament. Be it ours to be imitators of God as dear children, to be harmless and blameless, the sons of God without rebuke—to be thus is to be blessed.

Eighth, we come back to the Kingdom of Heaven. For blessedness is like a spiral staircase, we are always coming back to the same standpoint from a higher position, on the circling round. When we begin to live for God we find ourselves in the Kingdom, and are ravished with the beauty of the Dawn; but after years have been spent in doing His will and walking in His fellowship, there is a new depth of loveliness and significance in its infinite and divine contents.

O Christ, Thou King of Glory, uplift us above the common dusty road of mortal life, lift us into Thy life, above the heads of our enemies, above the weight of our flesh, above the glamour of the world, and make us most blessed for ever, and glad with joy in Thy presence!

Tussles with Sceptics.

BY REV. JOHN TUCKWELL.

I HAVE had many tussles with sceptics; but those who every Sunday and nearly every night of the week pursue their relentless campaign against the truth in Hyde Park, near the Marble Arch, are amongst the most daring and blasphemous I ever met. If, in the Apostle Paul's day there were in Crete "unruly and vain talkers and deceivers," of whom he so emphatically said, "whose mouths must be stopped," someone ought to stand face to face with these men.

Thousands go by and hear their blasphemies who never hear them directly challenged and confuted. A few weeks ago I went out to undertake this disagreeable task. On arriving, I found a large crowd, nearly all men, assembled around the infidel platform—a little portable rostrum just large enough for one, and ascended by three or four steps. A colloquy was going on between the speaker and some Christian man in the crowd who was asking questions. The speaker challenged his questioner to mount the platform and speak, but he declined to do so. The offer was then made to anyone else in the audience, and I stepped forward.

The assertions I had to meet were that the Bible was the "filthiest book" in existence, the proof of which was that no man dare read some parts of it in public, and that it was unfit to be put into the hands of children. My answer was that the parts of the Bible complained of were historic, and the offences referred to are condemned by it. The best conducted newspapers sometimes contain references to foul and criminal offences; but should we, on that account, be justified in denouncing them as filthy? I doubted not that these gentlemen had occasion sometimes to speak with their wives on matters they would not refer to before their children. Should I be justified on that ground in denouncing them as "filthy men." Many men listening to me, I doubted not, were accustomed to handle machinery, and the value of a machine was determined by what it could produce. Let the Bible be judged thus. Wherever it went, it elevated the race, and the highest type of man on earth to-day is the product of the Bible. A book that could do that could not be a bad book.

AN ORDERLY DEBATE.

This initiated a long, and in the main, perfectly orderly debate. My opponent and I spoke in turns for about a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes each; and our debate lasted for nearly two hours. It would be impossible to relate it all in detail. A great variety of subjects was brought up—the story of Creation; the merits of Charles Bradlaugh, described as "the greatest man of the nineteenth century"; the deficiences of the Christian churches; the persecution of heretics; the low state of morals in Christian countries, &c. Of course, I found it necessary to disclaim any intention of defending what was wrong among the Christian churches; but I stood by the Scriptures without flinching. Asked off-hand how I defined "Christianity," I replied, "As the life and teaching of Jesus Christ!" "Oh!" replied my opponent, "the life and teaching of Jesus Christ?" Unable to make anything out of my definition, he rambled in search of other arguments, of some of which he had the honesty to say—"But, of course, that's bunkum."

I confess I never in my life felt more alone than, as time after time I ascended the steps of that hateful little platform, with hundreds of men before me, and a little ring of sceptics growing increasingly angry within arm's length. "Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me and strengthened me," as he did Paul. At length, when the hour was growing late, a stout, large-made man came elbowing his way towards me, while I stood wondering what new opponent I should have to encounter. Coming up to me, however, he seized my arm, and said, "If you did nothing more for twelve months than bear the testimony you have borne this evening, you would have done a splendid work—one worth living for."

GENESIS CRITICISED.

At the break-up of the meeting, the secretary of a society working on Clapham Common, who I found had been the sceptic's questioner at the beginning of the meeting, expressed his admiration of my part in the debate, and invited me to come over the next Sunday to help his society. Accordingly I went. But the conflict with unbelief there is of a much milder character. Just as I was leaving, however, somewhat late in the evening, an aged but evidently educated man got a little knot around him, and discoursed on the early records of Genesis. The story of the creation, he said, was derived from the Babylonians, and the story of the Deluge was a legend which could, in some shape or form, be found among many different nations, and so forth. I craved permission to reply. Having read the Hebrew story and also the Babylonian stories, I declared that it was absolutely impossible that the first chapter of Genesis, for instance, which was strictly in accordance with all the assured facts of modern science, could have been derived from the cumbrous mass of legend, superstition, and polytheism, with which a small modicum of truth was overlaid, in the Babylonian accounts.

We had also been treated to a new argument against the Deluge — the fact that Hebrews, Babylonians, Assyrians, Greeks, Egyptians, Chinese, and others, had traditions of the Deluge, was treated as evidence against it! One would have thought that such testimony was powerful evidence that some such event must have taken place in the early history of our race.

In conflicts such as I have described, I take care, as far as possible, to present the way of salvation clearly for the guidance of any weary souls sincerely desirous of knowing the truth.

Good service is, no doubt, done by many well-meaning men who go out to lecture on various branches of Christian evidences; but there is a sore need for a few thoroughly well educated and competent debaters, able to enter into a hand-to-hand conflict with these daring infidels.

The Christian Workers' Bible.

WE recently announced that Dr. Torrey had made an important contribution to the literature of practical evangelization, in the form of an Appendix to THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS' BIBLE, issued from the Oxford University Press. This edition of the Holy Scriptures is in two forms—one in Long Primer type, a marvel of clearness; and another in Emerald type, a singularly handy book. Printed on the famous thin (India) paper, these editions are remarkably portable.

In this edition of the Bible, the more general Students' Helps are left on one side, and only those that are likely to be in continual demand for the purposes of ready reference are included. Dr. Torrey's "Suggestive Helps for Christian Workers," which are given in twenty-four pages, are rich in direction as to the use of Scripture—in dealing with inquirers, meeting objections, and unfolding the Word. Then follows a Dictionary of Scripture Proper Names, with pronunciation and meaning; a Subject-Index to the Scriptures; also a Concordance, and a series of maps.

Many have come to think of "Teachers'" Bibles as unwieldy and confusing—as a Bible bound up with another volume of like size! Who has not wished for an edition with a compact concordance and a carefully prepared subject-index? The CHRISTIAN WORKERS' BIBLE is just this; it is not bulky, but is, in many respects, an ideal companion volume for those who are engaged in the Master's business. Prospectuses, giving particulars of bindings and prices, may be had from Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 30, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Summer in Manxland.—I.

SEEKERS after rest and refreshment for mind and body cannot fail at this season of the year to find it in the beautiful Isle of Man. Majestic mountains, delightful vales, fairy glens, and rippling streams, vie with each other in claiming admiration, while bracing sea-breezes sweep the island from end to end.

As a centre from which to make a general survey, Douglas of course stands supreme; but during his peregrinations the quiet and observant tourist will soon discover for himself other and more charming spots for a protracted stay.

In the past, Douglas has won for itself a reputation (not altogether above reproach) as the headquarters of the unmistakable, and frequently "unspeakable," "tripper." But I am informed that an improvement has set in. One incidental cause of this is worth noting, namely, that the newer and larger steamers of the Isle of Man Steam Packet Company, running in connexion with the excellent train service of the L. and N.W.R., from Liverpool and Fleetwood to Douglas, make it much more possible than formerly for ladies to accompany their husbands and brothers on their holiday, to the decided elevation of the tone of the place. There are other services also viâ Barrow, as well as from Scotch and Irish ports.

On Sunday last, two interesting spots claimed our attention. The morning service at Kirk Braddan on a fine day is one long to be remembered. The old and new churches stand side by side (the former being disused), surrounded by a quaint and shady burial-ground. When the weather is propitious, the service is held under the trees, and as many as ten thousand persons have been known to attend. Distinctly Evangelical in form and earnest in character, one cannot doubt that impressions are made by it upon the hearts of the curious or the careless, while those who seek to meet with God will not fail to find that He draws nigh to them.

Later in the day, a visit was paid to the "Boys' Camp," a mile or so out of Douglas, which caters for young men in need of a healthy vacation. Most of these are connected with the Y.M.C.A., and for them special terms are made; but all comers are welcome. Situated on sloping ground, facing a broad expanse of sea, it forms an ideal spot for the purpose. It is open for six or eight months in the year, from early spring to late autumn, and during this period between three and four thousand youths avail themselves of the unique privilege, for any period ranging from two to six weeks, at an inclusive charge (according to age), varying from 15s. to 19s. per week. The diet must needs be liberal, for it is a "hungry" air; and the change wrought in the physical condition of the visitors can be readily imagined.

Nor is the spiritual aspect neglected. A succession of morning and evening "chaplains" conduct services twice daily, but more than this, their tactful personal influence throughout the camp is immeasurable. The majority of the young fellows themselves being also on the Lord's side, they are able to help one another, as well as to seek to lead others to the Saviour. Thus a thoroughly healthy, manly, spiritual atmosphere is created and maintained, and friendships are formed which ripen and last for years. The superintendent, Mr. J. Cunningham, is well suited for the work; on him devolve the responsibilities of the tents and the general comfort, and his kindly bearing endears him to all his numerous protégés.

The facilities for insular travel are most complete. The railway service is abundant, comfortable, and reasonable, while a capital electric tramway (with closed and open cars), between Douglas and Ramsey, renders accessible some of the most beautiful scenery of Manxland.

It is gratifying to note that Douglas is by no means handed over to the devil, nor to the light and worldly side of things. Clergy and ministers of various denominations labour strenuously in the Gospel; temperance and social reformers are on the alert; the Free Church Council has arranged for a mission by Gipsy Smith in August; the Salvation Army is well to the fore; and year by year the open-air resounds with the Word of Life in the hearing of thousands of passers-by. In these services the clergy, and occasionally the Bishop of Sodor and Man, take part. By these means many who came with no thought of God return to their homes to serve Him.

The London Open-air Mission joins in this good work during the month of August, when a great mission is held on the beach day by day, always with cheering results. This year the Mission hopes to sends five evangelists. They hold a daily prayer meeting in the Baptist Chapel, Broadway, at ten o'clock. The services on Douglas Beach are at eleven and seven, while the afternoon is occupied with evangelistic visits to different parts of the island. Rev. John Davidson, the Presbyterian minister of Douglas, is a warm friend and supporter of the mission, and acts as its local correspondent and organizer.

The tourist cannot fail to be struck with the almost insatiable craving for dancing which captivates the multitude of trippers. For this there is, unhappily, only too much provision made; and taken together with its associated temptations and facilities for drinking, it cannot but act injuriously upon the physical and moral well-being of its devotees. Hence Christian residents the more gladly welcome the presence of Christian people during the holiday season; and there are very few places in the British Isles in which a more enjoyable holiday, judiciously spent, may be passed. Other points of interest may be noted in a future issue. G. E. M.

London City Mission.

A BRIEF but glorious day's respite from anxious toil for the Master in the Metropolis was enjoyed by the missionaries on the 7th inst. To the number of 370 they visited Trent Park, Mr. Frank A. Bevan's beautiful estate near New Barnet. This was the eighth time the annual holiday has been spent there. Mr. and Mrs. Bevan personally met their guests, and for the older brethren thoughtfully sent conveyances to the station. They were bidden to make the place their own for the day, conditional only on returning to the marquee at the appointed hours for dinner and tea.

No greater contrast could be imagined than the busy streets and begrimed by-ways of the City. Nature's soothing restfulness and peace clothed the landscape, and whichever way the eye turned it met with that which was at once inspiring and satisfying in the higher and better meaning of the words. Various recreations were open to the visitors, and during the afternoon an ambulance display gave proof of the ability of many missionaries to minister, if called on, to the bodily needs of men. Some seventy-three of the missionaries possess the "First Aid" certificates of the St. John Ambulance Association. This has to do mainly with the emergencies of the street. What of the home? The missionary's duty is to go from door to door, room to room. Here they find many who are both sick and sad. Thirty-six missionaries have qualified in home nursing, and can give comfort both to body and soul.

Numerous sympathisers and friends of the Mission were invited to the outing, including Canon Trotter, the Hon. Granville Waldegrave, Revs. George Martin (Clapton), E. A. Stuart (Bayswater), T. Pollock, W. Warren (vicar of Trent), W. Laycock (Holloway), J. Beardell (Southgate), and W. Kerr, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Hart-Dyke, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Trotter, with Dr. Small and Messrs. W. H. Seagram, H. Veitch and Eliot Howard (of the committee), and the general secretaries, Revs. T. S. Hutchinson and R. Dawson. After tea, Mr. Bevan, whose reception demonstrated the deep affection in which he is held by the rank and file of the missionaries, mentioned that they were first invited there in 1855. Prior to that Mrs. Bevan's dear and honoured father, Captain Trotter, had three times entertained them, of which gatherings two, if not three, missionaries present that day had some recollection.

BELFAST.

WE continue to receive hearty tributes to the value of the recent campaign of Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones, in Belfast. Rev. J. McMillan writes: "The mission presented as striking a series of meetings as have ever been witnessed in this city. The speaker seemed to walk amid the realities of the Unseen, and in the most graphic manner made them to live and flash before his auditors. We have passed through no more thrilling experience of late than that produced by a sight of the eager throng, now solemnized by some serious and awful view of life and responsibility, and now illumined by a gleam of Divine light coaxing and calling forth trust and confidence and love. We have never seen a more jubilant multitude than at the final service, when old and young clasped hands and sang together a song of Zion, full of the most childlike trust and the most rapturous exultation.

"Dr. Henry made religion to appear a strong, manly, virile thing. He appealed to the reason, the moral sense, the judgment. He caught men and held them, as we had not seen them gripped. Men of mature years, thoughtful youths, young women of education, intelligent boys, persons bearing the visible marks of life's stress and strain—all were prominent among those who decided to break with the past and make the great surrender.

"At every service an opportunity was given to sign the Temperance pledge, after a brief address on the duty and privilege of putting oneself right in relation to the first and worst foe of the home, the Church, and the nation. The plan proved eminently successful, and may have its due effect on Dr. Henry's future campaigns. No fewer than two thousand new pledges were taken. Of these not a few were taken by hard drinkers, hope for whom consists in the fact that they have pledged themselves to Christ for time and for eternity

"At the testimony meeting held after the close of the mission and the departure of our honoured friends for London this aspect of Temperance work was well illustrated.

"Mr. Jones, with his peculiar pathos and power rendered his solos in such a manner that the Evangel found its way into the hearts of many as he sang. Indeed, the hymn as sung by him seemed to give completion and crown to the address, for the former was chosen with special reference to the latter, and sung by one who is in the most thorough and prayerful sympathy with the aim of the Gospel.

"As the multitude, at an advanced hour, divided itself into contingents which wended their way homewards by various routes, the very air was vocal with echoes of the songs of the sweet singer; and here and there little groups, before parting at the end of street or avenue, joined in hymn and prayer, and commended one another to the grace of God. 'It is changed times along this road' was a frequent form of expression. We could only say to ourselves, 'It is a time for which many have laboured and prayed, sowing the seed and watering it as best they could; and now let sowers and reapers rejoice together.'"

THE EDINBURGH CASTLE, E.

The campaign at Dr. Barnardo's well-known mission church at Limehouse, E., has afforded many signs of encouragement. Mr. Walter Notman, the esteemed superintendent, speaks in high terms of the work. The missioners are now enjoying a season of well-earned rest. They resume their labours next month, commencing at Blackpool.

A Waifs' Festival.

THE charming model village for girls which Dr. Barnardo has erected at Barkingside, on the outskirts of London, was the scene of high festival on Saturday last. Founder's Day is always a great occasion in connection with the various institutions, when friends rally from far and near, and it was surely a happy thought to hold the celebrations at the famous centre at which so many little lasses rescued from distressing surroundings have been well educated and trained not only in the ordinary duties of life, but "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

The picturesque village, with its expanses of green sward, is an ideal place for such a function. It is, indeed, a remarkable colony, with its neat cottages, children's church, and village green; but more interesting still to the visitor than these signs of wise and careful direction were the knots of bright children, who smiled a welcome as train load after train load of guests poured through the gates.

The day's proceedings embraced many items. There were musical drills under the trees by a contingent of well-trained girls, cookery exhibits, chorus singing, and naval drill. A vast tent erected in the grounds was occupied by representative lads from the Stepney Causeway institutions, who gave both entertainment and instruction to troops of friends by their skilful workmanship in various trades. Here were bakers, printers, boot and shoe makers, and capable young craftsmen in coach-building, while the clang of hammer on anvil and the whirr of bellows told that in "the village smithy" there was a close devotion to business.

AFTER THIRTY-SEVEN YEARS.

The chief gathering of the day was held in a capacious marquee. Lord Brassey presided. On such a hot day, and with such a huge congregation, it was a wise plan that made the proceedings spectacular rather than oratorical. Still there were some striking addresses, the first being an earnest tribute from the chairman.

Dr. Barnardo presented a capital report of his thirty-seventh year of work. "Begun in the humblest fashion, our institutions may be likened to that little mustard seed which, sown in feebleness, but in faith, became a great tree; yet it was the sun and the showers of heaven that nourished it. The first of these Homes was opened in defiance of all the rules of worldly prudence. It had no capital; not a penny in the bank, nor the promise of a shilling. It was simply and solely a tiny effort made by an altogether insignificant individual to follow what he then strongly felt to be the manifest leadings of the Holy Spirit. But the prayers of Christian friends were around it like an atmosphere, and true prayer was, as always, accompanied by blessed sympathy and earnest unceasing effort; so the growing work never lacked any good thing.

"Often the last shilling was expended, but always the coffers were replenished from our Lord's own inexhaustible treasury. Thus it has been even unto this day; and now, our large family of nearly 7,000 children, saved by God's help from the direst evils, is still, as ever, dependent upon supplies sent down from heaven, as literally as if an angel brought them. Who can doubt that these come in direct response to the petitions of Christ's servants, which ascend as daily incense to our Father's footstool from every country throughout the world?"

A RECORD OF PROGRESS.

A brief summary of the year's advances tells us that the Watts Naval Training School has advanced a stage. In the middle of the year Mr. E. H. Watts, the beneficent donor, "fell on sleep" before he had completed his design; but his son, Mr. Fenwick S. Watts, undertook to complete his father's work, and this he has done during the year at a very considerable outlay. Other items of progress include an orphanage for little girls opened at Northampton; premises at Birkdale, altered and furnished as an extension of the Home for Incurables; "ever-open door" Homes opened at Southampton and Hull; and industrial or other institutions inaugurated at Clapham, Norwood, Swansea, Llandudno, and Tunbridge Wells. The emigration statistics show that 1,053 boys and girls were sent out to Canada, as against a highest previous total of 1,013; and the number of children boarded out in country districts has grown to 2,926, as against the previous year's total of 2,373.

"THE HARDSHIPS OF WAIFDOM."

Dr. Barnardo points out that no deformity and no physical defect of any kind or degree marks a case as ineligible. The one and only qualification is destitution, which is made all the more terrible by weakness of mind or body. A certain number of children, especially those of tender age, are received in a condition which precludes the possibility of recovery. Many of them, however, linger on for years, and, although loving care is never grudged them, these constitute of necessity a heavy tax upon the resources. For the less grievously afflicted, who are yet not up to the ordinary standard of health, special provision has also to be made whilst the various infirmaries show a high average of temporary invalids—of itself an indication how severely the hardships of Waifdom affect its juvenile victims.

The meeting included the presentation of prizes by the Duke of Argyll to girls trained in the institutions who have retained their situations, with credit, for periods varying from one to nine years, and some hearty words of encouragement were spoken by Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe. The gist of tribute and appeal may be given in Dr. Barnardo's words: "that a work should be carried on from year to year without State aid, without patronage, with practically no invested funds, dependent, under God, from day to day upon the free-will offerings of His own people, throughout all sections of the One Church of Christ in every land, is a witness to the mighty power of faith and love which can neither be gainsaid nor resisted."

Northwood Convention.

FOR several years past a Conference has been held at the romantic spot known as Jordans Meeting House, near Chalfont St. Giles, and famous as the burial place of William Penn. The numbers having outgrown the limits of the old meeting house the place of assembly has been removed to Northwood, where the meetings were held on Thursday, July 2. The subject was "Life in Christ; Life for Christ; and Life with Christ." The vicar of Northwood, Rev. E. B. Backhouse, presided at all the meetings.

The day began with an early prayer meeting, at which Rev. F. Paynter, of Guildford, gave a short address on the words, "Make ready a people prepared for the Lord." In the forenoon, the Chairman read Col. ii., and gave verse 6 as the key-note of the Convention.

Rev. Evan Hopkins spoke on Rom. xv. 29 as a golden chain, the four links of which are (1) Christ; (2) the Gospel of Christ; (3) the blessing of the Gospel of Christ; (4) the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ.

Pastor Frank White directed attention to John xv. 4, showing how Christ identified Himself with His people.

The afternoon meeting was of a missionary character, and illustrative of how we may work "for" Christ in the evangelization of the world. Among the speakers were Mr. Robinson Souttar and Mr. Walter Sloan.

At the evening meeting Rev. J. M. Pollock, vicar of Little Heath, was the first speaker, followed by Rev. H. B. Macartney, who in the course of a very helpful address said he did not believe in sinless perfection, as undoubtedly there was sin in our natures. "If we say we have no sin we deceive ourselves." But there was no reason why we should practise it if we were walking "with Christ." When out in Australia a man once told him he was a sinner, and he agreed with him. The man also told him that God knew it. This he could also agree to. His friend then said, "Take care that you do not let any third person know it."

Sunday School Union Centenary.

DURING the past few days the Sunday School Union has been celebrating under the happiest of auspices the centenary of its formation. Tuesday morning, July 7, was devoted to the discussion of "The Work of the Union in the Past Century," and, with Sir George Williams in the chair, a most profitable time was spent. In the opening paper Mr. W. H. Groser, B.Sc. (senior honorary secretary), reviewed "The Literary Work" accomplished, and brought out the contrast between the aids to efficient effort which are now at the disposal of teachers and those with which the pioneers were equipped.

Spelling and reading books were the earliest requisites for the class; and these were carefully compiled, being made as far as possible vehicles for Scriptural instruction. A "Select List of Scriptures for a Course of Reading in Sunday-Schools" was in use before 1811, though the annual "Lists" were not begun till 1840. The further step, by which they became "International," was taken in 1872. It is interesting to learn that the "Notes on the Lessons" first appeared in 1841, followed by more help for the teacher in the Union Magazine in 1844.

Discussing "the Educational Work," Mr. Alfred Sindall (conductor of the normal class) traced an interesting development since in 1833 the first reading-room and library were established. The Sunday School Union Teachers' College, started in 1861, was discontinued after two years; but the influence of the teachers' examinations, begun in 1870, has gone steadily forward, acting specially as a stimulus to the foundation and maintenance of training classes.

Under the title, "The Missionary Work," Mr. Charles Waters said that as early as 1828 there were evidences of financial and other help given to workers in other lands. In 1864 definite steps were taken to promote the formation of Sunday-schools on the Continent of Europe. The first secretary for India was appointed in 1889. "Other Phases of the Work" were dealt with by Mr. F. F. Belsey, and "The Prevailing Motive" by Rev. Alexander Smellie.

A "School of Child Study" was held on Tuesday afternoon, under the presidency of Mr. George Hamilton Lawrance (Montreal). Thereafter Mr. George White, M.P., took the chair, and Mr. Lawrance read an able paper on "The Demands of the New Century upon the Sunday School." Rev. Alexander Smellie dealt with "The Worst Foes," and Rev. James Watkins with "The Church's Care of the Young." A great rally was held at Queen's Hall in the evening when the Earl of Aberdeen presided. Among the speakers were Rev. Dr. Potts (Toronto), Rev. C. H. Kelly, and Mr. Gipsy Smith.

Thursday was spent in Conference on such important topics as "The Mental Equipment of the Teacher," "The Relation of Mind to Heart in the Work," and "The Reading which Feeds the Heart."

On Friday evening, Archdeacon Sinclair presided over an "international fellowship meeting." After the presentation of an address of welcome by Sir George Williams and Lord Kinnaird on behalf of the National Council of Young Men's Christian Associations, the chairman touched the deepest of all needs, as he urged on teachers the extreme importance of prayer, and expressed the opinion that the prayers in which they led their scholars should always be extempore and in simple language. Their aim should not be merely to impart instruction, but to form strong, firm, Christian characters. Brief greetings from continental Sunday-school workers were given by Mr. Palm, of Sweden, Pastor J. B. Sellevold, of Norway, Pastor Charles Bieler, of Paris, and Pastor Claus Peters, of Berlin. Greetings from Australia and India were given by Mr. A. B. Field, of Melbourne, and Mrs. Williamson, of Barisal; after which Mr. Marion Lawrance spoke for the United States, and Rev. Dr. Potts for Canada.

Fifty Years of Philanthropy.

THE RESCUE SOCIETY'S JUBILEE.

THE middle years of the reign of Queen Victoria witnessed the inception of many philanthropic enterprises, under the guidance of devoted Christian men and women who were concerned to apply the power and consolations of true religion to the solution of social problems. Among such beneficent undertakings was the Rescue Society, commenced in 1853 by that worthy friend of the suffering and distressed, the late Mr. Daniel Cooper. Many friends rallied to Mr. Cooper's side. Most of these have answered the home call, but there still remains, as a witness to the consistent excellence of the work, Mr. William S. Gard, who was a member of the committee at the outset—indeed, he moved the first resolution—and who still, at the age of ninety, takes an energetic part in the direction.

MR. C. STUART THORPE.

The present secretary, Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, who succeeded Mr. Cooper in 1883, adds to ripe experience of secretarial duties a fervent love for his work, as well as the gifts of tact and perseverance which are so necessary in dealing with the wayward and wilful. For twelve years previously he had served as assistant secretary of the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society. During his long term of service in his present position, Mr. Thorpe has well maintained the aim of the founders, to uphold the essentially Christian character of the Society. However desirable may be the outward reformation of evil-doers, it does not satisfy Mr. Thorpe and his committee, who realize that the only satisfactory change is that wrought by submission to the Lord Jesus Christ. All who enter the head-office must be struck by the words from 1 John iv. 10, that stand out in conspicuous letters: "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins." Mr. Thorpe has few spare moments, but these and his week-ends are given to the work of soul-winning. As an evangelistic preacher he is in constant demand by churches and missions in various parts of the country.

The progress made by the Society since its early days has been steady and solid. The ideal kept in view has been to have all things thorough, and the good effects of this laudable aim are demonstrated by the lasting character of the revolution wrought in the lives of many wanderers from the paths of rectitude. No fewer than 18,429 girls and women have found a welcome, with warm motherly hearts and strong hands to help them to purer, better lives. That is to say, for every twenty-four hours during the past fifty years one girl or woman has been received for months of training, and for a fresh start in life.

PREVENTIVE HOMES.

Three Homes, accommodating ninety-two girls, are established for those in great danger of falling into an immoral life. Sundry causes bring such to ruin: immoral neglectful parents, bad companions, or tendencies towards idleness, dishonesty, or frivolity. If, when it is seen that a girl is on the brink of ruin, she is taken from her evil surroundings and given discipline and training in habits of industry and usefulness, she will probably become a good servant-maid, and if to this can be added that she has yielded to the daily instruction in spiritual truth, the benefit is manifestly the greater.

According to the interesting pamphlet recently issued by the Society, the Maternity Home is unquestionably the most encouraging branch. "It is strange that many good people have no sympathy with such cases. 'Let them go to the workhouse,' is the reply of many. But is that the best place for them at such a time? Many are in despair, love was misplaced, confidence betrayed, tears and entreaties are ignored, the future is dark and gloomy, and the doors of their own homes are closed."

Since 1890, when this branch was undertaken, 220 cases have been helped and enabled to go forth with a hope and determination which has overcome many difficulties. Many are now happily married, a large number doing well in service, and only a very small percentage, not five per cent., have turned again to a life of sin.

THE MEDICAL HOME.

There are many who, though not sufficiently ill to be eligible for a hospital as in-patients, yet require a long course of medical treatment for the bodily suffering which has resulted from a career of flagrant ill-doing. Provision has long been made for such cases, where, with returning health, there has come opportunity for recovering lost character, and again living a life of purity and honesty.

SOME STRIKING FIGURES.

A summary of the statistics shows that 18,429 young women and girls have been admitted to, and trained in the Homes, since the Society was established; 9,112 have been placed in situations; and 5,777 were restored to their friends, or otherwise satisfactorily accounted for. Last year 479 were helped to a better life; 211 of those admitted had already fallen from the path of virtue, while 268 were received into the Preventive Homes. No fewer than 185 inmates can be accommodated in the seven Homes.

DO THEY STAND?

The record of early cases affords one more triumphant reply to the question, "Do they stand?" For example:—

On September 26, 1854, B—— was admitted to the first family Home established by this Society. She was ten years old. Her father died of cholera two days before, and her mother was a wicked, profligate, drunken woman. She remained four years in the Home, and was then sent to service. During all these forty-eight years she has kept in close touch with the Society. She is now a grandmother—a happy, cheerful woman, full of energy and spirit.

F—— was received in November, 1874, having lived a sad life of immorality for some years. An orphan, twenty-two years of age, she had drifted down, sold her clothes, and then——. She stayed fifteen months in the Home, and was then placed in service. She remained until her master and mistress died, and having been left a small legacy, she married and emigrated. After twenty years, she recently paid a visit to the old country, and at once called at the Home and inquired for her matron. When informed she was no longer there, she burst into tears, and said that she owed all she now is to that Home. Next day she called on the secretary, and it was touching to hear her speak of the old times and God's goodness to her ever since.

Under the title of "Then and Now," Mr. Thorpe prints some facts which should be full of encouragement to those who are engaged in this difficult work. Here is a selection from the list:—

October 16, 1894.—I——, fourteen years old. Very difficult to manage. At times appears not bright in intellect. When in the Home said to be a most troublesome child, uses bad language, swearing at other girls, deceitful, plausible, lazy, and bad tempered.

To-day.—Much loved and respected in her situation, where she has been five and a-half years. Is an earnest Christian worker, particularly bright and intelligent. Greatly valued by her employer.

December 4, 1896.—K——, twenty-one years of age, found by the secretary's wife wet through, the picture of misery and despair, waiting until darkness came on that she might climb the fence, and lay herself on the rail to "put an end to it all."

To-day.—After some years in service, she became the honourable wife of an industrious working man. Is now a happy mother, and has a comfortable home. Her gratitude is very touching.

A jubilee is naturally a time when thanksgiving for the blessing of the past finds generous expression. The Society has long been burdened with a heavy debt which, though it has been reduced to £2,000, seriously cripples the committee in their merciful work, and it is hoped that this year of jubilee may witness its extinction.

Aged Blind Reunion.

ON one day in the summer of each successive year, invitations are sent out from the Homes for the Aged Christian Blind at Crouch Hill to a large number of sightless persons in London workhouses, for a reunion in the grounds of the institution. This took place on Tuesday, July 7, when a company of 250 afflicted guests attended, and on their departure in the evening each received a gratuity of a shilling. Mr. and Mrs. Bright, the founders and hon. superintendents of the Homes, attach great importance to this gathering, which always concludes with an evangelistic meeting in the Jubilee Hall. In that same hall a successful educational class is also maintained, and this also is greatly prized. It is found to be a wonderful relief to the monotony of life in the case of blind persons, when they learn to read the raised type invented for them. It is also quite cheering to find how much sympathy they have for persons afflicted like themselves; and hence, one who can read, gladly volunteers to teach others. A blind woman of eighty-seven was recently among those who learned to read.

The company of aged blind folk had come from the City of London, St. Luke's, St. Pancras, and Islington workhouses. In the course of a brief address, Mr. Bright reminded those present that their annual reunion commenced with a little meeting in Junction Road thirty years ago, so that it had been growing, and no one could tell to what it might extend. Reference was made to the larger question of the Homes, and this was the more interesting because the twenty-fifth year of service will be entered upon in 1902, and there is a possibility of the work being extended by way of commemoration. Mr. Bright showed that 104 old people were now sheltered; in a few days two others would be received, and unless more accommodation was provided the work would have to stand still. The expense of that meeting and of the educational class carried on in the Jubilee Hall was £30 a year; and he thought that if some friends were aware of that fact they would send a cheque for the amount. Still, he believed that the money would come for these purposes.

A Mission of Mercy.

MR. T. M. WINTLE, OF PONTYMOILE.

TWENTY-FIVE years ago a young Welsh artizan was engaged in conversation with an old and experienced comrade regarding the spiritual condition of the masses. "What our people need," said the elder man, "is the Gospel."

That brief talk yielded rich fruit. The younger, Thomas Morgan Wintle, became so impressed that he determined to do what one individual could, by God's help, to make known "the glorious Gospel of the blessed God." On a summer evening in 1878 he made a humble commencement by preaching in a kitchen, the room and the stairs outside being filled with attentive listeners. That little gathering was the germ of the Pontymoile Undenominational Christian Mission, of which Mr. Wintle is the honorary superintendent, and which exercises a far-reaching influence for good in the district.

THE PARTING OF THE WAYS.

A native of the valley in which his work is located, our friend was born in 1855, the son of a publican. In early manhood he was employed at Pontymoile tin-works, but in 1873 proceeded to the Landore steel-works, near Swansea. Eager to win a position in life, the young man devoted himself with all energy to improve the processes of steel manufacture, and to that end gave up his Sabbaths to experimenting. But, as a friend has written in the interesting booklet "Life in Earnest," which gives a picturesque account of the Mission and its founder, the young workman "soon found himself at the parting of the ways, and a single fortnight saw the great events of his life—his marriage, his adhesion to total abstinence, and his conversion. A terrible accident at the works, by which a lad lost his life under most painful circumstances, was the means of stirring his heart." The next week Mr. Wintle became a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ. Soon after this came the Gospel meeting in the kitchen, and the determination to bring the Evangel to the front amid the dense population of sturdy toilers.

THE CONVERTS AT WORK.

First, a Ragged School was started. It was held in a disused granary, at the back of Mr. Wintle's house. As the work prospered, to the spiritual and material improvement of the boys, it followed in due course that parents were invited to attend evangelistic services. The granary was soon crowded out, and in 1879 an iron building was erected—largely by the labour of converts; while the work was pushed out into the surrounding district, so that a branch of the mission was established at Pontnewydd in 1884, and another at Cwmffrwdoer in 1886. With the growth of the work it was determined to build a permanent hall, and upon a site in Pontymoile—granted by Mr. J. C. Hanbury at a nominal rent—a new hall was built at a cost of £2,000, and opened free of debt. Another branch, with a resident evangelist, was started at Dowlais, where, by the aid of Lady Henry Somerset and Mr. Richard Cory, a permanent Home was established for the work. The one object, "To preach the simple Gospel to the poor who never enter a place of worship," has been steadfastly kept in view.

THE FLAT STONE OF CWMYNISCOY.

Reaching out after those who hold aloof from all things religious, Mr. Wintle has highly valued the opportunities of open-air preaching. When he inaugurated it in connection with his Mission, he stood upon a large flat stone near a public-house by the road side. "As he preached, the congregation grew. Some came with a desire to learn, some from curiosity, and one in anger. A half-drunken woman, a notorious character, resented as a personal rebuke a passage in the sermon, and after interrupting the preacher, took up a large stone, and declared with blasphemy that she would break his head with it if ever he came again. In ignorance of this threat, which was the common talk of the village, the preacher mounted his stone pulpit a week later, and as he spoke a large crowd listened. Some among them were prepared to see the interrupter of the previous gathering hurl a missile at the preacher's head; but no one was prepared for what happened. This woman, whom all had thought irreclaimable, wholly abandoned, was present, weeping tears of penitence, her hard heart broken by the story of the love of God. She had been a drunkard, but to abandon drink was not the greatest wrench, for she was a deserted wife who for years had been living with another man, the father of her five children.

Mr. T. M. WINTLE.

"But she knew that she could never have peace till she changed her course, and then came a bitter, agonizing struggle, the end of which was the necessary abandonment of her whole life. And the sacrifice was not in vain. From that day forward she had spiritual calm, and by a holy and useful life she has borne testimony that God is able to save unto the uttermost. The incident was well known in the district, and when a few years ago Mr. Wintle's new house was being built on the rising ground not far from the Institute, loving and grateful workers carried part of the Flat Stone of Cwmyniscoy to the site, and built it into the house as a memorial of a striking incident in the history of the Mission and its founder."

TRAMPS, LOAFERS, AND GAOL-BIRDS.

There is scarcely a department of Christian and social service which is not a feature of the Pontymoile Mission. Through the Pontypool Bible carriage—specially constructed for work among the hills—the Word of God is distributed throughout the neighbouring counties. The tramps and loafers of the common lodging-houses hear the message; the gipsies' camps are visited; and among discharged prisoners met at the gate of the county gaol souls have been won for the Lord. For example, Mr. Wintle records the cases of—

B—— A——, a native of Devonshire, received three months' hard labour for larceny; on her discharge she was taken to our Girls' Home, where, later, I believe, she was converted to God, and, after two months' residence there, was sent to service in London, at £18 per year. She has given every satisfaction, so much so that her mistress writes: "My nephew, Dr. ——, is needing a nurse . . . I thought you might be able to suit them as well as you have us . . . B—— A—— suits us very well . . . she is very attentive and obliging."

F—— R—— had a very bad record; he was twice birched; served three years in a reformatory school, and two terms of imprisonment. I put him in the shelter, and kept him there four months. He professed conversion, and gave evidence of a change of heart. He is now living with a friend of ours as a farm bailiff; seeming to prove that he has not received the grace of God in vain.

A BATTLE FOR MORALITY.

While doing his best to rescue the fallen, Mr. Wintle has endeavoured to remove some of the causes of temptation, and in his campaign against music and dancing in public-houses, was eminently successful. "In the neighbourhood of Pontypool there were a number of public-houses where music and dancing were encouraged as a means of attracting customers. These public-houses, with their baits, were simply soul-traps; and many a poor creature owed her downfall to them. One of the victims went on the streets, and this flagrant case enabled the Mission to appeal to the public conscience. The local authority did its part, by putting in force the law which compelled such houses to apply for music and dancing licences; and when seven publicans applied for legal permission to carry on their pernicious work, a wave of indignation passed over the town, strenuous opposition was entered, and every licence was refused. The magistrates could not do otherwise in face of the facts, for among the petitions against the licences was one signed by twenty-two mothers, each of whom traced the downfall of a daughter to the music and dancing-room." Thus the Mission took a leading part in removing temptation from the paths of young girls, who, in ignorance or heedlessness, might have placed themselves in a position of great danger to their moral welfare, as others before them had done to their unending regret.

FEEDING THE STARVING.

The sufferings of the poor in periods of industrial depression call for immediate relief, and Mr. Wintle and his helpers are ever ready to respond. The number of free meals given in such periods of trial to the hungry families shows an aggregate of hundreds of thousands, and the effect has been far reaching. The free meals and the brief meetings which followed became the bright spots in many lives, for there were to be found good food, good fellowship, in the truest sense, Christian counsel, and cheering human kindliness. In South Wales to-day there live many a man and many a woman who thank God for that time of physical hardship and deprivation, seeing that it led to peace of soul and spiritual sustenance. While, however, varied and excellent enterprises have had their origin in the Mission, the Gospel remains the centre of all. At each of the meeting places it is the especial delight of the workers to win souls for Christ, and to see men and women

Constant still in faith abiding,
Life deriving from His death.

The esteem in which the Mission is held was strongly evidenced at the recent meetings, when the completion of twenty-five years' work was commemorated, and when Churchmen and Nonconformists united to glorify God for the blessing that has been given. The most striking testimony of all, however, was the presence of the troops of converts who rallied for the occasion, witnessing "One thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see." There is a growing need for extension in these Welsh valleys, but the financial statement shows that the income for the year was only between £600 and £700—a small sum for such a many-sided Mission. Mr. Wintle should be accorded an open-hearted recognition of his work.

Mr. Wintle has been twice elected on the Board of Guardians, of which he is a conspicuous and valued member. In all his varied undertakings for the spiritual and social well-being of the people, he has had the earnest co-operation of Mrs. Wintle, who, indeed, took the initiative in much of the work, and even now, in weakness and pain, takes a deep interest in the operations.

That the spiritual life of South Wales may still be enriched by the Pontymoile Undenominational Mission will be the prayer of all who love to mark the progress of the Kingdom of God.

In Memory of John Huss.

AN imposing national demonstration to the memory of the martyr Huss gives thought for reflection. Let no one suppose that the immense crowds in Prague now shouting praises to Huss are moved by religious conviction to cry, "Great is John Huss of Bohemia." While Bible-loving Christians rejoice in this demonstration, they are saddened that so few seek heartily the truth that made Huss one of the noblest of Christian martyrs. Tourists have often inquired, "Is there no large monument here to the memory of Huss?" Nearly 500 years since he was burned at the stake at Constanz, and still no monument in Prague, where he declared so grandly the truth as it is in Jesus!

This reproach has at length been removed. On July 5, amidst national rejoicings, the corner stone of the Huss Monument was laid in that old historic square, "Altstädter-Ring." Here, where over a score of Bohemian nobles were beheaded in 1621, and where for centuries a monument has stood to commemorate the downfall of Protestantism, on this historic ground will stand the monument to Huss. Some years ago, when the national museum was opened, among the many tablets to distinguished Bohemians there was none for Huss. Liberal Catholics were indignant, and took steps to secure, not only a tablet, but a monument.

In every prominent city and village there are lectures this week to the memory of Huss. As in the museum excitement of 1889, many were successfully urged to buy the New Testament, the book that gave Huss such Christian firmness for truth, so now Christ's sincere followers are active in emphasizing the true greatness of Huss. May God graciously bless this revived and ever-growing admiration for Huss, the greatest son of Bohemia.

It is a grand time to work for truth and God in this land. Will not many pray for this land of martyrs?

THE

Science and Mystery of Prayer

By Rev. FREDERIC C. SPURR.

V.—Hindrances and Helps.

PRAYER is the most necessary and the most enriching of all exercises, and it ought to be the most attractive to the Christian heart. Yet men fail to pray, and often in their praying fail. What causes failure, and what will prevent it? This is what we have now to consider.

There are five things which seriously menace all persons who pray.

(a) The first of these is insincerity. "This people draweth nigh unto Me with their mouth; but their heart holds off from Me" (Matt. xv. 8). It is a striking expression. There is a double movement—the external man seeks God, the internal man keeps Him at a distance. This is a danger from which no person is exempt. Some persons are punctilious about the saying of their prayers, but they would not like God to take them seriously. They are not conscious hypocrites, but they are nevertheless unreal. Persons who pray in public are specially in danger of praying with the sense of men before them, rather than the sense of God who reads all hearts. Far better to say nothing at all to God, than to say what we do not really mean.

(b) A second hindrance is the pursuit of a wrong end (James iv. 3). The mere asking of God is not prayer. The first thing to settle is, what is the end purposed in the asking. Is it that we may obtain our own way, or that God may obtain His way with us? If the former, then our prayer has no chance of success, since its tendency is to rupture the relations between the creature and the Creator. God will not honour any request whose object is to foster our self-will and self-interest. His will must be supreme, and whatever seeks to oppose it must be suppressed.

(c) A third hindrance is sin in life (Isa. lix. 1, 2). Sin, in any form or in any degree, is the great contradiction of holiness and of God Who is the Holy One. Sin digs an abyss between the soul and God. How then can a man who wilfully places that abyss between himself and his Maker expect to enter into relationship with Him? The soul cannot at the same time be harmonious and discordant with God. We have to choose which of the two it shall be.

(d) A fourth hindrance comes from the conditions of social life to-day. The hurry and rush of our time, with their consequence of artificiality, are simply fatal to prayer. A whirlwind is upon us, and it carries us on despite ourselves. If the spirit of hurry is once permitted to invade the soul the consequences to the spiritual life are disastrous. The greatest things in life cannot be hurried. A crop of mushrooms may spring up in a night . . . but an oak tree . . .? A jest may be absorbed in a moment; can a great regenerating principle be absorbed in a moment? Prayer is designed to fit us for the very highest—how can it succeed in so doing if we bring to it the fever and the rush of the money-market? One great reason why so many Christian people are stunted in spirit, and become victims of doubt and folly, is that they will not find time to pray; they will not remain with God long enough to know Him. We must make time for prayer. A little re-arrangement of our affairs would generally enable us to do this, and especially could we do it if we tried honestly to reclaim the time which at present goes in frittering.

(e) A fifth hindrance is found in the spirit of our age, which is opposed to God. God is no longer denied, but He is refined away to an all-encompassing vapour, or discussed as a problem in Euclid might be. Men talk pompously about the "Inscrutable Power called God." It is assumed that God cannot be known. All this is "in the air" like so much moral bacteria. If our spirits are out of health we are almost certain to fall victims to its influence. Personal experience of the tender Fatherhood of God alone will supply us with force sufficient to resist the Zeitgeist which menaces us.

These are a few of the things which hinder prayer.

The best way of fortifying ourselves against any particular vice is to encourage the virtue opposed to it; and the finest antidote to the hindrances we have considered is to cultivate that one thing which our Lord so much insisted upon—i.e., secret prayer.

In opposition to the ostentation of the Pharisees, Jesus bids His disciples "enter into the innermost chamber and pray to the Father in secret."

Each person lives a double life; one that is visible to men, and one that is known to God and ourselves. These two lives should be the exact counterpart of each other, without the least discrepancy between them. A man's inner life, in the long run, tells. If that be wrong, all is wrong. The reason why so many people fail in public is, they have previously failed in private. The strong-looking tree which is seized by the hurricane and laid prostrate upon the ground is either slenderly rooted, or it is diseased at its heart. The sound, well-rooted tree defies the tempest. The secret of a really strong life is a strong secret life; and it is in secret prayer that this strength is gained.

Three things are necessary for the perfection of the spiritual life, i.e., the cultivation of our personal relationship to God; the destruction within us of all sin and falseness; and the extension of our interest to our fellow men—in other words, communion, discipline, and charity. These three things are only developed through secret prayer. For the cultivation of our personal relationship to God we must be alone with Him. We are His children, and we need His counsel, His correction, His guidance, His love. We are His servants, and we need to know His commands and what He would have us do. We need also to know the way of the Lord. Often His ways do not "seem equal." It seems as if there were no Providence; no great commanding will. Psalm lxxiii. records an instructive experience, which has often been repeated. The writer looked out upon life, and beholding the inequalities which reigned, lost his faith. "Verily I have cleansed my heart in vain." But when he went into the sanctuary of God (v. 17)—to secret prayer—then he "understood." The difficulties vanished, and the man who had doubted Providence came to sing perhaps the finest song in the whole Psalter: "God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever."

For the destruction within us of sin and of falseness, secret prayer is also imperative. In the solemn stillness of secret prayer both the disease and the remedy will be revealed to us. The Divine Physician has two kinds of treatment for sick souls—general and particular. His general treatment is revealed in the sacred Scriptures; but the particular treatment is revealed to the waiting heart by the Holy Spirit in secret prayer.

Spiritual life, however, is not perfected until love for men reigns within the soul. Christian life without love is a contradiction in terms. And our love, like that of our Lord, must be co-extensive with humanity. Every man is our neighbour. We are "debtors" to Greeks and barbarians, to bond and free. We cannot, however, speak to all men, but we must pray for all. The prophet Jeremiah, after entreating his contemporaries to give heed to God's voice, said, "If ye will not hear, my soul shall weep in secret places for your pride" (Jer. xiii. 17). Loving prayer of that quality is supremely needed by the Church to-day. It is easy to ask God generally to bless all men; it is quite another thing to be in agony about them. If the world saw more tears in Christian eyes, there would be more tears in its own eyes. But if the tears be secretly shed, they are seen in heaven, and they have their effect there.

Let us cultivate this spirit of secret prayer. Ours is a superficial age; most things are done for momentary display. Let us strike our roots deep into God. "The fashion of this world passeth away, but He that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, July 19. Psalm lxii.

A Song of Trust.

DELITZSCH credits this Psalm to David, and refers it to the time of Absalom's revolt. It might be called the "Only" Psalm; see verse 1 in the R.V. Note how often the expression recurs. The whole sonnet is one of the sweetest and most inspiring of any. Notice particularly the beautiful alternative rendering for waiteth—"is silent." Selah indicates the divisions.

1-4. We may be weak enough in ourselves, feeble as the wall or fence which shows signs of the tremendous pressure to which it has been exposed; but when God is our salvation we may possess our souls in patience and peace. No weapon that is formed against us shall prosper, and the tongues that bless, hiding the curses of the inward soul, shall be condemned.

5-8. The assault apparently lasts longer than the Psalmist expected, and he turns to exhort his soul to preserve its silent and expectant attitude; but evidently faith has grown. In verse 2, "I shall not be greatly moved;" in verse 6, "I shall not be moved." See how the grateful soul piles its tender epithets on God. Faith puts its appropriating my on God, and claims all that He has and is; and then turns to men bidding them trust Him always. The saved soul wonders why every one does not taste and see for himself. There is one condition, however; all the contents of the heart, all sin, all sorrow, all requests for help, must be poured out into the ear of God.

9-12. What a contrast between the lightness of men and the sufficiency of God. They are but a breath, so insubstantial and transient, but power belongs to God. Yes, and lovingkindness, also, which will answer the trust of the saint, and the arrogance of the evil-doer. Trust not in riches, but in the living God, who gives us all things richly to enjoy (1 Tim. vi. 17).

MONDAY, July 20. Psalm lxiii.

The Song of the Soul.

The circumstances that attended the Psalmist were very touching. He was in a waterless and weary land, excluded from the sanctuary, and pursued by enemies, intent on his life. A fight was apparently imminent, in which his foes would be overthrown, and His kingdom restored. All these clues indicate the Davidic authorship.

1-4. Around is the desert with its waterless expanse, the cracks in its surface gaping for rain like parched lips; and every indication of nature's thirst for rain seems to reflect the longing, even to fainting, of the singer's soul for the living God. He can say, Thou art my mighty support; but he longs for the old manifestations which enlightened bygone days. The Psalmist was apparently conscious that even as he longed and prayed, he was at the source of every precious thing, for he begins to realise that God's love is better than life, and he lifts up his hands in praise and thanksgiving. To hunger after God is to possess Him: to thirst is already to enjoy. But let us ask ourselves whether we know much of this longing, and if not, why not.

5-7. We shall be satisfied, not only when we awake amid the bliss of our Father's home, but even here and now. Where we have trodden the sterile miles of desert, we shall hear the music of rushing waterfalls, and see the green vegetation and the budding flowers. What though, through the long dark hours, wild beasts of prey shall threaten, yet as the soul turns Godwards, to meditate on Him, and nestles closer under the wings of His care, it shouts for irrepressible joy.

8-11. Notice the reciprocal relation between God and the soul. It "followeth hard after God," and God favours and helps it by His upholding hand. And where then are the enemies that followed with such hot pursuit? Ah, they shall experience the fate of Korah and his company, or their bodies shall be for the feasting of the prowling jackals of the desert.

TUESDAY, July 21. Psalm lxiv.

A Litany for Help.

Here are five pairs of verses complaining of secret slanderers, comparing their words to arrows and swords, and recounting the flashing out of God's retribution.

1, 2. In the Morning and Evening Prayers of the Liturgy, we have echoes of these words: "That we, surely trusting in Thy defence, may not fear the power of any adversaries"; "That we, being defended from the fear of our enemies, may pass our time in rest and quietness."

3-6. In the case of many, there is nothing in outward life to correspond to this description of plottings. They are not exposed to mischief-making words, shot like arrows from the ambush, or to plots and snares laid for their feet. But all that the Psalmist says of his treacherous friends is true of the temptations of those wicked spirits, by which we are constantly being assailed.

7, 8. These words are very dramatic. The hidden archer, who supposes that none detect his cruel stratagems, suddenly finds himself the target for God's arrows of retribution. "God has shot at them with a sudden arrow, their wounds have arrived." Yes, and their own words come back on them like the boomerang of the savage. The tongue, which they had whetted like a sword (3) "comes back on them."

9, 10. God will vindicate Himself here and hereafter. From the whole universe the shout will go up, "Just and true are Thy ways, O King of the Ages." Wait, my soul, in such expectation of that day!

WEDNESDAY, July 22. Psalm lxv.

A Liturgy.

1. Praise. However great the present darkness, there is no doubt that God's goodness will shine forth, and such devout confidence, though no word is uttered, is praise. "To Thee silence is praise" (so the opening words may be rendered). "Zion's praise pours forth, not with the turbulence of worldly excitement, but with the deep and subdued solemnity that befits sinners, when graciously admitted to the Temple (3, 4) of the great Ruler of all (5-13)."

2. Prayer. What a sublime title for God—"O Hearer of Prayer." Wherever there is desire and entreaty, God hears it.

3. Penitence. As soon as we begin to pray, we remember who and what we are. "The long list of our iniquities" (so the words might be rendered) is too mighty for us; but God throws the veil of expiation over us.

4. Aspiration. Bring me near, O God, for only so shall I be able to dwell in Thy courts, and go no more out for ever. George Herbert sings:—

> Oh let me—when Thy roof my soul hath hid—
> Oh let me roost and nestle there!
> Then of a sinner thou art rid,
> And I of hope and fear.

5-8. Confession of Faith. Some of the greatest things in Nature are selected to set forth God's mightiness. The mountains are firm in their sockets because He is strong. The seas are quiet because He stills them. The avenues or portals, out of which the rays of the rising and setting sun stream forth as from magnificent gateways, are opened and closed by Him.

9-13. Adoration. The harvest was waving in the fields while the poet sang, and he attributes its production to God's direct and merciful providence. He puts the crown of fruit on the brow of the year; in His chariot He rides forth scattering handfuls of benediction; and from all the happy landscape praise arises to the Giver of all good.

THURSDAY, July 23. Psalm lxvi.

A Votive Hymn.

The striking transition from "we" and "our" to "I" and "my" suggests the supposition that the Psalm, which was evidently intended for public worship, is composed of a chorus followed by a solo. It begins, therefore, with a summons to "all the earth," and ends in the adoration of an individual soul, whose prayer God has not turned away.

1-4. All the earth is summoned to praise God for His works. Surely God has only to be known, and homage will naturally and easily ascend to Him. Consider His works, the greatness of His strength, the glory of His name.

5-7. Israel's history was radiant with manifestations of God's love and power, especially at the Red Sea and the passage of the Jordan. But in our own lives also we have gone through the flood on foot many a time, while an unseen hand has held up the threatening waters, and so it shall be again.

8-12. God keeps our soul in life, but never for long are we without the proving and refining processes of trial. We are subjected to the furnace, we are sometimes committed to the fortress-dungeon of adverse circumstances, evil men are sometimes permitted to dominate over us, and treat us as beasts of burden. But we emerge finally into abundance. Let that prospect encourage you, though the fire be heated sevenfold, and the waters chill you to the bone.

13-15. The suggestion here is borrowed from the vow of the Nazarite (Num. vi. 14).

16-20. It was a remarkable experience of deliverance, which has heartened many another. What happened to the Psalmist shall be our experience also. Our prayers also shall be succeeded by happy songs.

FRIDAY, July 24. Psalm lxvii.

A Festal Response.

It may be imagined that this song is the answer of the congregation to the blessing of the High Priest. "The Lord bless thee and keep thee," &c.

1-3. It is only when the people of God manifestly walk in the light of His countenance that the nations and peoples of the world will be won to praise. Does God's face shine on you? Do you walk in the light of the Lord? Is there a radiant, peaceful look upon your face, as of one with whom is the secret of the Lord? If this be so, it is more than probable that those who watch you will come to walk in God's way and seek His saving health. Notice the singular beauty of those two expressions. God's way—the way of peace (Isa. lix. 8), of holiness (Isa. xxxv. 8), and the way to the tree of life (Gen. iii. 24). Salvation gives health to the countenance.

4, 5. The Psalmist realizes that God's goodness is not confined to Israel, but goes forth to all mankind.

6-7. Already the answer has come. As the fertile earth yields her annual harvest, the result of God's care, so shall the nations of men yield harvests of praise and adoration. What a peculiarly sweet name for God, "our own God"! Yes, He shall bless us, and the result will be that men who are as far away as the ends of the earth shall come to Him. A revived Church means a saved world!

SATURDAY, July 25. Psalm lxviii.

A Processional Hymn.

This hymn is one of the finest compositions in the world. It is supposed to have celebrated the close of the Syro-Ammonite War (2 Sam. xi), or the translation of the Ark (2 Chron. vi. 41). But it passes far beyond any local allusion to the one event which is worthy of all its sublime significance—the Ascension of our Lord, when, leading captivity captive, He ascended on high, and received gifts for men (Eph. iv. 1-12).

The Psalm may be divided at verse 18, which is its focus, towards which the past converges, and from which light diverges to all after days. The former half describes the majestic progress of the Conqueror to His palace and throne; the latter the largess and glory which are manifested in His reign.

In the Jewish ritual this Psalm is used at Pentecost ("the Feast of Weeks"), and there is special significance in the thought that perhaps the Levites were reciting it in the Temple when the Spirit was being shed from the hand of the exalted Lord.

Is Ramabai's Work to be Abandoned?

By Rev. J. GREGORY MANTLE.

THAT Pandita Ramabai has many friends among the readers of The Christian she herself has told me. I wonder whether those friends know of this brave woman's need, both of earnest prayer and practical sympathy, at the present time? During my recent visit to India, I paid three visits to Ramabai's colony of high-caste child-widows and deserted wives at Mukti. It is impossible for me to say how deeply I was impressed with what I saw. I had little idea, however, of the straitened position in which Ramabai was placed, until it was revealed by the following circumstance.

On the occasion of my second visit, just before Christmas, I noticed that the "sarée," which constitutes the simple dress of the widows, was, in many cases, showing signs of wear and tear. I felt troubled about this, for I knew it would have a tendency to create a feeling of dissatisfaction among the widows. I ascertained, through Ramabai's secretary, that it would be possible to purchase a new "sarée" for each of the 1,800 widows for £100. Having had a sum of money placed at my disposal by friends in this country for distribution in India, I immediately resolved that each of the widows should have a new "sarée" as a Christmas gift. Judge, therefore, of my surprise when, having learned of my intention, Ramabai came to me, and, with her somewhat sorrowful countenance, asked me: "Is it your special wish that this money should be spent in 'sarée'?" I replied: "No, Ramabai; if there is anything else that is more urgently needed, please use the money for that purpose." To my astonishment, she said, while her eyes filled with tears: "We want food! We can do without 'sarées,' but we cannot do without food!"

As I was under the impression that the splendid work which has made the name of Pandita Ramabai a household word in all parts of the civilized world was generously supported, I pressed for an explanation of this lack of funds. It is not possible for me, at this juncture, to give a full explanation of the circumstances which have led to this serious falling-off in Ramabai's resources. I can only say that, when the facts become public, they will be greatly to Ramabai's credit, and her attitude cannot fail to commend itself to all true disciples of Jesus Christ. Nor is this withdrawal of support the only difficulty that Ramabai has to face. She is just now the victim of much petty persecution on the part of the Brahmans and Government officials. I am in possession of the details of this unwarrantable interference with the work which Ramabai is doing, and though I cannot say more at present, I have sufficient confidence in the justice of the Viceroy, and in the sympathy of Lady Curzon with Ramabai's heroic efforts on behalf of the child-widows of India, to be assured that this persecution will not be allowed to continue.

In a recent letter to me Ramabai says: "If the funds are not forthcoming, the girls in these Homes must be sent somewhere else. I have no choice in this matter. I cannot go on into debt, but, try as I will, I cannot maintain this large company of 1,800 people with less than £600 per month. To try to do with less is to starve the children, and send them about almost naked." The sum mentioned works out at 2¾d. per head per day for food and clothing. I am confident that it is only necessary to state these facts to secure for Ramabai prompt and substantial support.

If ever this noble woman needed help, it is now. Let us see that, so far as in us lies, we do not withhold it. She is with us now, but the danger is that she may be broken down by burdens that she ought not to bear. Do you want to show your sympathy with her in this Christ-like work? Do it now; and when she goes from us, let us at any rate have the satisfaction of knowing that we did not leave her alone in this awful battle against ignorance, superstition, and age-long prejudices, for the redemption of India's women from degradation, desolation, and despair. Is it possible for the women who read these lines to be content to have enough and to spare at their own tables without making an effort to provide a simple meal of rice and dahl for Ramabai and her great family. Contributions may be forwarded to the publishers of The Christian.

Summer at Northfield.

THE centre of religious thought and activity during the summer months in America is East Northfield, Mass. For twenty years or more this little home town of D. L. Moody has been the main meeting place of the Christian people of America. Each year larger and more cosmopolitan crowds are attracted thither. College men and women spend their vacations there, men leave the city and business to come, preachers their pulpits, women their household cares, everyone, in fact, who wishes to be separate from the world for a time, and meet the world's best preachers and Bible students, makes it convenient to come to Northfield.

The occasions for a visit to the town are many, and they last all the summer. Already two of the large assemblies have passed. At the present time the Northfield Summer Bible School is in session, and from August 1 until September will be held the General Conference of Christian Workers and Post-Conference Addresses. At both of these gatherings, the leading part taken by eminent English and Scotch preachers is a striking commentary on the brotherhood of the British and American churches. This is seen in the Northfield Summer Bible School, where the two main lecturers are Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, an Englishman who is now connected with the Northfield Extension, and who has also recently been giving a series of lectures in Carnegie Hall, New York City, and Dr. A. T. Pierson, who, though not an Englishman, is nevertheless well known to the English public. Still more is the prevalence of Englishmen noticed in the later conventions of Northfield. In addition to Dr. Morgan, will be heard Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, of London; Rev. Samuel Chadwick, of Leeds; and Prof. James Orr, of Glasgow. These men, furthermore, supplement an equally representative list of Americans who will occupy the Northfield platform. The purpose of the management is to secure the leading propagators of the Gospel, irrespective of denomination or nationality.

And yet the Conferences are only one of the reasons why so many people gather at Northfield. The town itself is one of the pleasantest summer resorts of New England. It is situated on the banks of the Connecticut river; with rustic cottages dotting the mountain side and Indian cut trails and garnet scattered rocks. It is, too, the home of Camp Northfield, where hundreds of men from the great cities annually spend their summer vacations. And on opposite sides of the river stand Mount Hermon School and Northfield Seminary, two schools founded by D. L. Moody, with over a thousand young men and women in attendance.

Protestant Orphanage for Girls at Florence.—This work is in great need of more financial support. The demands for admission are very numerous. The directress, out of pity for a poor little, weary, footsore child, of five years old (who was brought by her father to the Orphanage, in company with an elder sister whom he was leaving there), took this child in for the night only—until her father could get her a lodging. The little one won the hearts of both teachers and scholars, and no one can bear to send away the little motherless thing; but there are no funds to support this little extra inmate. The committee in Florence work energetically to get money; but there, as everywhere else, there are so many charities to support.

Behind the Boxers.

WE have enjoyed the privilege of reading the report of a visit paid to South China by Mr. Edward A. Marshall, as special commissioner from the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago. Dealing with the Boxer movement, he says:—I hear on the steamers and in other places, from tourists who gather their information from the mercenary "guides" who pilot them round places of interest, that the missionaries were the cause of the Boxer movement. But after visiting ten of the provinces, and investigating the matter, I have come to the conclusion that such an idea is very far from the whole truth. I find the Chinese are about the most level-headed people in the whole of the Orient. They are beyond question the most industrious, and, I dare say, the most honest.

Within the last century the European has come among them. Those newcomers have been of three classes—missionaries, business men, and soldiers. The Chinese have not been wholly ignorant of the history of the world, or of the doings of the nations during the past generation. They have watched while the nations have summarily divided Africa, each trying to get the best slice. They have watched also while the islands in the neighbouring oceans were swallowed up without the consent of the inhabitants. The ministers who have been sent to represent the country in foreign lands have been watchful of the attitude of the countries towards China, and have immediately reported home all newspaper threats to dismember the empire.

Not satisfied with the taking of Hong Kong in 1841, Britain seized Kowloon in 1871, with about 400 square miles of territory, so as to make the island safe from the possibility of artillery on the opposite side of the bay. Britain then desired a more northern port, and when the opportunity presented itself took Wei-hai-wei. In 1898, France got Kwang Chou Wan. The Portuguese have Macao. In 1897, the German fleet seized Haikow Bay and the territory bordering it. In 1898, the Russians took Port Arthur.

Not only have the nations taken "choice bits," but they have forced upon the Chinese things they did not wish. Opium, of course, heads the list of these; and, strange as it may seem to a Western, one of the most vexatious annoyances was the railway.

How have the Chinese been treated in other countries? Look at America alone. See the Exclusion Acts. How do these sound in the ears of the Chinaman? Have they the ring of international friendship? The Chinaman reasonably asks, "How is it that you will not allow me to come into your country, and yet you demand admission into mine?"

The missionary comes to proclaim peace, and not to give offence or trouble. He comes not to get, but to give. Is it the cudgel of war or loving friendship that makes angry passions rise? Was it the white dove of the Gospel of peace or the Russian "bear," the English "lion," the American "eagle," and the Japanese "tiger," that lashed the temper of the Chinese into a furious rage?

The fact that the missionary presents a "new doctrine" is certainly not a greater cause of the trouble than the actions of the oppressive, money-grabbing, overbearing business parasites, who go expressly to bleed "the soulless Chinaman," who help no one but themselves, and whose conduct is purposely calculated to make the Chinese feel they think them beneath themselves.

The Chinaman is not a fool, though he may do foolish things. Those who killed the missionaries are those who had never come under the influence of the missionaries' lives. In some cases they were men who had been wronged by the white man, and wished revenge. Behind all the underlings were the self-seeking, jealous officials, who fear the foreigner's aggression; and behind them was the Empress Dowager. Behind all these human agencies was the evil one whose hatred of the Christ makes him angry as he sees the progress of the victorious cross.

"The Kischeneff Massacre."

NO time was lost by Rev. Samuel Wilkinson in returning to Kischeneff. Taking with him drafts for 5,000 roubles, the approximate amount contributed by readers of THE CHRISTIAN and Trusting and Toiling, he arrived at Warsaw on Saturday, July 4. His fellow travellers from Warsaw to Odessa were two Jews and a Pole; and it was obvious that one of the former eyed him with curious interest. Mr. Wilkinson writes:—

"In the morning came prayers. Both the Jews, clad in talith and with philacteries, went through their duty, book in hand. When I took up the Hebrew Prayer Book and read a few passages, they showed much interest; and when I produced my prayer book—a well-thumbed English Bible—they scanned the page with considerable curiosity.

"The Pole having left the train, a third Jew joined us. We had soon a basis for conversation—the emptiness of merely formal prayer which leaves the life unchanged, and the importance of true spiritual worship—access to God on the ground of the shed blood, and by the Mediator of the New Covenant. The black, red, and white—sin, substitution, and salvation—pasted in the flyleaf of my Bible, was a little sermon. And when I produced a Hebrew New Testament, it was read eagerly.

"My companions could hardly believe me when I told them the object of my journey. 'It is worth a lifetime to me,' said the young man opposite, 'to see a man travelling specially from England to Kischeneff to help the Jews.' He declared that he would write to the Hebrew papers about it.

"Arrived at Kischeneff (on July 6), I found harvest in full swing, and the heat very oppressive. It has since been my great joy to hand over to Dr. Mouchnik, president of the Jewish Relief Committee, the sum of 5,000 roubles, in the name of English Christians who love Israel. Of methods of distribution and particular cases, I hope to write in a few days."

Villages in Northern India.

TEN years ago two missionaries of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission were requested by a Maulvi to begin work in Kasur, a city of the Lahore district. This Maulvi had been very friendly. He found them a little house in the city, had much to say about the villages and the roads to them; but the request that mission work should be begun in a strong Mohammedan city, and the request made by a Mohammedan teacher was a surprise. One of the missionaries answered: "Maulvi Sahib, you know that if missionary work is begun here some of the people may become Christians. What will you do then? Persecute them and drive us away? Something like this has happened in Kasur before."

"Yes," the Maulvi admitted, "It did happen so once, years ago. But don't think of that now, for that age of darkness is past and you are the women's friends."

Six months later found these new missionaries in a Kasur city house. The outside gate opened out to the road, but the building was in the city, and the gate of the Zenana part of the house opened right into the city. The catechist, and his wife had both been Mohammedans, and that seemed to make the city people suspicious. Their expressed attitude was, "Into this city you are not to enter." "Well, we won't come till you ask us," was the reply, "but the door of our Zenana Mission-house is open to the women. They can come to us, if we do not go to them." So Monday, Wednesday, and Friday afternoon that door was opened; one or two came shyly at first, then there was a weekly increase, till the missionaries found their "at homes" were popular, and somewhat crowded.

The missionaries made their way to the villages. They were suspected. In one village they were rejected. In another, a pupil from one of the schools in Lahore led them to house after house. In yet another an old Christian woman was found living among Chuhra relations, known among the villagers as a Christian. Talks in the villages and by the roadside made some seek the city house and attend the Sunday services. That was ten years ago. To-day the villages around know what the message means. They are asking strange questions. There are some who are openly Christians, others "secretly for fear of neighbours." The work has forged forward miles and miles from Kasur. Frequently now the request is made: "Come and live longer among us. You always go after two or three days." The missionaries must go on. They cannot trespass long in bungalows built for Government requirements. The need now is for a small rest house in each of the two good village centres, about sixteen miles from Kasur. One should be built this winter, the second the winter following. Another missionary is also much wanted. The address of the Mission is 2, Adelphi Terrace, Strand, W.C.

Dr. Torrey in Chicago.

[BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

THE great meeting at the Auditorium has been the universal theme of conversation among religious people, and many who would not call themselves religious, in this city. The newspapers have given every day columns of space to interviewing Dr. Torrey, reporting his lectures, and generally chronicling his tour with Mr. Alexander.

The splendid impetus given by the Auditorium meeting to the Convention of Christian Workers at the Moody Bible Institute has been maintained throughout the sessions. On Wednesday there was an excellent attendance, necessitating the meetings being held in Chicago Avenue Church, which adjoins the Institute. Dr. C. I. Scofield and Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman were among the speakers during the day, and in the evening a high mark of spiritual power was reached by Mr. Samuel H. Hadley, whose touching stories of redemption of outcast men and women at the Jerry M'Auley Mission in New York thrilled the whole assembly.

Following the story of his own conversion, Mr. Hadley gave the invitation to any in the audience who wished to have Christ then and there to come forward. Six men came to the front, and it was a remarkable experience to see how this veteran winner of souls dealt so lovingly and practically with them. He showed them in the clearest words the way to salvation, and his very look was so full of pity and love that their hearts could not but be touched.

"PRAY THROUGH."

On the following day the old students of the Bible Institute, to the number of about 300, were present at a delightful reunion. At the supper which followed, Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander both expressed their deep gratitude for the volume of prayer which had been ascending all through the time of their tour round the world. The motto of the Convention has been "Pray through," and Mr. Alexander told the story of how this phrase had led a lady to form the prayer circles which had been so valuable in preparing for the great work of evangelizing Australia. Several of the former students of the Bible Institute gave interesting accounts of their recent labours in different parts of America.

At the evening gathering on Thursday Mr. Melvin E. Trotter related his conversion from the depths of drunkenness—a story which was a "human document" of pathetic interest to all. Mr. Harry Monroe was another speaker on the same lines as Mr. Hadley, for he has charge of the Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago. Miss Miller related some of her experiences among the miners of West Australia, and a very interesting conference on "The Gospel in Print" revealed how much good can be done by the circulation of literature. Every afternoon a question box has been opened and answers have been given by Dr. Torrey. Dr. J. M. Gray, of Boston, has been highly appreciated for his most able lectures on various topics of the Bible. D. W.

The Craving for Certainty.

DEAR SIR,—Could you allow me space for a few remarks apropos of your leaderette on "The Craving for Certainty" in your issue for July 2?

I deeply sympathize with the Christians there referred to; I have been one of them myself; and consequently I feel constrained to point out some of the causes of their condition, and some of the means by which one may escape.

In the first place I am convinced that many Christians do not read the right kind of books, and do read the wrong. We have the reaffirmation of the old truths, by scholars and scientists who are completely up-to-date, e.g., the splendid array of works known collectively as Eyre and Spottiswoode's Bible Students' Library, and the succinct and suggestive papers on "Foundation Truths" published in THE CHRISTIAN some time ago. But how many read them? Newspapers, magazines, the last new idea or the last new squib in the intellectual world, these are read, hurriedly, of course, for everything is done hurriedly nowadays, talked about first and thought about afterwards, if at all. Can we wonder that our hold on truth is feeble?

Secondly, I notice that many Christians cultivate a wrong mental attitude. A growing tendency is very observable in some of the denominations to admire cleverness and to overlook or undervalue spiritual gifts. I would be the last to depreciate intellectual gifts and attainments, but let things be kept in their true proportion. In a church in which intellect is the one thing sought after, there is sure to grow among the congregation a shallow intellectualism, having the critical spirit strongly developed, without the breadth of information, and perhaps without the determination necessary to decide the questions raised; and this inevitably tends to speculation, uncertainty, and often to positive scepticism.

Oh, let us take our spiritual life seriously! Let us take our difficulties seriously. Let us not be content to stop in a condition in which our hold on God and His Truth is shaken. How appallingly shallow and indolent we must be nowadays!

My third point is, after all, the most important. Let us cultivate a healthy spiritual life. A person in vigorous spiritual life is not upset by the new theories that are set forth every day—many of them merely for the sake of selling a magazine, so that it is waste of time to read them at all, except with a view to helping those readers who may take them seriously.

"In Thy light shall we see light." The Spirit of God guides us into all truth. Let us have a strong hold of God, the Everlasting God, the Living God, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, to whom the endless problems that mystify our tiny intellects are all clear; and in Him we shall find rest, and that strength for daily life which we can never have unless our anchor holds within the vail.

If we know God we are content to wait, though we cannot answer all the questions that beset us. And gradually to the patient, humble, trustful soul comes light on many points that once were dark. "The meek will He teach His way." W. H.

God's Garden.

MIDST hush of a sunset vigil, as the flick'ring twilight fled,
Her unsullied soul passed gently to the glories overhead;
No rustle of wings, nor whisper of visiting angels' tread;
A flutter, and into the shadows her Heav'n-bound spirit sped.

To where the roses are shedding their fragrance 'neath noon-sun red,
Bore we our tender burden carefully, lovingly spread
With daisy and pansy blossoms from her own little garden bed:
"'Tis life and rest for your darling," these flow'rets' message said.

Thro' paths we knew not whither, the gracious Shepherd led:
He who loved little children, and for them suffered and bled,
Had taken our lamb to His bosom—His comfort banished dread,
"She'll blossom in God's own garden." 'Twas this the flow'rets said.

MILDMAY CONFERENCE ADDRESSES.

Losing and Finding the Weapon.

(2 Tim. iii. 17, R.V.; 2 Kings vi. 1-7.)

By Rev. J. M. WILLOUGHBY.

The word translated "perfect" in 2 Tim. iii. 17, R.V., might be rendered "fitted out," a phrase which is more familiar, and which gives us the opportunity to preserve the kind of repetition of the original.

(1) That which is to make the man fit is nothing other than God's own Word. All Scripture is God-breathed, and is serviceable for the work that you have to do—serviceable for reproof, for setting a man straight, for education in righteousness, for general teaching. All this is so that the man of God may be completely equipped, or fitted out, and his outfit is nothing less. Some of our friends would have called Paul a Bibliolater, and I am not sure that he would have seen anything discreditable in the name.

(2) Paul certainly intended to refer here to the Old Testament. He means the Scriptures by which our Lord vanquished the tempter in the wilderness, by which He answered the Pharisees and the Sadducees, from which He preached His own death and resurrection on the way to Emmaus, by which He enabled Peter to convert those who were to be converted and to confound the others, by which He enabled Paul to preach to Roman governors.

THE UNANSWERABLE ARGUMENT.

To all criticism of our weapon the practical answer is, "See what it has done, is doing, and can do." When the sons of the prophets sat with blanched faces, because there was poison in the pot, Elisha put in some healthy wholesome meal. That is God's method of dealing with error. The answer is the preaching of the truth, and to do that is within the power of every man who has experienced the power of the Holy Spirit, in the convincing of sin and the knowledge of salvation.

The story in 2 Kings vi. 1-7 introduces us to the prophets at an interesting and instructive time. The power of God was being felt through Elisha, and the sons of the prophets were growing in number. No better test of a healthy Christian church can be found than that it should be straitened. Yesterday's grace and tokens for good are not sufficient, except as a foretaste of what the Church demands. Just as these men felt straitened in their place, the Church will be straitened when it is healthy. It wants to be building with more living stones, increasing its borders, feeling everything too small for its purposes.

Every man took a beam. Do not let us gather, and pray, and expect to see the beams come on their own feet, and put themselves in their places. We should go to the virgin forest and take every man a beam.

GOD AND MAN WORKING TOGETHER.

The scene becomes a busy one, and we might have expected those tools which might be called the equipment of the servant of Christ. But there is only one tool. There is only an axe. Never mind, it will do. Ever so homely and simple. None the worse for that. The axe consists of two things—a head and a handle. They make one, and represent the relation between the Divine and human elements in the equipment of the servant of God. The head is the piece that does the work, that is the Divine element. The handle is that by which the working piece is able to do its work, that is the human element.

God's work of converting the world consists of God and man working together; that marvellous mystery, that God does not work without us, but will have us share the honour of accomplishing His grand purpose. Christian service consists in using every human power to apply God to a Godless, God-needing, and often God-seeking world.

The head of the axe is manifestly the Word of God, and the handle is your experience of that Word. Just as you are unable to use God's Word without some experience of it in your own soul, and able to bring it home in proportion to your experience, so your experience represents the handle, the means of application of the head.

There is a misfortune in the story. The axe head fell into the water. If it is asked why it should do so, three answers may be given.

KEEPING WITHIN EXPERIENCE.

(1) That the head was not properly attached to the handle. It may have been loose. Unless your personal experience of God actually does fit His Word, your attempt to use that Word will be fraught with failure. Many of us have tried to outgrow our experience—as Saul would have had David wear armour that did not fit him, and so has brought disastrous failure.

(2) Perhaps the man was aiming his blows badly. A straight blow would do no harm. If the edge were laid truly to the work it would remain firm; but if it were slanting, it would become gradually slacker.

If we misuse the Word of God, and do not study to show ourselves approved workmen, rightly dividing the Word of Truth, by degrees we lose the Word, and there is nothing left to us but the useless handle. God's power is gone.

(3) The man may have missed the tree and struck with the handle, and with the shock the head flew away. This is at the bottom of a great deal of sectarianism. A man has been brought to God in connection with a certain body of Christians, and he concludes that it is a necessary preliminary to belong to that church. He forces on others what is not necessary—the human is made much of at the expense of the Divine.

People object to this story because the iron swam. Those who know anything of the wonderful miracle of God bringing us here with a desire to hear Him, will not find much difficulty. If God will make a poor, dead piece of lead like me rise and swim, it is not much to make a piece of iron do so.

What evidence are you to have that you have got the axe back? Put forth your hand and take it, and use it. You will have the unimpeachable evidence of results. Having cried to the Master with repentant tears, cast yourself upon Him, and seek in His Word for power. The practical working will be itself the only means by which you will find out how much you will gain, and that in the most assured of ways you are restored.

In Contrast With Reality.

By Dr. HARRY GRATTAN GUINNESS.

If these twelve men who were destined to turn the world upside down received their training for service in the secret companionship of the Master, shall not we also learn if we tarry with Him, considering Jesus Christ and the principles which we shall see animating Him?

I. The Master and the Crowds. Jesus Christ lived a real life. Apart from the crowds, there sometimes tends to gather round us an element of unreality. If we should pray to be kept from anything, it is this. In Christian life and service I do not know anything that so speedily removes the element of unreality as coming into contact with suffering humanity. Real needs—these were the things that touched Jesus Christ. They were His environment; and for three years He led His disciples, now to prayer and now to the masses, now to the desert and now to the multitudes. The greater part of their training lay in the marvellous teaching they got in watching His contact with suffering men and women.

He goes away from Capernaum and Nazareth, but nevertheless that tender heart is going out towards all those who really need Him. Is it an unclean demoniac, is it a suffering woman, Jesus stoops down and touches, and immediately they are made whole. Is it a crowd of sick that gather round our Saviour, are the blind and those who are ready to perish gathered at His feet, if my soul—as a practical servant of the Master—is to be kept right and in the atmosphere of reality, I must come into contact with real needs and real sufferings.

GOING OUT TO THE DRUNKARD.

When I was over in Belfast with Dr. Torrey, to my mind the most interesting thing I saw was the Saturday-night "sweeps." We had a wonderful time. A large number of Christian workers and ministers went right out and scoured the streets. It was a grand experience. There was not a worker who did not receive a fresh baptism of benediction in his own soul. We came into contact with real things. We went to the public-houses. The people came out to see what the commotion was; and we literally got hold of every man and woman of them. Some of them were pretty badly drunk. It was pitiful. I shall never forget the awful cries of agony.

We took the drunks into the Shankill Hall until there were 300 intoxicated men and women there. Mark the result. Not only did a number of these people give themselves to Jesus Christ—fifty-three in one night—but one of my friends said at the close of the mission, "I have lived fifty years in Belfast, and never till last Saturday night did I know what Belfast was."

We live in London, but how many know what London is? If some of you would come out and do a little work of that kind, if you were to see the poor fallen creatures and the drunkards, your soul would melt within you, and you would say, "This is reality." If people are to be trained to work, they must come into contact with actual burning need. If people can come into contact with real desperate human need, and not feel it as a transforming power in their lives, I am terribly sorry for them; but I believe that a great deal of the nonchalance of Christian workers arises from the fact that they only know the need from respectable church or meeting going. They have never been scorched by the approach of deep, dire, unspoken need.

If you go to New York, whatever else you see, go down to Water Street, and visit the place where Jerry M'Auley did his life work. It is a desperate place, and desperate sinners have been saved there.

THE "MUST" OF SERVICE.

II. The Master and His own Mission. "Master, stay in Capernaum." "Nay, verily, I must preach the Gospel to other cities, for therefore am I sent." The Master was a Man under authority. He recognised that He was sent to all those cities with a message of life. I shall never forget Mr. Archibald Brown saying that a Christian life which is not circumscribed by a "must" is not worth living.

Christ's "must." "I must be about My Father's business." "I must work the works of Him that sent Me." "I must preach the Gospel to other cities also." "The Son of Man must be lifted up." Thank God "He MUST reign."

Has thy life been surrounded by a Divine "must?" If the Master takes the position, how much more the servant! Surely it is high time that some here were hearing the "must," and that before this time next year they should preach the Gospel—"for therefore am I sent." Jesus may soon be here. We do not know the day or the hour, but He is coming; and when He comes, oh may He grant that we may not be ashamed before Him. If we are not Spirit-filled men and women we shall be ashamed. If we have not been working commensurately with the needs of men we shall be ashamed. But if we know the desert solitude and its prayer, the blessed freedom that is circumscribed by the "must," we shall be there with joy unspeakable.

God's Dumb Creatures.

A FORTNIGHT ago I referred you to the last verse in the Book of Jonah, in which is shown the loving thought of God for little children. The concluding words of the verse are: "And also much cattle"—which I take to mean that His care also extends to the lower creation. I have never written to you upon this subject, and it will not be inappropriate for me to do so now.

In many young characters we sometimes find an element of destructiveness, which exhibits itself not only in the treatment of things which have no life, but also in regard to those which live and move. Quite tiny children may be seen pulling flies to pieces, or practising cruelty upon kittens and other animals which are, as yet, too young to "pay back." (When they do, such children learn to know better! A scratch or a bite is often an effective means of instruction!)

No great character ever grows out of a cruel or destructive spirit. God has "given us richly all things to enjoy," not to destroy. The earth would be a very dreary place if it were not for the living creatures that God has created in it; these are as much "His wonderful works" as sun or moon or stars, and I cannot but think it must grieve His loving heart when we hurt or injure them.

I am writing this at a delightful place by the sea, on the coast of the Isle of Man, where hundreds of beautiful sea-gulls sweep majestically over my head, or dart down to the sea in search of food. They are hungry birds, and (like boys I know) will come quite near, when they see a chance of something to eat. Sometimes we place a dish of "scraps" on the low wall in front of the house, or even upon the window-sill, which draws the attention of a score or so, and they are soon screaming and fluttering like mad things, and I am afraid do not exactly fulfil the apostolic injunction to esteem others better than themselves! We are quite glad there are no town boys handy to scare them away with discordant cries or stones.

Like myself, I am sure many of you have experienced intense enjoyment from showing kindness to animals and birds, whether in a wild state, or your own domestic pets. As you grow older I hope you will not change in this attitude to God's creatures, but will remember that they are lent to us by Him to cheer and beautify the world.

In many countries kindness to animals is unknown. During my travels I have witnessed numerous sad instances of this. In Spain I have seen women plucking live fowls and putting them into a boiling pot; in Morocco a mule-driver will keep a sore spot on the animal's haunch, so that it may more sensitively feel the stick. In Italy I was on a coach when one of the "leaders" fell, on a steep descent, and was dragged, bleeding and wounded, for some distance before the coach could be stopped. We had only just left a posting-station, but instead of taking it back and changing it for another horse, the driver continued the journey for two hours, and kept flogging the poor beast because it could not keep pace with the others. I never felt so keenly the disadvantages of differing languages as I did on these occasions.

A cruel boy or girl will grow up to be a brutal man or woman, and capable of any crime. It is terrible to think of the hardening effect that such actions have upon sense and character. I do not think any noble men or women who have done good in the world were ever known to be fond of treating cruelly God's dumb creatures.

It is also cowardly to ill-use an animal that is unable to defend or protect itself; and a young coward will grow up to be an old brute. These and many other reasons can be given for the discouragement of such practices.

I remember a fable about some frogs in a pond at which some boys were throwing stones "for fun." One frog dived to the bottom, "to remove temptation from the path of youth," as he said, which was very considerate of him. The others croaked, and said to their persecutors: "What is fun to you is death to us," which was more to the point, for there are "two sides" to everything, even the amusement of stoning frogs.

But I want you not only to abstain from cruelty, but also to exercise kindness. Often, for instance, when your body will weigh more than it does now, you can show consideration for a horse by walking instead of riding up a steep hill. The exercise will do you good, too. And when you see another person ill-treating any dumb creature, do not be afraid to protest, and to protect it. This is a noble thing to do, and will strengthen your good desires and intentions in other ways. Never mind if others make fun of you. That won't hurt you, and it only shows up their stupidity.

When you think that "God is Love," and that Jesus "went about doing good," I am sure you will think that is reason enough for taking to heart this little holiday lesson of mine. UNCLE TOM.

Trust.

TRUST Him when thy path is cloudy,
Trust Him when the shadows fall,
Trust Him, when to simply trust Him
Seems the hardest thing of all.

Trust Him though thy sins are many,
And thy saving graces few;
For the time of guilt and anguish
He will see thee safely through.

Trust Him for the grace sufficient,
Ever equal to thy need;
Trust Him always for the answer,
When in His dear Name you plead.

WEEK-DAY RELIGION (1 Peter iii. 8-18).

THERE is no doubt that if every child of God were to begin to live up to the New Testament ideal, avoiding always what Christ would not be, and seeking to be always what He would be; and if each exemplified perfectly the law of love, there would be little need for preaching from pulpits, arguing, and exhorting—the beauty of the Christian character would in itself be sufficiently attractive to win men for Jesus Christ.

Let us examine ourselves by these suggestions! Are we like-minded, because we have the mind of Christ, which makes its owner willing to be of no reputation, and to stoop to death, even the death of the cross, for others? Are we compassionate, sympathising in the joys and sorrows of others? Do we love the brethren, not always "liking" them perhaps, but treating them kindly, and making their interests more than our own? Are we tender-hearted and pitiful towards the afflicted and distressed? Are we courteous, with that true Christian politeness, which differs by a whole heaven from the world's tinsel. How do we reply to injury? Do we bless when we are cursed, or do we retaliate with hot and indignant words? Are we willing to leave our vindication with God?

The fact is that neither railing nor cursing can hurt us if we are living for God. They will drop like pointless arrows at our feet. It is remarkable how absolutely powerless slander and calumny are to injure good men. The happiest life for any of us is just to live in our inheritance of blessing, and leave our enemies to expend their strength in cruel attacks, which God will answer. Do you want a happy life and good days; then leave God to vindicate and deliver you. Don't answer back; don't utter an insincere word. Set yourself against evil, and live at peace with all, as much as in you lies. "Men," says Calvin, "think that they would be exposed to the wantonness of enemies if they did not vindicate their rights. But the Spirit promises a life of blessedness to those only who are patient under evils."

It is rather interesting to find Peter, of all men, writing thus. He had learnt a good deal since the day when he had reminded Jesus that they had two swords, and had brought the sword-blade heavily down on the head of Malchus. But this paragraph breathes another spirit than that. He is now willing, like his Master, to be led as a sheep to the slaughter, and to stand dumb before his persecutors.

Of course, there are times when we must withstand wrong, and protect the widow and orphan, the wronged and down-trodden, the slave and the defenceless child. But when our own wrongs are concerned, whenever "we suffer according to the will of God," we must commit our souls to Him in well-doing, as to a faithful Creator.

Verse 14. Even suffering cannot take away the blessedness of the good man. The dread of what men may say and do need not send a tremor through our hearts; the one thing that we should care for is as to the position which Christ occupies within us. There are three conditions for blessedness.

(1) Notice the R.V. of verse 14. The one thing for all of us to be really anxious about is to enshrine Jesus Christ in our hearts as Lord. Is there a door in your hearts opening on a throne room, which is reserved for Jesus only. Have you written on that door such words as these: "Other lords have had dominion over me, but henceforth He only is my King?"

(2) Be ready to give a reason for the hope that is within you. This is what Peter, on one memorable occasion, failed to do; and we should fail, were it not for the coming of the Comforter.

(3) Have a good conscience. A good conscience is one that can look God and man in the face, and is not conscious of wilful violation of what is right and good. Follow the gleam; obey the inner light; listen to the inner voice, which is ever saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it."

Remember the way that Jesus went before you, and how God raised Him from the dead to His right hand. F. B. M.

SAUL REJECTED AS KING (1 Sam. xv. 13-23).

GOLDEN TEXT—1 Sam. xv. 22.

TIME AND PLACE.—About ten years after the national proclamation at the same place, Gilgal; Saul king without a realm, for the Philistine garrisons still held the walled cities; Samuel ordered the war of independence to be opened with solemn rites by himself (x. 8). A volunteer army assembled at Gilgal. Saul's disobedience and impatience cost him dearly (xiii. 14). Jonathan distinguished himself at the battle of Michmash. Victories over Moab, Ammon, and Edom followed, and finally Saul "took the kingdom over Israel" (xiv. 47). By His servant Samuel God commanded Saul to settle the ancient feud between Israel and Amalek, which had lasted 300 years (Ex. xvii. 8-16; Num. xiv. 45; Jud. iii. 13, vi. 13; Deut. xxv. 17-19). Saul spared Agag probably to grace his triumphal march of victory; and the people followed their leader in disobedience. What might have been their stepping-stone to honour was their pit-fall under temptation.

Saul's { heart was blinded, conscience perverted, life spoiled by } self-importance.

His sin, disobedience, ingratitude, pride.

(1) God raised him to be king of Israel.

(2) Gave him a holy war to wage.

He was valiant in battle, and clever in inventing a good construction wherewith to cover his evil deeds; but Samuel's question pierced between the joints of his armour, and his vanity was revealed (v. 17). Samuel, true to his promise, did not cease to pray for Saul (xii. 23). When the Lord revealed to him the sin of Saul, "it grieved Samuel, and he cried unto the Lord all night" (xv. 11). His grief must have been deepened when Saul came forward with his plausible speeches (v. 13). He promptly (v. 12) carried out a hard duty, not giving his own opinion, but God's word (v. 16, v. 1). It is one thing to "hearken," another to obey (v. 19).

CONTRAST.

Whole-souled obedience of heart and action, spirit and letter, with genuine humility,	Half-way obedience, pride, self-will, or human reason, however over-patched with excuses or shirked responsibility,
ensure	forfeit
DEFINITE REWARD.	DEFINITE REWARD.

LESSONS.

1. Every time a boy or girl gives way to temper, determination to have their own way, boasting, showing off, making excuses, or shifting the blame of wrong doing on others, they are training to become just like Saul, and will fail of a noble end (2 Tim. iii. 2-4).

2. God required strict, whole-hearted obedience, full allegiance to Him as Saul's King, in response to whole-hearted blessing (1 Sam. xii. 24: xv. 17, 18). God gave us "His best" (John iii. 16).

3. Impatience is the unfailing offspring of self-will, and disobedience that of pride and vanity (xii. 8; xv. 8).

4. Money gained by wrong means is valueless in God's sight for His service (Golden Text). Even if the biggest part of it is put into the missionary box, Jesus puts His own value on every coin (Mark xii. 41, 43).

5. The poorest, youngest, least-important, can obey God as closely as the rich, the old, or the great ones of earth. Anywhere, at any time, under any circumstances, the heart that loves God will obey Him.

6. Clay must be plastic in the potter's hand, iron must be heated to bend for use. Stubbornness—perverseness is like the grit in the clay that spoils the vessel.

7. If we reject the Saviour our ingratitude is greater than that of Saul, and there will come a time when "they have no excuse for their sin" (John xv. 22; only Rev. vi. 16).

S.S. Lesson Illustrations.

HAPPY OBEDIENCE.

Mrs. Evered Poole tells of two gentlemen who once stopped to speak to a ragged crossing-sweeper. After giving him a coin, one of them expressed the hope that the lad loved the Lord Jesus. "Indeed, I do, sir," responded the sweeper, with a bright smile. "How do you know you do?" asked the second gentleman, curious to hear the lad's further reply. "'Cause I always does what he bids me," came the ready answer. The young crossing-sweeper had learned the desire of the Lord, and Samuel's words had a real meaning to him, "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams" (Golden Text).

SIN WILL OUT.

From time to time attempts are made to smuggle small dogs into this country from the Continent. A short while ago, a lady had succeeded in hiding a little pet the whole distance over from the French coast, and seemed likely to be able to land it, when, on stepping ashore at Dover, the tiny creature unfortunately barked, and was at once detected by the Customs' officer. King Saul attempted to deceive the old prophet with regard to the Amalekites. Samuel, however, quick of hearing, said: "What meaneth this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?" (v. 14). Sin will out.

PASSING ON THE BLAME.

When Saul was discovered in his wrong-doing, he did, as many have done before and since, he made an excuse. "The people," said he, "spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God" (v. 15). A short time ago a man was charged in one of our Metropolitan police courts with picking pockets in an omnibus. He assured the magistrate that a great mistake had been made in accusing him, for the property found in his pocket had been placed there by someone else. The magistrate naturally refused to believe such an excuse, and the thief was punished despite his protestations of innocence. The excuse made by King Saul was equally mean and unworthy. The people were blamed by him, and an attempt was made to save himself. God, however, was not deceived.

GOD'S FAITHFUL WITNESSES.

In reading the words of Samuel, "Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, He hath also rejected thee" (v. 23), one is reminded of John Knox's rebuke to Queen Mary. When the reformer heard of her projected marriage with the Spanish prince, he rose in the pulpit at St. Giles', Edinburgh, and told the congregation that if they consented to the step, they would be banishing Christ from the realm. Mary sent for Knox, and with voice shaking between tears and passion, declared that never prince had been so treated. She sobbed violently, and vowed to God she would be avenged. John Knox replied: "Madam, in God's presence I speak; I never delight in the weeping of God's creatures, yet seeing I have but spoken the truth, I must sustain your Majesty's tears rather than hurt my conscience." God must ever occupy the throne of our heart, and He must be served rather than man.

"Public Morals."—After reading PUBLIC MORALS (1s. Morgan & Scott) Ex-President Kruger has written through his secretary expressing deep interest in the work. The author, Mr. James Marchant, has opened a vigorous crusade in the cause of purity in Kent.

Iona.—With reference to the statement made in several quarters that the ecclesiastical buildings in the island of Iona are held by the Episcopal Church in Scotland, several correspondents ask us to state that it was to the Church of Scotland (Presbyterian) that the late Duke of Argyll handed them over.

Bible Flower Mission.—Mrs. L. E. Turton, hon. superintendent and secretary, writes from 110, Cannon Street, E.C.:—"Considering the extraordinary changes in the weather last month, it is a matter of deep thankfulness that we were able to make 38,750 distributions, of which no fewer than 31,581 were bouquets of flowers. For this gratifying result we are largely indebted to one generous sender of the narcissi already referred to. But while making special mention of the above, we are not unmindful of the kind help received in so many various ways, for which we return our heartiest thanks. Before closing, we wish to remind you that this is the season for collecting grasses for our winter store; and we should be greatly obliged if country friends would, where practicable, dry the grasses before sending them, as space at the depôt is very limited. These should not be gathered fully ripe, as they shake and become useless."

Scripture in Modern Speech.

In a sense, and to a degree that it is well to recognise, most "missionary" versions of Holy Scripture (i.e., such as have an Evangelistic rather than an academic object) are made into "Modern Speech," and aim at meeting the reading public on grounds that are familiar and in language that is easy of comprehension. The truly missionary object of Luther's German and the English Authorized versions needs no demonstration. When, at length, they became classic, a reverent regard for sacred forms of speech, combined with a commendable conservatism in dealing with the channels of Divine instruction, gave them a place somewhat apart. In the lapse of time, through changes in verbal usage, and other causes, the modernity of such versions is called in question; and from various points of view, by men of different qualifications, new translations are put forth to meet deficiencies, real or supposed. Some of these versions aim at precision, others at elegance: some are renderings worthy the name, others paraphrases of doubtful value.

The past generation has seen many attempts along these lines, both in English-speaking countries and continental nations. Some have gone to an extreme in literality of rendering; others to an extreme in paraphrastic treatment. The student who is not able to go behind these translations, and examine the original text for himself, may well be a little puzzled at the divergent and contradictory results. An "idiomatic" rendering, by a translator endowed with a lively imagination, has doubtless its attractions, but it cannot be of such abiding service as a more literal translation made by a scholar labouring under the restraints imposed by due regard for the character and authority of the Word of God.

A notable work is before us, bearing the following title: "The New Testament in Modern Speech. An Idiomatic Translation into Everyday English, from the Text of 'The Resultant Greek Testament.' By the late Richard Francis Weymouth, M.A., D.Lit. Edited and partly revised by Ernest Hampden-Cook, M.A." (2s. 6d. net. J. Clarke & Co.). Admirably printed, and forming a compact volume, this version of the Scriptures has features that are distinctive and peculiarly interesting. Dr. Weymouth was an accomplished and exact scholar, and Mr. Hampden-Cooke has done his part with great care. Here is a paragraph from Luke xiii., verses 22 to 30:—

Intense Earnestness Demanded.

He was passing through town after town and village after village, steadily proceeding towards Jerusalem, when some one asked Him, "Sir, are there but few who are to be saved?" He answered them, "Strain every nerve to force your way in through the narrow gate; for multitudes, I tell you, will endeavour to find a way in and will not succeed. As soon as the Master of the house shall have risen and shut the door, and you have begun to stand outside and knock at the door and say, 'Sir, open the door for us,' while He answers, 'I do not know you; you are no friends of Mine;' then you will plead, 'We have eaten and drunk in your company and you have taught in our streets.' But He will reply, 'I tell you that you are no friends of Mine: begone from Me, all of you, wrong-doers as you are.' There will be the weeping and gnashing of teeth, when you see Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and all the Prophets in the Kingdom of God, and yourselves being driven far away. They will come from east and west, from north and south, and sit at the banquet in the Kingdom of God. And I tell you that some now last will then be first, and some now first will then be last."

Here is another specimen paragraph, the opening verses of Romans xii.:—

Self-Surrender to the Love of God.

I plead with you therefore, brethren, by the compassions of God, to present all your faculties to Him as a living and holy sacrifice, acceptable to Him. This with you will be an act of reasonable worship. And do not follow the customs of the present age, but be transformed by the entire renewal of your minds, so that you may learn by experience what God's will is—that will which is good and beautiful and perfect.

By comparing these passages with the A.V. and R.V., the reader will readily appreciate the characteristics of the new version. An endeavour is made to resolve idioms rather than to transfer them; the forms of the Greek are, as far as possible—subject, of course, to the judgment of the translator—replaced by forms agreeable to English literary style. Dr. Weymouth proposed to himself a great task, and threw himself into it with energy and devotion; the result will be treasured by many Bible readers. The small type foot-notes, on points of textual criticism and grammar, with occasional comments, historical and exegetical, will be of special service to careful students. Coming to the Book of Revelation, some of the notes partake of the nature of comment, and that of a controversial character, which, in our judgment, is to be regretted.

"Modern English," in the sense of such a work as this, imposes limitations; on such a level it is difficult to do more than present a somewhat eclectic representation of the inspired record. Within such inevitable limitations, Dr. Weymouth has achieved a signal success, although every scholar will find passages in which to challenge his rendering. Taken as a whole, however, this is a praiseworthy performance; and should be given a place with the most suggestive versions of our day. To consult it, will, in many cases, yield as much as to consult a voluminous commentary.

SITES WITH SACRED MEMORIES.

As the outcome of a visit paid last year to Palestine, Professor Sanday has made a highly serviceable addition to the literature of Christian antiquities in Sacred Sites of the Gospels. (13s. 6d. net. Clarendon Press.) It must come almost with a shock to any not versed in such matters to find how little there is in Jerusalem itself which can be connected with the beginning of the Christian era.

Outside the Temple remains, four interesting points are discussed—(1) Dr. Sanday could not find conclusive evidence for the allocation of the Pool of Bethesda. (2) Light of the deepest interest is thrown on the circumstance of the great trial and condemnation. (3) Differing from the majority of recent contributors to the subject, no good reason is found for departing from the traditional theories regarding Golgotha and the Holy Sepulchre. (4) More clearly identified than any of these is the Cenaculum, or "upper room," in which the infant Church took shape. Passing to the provinces, the evidence for Dalmanutha, Bethabara, Bethany, Gadara, and other places named in the Gospels, is discussed at once reverently and with scientific precision. In a supplementary chapter Mr. Paul Waterhouse deals in similarly able fashion with the Temple of Herod.

"Men, and not walls, make a city;" and the monuments of the past are written more clearly on the Jewish race than in stone or brick. Yet we want to know all that these inanimate things have to tell, and the researches summed up in this volume will be a valuable help to the genuine seeker after such knowledge. A long series of excellent photographic illustrations, maps, and plans, place the student as nearly as possible in the position of the actual traveller. The devout reader must cherish feelings of gratitude and admiration that such exhaustive and scholarly inquiry should be made into questions dear to him.

Simple, spiritual, and Scriptural meditations for a month make up Thoughts for Young Christians. (1s. 6d. net. Nisbet).

Prayer for Sailors and Fisher Folk is a useful and convenient-sized volume, prepared and published for the Church of Scotland. (1s. net. Blackwood.)

Morning Prayer and Praise, compiled by Rev. William Odom, supplies materials for simple home services for a month, and for special occasions. It will be appreciated specially in Church of England families. (1s. "Home Words" Office.)

Rev. T. J. Bass has rendered a service to all lovers of purity and justice by his courageous exposure of the dark state of affairs in the slums of Birmingham, and we may add in other cities also. Tragedies of Life (1s. of the Author, St. Laurence Vicarage, Birmingham), may well make the ears of the reader tingle, yet it is simply a narrative of facts, and such facts as are not far from any one of us.

That Dr. Maurice C. Hime was for thirty years head-master of a college gives point to "Wild Oats"—A Sermon in Rhyme. (1s. net. J. & A. Churchill.) Wise and weighty words are here addressed to the young by one well qualified to do so; and the outward attractiveness of the booklet makes it all the more suitable as a gift to those who stand in need of warning against the rocks and shoals of sin in the sea of life.

The Protestant Guide is a valuable compendium for the use of all who are interested in the struggle with Rome and with Romanizing tendencies. The trend of affairs is well described by those who are thoroughly versed in the subject. The various agencies engaged in the good work are detailed so that those who wish help or guidance may know exactly where to turn for it. (2s. 6d. Imperial Protestant Federation, 3, Palmer Street, Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.)

By no means the least significant of the striking chapters in Rev. H. Livesey's volume, The Silver Vein of Truth, is that dealing with the Lord's Day. The spiritual and physical advantages to be gained by due observance of the Sabbath are set forth in convincing terms, and the author draws on the experience and testimony of many Christian leaders of the past and present to add force to his arguments. Many other themes of equal importance are dealt with in a heart-searching and impressive manner. (2s. 6d. Stockwell.)

Rifted Clouds; or, The Life Story of Bella Cooke, written by herself, has appeared in a fifth edition. (2s. Hodder & Stoughton.) There is a portrait of the sufferer, and a picture of the bedroom in which she has been a prisoner during many years of suffering. The book is properly called a record of loving-kindness and tender mercies; and the pages present a gracious narrative to the praise of a prayer-answering God. Many a sorrowing and struggling woman will find comfort and support in the story of Bella Cooke.

Maranatha; or, New Wine and Old Bottles. By Rev. Francis Bartlett Proctor. (3s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell.) This book attempts to expound and defend the theory that Christ's Second Coming took place about the year 70, when Jerusalem was destroyed; that the new heavens and the new earth began then; that the Parousia is now; and that the new wine of the Kingdom is the Holy Spirit. The writer is confident of his theory, and vigorous in his denunciation of those who do not accept it, among which number most Bible students will be found.

The "Standard Dictionary" of the English Language, issued by Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls, continues to excite the admiration of scholars all over the world; while for the various abridgements, prepared by James C. Fernald, there are no words but those of praise. Students and business folk having been provided for, we now welcome a convenient little volume for school and home use—The Concise Standard Dictionary. The orthography, pronunciation, and meaning of about 28,000 words and phrases are given, with helpful illustrations and several useful appendixes (2s. 6d.).

A Diary of Thought. By Angelina Pollard. Through much suffering in early life, the author had more time for serious thought than most people. These meditations and impressions received in the hours of weariness are recorded in the hope that others may be strengthened and encouraged. For the most part they are summaries of sermons to which the writer had listened, helpful comments being added. About 130 different texts are thus touched, many of the subjects being such as preachers seldom select for treatment. 3s. 6d. (Thos. Burleigh, 376, Strand.)

Colporteurs in Ireland.—The Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland is experiencing much blessing and encouragement in its labours. From many centres there come tidings that the efforts of the workers are being widely owned of God, and it is pleasing to notice that there is no shortcoming so far as the open-door and the readiness of Ireland to receive the Gospel is concerned. The Society has been able to maintain nine agents for the greater part of the year, and the Board, desiring to carry on the work in such a way as to avoid falling into debt, purpose adding to the number of their agents when funds admit. At the annual meeting a few days ago, addresses were given by Revs. J. M'Lay, James Cregan, Jackson Smith, and others. It was reported that in the last twelve months nearly thirty thousand families had been visited, and besides a wide distribution of periodicals, the total sales number 31,810. The faithful labour accomplished encourages the belief that fruit will spring up unto life eternal. The secretary is Rev. William Salmond, Loanend Manse, Templepatrick.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Mr. Henry Varley at Greenwich.

THE meetings which have been held at South Street, Greenwich, during the past sixteen days, have been remarkable in the quickening and deepening of spiritual life amongst hundreds of people. Despite the hot weather, the interest has grown in all directions. The expository character of the addresses has proved how exactly adapted the Word of God is to awaken interest amongst all classes of the people. The large number of men present gave evidence of the hold which the preacher's ministry has in arresting attention and producing deep conviction. It is felt that the whole church has been revived, while hundreds in Greenwich have been aroused to an interest in spiritual things. Sunday last was a memorable day. Three large gatherings—that at night crowded the goodly building to the doors, yielded a fitting close to this remarkable work. Madame Annie Ryall and a devoted band of friends rendered the sacrifice of praise day by day in most attractive and spiritual force. About 400 gathered at the close of the service to the Lord's Table, and the evening yielded the sweet communion of instructed and burning hearts. At one of the closing services the whole audience rose to testify of the light, help, and blessing received.

Blackpool.

In connection with the Y.M.C.A. Gospel services for the people an open-air meeting was conducted on Saturday, July 4, by Rev. John McNeill, on the Blackpool sands. There was a great crowd in the town, owing to an "All-England walk," and advantage was taken of this fact to reach the crowd with the Gospel. Some 6,000 people gathered on the Sabbath in the Hippodrome. Mr. Geo. Clarke was the speaker. L. J.

Mr. J. J. Sims in Ireland.

The doors for evangelistic work in the counties of Cork and Kerry have lately been opened as never before; and the opportunity has been taken advantage of by Mr. J. J. Sims, accompanied by Mrs. Sims. Following the Mission in the Palace Theatre, Cork, in May and June, 1902, Mr. Sims started work in the country districts practically untrodden before, going from place to place as occasion offered, and the itinerary has been continued up to the present time without break, including missions in Dublin and Belfast.

The work has been attended with much greater results than were even anticipated. The attendances, even in out-of-the-way centres, have been large and attentive, on many occasions the room or hall where the Mission was held was packed inside, the windows and door being surrounded by an eager crowd. Mr. Sims uses a lantern and large screen, on which the Scriptures are shown with striking effect. The land and water scenes attract and interest the people, who take the keenest interest in the services, as is evidenced by the quiet demeanour and rapt attention manifested during the declaration of the Gospel.

Many testimonies were given showing that the Holy Ghost was convincing men of sin and saving souls, a frequent expression being "We never heard this before." As a matter of fact, in the fifteen or sixteen places visited, most of which were out of the usual track even of tourists, there were very many who had never before heard the Gospel of God's grace. What a change from ordinary evangelistic work to find in these districts numbers who never heard of the love of Jesus! The plain, simple country folk living in the midst of the most exquisite scenery, the Creator's handiwork, yet untaught in the grand work accomplished by the Man of Sorrows! To tell the good news to them was a new and blessed experience, and as the Lord led it seemed like a chapter from the Acts of the Apostles. Apart from the many signs and tokens of the Word finding a lodgment, there was evident indication of the seed falling into good ground.
W. B. F.

Dr. G. W. Richards, of Clapham, and Rev. F. H. Crouch, of Hersham, will be at liberty during the first three weeks of August to hold Gospel meetings in or outdoors in any district where such work is practicable and specially needed. Their service is entirely gratuitous, and friends who would wish a visit from these brethren may write to Dr. Richards, 2, Grove Mansions, Clapham Common, S.W.

Mr. J. A. M'Cullagh is having open-air meetings at Douglas, Isle of Man, during July, and will value the fellowship of Christians visiting the island.

Since the recent awakening at Hopeman, on the Moray Firth coast, the fishermen have been "scattered abroad" in the Hebrides, Orkneys, and Shetlands. As a sign of the Lord's blessing on their testimony in these places nearly twenty cases of conversion are reported among fishermen and girls belonging to a neighbouring village. C. W. A.

Rev. J. A. Soper has just conducted an eight-days' mission at Westgate Baptist Chapel, Rotherham. Mr. Soper in the first place gathered around him an earnest band of helpers. Then every house in the neighbourhood was visited, and a personal and pressing invitation was given to attend the services, with the result that a congregation assembled which nearly filled the church. Every night the congregations grew larger, and every night the friends had the joy of witnessing some seeking Christ.

Mr. R. Sidders has been paying a visit to Sittingbourne with his Bible Van, for the past two weeks. After visiting from house to house in the day time, he has had large numbers in the open air each evening, some standing from eight o'clock until after ten, listening to the Gospel message. At the close of each meeting invitations were given to those who decided to accept the Lord Jesus as their personal Saviour to come forward. Many did so, seeming under deep conviction. Each was given a little book clearly showing the way of salvation. Wm. Whitehead.

Cranleigh, Surrey, has just had another visit from Mr. J. G. Stanger, of the Evangelization Society. Not only among God's people has the Word been blessed, but many of the unsaved have had their eyes opened to their lost condition. We trust many have been led to the Saviour during the mission. During the three weeks twenty meetings were held, with an average attendance of 106, and taking into consideration the wet weather at the start and the busy season at its close, we have great cause for thankfulness.
J. N.

At the invitation of the Pontypridd United Open-Air Mission, Sergeant G. Pullinger and Mr. C. Christenson, of the Open-Air Mission, have just conducted a ten days' mission in Pontypridd. Several meetings were held each day in the streets, and the two evangelists, supported by many local workers and ministers, proclaimed the Gospel with earnestness and faithfulness. Tracts and leaflets supplied by the Open-Air Mission were freely distributed, and decision cards and Gospels were taken by several whose hearts had been touched. Local workers have taken great encouragement and are pressing forward, confident that God is blessing the people through their labours.
H. H. Gibson, Secretary.

Rev. Jesse Mayo, who is in charge of the National Free Church Council's Mission Van, has made a very successful start at King's Lynn of an extensive tour in Norfolk. Good audiences have attended nightly, and on Sunday evening upwards of 2,000 people were present at the open-air service. In the afternoon, Councillor A. Jermyn, J.P., presided, and Mr. W. Gibbard in the evening. The Y.P.S.C.E. String Band in connection with the Primitive Methodist Church did good service in leading the singing. Mr. Mayo's powerful addresses moved the people, and on Monday night four young people decided for Christ. The Van will visit Wattington, Downham, Shouldham, Pentney, Castleacre, Necton, Dereham. May I ask the prayers of God's people upon this effort to evangelize the villages and towns of Norfolk, where the Gospel is so much needed? Charles Houghton,
Secretary of West Norfolk Federation.

Requests for Prayer.

That the danger of Sunday trams in Ipswich may be averted.

For the seaside work of the Open-Air Mission, July and August.

For young people's services, to be conducted by Mr. George Brimett at Aberystwyth.

For the conversion of a young couple, both of whom are giving way to drink, and causing great distress to one who loves them.

The Y.M.C.A.

THERE is much need for a permanent building at Poona, and an effort is being made to raise funds for that purpose. If a secretary could be found to go out at his own charges, or to be supported by friends at home, much might be accomplished among the European and Eurasian young men.

The report of the Eleventh International Railroad Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations recently held in Topeka shows some very interesting figures in the growth of the organization since the previous conference held at Philadelphia, 1900. The number of Railroad Associations has increased from 161 to 195, and the membership from 41,794 to 62,288, a remarkable growth of over 20,000 members. The number of buildings owned or set aside by railroad companies is 113, and 306 men are employed as secretaries and assistants. The average daily attendance at all the association rooms is 27,125.

Welsh Notes.

IN the course of an address to the students of Lampeter College, the Bishop of St. David's expressed the hope that the young men leaving would derive inspiration from two aims. The first was enlightened loyalty to the Church of England; the second, the cultivation of feelings of warm friendliness to the fullest possible degree, and in every possible way, with their Nonconformist brethren.

The annual meetings of the Bala Theological College were held on Thursday, July 2. The report submitted by Vice-Principal Ellis Edwards, M.A., gave the number of students at present in the institution at forty. Twenty-two new students have been received. Out of the forty on the college roll, thirteen are graduates. The college has had the distinction of being affiliated to the Welsh University, as a consequence the professional staff will form part of the theological board of the Welsh University. The annual address to the students was delivered by Rev. Oswald Dykes, D.D., principal of the Presbyterian College at Cambridge.

The Congregational Union of Wales held its annual meetings at Dowlais, on July 7 to 9. The desirability of appointing a missioner to establish new causes was discussed, but no decision was arrived at. The total amount contributed towards the Twentieth Century Fund was £24,056 11s. 6d., of which only £6,730 10s. 9d. now remains unappropriated. In a discussion on the condition of weak churches, some startling statements were made. There are 100 churches in the denomination whose income does not exceed £80 a year, eighty-five ministers receive less than £80 annually; fifty have an income of less than £52, and numbers receive less than £30 a year. The formation of a Sustentation Fund was suggested, also the grouping of small churches together in one pastorate.

Belfast.—In the City Council of Belfast a proposal has been carried by a snatch vote to have a Sunday delivery of letters in the city. This has given rise to extensive and earnest protest on the part of all classes in the community. It is felt that if London and Dublin can do without a Sunday delivery of letters, Belfast can. Moreover, Belfast has been able to do without it hitherto, and why should it not do without in the future? Besides, people who want their letters can get them by calling at the Post Office, so that there is no grievance in the case.

Notes & Comments

 Messrs. Morgan & Scott receive, acknowledge in The Christian, and transmit, donations sent to them in aid of any accredited Societies and Missions. No charge of any kind is ever made on such donations.

Day in the Country. As the summer season is rapidly passing, it is of great importance that those who feel led to contribute to our "Day in the Country" Fund should send their kind gifts without delay. We have many applications from workers in different parts of the metropolis, showing that the need for such a breathing time is very great among the denizens of our courts and alleys.

"Criticism and Missions." We commend the important article under this title to the consideration of our readers. That the speculations and contradictions of Tom Paine, repeated by professedly Christian teachers, that the infidelity, formerly urged from without, but now cherished within what profess to be Christian schools, should have the effect described by our correspondent, cannot be wondered at. "How long, O Lord, how long?"

Hidden Testimony. The work of Palestine exploration continues to throw strong light upon the inspired pages of the Word of God. The recent partial excavation of Gezer, a city which was of great importance long before the children of Israel crossed the Jordan, has been even richer in results than many other explorations previously made. The search has resulted in the discovery of remains of not only pre-Semitic times, but of times when mankind used only stone implements, and dwelt in caves. To the close student of the Bible, however, the finding of a "High Place," which Sir Charles Wilson has just described, with its monoliths, and stone platform and walled inclosure (Lev. xxvi. 30, et.), will be of the highest interest as illustrating one stage of the public worship of the chosen people.

Substitutes for Christian Faith. The recently-concluded Daily News Church Census has been fruitful in surprises, and its public revelations must necessarily prove unpleasant to some of the bodies tabulated. There has been so much "tall talk" about the rapid development of modern ethical and other movements, vaunted as being desirable and satisfactory substitutes for the "old-fashioned and unsatisfactory" Christian faith, that it will surprise some to find from our contemporary's figures, that these have, after all, a comparatively small hold on the community. As regards several of them, the records of Sunday attendance for the whole of London, with its 1,003,000 worshippers, stand thus: "The Church of Humanity," men, 4; women, 10; children, 2. "The Theistic Church," men, 114; women, 104; children, 6. "The Ethical Society," men, 507; women, 463; children, 225. "The Theosophical Society," men, 6; women, 16; children, 2. One is disposed to pity these children; but what of their ill-instructed elders, who can suppose that they are able to approach Almighty God without the mediation of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The Papal Conclave. The Giornale d'Italia recently published an interview which a member of its staff had had with a Roman Cardinal, the subject of the conversation being the approaching Conclave. The Cardinal was very frank, and made it quite clear for all the world to know that a troublesome time lies ahead. The election of the next Pope is spoken of in terms which recall the intrigues of a political campaign. One candidate for the Papacy is to be resisted because his politics are contrary to those of Leo XIII. with regard to France. Another is to be put forward because he inclines to the democracy. Another is to be resisted because "he would be more religious than political." Verily it is a remarkable spectacle, quite worthy, however, of the past of the Papacy.

Rome and Politics. But to speak of this kind of thing as being an Apostolic succession is to make sport of words. Ever since the days when Rome boldly absorbed the heathen Constantine with all his pagan ways, this "Church" has been political. The Cardinals want a "Vicar of Christ" who can manipulate worldly matters to the advantage of the "Church." The papal election is as much a political affair as any openly declared political election can be, with the added disadvantage that its aim, as in the case of France, is to sow discord amongst the nations, that the "Church" may obtain supremacy. The Papacy means this, but thank God its power is crippled, even at its own doors in Rome.

The Narrow Line. Week by week the Romanist journals announce the reception into "the Church" of Ritualistic clergymen, the two latest including an office bearer among the "Cowley Fathers." Strange to say, however, considering how important a factor the High Church movement plays as a feeder of Rome, those papers almost invariably refer in the most contemptuous terms to Ritualism and its leaders and followers. In a recent issue a writer in one of them, touching upon the High Church fasting on Fridays, says:—

> They do so, as they do everything else, simply in imitation of ourselves. . . . If, instead of abstaining on Fridays, Catholics were ordered to stand upon their heads for half an hour by way of penance, we should in a very short time find that all the most advanced Ritualists were recommending the practice to their followers.

Maternity and Drink. The paper read by Miss Frances Zannetti, last week, at the meeting of the Society for the Study of Inebriety, upon the influence of inebriety upon child life, was painfully startling. This lady, who is a poor-law inspector at Manchester, has unique opportunities for studying the facts of life amongst the lower classes, and her conclusion, based upon incontrovertible facts, is that drunkenness in women is the chief cause of that decadence in physique and of those social vices to which increasing attention is being directed. Dr. Claye Shaw, who took part in the after discussion, said that fifty-six per cent. of the infants born of drunken mothers died in early infancy, and the majority of the remaining forty-four per cent. provided inmates for our asylums and prisons. Revelations of this kind ought surely to stagger the nation and to force our legislators to deal at once with this awful drink evil. With regard to the Christian side of the reform, so far as drinking women are concerned, nothing less than personal dealing with these poor creatures will do. There is a solemn obligation upon Christian women especially, to seek out and to save their lost sisters.

Prayers for Peace. When we speak of peace, and rejoice that we are not engaged in actual warfare with another power, we are apt to overlook the cost, directly and indirectly, of the huge armaments and establishments kept up in our own and other countries, in preparation for international strife. Mrs. Fenwick Miller has recently pointed out what these standing armies mean to the men and women who, engaged in peaceful pursuits, have to maintain "the material for war." Undoubtedly, without actual compulsory military service, we all have to serve unpaid in the army; and when the huge cost of these great bodies of men is considered (an outlay which would be productive of blessing to the world, if expended in other directions), there is a reason sufficient in itself for our prayers for the development of national good feeling, and for a real peace which shall not tremble upon the unsettled foundations kept ready for war and bloodshed.

Souls for Hire. A recent volume of discussions of Modern Town Life, in which several well-known writers deal with problems affecting life at the heart of the Empire, places emphasis on one prominent sign of the times—the gradual falling away of a large section of commercial life from any standard save that of making money. Recent painful statements in several cases in the police-courts, as to the starvation wages paid by leading limited liability establishments, certainly seem to justify what Mr. Masterman says:—

> The apparently inexhaustible supply of unskilled labour has resulted in the building up of whole industries dependent upon the cheapest, crudest forms of manual service, the workers forming a sodden mass of humanity . . . while the inevitable loneliness and isolation of these competing units in the monstrous aggregation of London, and the absence of any background, setting present action into some large framework of feeling which would enforce upon each individual a sense of personal responsibility, are conditions which fill observers with dreary forebodings. A great multitude drift on unconscious of the strenuous activities of the churches and philanthropic agencies.

Again the question arises, How far are those who receive large dividends from these associations endeavouring to acquaint themselves with the circumstances under which the large profits are secured?

Apathy and its Remedy. In a paper dealing with the subject of "The Spread of Religious Indifference," Rev. Daniel Radford has recently offered several solutions as to the causes of the development of the noteworthy decadence. He is optimistic as regards the future, however, and thinks that the (certainly overrated) conflict between science and religion is merely a repetition of the recurring one which has previously quieted down and left religion in the field. It is not very complimentary that he should find as one of the difficulties in the way of a higher standard of life the fact that religion "troubles the self-indulgent life."

In that, however, he does not stand alone, for his Master and the disciples found that out before him. Nothing which had not this effect would be worth terming religion, and the man who is not prepared for self-sacrifice and for self-abnegation had better not take up the cross to follow Jesus in the way. They whose hearts are touched will, however, be ready for both.

Our "Common Christianity."

THE Daily News has, under a new and highly-esteemed proprietorship, sprung into a popularity which on many accounts it well deserves. It is a bold and wise new departure, and one, possibly, involving a loss, to cease the insertion of betting news and the advertisements of intoxicating drinks. On the strength of these advantages this journal naturally tends to become a family newspaper. But there are other hurtful tendencies possible to the periodical Press. There are influences and opinions more subtle and less apparent, but not less injurious to young and susceptible minds, and to the unthinking crowd who are not young, in these shallow and superficial days. Here is an illustration of what we mean, quoted from our contemporary's issue of July 16:—

"You surely don't have 'religious tests' for your staff!" writes a correspondent who seems to have misunderstood something we said yesterday. "Surely you ask no questions about anyone's religion—whether he is Atheist, Romanist, &c! Surely you are quite unsectarian!!"

Certainly we are. That is what we are for.

But we would ask, in all courtesy, Does unsectarianism consist in putting Atheists and Romanists on the staff of a paper intended for the daily reading of the younger as well as older members of Christian and Protestant families? The editorial staff of a daily newspaper exercises a daily influence on its readers, and its members should not be selected without reference to its opinions or its tendencies, its beliefs or its unbeliefs, if it aspires to be received with confidence into Christian and Protestant families. The influence of Rome on the British Press is notorious; a great opportunity is open to the Daily News to see that its fountain of usefulness is not thus poisoned at its source.

Dr. Horton has translated the Latin verses of the late Pope, and sent his translation to the Daily News, which inserts them with the following prefatory note:—

"I find people greatly interested," writes Dr. Horton, "in the Latin verses of the dying Pope which you published. Do you care to have the enclosed English version?" We publish it with pleasure, if for no other reason than that it may serve to remind an intolerant section, from which we occasionally hear, that a man so widely differing in doctrine from Pope Leo as Dr. Horton is none the less capable of recognising the Christianity that is common to them both.

But apart from that, we think Dr. Horton's version is happily done, and conveys the spirit and qualities of the Latin poem, even to its occasional roughnesses, better than any literal translation could do it. It is called "Night Thoughts of a Groaning Soul":

Leo, the fatal hour draws near,
'Tis time for you to go,
To take the endless road to bliss,
Or else to woe.

The gifts which God in bounty gave
Might bid you hope for heaven.
The fateful keys, the weighty charge
To you long given.

But think of these with sighs! For he
'Mong men who most shall be
Exalted, miserable shall pay
A sharper penalty.

I tremble. Then there comes a form
Sweet, and a sweeter voice of cheer,
Which whispers to my soul and says:
Why should you fear?
Why trace and mourn your vanished days?
For Christ is near, and when you pray,
He pities, pardons, and will wash
Your guilt away.

It is not for us to judge the now deceased Pope. He was the professed servant of the righteous God who loveth righteousness,

Whose love is as great as His power,
And neither knows measure nor end;

"who willeth that all men should be saved." We could not fail to feel intensely the pathos of those dying hours. But when we are said to be united in a Christianity common to both, and to eulogise Leo XIII. as "the humblest of Christians" (Daily News leader, July 21), we are imperatively called upon, in the interest of the young, the inexperienced, and the unthinking, to declare that the Christianized paganism described in the Italian newspapers quoted by Dr. Robertson (page 14) is not the truth for which God's faithful martyrs were tortured, burned, or beheaded by this paganized Christianity. And in view of the returning tide of the same ruinous apostasy, we cannot help but cry out against the false liberalism so well depicted by Tennyson as "Freedom free to slay herself, and dying while they shout her name." This prostitution of liberty is welcoming into our midst a tyranny, historically and essentially bound to its cruel and wicked past, by its blasphemous dogma of Papal infallibility, and its true motto of Semper Eadem.

To many readers the last lines of the "Night Thoughts of a Groaning Soul," will at first sight appear what the writer in the Daily News accounts them to be, the evidence of the Pontiff's Christianity common to us all. But notwithstanding the risk of being classed with the "intolerant section," we ask, Is the reference to Christ in the last verse to be regarded as a proof of the Christianity of the author during his life, or of his conversion on his deathbed? If the former, how does it agree with the priest's deploring declaration that "a pagan could say all that the Pope has said" (p. 14)? And, if the latter, where is the expression of the repentance towards God which precedes faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, or the evidence that the confidence afforded by having done his duty, or his devotion to the Madonna of Carmine, have been exchanged for confidence in the Lord who bought us with His own blood, and devotion to Him whom God raised from the dead?

We would fain hope that this utterance of the groaning soul might prove to be the touch of the hem of the Saviour's garment, which suffices for salvation. But the universal experience of the uncertainty of deathbed repentances necessitates a warning against encouraging the living to suppose that other gods can have dominion over us through life, and that we can safely postpone our reconciliation with God to our dying day.

Criticism and Missions.

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of August 7, 1902, you kindly inserted some remarks of mine regarding the effect on missionary work of the theories of the Higher Critics. Through your columns I put a plain question to the adherents of the critical school, which is constantly asked in Mohammedan controversy, and which every missionary ought to be able to answer.*

I have received no answer to this plain and practical question, put in all honesty and sincerity by a worker in the mission field. The Moslem Press has not been slow to recognise that the Critical School are their allies, and I send you an article from the Review of Religions for May, 1903, which suggests food for grave reflection:—

EXTRACTS.

Anent a lecture given by Dr. Rouse in Calcutta at the Bengali Christian Conference on the Higher Criticism of the Bible, the Harvest Field, a missionary magazine, writes:—

"We believe that it is very desirable, in the interests of the truth and of the Christian Church in India, that more attention should be paid to the doctrine of inspiration as the majority of the leaders and scholars of the Christian Church now formulate it. . . . For our part we would repeat the wise words of the Indian Witness:—

For a long time we have felt that it is unwise and unfair to the Indian Church, especially to the educated young men rapidly coming to the front, to withhold knowledge of the mighty revolution in Bible criticism now proceeding in the West. There is sure to be a rude and injurious awakening on the subject if anything like a conspiracy of silence should be observed. The vast majority of the Indian ministers are wholly ignorant of the new views of the Bible entertained by the bulk of missionaries. As one of the speakers at the conference affirmed, there are young men in training for the ministry at the present time who are still being taught the doctrine of verbal inspiration and the absolute inerrancy of the text of Scripture. To teach this is to play into the hands of the enemy in a sadly unwise manner, and is little less than treason against truth. . . . Senseless denunciation of higher criticism and contemptuous references to the critics, are unworthy of Christian truth seekers and should cease.

"Thus the Bible has been swept away like a straw before the mighty current of modern criticism, and such was the fate it deserved. It is not the unmixed Word of God, it is not unerring; such is the modern Christian faith, and we are glad to see that even the Christian missionaries have recognised the truth of these views. But in spite of this belief, it is nothing less than sheer folly to depend on it for salvation. What is not itself free from error cannot free others. Nineteen hundred years' experience further bears testimony to the failure of the Bible as a purifying agency. . . . We are unable to account for the misguided zeal with which they are still preaching this book, which even according to them is not free from error. Do they think that they can do any good to the world by preaching error? The truth of the higher criticism, and the error of the Bible, being once recognised, it is difficult to see how the Christian religion can stand for a moment!

Many of the questions which the writer puts in the extract given above are pertinent, and, making every allowance for his bias against Christianity, they call for an answer. The adherents of the critical school have made no reply to a practical question asked by a Missionary; perhaps they may be induced to give an answer to the question of a Moslem, who claims them as allies, in that they have at last discovered what the Koran told them long ago, viz., that the Bible was corrupt and untrustworthy, and that the Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ was a delusion!—Yours faithfully,

AN INDIAN MISSIONARY.

* The question was:—If the Moslem says, as say he will: "You tell me that Jesus Christ in the Gospels tells us that the Pentateuch was written by Moses—for that is what His words plainly mean—and that the Psalms (or some of them, at all events, which He quotes or refers to) were written by David; but when you now admit that such a statement cannot be true, how can you ask me to admit that Jesus Christ was the Son of the one true God? How could Jesus, who you say was the truth itself, be Divine when He made a statement which is not true?" What am I to reply? "And if Jesus is not Divine, as all missionaries hitherto have said, on what ground do you ask me to accept the Injil, or Gospels, as a revelation from God?" What am I to say?

THE

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

The Lord's Ideal.

(Matt. v. 1-12.

LET us study our Lord's ideal of character, with the prayer that He would graciously repeat it in us, remembering that it is only as He gives us Himself we can apprehend that for which we were apprehended, and be that which He desires. The vine must abide in the branch, or these fruits will be impossible. "Apart from Him . . . nothing."

THE PASSIVE SIDE OF THE BLESSED LIFE.

To be poor in spirit is to be vacant of self, and waiting for God. To have no confidence in the flesh; to be emptied of self-reliance; to be conscious of absolute insufficiency; to be thankfully dependent on the life-energy of the living God—that is poverty of spirit; and it has been characteristic of some of the noblest, richest, most glorious natures that have ever trodden the shores of Time. Happy are they who are conscious of a poverty which only the Divine indwelling can change into wealth, and who are willing, like the wondrous beggar of Meister Eckhart, to confess that they would rather be in hell and have God, than in heaven and not have Him.

It is, indeed, remarkable that some of the most richly dowered in mental and moral wealth, have been most eager to confess that they were nothing—babes in the world of being, children picking up stones on the shores of boundless oceans, scholars on the lowest form of the school, to whom mature growth and knowledge seemed as yet indefinitely distant.

The way to become poor in spirit is to realize that thou hast no power of thine own by which to bless and help others, and to open thy whole being to the incoming and through-flowing of the wealth of the ever-blessed God. It was thus that the Master Himself lived and wrought. Though He was rich in all the Divine plenitude of His Divine nature, "He became poor," and "emptied Himself." In other words, He determined not to speak His own words, follow His own scheme and plan, or work His mighty works in His own might; but became the channel and instrument through which His Father spoke, wrought, and reconciled the world unto Himself. O soul of man, there is no other course for thee and me! To confess that thou art nothing, but that Christ is all; to know that thou canst do nothing effective to bless men, but that Christ can, and will do it by thee; that is the secret of this poverty of spirit, which unlocks the treasures of the Kingdom of Heaven.

Many ancient authorities place meekness next, and it seems the natural order, for the soul that realizes its own nothingness and helplessness is likely to be meek. The meek are so occupied with their desire that God's grace should pass through them to their fellows, that they are prepared to sink all considerations of their own, so that nothing may interfere with the effect for which they long.

They cannot afford, therefore, to be always standing on their own dignity and defending their own rights. These are willingly cast into the furnace to augment the flame, that the obdurate metal may be fused. "Being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we endure; being defamed, we entreat. We are made as the filth of the world, the offscouring of all things; but all things are for your sakes, that the abundant grace through the thanksgiving of many may abound to the glory of God."

The way to become meek is to be absorbingly taken up with the love of Christ for men. Be lowly before God, allowing His love to enter and fill thy heart, and thou wilt find it easy to be meek towards man. Thy pride will be driven out by the expulsive power of the new affection. Thou wilt be prepared to accept flouts and sneers, if only thou canst bless and help others; even as God, who answers not the blasphemous and hard things that are said against Him, continues to send His rain and cause His sun to shine, to bring men back in penitence to His heart.

It would be a great mistake, however, to suppose that the meek are cowardly, deficient in strength of purpose or force of will. They are among the strongest and most earnest of men. But they are strong in patience and strenuous in seeking the salvation of others. Let the cause of righteousness, justice, or truth be in question, none are so unbending or stalwart as they. Of the wrongs done to themselves they are disposed to take no account, but they dare not refrain from bearing witness, both by speech and act, whenever the sacred majesty of truth is assailed.

It is natural that the meek should become those that mourn. They feel keenly the evil of sin and the sanctity of sorrow, like Him who sighed as He touched the tongue of the dumb, groaned as He came to the grave of his friend, and wept as He beheld the city.

Of all mourners, Jeremiah is one of the most plaintive. There is no lyric on the page of history to be compared with the Book of Lamentations:—

"Mine eye runneth down with streams of water."

"Mine eye poureth down and ceaseth not."

"Mine eye affecteth my soul."

When we turn from the sin of the world, the woes of men, the high-handed wrong of the great, and the abject poverty, sorrow, and anguish of heart of the oppressed—to the sin of our own hearts, the broken ideals, the frustrated purposes, the perpetual contrast between what we would be and what we are, surely our tears must have more salt in them, and cut deeper courses in their flow.

There surely is no need to show the way for mourning such as this. Look above thee and see the Christ stand, so pure, so chaste, so glorious in the light in which He arrays Himself as with a garment, and thou wilt abhor thyself and repent in the dust. Look around thee, and try to estimate the weight of a world's apostasy, the deluge of tears, the hurricane of sighs, that mount up to heaven. "Ah, it's a sair world, my masters!"

But the mourners are not content to shed tears only, they hunger and thirst after righteousness. St. Augustine says that they hunger and thirst after the Righteous One—"Jesus Christ the Righteous." They were made for Him, and will never be satisfied until they attain to the fruition of all their hopes, to know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings.

Without doubt such is their supreme desire, and as included in this they hunger and thirst for the ultimate triumph of righteousness in their own hearts and in the world of men. Every moan of pain, every consciousness of failure, every temporary triumph of reactionary and destructive forces, elicits the more urgent and persistent prayer, "Thy Kingdom come." The personal coming of the Lord is desired not primarily because the Bride desires the Bridegroom, but because the subject longs for the triumph of that Kingdom, which is righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

This aspiration is noble. Some hungers are ignoble, despicable, and base. But this is shared in by God Himself, whose Spirit longs with inexpressible desire, to bring to an end the present condition of things in the vindication and manifestation of His sons. The angels, as they behold the evil and pain of our earth; the champion of the rights of men, who wrestles with the hydra-headed and protean evil of his age, the wronged womanhood of the harem and the street; the dumb creation groaning and travailing with enormous and cruel wrongs, all join in this blessed hunger and thirst—the aspiration which amounts to a sure and certain hope that cannot be ashamed.

Thou needest not be taught this, for thou hast often felt it. Amid the violet light of a dying summer's day, when soft and lovely music—songs without words—is filling the entranced and listening air, when some heroic stand for liberty is drowned and quenched in blood, when the white robes of the soul have been stained and polluted by some recent fall, then the soul hungers with an intolerable pain, and thirsts, as the wounded hart for water-brooks, that righteousness should set up its blessed and all-conquering reign.

Simon Peter.

OUTLINE BIBLE-READINGS.

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, B.D.

10.—A LESSON ON TRUE SERVICE.

AGAIN we shall see how strongly personal character and fitness were emphasized by our Lord for His disciples. Now we follow the Master as He teaches Simon Peter what service really means. Study Matt. xix. 17-30, and xx. 1-16; Mark x. 28-31; Luke xviii. 28-30.

I.—THE DISCIPLES' QUESTION (Matt. xix. 27).

1. Its Occasion. "Then." See context. Arose directly out of the rich young ruler's refusal to "leave all and follow."

2. Its Spirit. "What shall we have?" Boast and brag. Contrast Peter's feelings with those of the rest (v. 25). They were afraid and astonished. He was complacent and self-satisfied.

II.—THE MASTER'S REPLY (Matt. xix. 28-30).

1. The Encouragement (v. 28, 29). (a) The reward of honour (v. 28). Note the disproportion. They "left their fishing." They should "sit on thrones." Their "all" was comparatively little, but it was their "all," and so the Master honoured it. Might not the very magnitude of the honour tend to keep them low? Compare the honour in which they are regarded now as the founders of the Church. (b) The reward of requital (v. 29). Note the form of the promise—"thrones." Was not this an idea perilously near their worldly conceptions of Messiahship? Why did He not correct these ideas, instead of apparently confirming them? It has been suggested that He did it to allure them to higher ideas through the lower, that it was not delusion, but illusion. They would find the reality by-and-by. He does not always break our idols. He transforms them.

N.B. Cf. Mark x. 30, "now in this present time" and "with persecutions." Persecutions are actually regarded, not as drawbacks, but as part of the gain! In what senses does the Christian receive "a hundredfold now"? Clearly not literally (hundred wives, children, &c.), but hundredfold of that which gives these things their value, the satisfaction they afford. Our capacity to enjoy increases. "In keeping of them (not for keeping them) there is great reward" (Psa. xix. 11).

N.B.—Compare Peter in the eyes of the world to-day. Has he not received his hundredfold in fame and praise and gratitude?

2. The Warning (v. 30). (a) The last first. (b) The first last. Rewards not determined by the fact or duration or quantity of service, but by motive. The right spirit is everything. Motive makes the man. Quality depends on motive.

III.—THE MASTER'S ILLUSTRATION (Matt. xx. 1-16).

1. The Parable Explained (1-15). (a) Note the key phrases: "agreed"; this shows the justice of the Master. "What is right" i.e., the righteousness of the Master. "My will" (R.V.) i.e., being just to all He may surely be generous to some if He wishes. Circumstances may vary, and some may have fewer opportunities. Are they therefore to suffer? "Eye evil," i.e., envious of others' blessings. (b) Compare the three parables which deal with rewards. (a) According to quantity of work, i.e., when ability is equal. "Talents" (Matt. xxv.) (b) According to ability of worker, i.e., when ability varies. "Pounds" (Luke xix.) (c) According to motive of worker. Labourers (Matt. xx.)

2. The Parable applied (v. 16).

(a) "Many." Note the proportion. How sad! Why is it? Spasmodic and intermittent work. Not habitual faithfulness. "Few are choice" is a good interpretation. (b) Yet, not all. "There are first who shall not be last." There are last who shall not be first. "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right" (Gen. xviii. 25)?

SUGGESTIONS.

1. The Rewards of the Kingdom.

(a) Present. In Christ we find everything that makes kinship, relationship, property, possessions, attainments of the truest, highest possible worth. Also we find higher relationships and possessions, even spiritual and eternal. And in Him the possession and enjoyment of everything in grace, nature, art, science is deeper, richer, fuller. "All things are yours" (1 Cor. iii. 21). (b) Future. The crown and culmination of this life. God's purposes are not fulfilled here and now. They stretch over to the world to come.

2. The Risks of the Kingdom.

(a) Because of the wrong spirit in the worker, and because of unfaithfulness in work. (b) Resulting in absence of reward, loss of blessing, "saved (only) so as by fire" (1 Cor. iii. 15).

THE

Science and Mystery of Prayer

By Rev. FREDERIC C. SPURR.

VI.—Prayer as Intercession for Others.

IN giving the first place to the consideration of prayer as it concerns our individual lives, we have not been guilty of selfishness. All devotion commences with the individual life. The perfection of the whole depends upon the perfection of the separate parts. But devotion can never be complete until the individual recognises his debt to the race of which he is part, and seeks to discharge it by seeking the highest good of his fellow-men. It is not left to his caprice. Even for his enemies he must pray; for those who despitefully use him and persecute him.

Whether we are asked to pray for men or not, the obligation is upon us. One of the most remarkable cases of proferred intercession is that of Moses (Ex. xxxii.). God had threatened to blot out Israel and to make of Moses a great people. But instead of profiting by this offer, Moses "returned unto the Lord and said . . . If Thou wilt forgive their sin—and if not, blot me, I pray Thee, out of Thy book which Thou has written." It was a wonderful prayer. His whole soul was in it. He was willing to suffer the malediction of God, if thereby the people might be spared. There can be no greater contrast than between intercession of this kind and the perfunctory intercessions for sinners which are so often heard.

A FOOLISH OBJECTION.

But it is necessary to establish our right to intercede with God on behalf of men. We must not be discouraged by the frequent sneer that "men have enough to do to put their own lives right, without troubling about praying for others." The Christian has a right of intercession, and it is based upon his priesthood. Every Christian is a priest unto God by reason of his union with the Lord Jesus Christ. As the sons of Aaron derived their office from their relationship to him who was at once their father and their great high priest, so the Christian derives his office from his spiritual relationship to the Saviour, the Great High Priest. We must be firm here. There is no priesthood in the Church of God from which the humblest believer is excluded. Had this been realized and acted upon from the first, the world would never have been cursed with a bogus priesthood.

As a priest the Christian has a double work to accomplish. He must offer sacrifices to God and intercessions on behalf of men. His sacrifices are those of praise (Heb. xiii. 15, 16), possessions (Phil. iv. 18), and his person (Rom. xii. 1). Beyond this he has to offer intercessions on behalf of men—thus fulfilling the type of the ancient priesthood.

The intercession of our Lord is authoritative and absolutely efficacious. Ours, on the contrary, is authoritative only as it is in union with His intercession, and it is limited in its range. What is the authority and limit of our intercessions may be clearly understood by an examination of the first intercession recorded in the Bible—that of Abraham for Sodom—in which principles for all time are given.

CONDITIONS OF INTERCESSION.

Upon the night before the Divine vengeance fell upon Sodom, Abraham drew near to the Lord and offered an intercessory prayer so remarkable that it has never ceased to touch the hearts of the godly in all generations. But why did Abraham pray for the guilty city? He had no personal interests in it. Lot had every interest in Sodom. Yet he never entreated God on behalf of Sodom. It was the man outside Sodom who interceded for it; and if we would understand the reason for his intercession we must review his history a little. The wonderful prayer came from a wonderful man; the man explains the prayer. First we note that at a crisis of his life, when, through the abundance of his cattle, he and Lot were compelled to part company, Abraham made a choice in favour of his piety, whilst Lot made a choice in favour of his purse (Gen. xiii.). The tempting vale of Sodom allured Lot; he saw there the opportunity of becoming a rich man. He knew of Sodom's awful iniquity, yet he deliberately went to live there, because there he could the more easily become a rich man. Is anyone surprised that he did not intercede for Sodom? But Abraham had the courage to choose a place where he could have his altar—although the pasturage was inferior. The man who makes such a choice is always the man to intercede for sinners.

In a second crisis Abraham's character is revealed to us. Lot was taken prisoner soon after his entry into Sodom. Abraham pursued the captors and rescued Lot. The King of Sodom entreated Abraham to accept a recompense for his trouble, to which Abraham replied, "I will not take a thread, nor a shoelatchet nor aught that is thine, lest thou shouldest say, I have made Abram rich" (Gen. xiv. 23). The Patriarch would not be indebted to such a person as the King of Sodom. That is to say, he would not enrich himself with money from a filthy source. Abraham was never compromised with Sodom, hence he could pray for it.

A third revelation of his character comes to us in the promptitude with which he obeyed God's command, confirming the covenant (Gen. xvii. 23).

A fourth revelation of the man is given in that wonderful word of the Almighty, "Shall I hide from Abraham that which I do?" (Gen. xviii. 17). A whole world of meaning lies in that one expression. It means that Abraham and God had often communed together, and that God could trust His servant.

COMMUNION AND CHARACTER.

We see clearly, then, that the secret of Abraham's remarkable intercession for Sodom is found in the man's own character as developed by communion with God. Now let us glance at the intercession itself. The man of God draws near to the Throne, and commences by asking that the city may be spared if within it are found fifty righteous persons. Gradually the number is reduced, until it stands at ten, and then the intercessor ceases. His heart arrests him—he cannot go beyond the ten. If Sodom was so bad as that it was time for it to be destroyed. Throughout the touching prayer three things are noticeable. First, the recognition of the justice of Divine vengeance; secondly, the outpouring of human compassion; and, thirdly, the recognition of a limit to be affixed to intercession. Beyond a certain point he would not venture, for judgment as well as mercy must have free play.

Abraham obtained all he asked for. He asked that if ten just persons were in Sodom the city might be spared for their sakes; there were not ten just persons there, and the city fell. The intercession was not dogmatic; it was humble, and subject to the Divine Laws, as all intercession must be.

In Abraham's case we see distinctly blended the three constituent elements of perfect prayer, as brought out in our first study—i.e., communion with God for its own sake; a disciplined life arising out of this communion; and intercession arising out of the discipline. His intercession for Sodom arose out of his habitual walk with God, and the disciplined life to which that communion committed him. And so must it ever be. We can never love men sufficiently to pray for them until we ourselves have companied with God and disciplined our entire life.

Thus these brief studies in prayer terminate. The Church needs calling to prayer. Within her own bosom are elements of weakness which only prayer can remove. In the world without, the spectacle is most discouraging; wars, hatred, gambling, drunkenness, immoral competition, lust, materialism, inane frivolity—these things mark our epoch. God is less than a name to the majority. All this once more pierces the Saviour who died for us; and it ought to pierce His body, the Church, to yearning pain. We cannot cure the ills which afflict humanity, but we know One who can; and it should be our unceasing prayer to Him that He would arise and make bare His arm, and display His glory among the peoples.

Words on Service.—2.

By Captain W. H. DAWSON.

TRUE DISCIPLESHIP: HOW MANIFESTED?

"As the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart" (Eph. vi. 6). "By their fruits ye shall know them" (Matt. vii. 20). "By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John xiii. 35). "His servants ye are to whom ye obey" (Rom. vi. 16).

OBEDIENCE is the great essential in the Christian life and service; disobedience means disaster. The "well done" will not be to the child of God only, but to the "good and faithful servant."

"Come unto Me." "Follow Me," "Abide in Me." Obedience to these will prove true discipleship. "Follow Me" is the word Jesus used as Master to His disciples; but before He left them He gave them a new word, a deeper, closer link of union and communion, "Abide in Me."

"Whatsoever we ask, we receive of Him, because we keep His commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight" (1 John iii. 22). Here is another proof of true discipleship. Here is one reason of unanswered prayers. Here is the life of close walk with God. The second part is a step onward and a step upward. In verse 24 we have a simple definition of abiding; to abide is to obey. "And he that keepeth His commandments abideth in Him, and He in him." Verse 23 sums up the commandments of the other two verses in one, but with two very important and practical applications. "And this is His commandment, that we should believe in the Name of His Son Jesus Christ, and love one another."

Here is the life of absolute dependence upon God—constant obedience to God—which leads to the life of faith and the life of love; the life which must *de*pend upon God in order to *ex*pend itself in loving service. Continually receiving by faith from above, continually giving in love to others. It is a twofold life. Faith in Christ is the life God-ward; love is the life man-ward. Faith in Christ is our response to God's revelation; love to others is the outcome.

The life of faith is the *in*flow from above; the life of love is the *out*flow in service. Faith is the open door of communion with God; love is the open door of service to man. Where these two doors are kept open, there will abiding and true discipleship be manifested.

Filled with the Holy Spirit by fully yielding to Christ, continue filled with the Holy Spirit through abiding in Christ. As we trust Christ fully moment by moment, and abide in Him entirely, He will supply us, use us, fill us to the full, to bring forth fruit abundantly.

Oh fill me with Thy fulness, Lord,
Until my very heart o'erflow
In kindling thought and glowing word,
Thy love to tell, Thy praise to show.

We have looked at the present service, but we must not forget the future. It will encourage us to think of the full manifestation of discipleship, and to read of the glorious service to which we look forward.

Now is the training, the preparation, the earthly service; then the heavenly service. Now the service is in different places, the servants are scattered; it is sad that we meet so seldom and know each other so little, but then "before the throne of God; and they serve Him day and night in His Temple" (Rev. vii. 15). "His servants shall do Him service, and they shall see His face" (xxii. 3, 4, R.V.). "His name shall be in their foreheads." This will be the unmistakable witness of true discipleship, the full manifestation.

Now the service is imperfect and in dim light; then in unfading, unfailing light, "for the Lord God giveth them light." "The glory of God did lighten it." Now the service is uncertain, it may end in a moment; then it will be unending service; "they shall reign for ever and ever" (v. 5). Then the prayer taught by Christ will be fully answered, His name hallowed, His kingdom come, His will done; and perfect praise will be perfect service.

We have heard of its glories confessed,
But what must it be to be there?

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, July 26. Psalm lxix.

The Psalm of the Rejected Saviour.

THIS Psalm is often applied in the New Testament to our Lord. We are reminded of Him in vv. 4, 9, 20, 21, 25. So far as the Psalmist bore undeserved reproach, he was a type of our Lord, and those who hated him were like Judas and the rest who brought Christ to the cross. But there seems something deeper than the type here. It is as though the Holy Spirit were anticipating the story of the rejection of the Redeemer, and opening to men of the Old Testament conceptions of the anguish which filled His heart when He came to His own, and they cast Him out of the vineyard and slew Him.

We may divide the Psalm into two equal parts, which again break into sub-divisions (1-18 and 19-36). In the first part the soul tells out its pitiful story. It seemed as though all foothold were gone, and it was slowly sinking in awful trouble. It seemed also as though prayer were useless—the throat was dry with crying for help and the eyes dim with looking for help that did not come. All around was the crowd of His enemies, numerous as the hairs of His head, and hating the sufferer for no other reason than that He was good (John xv. 25). In all our sorrows and trials, which come on us because of our zeal for God's house, and because of the reproaches with which men would reproach God, we have an irresistible claim on Him.

19-36. In the awful imprecations which follow, our Lord had no share. What a proof of His Divine blameless nature! We can only account for them by remembering that the Psalmist desired the overthrow of his foes that God's righteousness might be vindicated. Still, they are far removed from the dying cry, "Father, forgive them." The prayer climbs into thanksgiving and song ere it closes, as the saddest life will do at last. Be of good cheer, the Lord despiseth not His prisoners.

MONDAY, July 27. Psalm lxx.

The Litany of the Poor and Needy.

This Psalm is nearly identical with Psalm xl. 13-17. Twice the name Jehovah is replaced by God (1, 4); and once God is replaced by Jehovah (5).

There are two other changes. In verse 3, the wish that those who mocked might be desolate is softened to turned back; and in verse 5, the conviction that God was thinking of his suffering child becomes a prayer that He would hasten to help him.

Three times over the soul cries to God to make haste. Thus the disciples must have cried when the Master tarried on the shore, and the morning watch had come; thus the sisters must have chafed as hours lengthened into days, and still the Master did not come to their desolate home. It seems long to wait for God. Mortal hearts tire of the protracted delay. We do not realize that His coming is sure, and that it is timed, to the exact hour, when the help can be given with the most advantage. Through the ages men have cried, "Come quickly, Lord Jesus," but still He tarries. Yet, a thousand years with Him are as one day.

TUESDAY, July 28. Psalm lxxi.

A Psalm for Old Age.

Much of this Psalm is borrowed from other Psalms, such as xxxi. and xxxv. If it comes from David's hand, it may be attributed to Adonijah's revolt (compare v. 23 and 1 Kings i. 29). It was the eventide of David's life (17, 18). The power of original composition was failing; and he gathered up several of his earlier expressions, and strung them together in this Psalm of his old age, in which the power of faith and hope is as bright as at any previous time. The time will come when the outward man may decay, when the light of our intellect or imagination may begin to pale, but in the child of God the inward man may wax stronger and gladder, and be renewed day by day!

At the end of our life, as we look back on the way that God has led us, from the hour of birth when we were cast on Him, to our age when we are grey-headed, if we seem a wonder unto many we shall be most a wonder to ourselves (v. 7). It will be well if, at the end of life, we are able to say: "Thou hast taught me from my youth" (17). None teaches like God, only we are too apt to think ourselves wise enough to manage our own business.

Thrice this aged singer refers to his mouth as vocal with praise (8, 15, 24). It is glorious indeed when the soul looks away from the grey skies that are above it to the evening glow as the sun sets. We may renew our strength and our songs. The many winters of our life should not chill our gratitude. Whilst we muse on all that God has been to us, we may be assured that He will not forsake the work of His own hands; His deliverances will give cause for endless praise, even when the eyes are closing and the heart waxing feeble in death.

WEDNESDAY, July 29. Psalm lxxii.

The Psalm of the King.

Solomon's reign opened as a morning without clouds. Much of the imagery of this royal ode is derived from the circumstances of his life. We may compare verses 1-4 with his prayer for a listening heart to judge the people (1 Kings iii. 9); the anticipations of peace (vv. 3, 7) with his name, "the Peaceful One;" the rule from sea to sea (8) with 1 Kings iv. 24; the kings of Sheba bringing presents (10) with 1 Kings x. But Solomon's failure to realize the ideal supplied a striking proof of the weakness of the ancient covenant, and compelled men to look forward to the up-rising of a greater Prince of Peace, who should fulfil this vision of the righteous, powerful, and tender-hearted Ruler.

1-4. The foundation of a good reign must be righteousness. It is on that foundation only that there can be reared the Temple of Peace. Hence Melchizedek was first king of Righteousness, and then of Peace. The righteousness of God was made apparent in the Cross, and now He is reconciling men to Himself.

5-7. Here we have the perpetuity of our Lord's kingdom. What a tender image that is of the aftermath! The grace of our King falling gently on souls that have passed under the scythe shall elicit from them a green beauty that shall mantle their wildernesses with verdure.

8-11. Here we have the universality of our Lord's kingdom. Little did the Psalmist understand the meaning which after ages would see in his far-reaching words, but how true they are.

12-15. Here is the ground of these characteristics. "For." The world is so full of sorrow and injustice, but He who can staunch the flowing wounds, and mete out justice to the oppressed, will win their hearts, and become their crowned leader.

16-17. Further prayers and anticipations. Notice the change in v. 16, R.V. If there is abundance of corn on the gaunt mountains, of course the vales will laugh and sing. The whole world shall be filled with abundance and rejoicing, when Christ is King.

18, 19. A doxology closes the second book of the Psalter.

THURSDAY, July 30. Psalm lxxiii.

The Psalm of the Perplexed.

The good Asaph was face to face with the problem which has tried all the saints of God—the prosperity of wicked men.

1-14. We have a picture of prosperous wickedness; and of the questions asked by God's people, who are driven to ask whether God knows of all that is transacting on earth. The good man says to himself, "What is the good of being good, why should I cleanse my heart and wash my hands in innocency?" And in his fit of depression and unbelief he forgets all the goodness and mercy of which he has been the recipient. "Come, Asaph," we may say, "are you not exaggerating? Are you quite sure that there have not been more bright days in your life than dark ones? Have there not been many mornings when you have not been chastised?" But the good man shakes his head. His feet are almost gone, his steps have well-nigh slipped; and he is too envious of others to consider his own mercies.

15-28. The Psalmist proceeds to tell us how he strove with and mastered his doubts. He did not talk about them, for he feared to hurt the generation of his people. Doubts are contagious, we have no right to scatter them. He locked his secret in his own soul, and bore his own burden; but one day, as he entered the sanctuary, more bowed down than usual, deliverance came. Whether it was when the sacrifice was being offered or the holy psalm sung, suddenly the burden rolled away. He said that God did not reward goodness with things, but with Himself, and He turned to Him with adoring love:—

Why should a soul a drop bemoan,
That has an ocean near?

FRIDAY, July 31. Psalm lxxiv.

The Psalm of the Desecrated Temple.

Probably this Psalm was occasioned by the Chaldean invasion.

1-3. A complaining cry to God is the first note of this sad wail. The singer emphasizes the close relation that subsisted between the flock and the shepherd; between Israel and Jehovah. It is Thy congregation, Thine inheritance.

4-9. The details of the nation's misery follow. Idols and banners are borne into the sacred fanes, where reverent feet had trodden for generations. The exquisitely-carved work is hewn down as though it were so much growing timber, and then caught by the red tongues of fire.

10, 11. This is the kernel of the Psalm. It seems as though God's right hand is resting carelessly in His breast, when it should be employed in thrusting back the foe. How pertinent this prayer is to our own time. We are being forced to pray. Our organizations and leagues and endeavours seem in vain to stem the evil forces which make havoc of the State. Oh for an hour of God's manifested right hand! But He is at work, though we may not discern it. He is King from of old, and is working salvation in the midst of the earth (12).

12-17. The past comes up to view, with its wonderful record, and we may add to this enumeration the overthrow of Popery under Henry VIII., the destruction of the Armada, the exile of the Stuarts. What God has done is an earnest of what He will do.

18-23. God is asked to take up His own quarrel, and if the cry of His turtledove does not move Him, at least to listen to the loud voices of those who blaspheme Him all the day.

SATURDAY, Aug. 1. Psalm lxxv.

A Psalm of the Divine Judgment.

This Psalm celebrates God's judgment in history, especially on the heathen. It has been thought to refer to the overthrow of Sennacherib.

1. First, we have the national voice giving thanks for the judgment about to fall. His Name is near, He is not afar off. "A present help is He."

2-5. The Almighty's voice is heard proclaiming His intention to bear up the world, though the pillars thereof are dissolved and bow to their fall. Oh, do not lose heart. At the supreme moment, when the solid framework of society and of the world seems on the point of dissolution, a strong hand is thrust out to grasp the tottering pillars, and stay their fall.

6-10. The Psalmist's voice takes up the strain. The proud Assyrian had placed his throne in the northern hills, attributing his power to his sun-god. But no, his power originates in nothing short of God. Not the orient, nor meridian, nor occidental rays of the sun give him his power. All is due to God, who uses him for a little while for the testing and chastisement of his people. And when the Divine purpose is fulfilled, He will cause him to drink of the cup of his wrath.

Let us learn to detect the movement of the Divine Providence in the turbulent course of human government, and believe that the end will be the cutting off of the boast of the wicked, and the exaltation of the righteous.

Last Days of Leo XIII.

By Rev. ALEX. ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

IN Italy the Papacy is not viewed with such forbearance as is affected in England. Hence the poem recently written by the Pope, of which so much has been said in English papers, has not aroused corresponding interest here.

The estimate we may form of Leo XIII. depends entirely on the position from which we view him. From a Christian standpoint, no words can be too strong with which to oppose his claim to be the vicegerent of Jesus Christ. But if we regard him as a Pontifex Maximus, then all he said and did falls into line, and we see perfect harmony and consistency in it all. Not only so, but as such we see much we can admire. For a pagan Pontifex Maximus, he spoke and acted well, and showed himself enduring and brave.

During his last illness, he said, "Sento prossima la mia fine. Non so se avrò agito bene o male, o come saro guidicato. A ogni modo ho sempre agito szando coscienza, e perciò muoio tranquillo" (I feel my end near. I do not know if I have done well or ill [this from an infallible Pope!], or how I shall be judged. In any case, I have always acted according to my conscience, and therefore I die tranquilly).

A true Christian would say that his hope was all in Christ his Saviour, whom he would soon see face to face; but no such utterance fell from the Pontiff's lips.

Yet the Pope did trust in someone, or something, outside himself. And what was it? In one of the Madonnas—that of Carmine. On July 8 he said, "Domani è il primo giorno della novena della Madonna del Carmine. Io sono devotissimo di quella Madonna; vedrete che mi chiamera il primo giorno della Novena. (To-morrow is the first day of the novena of the Madonna of Carmine. I am most devoted to that Madonna. You will see that she will call me the first day of the Novena).

Now, the Madonna del Carmine is simply and in this idol the Pope put his trust. Could one find purer, grosser paganism amongst any heathen tribe? The Pope wore an image of this madonna day and night, hanging from a chain round his neck.

In harmony with this paganism of the Pope were the instruments used by the Church for his recovery. Madonnas were everywhere freely exhibited, dressed up in all their faded fineries, and the "faithful" were called on to worship them. Especially were Madonnas del Carmine in demand. (These madonnas regulate their supplies of grace in rigid accordance with the gifts bestowed upon them!) Then, too, so-called relics of saints were similarly exhibited. For example, at Naples there was put out for veneration the bust of St. Genarius. Not only so, but Monsignor Caracciolo, keeper of the Treasury of St. Genarius at Naples, arrived at Rome with his mitre, believed to be miraculous. He was received by Cardinals Rampolla and Bisleti, who thanked him. The mitre was then quickly taken into the sick-chamber of the Pope. The mitre is enclosed in a rich casing, surmounted by a bust in bronze of St. Genarius. This mitre, a red skull cap that touched the head of St. Genarius, an image and a bust of the saint, were all put within reach of the dying Pope. In different parts of the country processions have been organized by the local clergy. In these cases, banners, crucifixes, idols, candles, lamps, and other articles, are borne from altar to altar inside the churches, or, if liberty can be obtained from the local authorities, from shrine to shrine outside of them. All these performances are pagan. They are exact reproductions of what was done in similar circumstances in Babylon, Greece, Egypt, and generally in the heathen East.

We know, from the study of history and of the Holy Scriptures, that the Roman Catholic Church is a pagan Church. Its gods, its madonnas, its child, its idols of all kinds, are pagan gods and goddesses with Christian names. And we know from the same studies that the Pope is not the Vicar of Jesus Christ, but Pontifex Maximus. And now, in view of death and eternity, by word and action, the Pope declares negatively that he knows nothing really about Christ and Christianity, and positively that he is the pagan Pontifex Maximus—the worshipper of idols and relics, in which things he places his trust and hope.

In view of the Pope's own express declarations and the Roman Catholic Church's doings, there is only one explanation of people in England regarding him as Christ's vicar and that Church as a Christian organization: it is that they love to be deceived, it is that God has sent them strong delusion so that they believe a lie.

Since writing the above I have seen in an Italian newspaper a letter from a priest deploring the fact to which I have drawn attention, namely, that, as that writer says, "The Pope's utterances are far more suggestive of paganism than of Catholic Christianity. A pagan could say all the Pope has said, but in the Pope we expect a reference to Christ and heaven, and even an expressed longing to go to heaven. All such Christian sentiments we miss."

Summer in Manxland.—II.

WE were fortunate in timing our visit to this "delectable isle" to include the far-famed Tynwald Day, which was celebrated on the 6th inst. In this quaint and curious ceremony we have a memorial of bygone ages, when the hardy Norse kings ruled. The custom then established still obtains to-day, of declaring to the multitudes assembled round Tynwald Hill the measures that have passed into law during the preceding twelve months.

As is well known, the island enjoys Home Rule, subject to the approval by our Privy Council of the enactments passed by the House of Keys. It is interesting to note that occasionally its Legislature forestalls that of our own Government, as for instance in regard to the serving of children in public-houses. It is, therefore, a strange coincidence that a recent Manx measure which our rulers have "returned for reconsideration" should be one connected with the drink trade. The House of Keys had passed an Act forbidding any person directly or indirectly benefiting from the traffic to hold a seat upon the Licensing Bench. It was foreseen that this was liable to a very far-reaching interpretation, so exemption was made in favour of shareholders in railway and steamship companies on whose premises or vessels drink is sold. Representations were, however, made to show that it would even exclude shareholders in banks and their directors, by whom mortgages are largely held upon licensed premises. Chiefly on this ground, therefore, the Privy Council deemed the Act too inclusive, with the result above mentioned. I am informed, however, that this was expressly intended by those who supported the measure, to meet what they consider an abuse of privilege by banking companies, whose directors in some cases occupy prominent positions on the Bench. It is a vexed question, in regard to which a stranger cannot adequately form an opinion, but it is evident that the refusal to ratify the Act in its present form has given great offence in some well-informed quarters. This measure, therefore, was not included in the proclamations of Tynwald Day; but ten others were duly promulgated. Although treating of matters of local or secondary importance, they formed "a record" so far as their number were concerned.

A service in the neighbouring parish church of St. John's precedes the ceremony; then an imposing procession is formed, headed by the Governor of the island (now Lord Raglan), as representing the executive and military power; and followed by the deemsters, successors of the ancient law-givers; members of the House of Keys, and the clergy. These all solemnly march to the summit of the hill; the six retiring coroners hand their staves of office to their successors, who in turn take oath in the following terms:—

By this Book, and by the holy contents thereof, and by the wonderful works that God hath miraculously wrought in heaven above and in the earth beneath in six days and seven nights, I do swear that I will, without respect of favour or friendship, love, or consanguinity or affinity, envy or malice, act betwixt party and party, as indifferently as the herring backbone does lie in the middle of the fish. So help me God.

After this, the newly enacted laws are declared aloud in Manx and English, and no measure passed by the Manx Legislature becomes binding until it is thus proclaimed from Tynwald Hill.

Reverting to the question of drink sale, it is noteworthy that practically all the boarding-houses on the island are licensed, and in the absence of any partial measure this means a full license by which any passer-by can be served. But in practical effect this "convenience" is only used by the boarders living in the house. Were it otherwise, it would constitute a grave danger.

The historic Castle of Peel, now in ruins, and Castle Rushen, at Castletown (the capital of the island), are full of historic and awe-inspiring associations, which cannot fail to move the visitor and stir even the least imaginative. Castle Rushen, which is in a state of perfect preservation, was used as the Manx gaol until the erection in recent years of a modern edifice in Douglas for this purpose. At Castletown is also the magnificent King William's College, opened in 1833, at which, among many other notable men, the late Dean Farrar passed through the curriculum. It contains senior and junior schools, both of which are most efficiently conducted. Near at hand is Derbyhaven, a delightful spot, the scene of Hesba Stretton's "The Fishers of Derbyhaven," which with its rugged coast line contrasts forcibly with the well-wooded internal features of the island.

The religious life of the people is simple in form and devout in character. The Established Church is distinctly Evangelical, and Nonconformity is well represented by the Methodists, especially in country districts.

The abounding "glens" are veritable fairy-lands—at least, in so far as Nature has made them, though in the height of the season their stillness is disturbed, as the voice of the tripper is heard in the land. But even this is worth enduring for the sake of enjoying the Divine provision for human recreation, and in either early or late summer these "pleasant places" may be visited freely by those who delight in the handiwork of God. To us the picturesque little town of Port Erin, on the south-west coast, proved an ideal spot for a prolonged stay—a perfect "picture" of a quiet and charming watering-place. Here "The Hydro" stands facile primus for position, comfort, and most moderate charges, with an efficient and agreeable proprietor, who makes the contentment o his guests his chief consideration. Lavender Bag Mission.—Miss E. Alice Puckle (The Hollands, Langton, Tunbridge Wells), writes:—Will friends kindly help us again this year with lavender? We sent thousands of little bags away last year, each one with a text card attached, to sick people in hospital at home and abroad. We have numerous letters from South Africa, India, Gibraltar, &c., telling us how eagerly the bags are received. Soldiers in hospital are always specially pleased with the bags, and the texts give many opportunities to the Army Scripture readers and others to tell of Jesus.

The Sufferers at Kischineff.

AS I reported in my last letter, I handed over 5,000 roubles on Tuesday, July 7, to the president of the Jewish Relief Committee. I did not do this without thought and prayer and inquiry, nor before I saw that if our gifts were to reach genuine sufferers directly and speedily this was the best, if not the only, course.

Both on this and several subsequent occasions I was able to speak of the love to Israel that prompted Christians to minister to their distress, and of our desire and prayer that the offering should not only express horror of the use of the word "Christians" in connection with such an outbreak, but lead many Jews to have regard to that Holy Name which we bear.

The offering of which I was the bearer, though substantial, looked small amongst the large sums which have been rolling in from the whole civilized world, Gentile as well as Jewish. Up to the 3rd inst., the account stood as follows:—Received, 736,476 roubles (the rouble is 2s. 1¾d.); disbursements to direct sufferers have already amounted to 464,222 roubles; 100,000 roubles is held on account of widows and orphans; 52,500 is being used to establish ruined families in Palestine; and 100,000 devoted to indirect sufferers. Of course, many Jews in Kischineff have suffered in a way for which no money reparation can be made; but so far as such reparation is possible, I think it has been adequately and even handsomely made.

Dr. Mouchnik, the president of the Jewish community in Kischineff, as of the Relief Fund, commissioned me to convey his warm thanks on behalf of the Committee and the Jews of Kischineff to all contributors. I attended the distribution of relief, every assistance being given me to witness the manner of the Committee's work, and to get such information as I desired. The notes I took, and my own impressions and experiences, if given in detail, would occupy much more space than can be granted in the columns of The Christian; but all interested will most desire to know something of—(1) The mode of distribution; (2) the impression made by our offering.

THE MODE OF DISTRIBUTION.

The Relief Committee consists of twenty-four members, most of whom have sacrificed personal and business interests since the massacre to devote themselves to relief. Each member has a district of Kischineff assigned to him. Anyone in Kischineff may procure a printed form of application and fill it up. That is the first step. Then follow: Application, inquiry, deliberation by the Commission, and a written order for a grant. After that the petitioner attends, Dr. Mouchnik signs the order, and payment is made.

My impression is that, in the main, no one has better machinery to reach the deserving, or withhold from the undeserving, nor could anyone or any committee be better trusted in the matter than the Jewish Relief Committee. For sufferers who, with an honest pride, make no application, and who can only be found by searching, I have committed 200 roubles to Miss Bertha Rabinowitz, daughter of the late Joseph Rabinowitz. I also distributed about twenty-one roubles myself, and propose to use the balance of the fund for such private distribution.

The sums awarded to the sufferers by the Committee range from a few roubles up to several thousand. The largest amounts are for the widows and orphans, or those who have lost support by bereavement—the plundered have received according to the assessment of their loss.

The result of the outbreak may create wide distress in the coming winter. For this and all ordinary poverty a general committee is responsible; but the present need, arising directly out of the murderous outbreak of April 19 and 20, has, I think, been adequately responded to, and honestly disbursed among the victims.

THE IMPRESSION CAUSED BY OUR GIFT.

Many Jews told me that we were not the only Christians that had subscribed; many Christians, even in Russia, had given largely. It was not easy to make clear to a Jew the difference between the gift of the philanthropist, who is a Christian only in name, and that of the true, Bible-loving Christian, inspired by love to Christ. And to speak of any members of the Greek Orthodox church as not being Christians, is next door to a political offence. I never felt more need of grace and wisdom; and I believe it was given.

It seemed to cause almost a deeper impression than the gift itself, that an English Christian had come specially to Kischineff to bring it. This concerns those with whom I came into personal contact; but as it seemed right that the gift should take the form of witness to a larger world of Jews, and as the Relief Committee are not permitted by Government to make any published announcements concerning the gifts they receive, I wrote a short letter to the editor of Der Fraind, a Jargon daily, which is the best read by the poorer Jewish population of Russia; I trust it will be accepted.

I had a freer hand and gracious opportunities of witness for Christ given me in various conversations with Jews in their shops. Partly because of their trouble and need of sympathy, partly because business being at almost a standstill, they have much time on their hands, I found a number of willing listeners to the doctrine of salvation through Jesus the Messiah, the Hope of Israel. On each of such occasions I had some word or text given me, as well as utterance, and my few days in Kischineff made me feel that something should be done at once for permanent witness for the Lord there.

While there, I bade adieu to Probst Faltin, who leaves Kischineff for ever after fifty years of labour as Lutheran pastor and instructor of many young Jews; and while I was leaving London for Russia, Peter Rabinowitz was leaving Russia for London to see if arrangements could be made for the re-use of Somerville Hall at Kischineff in testimony for Jesus. At the same time, I note in the "Scattered Nation" that Mr. Feinsilber, of the Hebrew-Christian Testimony for Israel, desires to betake himself to Kischineff, at least for a time. I hope he will do this. At the same time, while plans are crystallizing for the re-opening of Somerville Hall, a matter on our minds for some time, let us join in prayer that God may bless the deeds done and the words spoken, and grant they may be but the beginnings of greater things in witness to Israel, and in Holy Ghost awakening amongst Israel.

Postal Employés in Argentina.

WE thank God that it has been possible to send a colporteur-evangelist to several centres in the Argentine Republic, where, with the regular supply of El Correo Evangelico ("The Gospel Post"), the people have been asking for further light and Gospel teaching.

A suitable man has been found, Señor Cabral, and three journeys have already been made by him with encouraging results. His ordinary mode of procedure is to go direct to the postmaster of the town he is visiting, telling him his mission, and also wherever possible directly giving the Gospel message. Not seldom the seed falls on encouraging ground. In his last diary, Señor Cabral tells of an interview with a postmaster awakened to desire further light through hearing open-air preaching. Señor Cabral was able to supply him with a Bible, which he greatly desired, and during their conversation about the Saviour a look of rest and peace came into the man's face. He earnestly asked to be visited again, and promised to do all he could to spread "this beautiful teaching."

Not only do gratifying reports come of the colporteur's journeys, but also of the reception of the printed message, El Correo Evangelico. The way is open to send this Gospel paper to every post office in Argentina, Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador, and Chili; about £13 or £14 a month is required to continue both branches.

Simla Convention.

THE usual meetings for the deepening of spiritual life were held in Simla in the first week in June, earlier than before, for the convenience of the many missionaries who will return to their stations at the approach of the rains.

Two new elements were introduced into the Convention. A daily Bible-reading for ladies was conducted by Lady Carbery, and special prayer-meetings have been held. The general meetings have been seasons of great blessing. Among those who took part were Revs. F. Papprill, J. G. Potter, E. Palgrave Davy, W. Wilson, J. Charlton, J. H. Bateson, Sir Andrew Fraser, Major-General Scott, and Mr. J. M. Macpherson, C.S.I.

MISSIONARY MEETING UNDER THE DEODARS.

Saturday, June 6, the last day of the Convention, was devoted to a missionary meeting, and about 100 workers and sympathizers assembled at "The Nest," Mahasu. "The Nest" is known to many missionaries, both in India and at home, who have enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Macpherson during a long period of years. After lunch, earnest evangelistic addresses were given to the hillmen, who had drawn the rickshaws out from Simla to the rendezvous. Then followed the missionary meeting, on a beautifully wooded spur, 8,000 feet above sea level, commanding a glorious view of mountains and valleys. After a service of song, five-minute addresses were the order of the day, only missionaries who had been forty years in India being allowed an extra minute to tell of what God had wrought.

Rev. J. G. Potter (Baptist M.S.) told of fruit in the Simla hills, giving interesting examples of hillmen receiving Christ through books and Gospel portions, before even they had heard the message from a missionary's lips. Miss Longden, M.D., of Deoga, showed how medical work opens the door to the preaching of the Crucified. Rev. W. Robb (U.F.C. Mission) told of the Lord's work in Rajputana, the mission having five stations in the capitals of as many native States. Forty years ago the mission commenced operations, and among its workers are no fewer than ten men who have reached an average of thirty-three years at work in India.

Miss Paton (S.P.G.) described how the Lord is opening the hearts of the women in Simla to receive the Gospel. Rev. J. W. Haythornthwaite (C.M.S.), of Agra, described the work of St. John's College, and its far-reaching results. Mrs. Wilson (American M.E. Church) gave her experiences of village work in the North-West Provinces. Mrs. Lohr (Christian Mission) spoke of orphanage work at Bilaspur. The girls saved from famine are being truly saved to Jesus. Their salvation means

CHRISTIAN WORKERS AND CHRISTIAN HOMES.

Rev. J. H. Bateson (Wesleyan M.S.) told of soldiers, saved themselves, working for the salvation of their comrades. He described the meetings for the deepening of spiritual life which the soldiers held during the Delhi Durbar, notwithstanding their arduous duties, and of Gospel meetings there which resulted in conversions.

Miss Hill (Y.W.C.A.) testified to the missionary enthusiasm which is being aroused among the girls and young Eurasian and English women in India, resulting in the Y.W.C.A. Prayer Cycle. Rev. J. Charlton (C.M.S.) bore witness to the power of saved villagers in Bengal to preach the Gospel to their fellow-villagers. After hearing of these triumphs of Christ, encouraged and strengthened thereby, we sang, "Praise Him, praise Him," and then, when Rev. F. Papprill had led in prayer, the Doxology, with overflowing hearts. Tea at "the Nest;" a few words of encouragement from the Bishop of Lahore; and the missionary meeting under the deodars was at end. Workers returned to Simla with a new song on their lips, and with fresh courage in their hearts for the work of the future.

Bound, Body and Soul.

By AMY WILSON-CARMICHAEL.*

IN one of the addresses delivered at the International Student Missionary Conference, London, in January, 1900, a South Indian missionary spoke of the Brahman race as "the brain of India." "Their numbers are comparatively small—between ten and fifteen millions—but though numerically few—only five per cent. of the Hindu population—they hold all that population in the hollow of their hand. They occupy every position of influence in the land. They are the statesmen and politicians, the judges, magistrates, Government officials, and clerks of every grade. If there is any position conferring influence over their fellow-men, it will be held by a Brahman. Moreover, they are a sacred caste, admitted by the people to be gods upon earth—a rank supposed to have been attained by worth maintained through many transmigrations."

Among the Petras of this district is a little old-fashioned country town, held in strength by the Brahmans. No convert has ever come from that town, and the town boasts that none ever shall. None of the houses are open yet to teaching, or even visiting, but we are making friends, and hope for an entrance soon. We spent a morning out in the street; they had no objection to that, and as the free young Brahmans gathered round us, or stood for a moment against a wall to be "caught," it was difficult, even for us who knew it, to realize how bound they were. "Bound, who should conquer; slaves, who should be kings." Bound, body and soul, in a bondage perfectly incomprehensible to the English mind.

Afterwards, when we saw the photographs, we recalled one and another who, while they were young students like these, dared to desire to escape from their bondage; but back they were dragged, and the chains were riveted faster than ever, and every link was tested again, and hammered down hard.

We wanted to be sure of our facts about each of them, that these facts may further answer that smile which assures us things are not as we imagine; so the Iyer† wrote to a brother missionary who had known these lads well, and asked him to tell what happened to each of them. This morning the answer to that letter came, and was handed to me with, "I hardly like to give it to you, but it tells the truth about what goes on." These boys were students in our C.M.S. College.

WHAT CONVERTS ENDURE.

The first one mentioned in the letter is a young Brahman who confessed Christ in baptism, and bravely withstood the tremendous opposition raised by his friends, who came in crowds for many weeks, and tried by every argument to persuade him to return to Hinduism; but he preached Christ to them. They brought his young wife, and she tore her hair and wailed, and besought him not to condemn her to the shame of a widow's life. This was the hardest of all to withstand; he turned to the missionary and said, "Oh my father, take her away! She is tearing out my heart!"

Then came the baptism day of another Brahman student, his friend, who previous to this had been seized by his relatives, shut up and starved, and then fed with poisoned food; but the poison was not strong enough to kill, and he had escaped, and was now safe and ready for baptism.

It was remembered afterwards how the friend of the newly baptized stood and rejoiced, and praised God. Then, the baptism over, fearing no danger in open day, he went to the tank to bathe. He was never seen again.

What happened exactly no one knows. It is thought that men hired to watch him seized their opportunity, and carried him off. What they did then has never been told. Contradictory reports about the boy have reached the missionaries. One, that he is still holding on; another, that he is now a priest in one of the great Saivite temples of South India. Which is true, God knows.

But we are under the English Government. Could nothing be done? One of his near relatives is the present Judge of the High Court of one of our Indian cities. And among the crowd of Brahmans who came during those weeks, there were influential men, graduates of colleges, members of the legal profession—a favourite profession in India. And yet this thing was done.

There was another; the means used to get hold of him cannot be written here. That is the difficulty which fronts us when we try to tell the truth as it really is.

There were others near the Kingdom, but it is the same story over again. They were all spirited away from the college; the missionary writes: "It makes one's heart sick to think of them, and the hellish means invented to turn them from Christ." These are not the words of sentimental imagination. They are the words of a man who gives evidence as a witness. But even a witness may feel.

He tells us of one, a bright, happy fellow, he says he was, whose friends made no objection to his returning home after his baptism, and he returned, thinking he would be able to live as a Christian with his wife. They drugged his food; then what they did has to be covered with silence again. . . . They did their worst. . . . When he awoke from that nightmare of sin he sought out his missionary friend. Some of the Hindus even, "ashamed of the vile means used" to entice him and destroy him, would have wished him to be received again as a Christian; but his spirit was broken. He said he could not disgrace the cause of Christ by coming back; he would go away where he would not be known. He left his wife, and went. He has never been heard of since.

Our comrade tells of another, and again, in telling it, we have to leave it half untold. This one was eager to confess Christ in baptism; he was a student at college then, and very keen. His father knew of his son's desire, and he did what few Hindu fathers would do, he turned his home into a hell, in order to ruin his boy. The infernal plot succeeded. God only knows how far the soul is responsible when the mind is dazed and then inflamed by those fearful drugs. But we do know that the soul He meant should rise and shine, sinks, weighted down by the unspeakable shame of some awful memory, darkened, as by some dark dye that has stained it through and through.

I think of others as I write; one was a boy we knew well, a splendid, earnest lad, keen to witness for Christ. He told us one evening how he had been delivered from those who were plotting his destruction. For several months after his decision to be a Christian he lived at home, and tried to win his people; but they were incensed against him for even thinking of breaking caste, and would not listen to him. Still he waited, and witnessed to them, not fearing anything. Then one day suddenly some men rushed into the room where he was sitting, seized, and bound and gagged him. . . . At night he managed to escape. A few months after he told us this, we heard he had been seized again, and this time

"DRUGGED AND DONE FOR."

Two other Brahman lads belonging to different parts of this district decided for Christ, went through all that is involved in open confession, and were baptized. One of the two was sent north for safety; his people traced him, followed him, turned up unexpectedly at a wayside station in Central India, and forced him back to his home in the south. Once there, they took their own measures to keep him.

The other lad was sent to Madras. The Brahmans found out where he was, broke into the house at night, overpowered the boy's protectors, and carried him off. They too did what seemed good to them there, and they too succeeded. No one outside could interfere. The caste guards its own concerns.

"O Lord Jesus Christ!" wrote one, a Hindu still, "who knowest us to be placed in such danger that it is as if we were within some magical circle drawn round us, and Satan standing with his wand without, keeping us in terror—break the spell of Satan, and set us free to serve Thee!"

All this may be easy reading to those who are far away from the place where it happened. Distance has a way of softening too distinct an outline; but it is not easy to write, it comes so close to us. Why write it then? We write it because it seems to us it should be more fully known, so that men and women who know our God, and the secret of how to lay hold upon Him, should lay hold, and hold on for the winning of the castes for Christ.

Surely the very hardness of an enterprise, the very fact that it is what a soldier would call a forlorn hope, is in itself stronger than any put forth by something easier. The soldier does not give in because the hope is "forlorn." It is a hope, be it ever so desperate. He volunteers for it, and win or not, he fights.

There is that in this enterprise which may mark it out as "forlorn." For ages the race has broken one of nature's laws with blind persistency, and the result is a certain lack of moral fibre, grit, "tone." No separate individual is responsible for this; harsh judgments are entirely out of place; but the fact remains that it is so, and it must be taken into account in dealing with the Brahmans and several of the upper castes of India. Side by side with this element of weakness there is, in apparent contradiction, that stubborn element of strength known as the caste spirit. This spirit is seen in all I have shown you of what happens when a convert comes. It is as if all the million wills of the million caste men and women were condensed into one single Will, a concentration of essence of Will not comparable with anything known at home. . . .

Christ our Captain is calling for volunteers; here are the terms: "Whosoever shall lose his life for My sake and the Gospel's the same shall find it." The teacher's life may seem "lost" who lives for his college boys; the student's life may seem "lost" who spends hour after hour through the long hot days in quiet talks in the house. Be it so, for it may mean that. But the life lost for His Name's sake, the same shall be found again.

A Ministerial Jubilee.

Rev. J. ELDER CUMMING, D.D.

THE retirement of Dr. Elder Cumming from the active duties of his church of Sandyford Parish, Glasgow, after fifty years of ministerial service, was hardly to be wondered at. Not that Dr. Elder Cumming is old! At times the fact that he is seventy-three years of age is borne in upon him, but whoever hears him in his vigorous and logical Bible talks, such as he gave at Gloucester recently, is far from the opinion that his retirement from church life indicates retirement from soul-winning or the edification of God's children.

On November 29, 1830, in proverbially rainy Greenock, the starting point for all the beauty of the Clyde, and where farewell is bidden to the smoke and smells of Glasgow, well within sight, too, of mountains and sea, there Dr. Elder Cumming began his earthly life with all its possibilities. Like most born preachers, he had his preaching instincts as a child, which he sought to foster by addressing imaginary audiences from over the backs of arm-chairs—every boy-preacher's improvised pulpit. His father, happily, was not only a Christian man; but, what was rarer in those days than now, was also assured of his own salvation. His first effort was to train his young James as a "church lawyer," a very necessary person in Scotland even to this day, and doubtless the training thus obtained made its subject the keen critic and close observer which he has always been.

However, God willed otherwise, and July, 1852, found the young church lawyer a divinity student at Glasgow University. He was ordained a minister of the Church of Scotland on May 12, 1853, then a young man of twenty-three years. Dr. Elder Cumming has only held three charges during his long ministry—thirty-two years of which were spent in Glasgow, his last. He never obtained a "quiet country parish." His life has been spent amid the busy scenes of life, in the very heart of a throbbing, sinning, needy humanity. From the first to the last of these fifty years, his life's work has been found in the busy haunts of men, where there is no place for the idler or the dreamer. His first charge was that of sharing one of the most remarkable churches in Scotland. If I mistake not it is the only church of its kind still remaining.

St. John's Parish Church at Perth has three congregations meeting under the same roof, with nothing but brick walls separating them from seeing and hearing each other. Dr. Elder Cumming's portion was known as the East Church.

In October, 1859, he removed to Newington, Edinburgh, where he remained for over eleven years, during which time God set His seal to the ministering of His word in such a remarkable way that at the expiration of that time the church counted no less than 1,300 communicants.

In 1871 he received a call to Glasgow, to succeed Dr. Macduff, which call he accepted; and the following year, while still only forty-two, he received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from the University of that city. At this time there was another Rev. Dr. Cumming in Glasgow—Dr. John Cumming, a much older and celebrated man who rather resented this young minister appropriating the Dr. to his name, and probably sometimes being mistaken for himself.

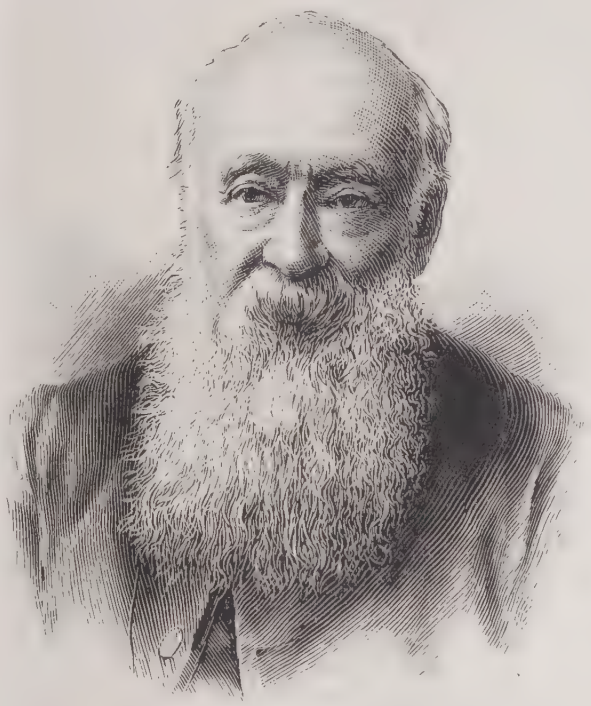
Being at a meeting together one day, he turned to the newly-degreed man with "Are you the new Dr. Cumming?"

"Well, sir, I am the 'Elder' Cumming, from which I infer you must be the 'younger.'"

But seeing the joke was taken too seriously, he quickly added, "but contraries are not always true, sir, otherwise you being the 'famous' Dr. Cumming, I should of necessity be the 'infamous' one." A hearty laugh followed, and the two doctors became the best of friends.

Dr. Elder Cumming was among the early advocates of the abolition of patronage in the Church of Scotland. By the "Aberdeen" Act of 1844, the settlement of ministers largely depended upon patronage, which he felt to be highly prejudicial to the church and to the welfare of souls.

It took him eight years to fight with a Conservative Government, but in 1874 the removal of the Act was carried at the Assembly, with the blessed result that every church can now choose its own pastor. There is no doubt that this step was the commencement of a great revolution in the ecclesiastical life of Scotland.



REV. J. ELDER CUMMING, D.D.

From photograph by Messrs. G. Crow & Co., 136, Buchanan St., Glasgow.

As a writer, Dr. Elder Cumming is noted. He has dealt with many subjects, but he particularly excels in his character-sketches. His first attempt was on the Lord's Prayer, "Abba Father," which was followed by a large volume of an ecclesiastical nature, for which his early training largely fitted him, entitled "The Church of Scotland."

After settling in Glasgow, he wrote "Old Margaret," a short story of a simple and godly woman who largely influenced the secret life of the minister. Later, Rev. J. Gelson Gregson, when visiting him, asked him to write a book on the Holy Spirit, and added, "I lay it on your conscience." The result, after much prayer and patient study of the Scriptures, was that helpful volume, "Through the Eternal Spirit." Then followed—"After the Spirit," "Scripture Photographs," "Holy Men of God," "Consecrated Work," and, last of all, an excellent outline sketch of the twelve Apostles, "He Chose Twelve."

No sketch of Dr. Elder Cumming would be complete that did not mention the great factor that changed his secret heart views of religious life. While preparing a sermon on the "Narrow Way," as a divinity student, his own heart found the way to life, in the joy of which he lived and preached for thirty years. But until 1883 he was an ecclesiastic, a churchman who sought to forward the cause he represented, an earnest preacher of the Gospel, but one whose deepest heart ideals had never been stirred. A note in The Christian concerning the Keswick Convention led him to think of visiting that hallowed spot.

He went, a stranger, knowing no one, and thinking that no one knew him; a doctor of divinity, indeed, but inwardly feeling there was more divinity to be known, and willing to learn it anywhere. In a tiny hired room of quiet Keswick he passed those nights of the Convention week; but that secret, quiet room saw the change of ideals, and the change opened heaven's flood-gates to him. Christ was greater, the Holy Ghost became a Real Person, and from that time forth he was another man. The Bible was the same Book, the Gospel the same Gospel; but the man was different.

Never physically strong, his friends in Scotland put him down as a fanatic, a perfectionist, a man who pretended to be holier than others; consequently they avoided him, counted him weak, perhaps "off his head." But his views of God's glory, of Christ's Almightiness, of the reality of the Holy Ghost in His indwelling and outflowing fulness, changed the ecclesiastic to an earnest Christ-loving soul-winner. His Bible, marked and scored in all directions, became a new book, and service for Christ a new life. Dr. Cumming has since taken a prominent place on the Keswick platform, and he has sought, both by word and pen, to propagate not "its" doctrines, but those of the Word of God in its fulness. "Old Margaret" was the first book he wrote in the light of his new joy and life, and it bears that imprint on every page.

Those who were privileged to be present on May 12, 1903, at Sandyford Parish Church to hear the eulogies to his preaching and work, the telegrams of blessing and joy read from all quarters of the British Isles, to witness the presentation of valuable gifts to Dr. Elder Cumming on the attainment of his jubilee, could not fail to recognise that he has gained a large place in many hearts.

As Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow, he has ceased to be, but in future, for long years we trust, we shall yet know him as Dr. Elder Cumming, of St. Andrews. W. G. P.

Out and Out for Jesus.

Out and out for Jesus, ever may we be,
Showing forth the gladness of His liberty!
Keeping close to Jesus, lest our light grow dim,
In our homeward journey trusting only Him!

Out and out for Jesus! Holding nothing back,
With this full surrender nothing can we lack!
He will be our Shepherd, He our souls will feed,
Every want supplying, in the hour of need!

Out and out for Jesus! Though by nature weak,
He can nerve His children in His Name to speak;
Loyal, ever faithful, in His service true,
With a glad heart doing all He bids us do.

Out and out for Jesus! With a gentle hand
Winning souls from danger, in whatever land!
Telling how the Saviour came for us to die.
Out and out for Jesus, God to glorify!

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

JULY 20 TO 25.

[BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONERS.]

ONCE again the Keswick Convention is in session. During the closing days of last week crowds of people from all parts arrived in the pretty Lakeland town, and on Monday others swelled the already large number of visitors.

This is the twenty-ninth year of the Convention, and if ever there was expectation that God is going to bless His people, it is this year. What with political and social distractions, which by no means promote the noblest sentiments among believers, and what with abounding evidences of the spiritual life being at a low ebb among those who stand before the world as the servants of Christ—it is time that an endeavour were made to realise more of God. Hence, among the hosts of visitors to Keswick at the present time, one finds many who are bowed down with a sense of prevailing sin, and are giving themselves to prayer that the time of blessing to the Church at large may speedily come. Many a heart among those gathered at the Convention is occupied, above all else, with the prayer that God will make bare His holy arm and revive His Church, that it may be more true to its Lord, and more influential in its testimony in an untoward generation.

The preliminary gatherings have been largely attended. The prayer-meeting on Saturday evening in the Eskin Street Tent was remarkable in this respect; on all hands it was said that in no previous year had the corresponding meeting been so large. The spacious enclosure seemed full, and there were many evidences of a spiritual anticipation holding the hearts and minds of the people. Is God our confidence and joy, our hope and expectation?—then let us wait upon Him! This seemed to be the prevailing feeling, and doubtless many were helped by the exercises of the meeting. Souls waited upon the Lord, and upon Him alone. Nothing but blessing could come of that—in some cases, maybe, by way of discipline and heart-searching, in others, assuredly, by way of a fuller realization of the will of God in the sanctification of His people.

The list of speakers included familiar names, and the official programme gave particulars of the meetings each speaker was expected to address. This is a continuation of the experiment of last year. When the meetings were held in one tent only it was the uniform practice of the trustees to withhold from the public information as to who would address any particular meeting, but since the Convention has so grown as to require two tents, equally large, it has been found desirable to modify the arrangements. By making known the names of the speakers, the trustees do all possible to show that the two gatherings are on an equal footing, and thus the general attendance is, without difficulty or prejudice, divided between the two tents.

The attendance of missionaries and ministers seems very large this year; and it is a great joy to notice the proportion of young people among the audiences. How many workers of our day date their entrance upon service from some convention, held here or elsewhere, at which were spoken words which to them had all the light and leading of words of God! May many this year of such as are on the threshold of life hear the command of the Lord of the harvest—"Son—daughter—go work to-day in my vineyard!"

The damp weather of Saturday was succeeded by a bright and pleasant Lord's Day, when there were special preachers at the various places of worship at St. John's Church, Rev. Evan Hopkins; at the Congregational Chapel, Dr. Harry Guinness; in the Wesleyan Chapel, Rev. E. L. Hamilton; and in the Drill Hall (Primitive Methodist), Pastor G. Soltau. There were also overflow and evangelistic meetings in the Eskin Street tent, morning, afternoon, and evening. In the afternoon, also, there were some sectional meetings—one on Jewish mission work in the Pavilion, at which representatives of various Societies spoke of the progress of God's work among Israel; and one in the Skiddaw Street Tent for children.

PRELIMINARY PRAYER MEETING.

When the time arrived for commencing the preliminary meeting on Saturday evening, Eskin Street tent was thronged in every part. Mr. Albert A. Head (who was in the chair) announced the opening hymn, "All hail the power of Jesus' Name," after the singing of which, Rev. C. G. Moore led in fervent and comprehensive petition to the Throne of Grace. God was besought to grant that sense of His nearness which is the great joy of His people, and praise was offered for the many who in days past have gone forth from the Convention to speak with joy and exultation the saving name of Christ. It was with hearty confidence that the vast congregation united in singing

God is here, and that to bless us
With the Spirit's quickening power;
See, the cloud, already bending,
Waits to drop the grateful shower.

Let it come, O Lord, we pray Thee,
Let the shower of blessing fall;
We are waiting, we are waiting,
Oh revive the hearts of all!

THE CHAIRMAN'S GREETING.

As the meeting proceeded, the spirit of earnest expectation deepened, and it became evident that there was a general looking to God for a fresh manifestation of His power and grace. Having read Psa. li, the chairman, on behalf of the trustees and council, warmly welcomed those present to Keswick, and expressed the hope that having accepted the invitation to come, one and all would experience the joy of meeting with God, and receiving from His hand the blessing He waits to bestow. Looking back over the past year, none can fail to be stirred with the great significance of many things that have taken place, whether we think of the Church of Christ, our own beloved country, or the nations of the earth.

In bringing us together once more at Keswick, God has a distinct purpose for each of us, and it behoves us to accept and apprehend the responsibility of attending this Convention. It may be that God will here and now reveal His mind and purpose, and show us what He requires of each one. Let us, then, wait before Him that we may "apprehend that for which we have already been apprehended in Christ Jesus in this matter." Is it not right that we should seek this blessing with brokenness of heart and contrition of spirit, which is a sacrifice well-pleasing to God? Can we open our hearts without being conscious that there is that in the past which we know we have done and ought not to have done, much left undone which we ought to have done. Truly we can say, "There is no health in us." We cannot say that in everything there has been the mark of confidence and trust in God. Let us look into our heart life, our business life, our social life, our service for God, and see if there is not something—it may be very much—for which we desire to bow very low before God, beseeching that He will restore to us the "joy of His salvation." May God grant as the result of this Convention that each one shall enter into the fulness of the blessing that He waits to give!

Further prayer was offered by Revs. John Wilkinson and S. A. Selwyn, and an address was given by Rev. E. L. Hamilton on "The Conditions of Prevailing Prayer." Attention was directed to 1 John v. 14, with which was coupled Mark xi. 24. Faith was shown to be that faculty which enters into the unseen and lays hold of the things which we ask of God; and the secret of prevailing prayer is, "Believe that ye receive, and ye shall have." The first thought emphasized was that when we ask according to God's will He hears us, and if we know that He hears us, then we know that we have the petitions we ask. We feel our need of a broken and contrite heart, and God alone can supply that need. We think also of the confidence which John had, and we ask ourselves, Have we the same trust in God, the same faith in His power and willingness to bless? Sometimes when we pray there is not this confidence, and we cannot say "we know." This is because there is unbelief, or a lack of faith, and wherever there is a want of confidence there is always an immoral cause of it. Look what John says in the same epistle (iii. 20, 21), "If our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God." What we want to do at a Convention like this, especially in its early days, is to discover what is the cause of our unbelief. If we can only get the cause removed the confidence will return to our souls.

In considering what are the causes of this unbelief, let us look at 1 Tim. i. 19, "Holding faith and a good conscience; which some, having put away concerning faith, have made shipwreck." A bad conscience is a cause of unbelief and want of confidence in God. The figure before us is that of a ship crossing the ocean in full sail, when suddenly a rock is struck and the vessel becomes a wreck. That rock is a bad conscience. Now, conscience means a knowing with oneself; Paul said he knew nothing against himself. A bad conscience is a knowing of something against myself—something wrong between me and God, between me and my fellow-men. This destroys our confidence in God. If we do but wait before Him, He will show us if there is anything wrong.

Another cause of unbelief is found in John v. 44—"How can ye believe, which receive honour one of another, and seek not the honour that cometh from God only?" One of the greatest hindrances to faith is our receiving honour from man, instead of seeking that which cometh from God. Show me the man who seeks only the approval of God, and you show me a man who is a giant in faith. I remember some years ago attending a convention feeling my need of strength. I could not say with John, "This is the confidence." I prayed that God would show me the cause of my weakness, and the Lord spoke to me this forty-fourth verse, of John v. I replied, "Lord, it is perfectly true, I have sought honour from men. Now cleanse this from my heart." I trusted God, and immediately faith sprang up in my soul, and my need was supplied. What I feel thankful about is that the Lord thoroughly understands us. The precious blood of Christ is the remedy that has never failed, and can deliver us from all the evil revealed in us by the Spirit of God.

Christ as Captain.

REV. EVAN HOPKINS AT ST. JOHN'S CHURCH.

There was a crowded congregation at St. John's Church on Sunday morning. Prayers were read by the Vicar and Rev. S. A. Selwyn, and the lessons by Dr. C. F. Harford. The preacher was Rev. Evan Hopkins, who took for his text Joshua v. 15, "And the captain of the Lord's host said unto Joshua, Loose thy shoe from off thy foot, for the place whereon thou standest is holy. And Joshua did so." Notice first of all that at the time in question Joshua stood before the Lord. Though he did not quite grasp it, for it would seem that there was nothing supernatural in the outward aspect of the Divine manifestation, yet the Israelitish leader was in the immediate presence of God. He looked upon "a Man over against him with his sword drawn in his hand." Yet Jehovah was there, and the place was made holy by His presence. As He had appeared to Jacob at Peniel, when the patriarch was led to cry out, "I have seen God face to face;" and to Moses in the bush, whence came the words, "Draw not nigh hither, but put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground;" so God appeared to Joshua in this time of crisis for the children of Israel.

WHAT IS HOLY GROUND?

The first lesson for Joshua to learn was—what it is to stand upon holy ground. It is the privilege of all God's children to occupy the same position and to know it also. As Joshua found out, and many others have come to know, holy ground is the place of self-abasement, reverence, worship, adoration. Before he could face Jericho and compass its walls, he had to know the meaning of standing before the Lord, and look upon his resources, not in himself, but in God; not in the tribes of Israel, but in Jehovah.

So it must be with God's people to-day. As we contemplate our shortcomings, and think of the failures of the past—as we think of the forces of evil against which we have to contend—let us never forget that our first concern is to have a vision of the Lord. There is the secret of all true humility and reverence; the secret is not found in making desperate efforts to be humble, but in seeing God, the Holy One. When we see the Lord in His holiness, we find our place in the dust, and learn what it is to put off our shoes. Let us pray that this year's Convention may be marked by a spirit of deep reverence throughout; in point of blessing everything will depend upon whether or not we get a vision of God.

THE CLAIMS OF GOD.

The next thing to observe is that Joshua was now superseded in the command of the children of Israel. Up to then he had been the centre of everything with the tribes, the captain. As Moses brought the people out of the House of Bondage, so Joshua had led them into the Land of Promise. But God was about to do a wonderful thing—to supersede Joshua! Another was to take the central position, Another to assume the reins of government, and that other was the Lord Himself. As soon as Joshua recognised who it was that stood before Him—the Captain of the host of Jehovah—he bowed in lowly submission and acknowledged the Divine claims. What were those claims? Absolute authority, implicit obedience.

We should notice that this Divine manifestation was exactly suited to Israel's need at the time. It was part of one complete revelation, and an advance on what had gone before. God had not only appeared to His people at sundry times but in divers manners, and each revelation had its proper place in the Divine plan. There was, moreover, reason and purpose in the order of the various occurrences. God revealed Himself first as Redeemer—redemption by price and power. Then, after visiting the people in Egypt and delivering them, He became their Provider, giving them water from the rock and bread from heaven in a desert waste. At the same time He became their Teacher, giving them His laws from Mount Sinai, and revealing to them His will. He also became their Leader through the trackless wilderness. Now, in circumstances of difficulty within the borders of the land, and face to face with an entrenched foe, the people need another revelation, and God comes to them as a Man of War, and as Captain to lead them forth. Note the word "now"—"as Captain of the host of the Lord am I now come." The same glorious Person who had appeared to them before, now manifested Himself in a new relation; it was the same Lord, but in a new aspect of His Person and office.

So it is with us to-day. God meets with us, and suits His revelation to our actual need. We do not know the fulness of the blessing unless we know what it is to meet Him, and to let the government be upon His shoulder. Self must be superseded; even Christian self must be superseded by the Lord Himself. We have to be brought to the same experience as Joshua, to the same as the Apostle who said—"I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." This is one of the great lessons that we come to Keswick to learn; or if we have already experienced it, to have it deepened. We must let the Lord take His right place in our souls; and if He supersedes us, He will take the whole burden of responsibility, as He did in the case of Joshua's command.

Up to that time Joshua doubtless thought he must make plans and consider how the enemy could be conquered, deeming that this would depend upon his wisdom and skill under God, Who was sufficient for the task of taking Jericho! Now he saw what a change had been effected; the Lord was the Captain, and neither the battle nor the result depended upon Joshua. The strain and burden were at once relieved, and rest and peace filled the heart. How is it that we are so often discouraged in our daily conflict? Because the Lord has not been given His right place; we have not been superseded in the complete sense, but are depending upon our own exertions and efforts. In that way the Lord is not given His true and proper honour, is not enthroned in our lives. It is only when He takes the place of Captain that the burden of responsibility passes from our shoulders to His.

"IN THE BEGINNING—GOD."

What is the secret of many of our failures in the past? Is it not found in the fact that we frequently begin with the enemy rather than with the Lord? We have gone with our difficulty to the Lord—good! But we have not gone with the Lord to the difficulty—which is a better course. Some of us remember a remarkable address delivered in Keswick some years ago from the words, "In the beginning—God." Let us see to it that God comes first in everything—in every care, difficulty, sorrow, conflict, trial, Begin with God. How different history would have been if Joshua had said: "In the beginning—Jericho." Yet many Christians do this; their whole horizon is occupied by their Jerichos. The Scriptural course is: "In the beginning—God."

When Joshua realised his position before the Lord, he was enabled to go forward and face the foe. How often it happens that we rush to one another for advice and comfort—"In the beginning—man," and failure! Let us learn the lesson, and repair to God. If we live in God—"live, move, and have our being" in God—we shall, of course, go with God to every trial, every enemy, every conflict. That is our privilege—and it is possible.

How often it is, however, that we show ourselves unwilling to let Christ take the rule; we are not disposed to be superseded, set aside, ignored, put out of sight, that the Lord may have the pre-eminence in all things. We are Christians; we know Christ, and know where to go in time of weakness and failure. Thank God for the fountain open for sin and uncleanness. We know that Christ gives us immediate pardon; but what do we know of His indwelling? Why is our burden not rolled upon the Lord? Because we do not know how to commit it to Him; that knowledge comes by our submitting to Him. We must submit all and yield all, in order that He may govern and we may have rest.

MARK THE STEPS.

Firstly, recognition of God's claims of absolute authority, affecting spirit and soul and body. Christ must be Lord of all. Secondly, submit to His sway. It is a Kingdom—with a King, who has a sceptre and a throne. The throne is in the hearts of His people. As the responsibility of government belongs to the King, so the duty of submission belongs to us. And when He takes anyone's burden there you have "a heart at leisure from itself." Lastly, we must obey the voice of the Lord. "I will hear what God the Lord will speak." We shall not then mark out our own future, but trust all to Him. "Hearken" in the Old Testament is the same as "obey" in the New; and "to believe" in the New is the same as "to obey." When the Lord takes the leading and controlling place in our hearts, we are beginning to learn the secret of the true life, the Christ life.

Who? . . . God!

At the Congregational Church the pulpit was occupied by Dr. Harry Guinness, who preached at both services to congregations that taxed the capacity of the edifice. In the morning he delivered a powerful discourse on Psa. lx. 9, 10: "Who will bring me into the strong city? Who will lead me into Edom? Wilt not Thou, O God, which hadst cast me off?" After giving a lucid description of Edom and its inhabitants, to throw light on this yearning desire of David to enter the strong city of Petra, Dr. Guinness proceeded: I want to review our position to-day, and to consider two words in the text. "Who?" "God." Who will bring me into Petra? God. Intense difficulties often beset the child of God, and your mind goes out this morning to some Petra which you wish you could conquer; some stronghold that has menaced you, and has been the chronic problem of years.

Have you read Miss Amy Wilson-Carmichael's book, Things as They Are? It is a book to drive you to your knees. In one of the chapters in which she deals with the trouble of caste, she refers to this illustration. It seemed to her, she said, like Petra. Of course, missionaries in the foreign field have their Petra always before them. To many it is the language of the country. Yet the language is not so important as the thought of the people. Who will bring me into the heart of this people? It is not easy to adapt oneself to the needs of the heathen. All missionary work is fraught with tremendous difficulty, and constitutes a telling illustration of Petra. Who will lead us into the strong hearts of men for whom we are longing? Some of them love you. Miss Carmichael tells us how devoted to her many of the people were, and how warmly she was welcomed to their homes; but the moment she had left, everything that she had touched was washed, because of possible defilement! So near, and yet so far!

QUESTION AND ANSWER.

The question we ask to-day is, "Who will lead me in?" It certainly can be answered by the one word—God. There is only one way in, one way only for the heart, for the community, for the Church. There is no difficulty which He cannot solve.

David was far from being discouraged. Is there anyone here despairing? There is one about whom you ought to despair, that is yourself. David had done many things, but he was not equal to entering Petra, so he asks, "Who will bring me?" He was equal to the conflict with Goliath, and had spent many days in the caves of the mountains, but he despairs of self when it comes to entering Petra. He never despaired, however, of God.

Let us look at the reasonableness of a confidence in God. He had made the mountains, and all the pathways lay open to His gaze. Sometimes when trouble comes to us we forget that God created us, and that He knows the whole of the pressure. In your despair, fall back on the word, "God." We do not want anything new; we want only God. I believe in the closing days of this dispensation we shall have such a Petra as we have never known; but if we know God we "shall be strong and do exploits."

Again, it was reasonable for David to trust in God, as it was His purpose to bring Him there. I suppose the prophecies about the destruction of Edom were known to him. The purposes of God were under David, and surely it is the same with us to-day. If one thing more than another is certain it is that the kingdom shall be the Lord's. God's purposes are round about you, and you cannot be dismayed, for if dismayed, then you are defeated. Who will lead me? God will lead me. He led David, for in 2 Sam. viii. 14 we read that he put garrisons in Edom. David, at the end of himself, was shut up with God. Such also is the privilege of every one of us, if we do but get away into the presence of the Master. The Lord will be our God and our Guide.

The Possibilities of Spiritual Loss.

CANON HAY AITKEN AT ST. JOHN'S.

St. John's Church was again crowded on Sunday evening by a congregation that entered with the utmost earnestness into the devotion. Nothing could have been more timely than Canon Aitken's heart-searching discourse, based on Jeremiah xiv. 8, 9: "O the hope of Israel, the Saviour thereof in the time of trouble, why shouldest Thou be as a stranger in the land, and as a wayfaring man that turneth aside for a night? Why shouldest Thou be as a man astonied, as a mighty man that cannot save? Yet Thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us, and we are called by Thy name; leave us not."

It was an awful time (said the Canon) for some things when these words were spoken. Day by day the pitiless sun shed down its scorching rays. Plants, herbs, forest trees were languishing in the terrible drought, and the wild beasts of the forest were dying with thirst. The dependents of noblemen went out to seek water and returned with empty pitchers. Israel had sinned, and God was causing them to reap the harvest, the seed of which they had sown.

Is there no analogy to this in the experience of some Christians to-day? I am not speaking to those who are strangers to holy things, but to those who name the name of Christ. Is it an uncommon thing to meet with those who look back with wistful gaze to the earliest days of their Christian life, when love was deep, light was clear, hope was strong? But now all is changed; there is a drought in the land. Not that they have altogether turned their backs upon God, but a sense of loss pervades their experience, the love for souls seems to have faded away, the Word of God has lost its charm, the blessed feast of Jesus Christ no longer attracts. The perfunctory spirit has taken the place of the joyful free-will offering of old, and a blight has settled upon all. Why is it? Where was God while Israel was enduring such suffering? He was in their midst, but incapable of doing what they needed to have done.

CONVENTION INVALIDS.

What a picture of God we have here! The "Wayfaring Man that turneth aside to tarry for a night;" "a Mighty Man that cannot save." Do we not know what it is to have a consciousness of the presence of God when special spiritual influences are brought to bear upon us, and then for months it seems that "the Stranger" has departed, and the old weary sense of helplessness steals in upon us? It is not an unfrequent thing for such persons to be the invalids of conventions. They have the idea that conventions will do something to restore their spiritual health, and many it may be come here in the hope that the barrenness will give place to a full vitality, that God will be gracious to the land and drought will be at an end. Their emotions are stirred and their aspirations quickened by the Holy Ghost, and they say, "Surely He has come to abide at last." But the convention closes and we go back to our work, it may be to worldly interests and besetting sins, and by-and-by we ask ourselves what has become of that influence? God was near to us, but we did not seek to lay hold upon Him and render it possible for the Lord to come in and occupy our hearts.

Thus it was that the Wayfaring Man turned aside to tarry for a night, the Master of death and hell, Conqueror of all the adverse powers of the world, and yet paralysed—a Mighty Man, and yet a "Mighty Man who cannot save."

THE DANGERS OF BACKSLIDING.

We must be able to recognise the possibilities of spiritual loss, if we would guard against them. They begin from the very first. One of the most dangerous is backsliding. If only all those who profess to give themselves to Christ remained true to the Cross, we should soon carry the world before us. Why does this come about? We do not expect that now the change has taken place the devil will do all he can to cause us to backslide. Some of us have heard much about the Pentecostal blessing, we have been led to feel that we cannot go on without it. We must have Him to come in, not as a wayfaring man to tarry for a night, but to take up His abode in our manhood and reign there without a rival. So we have cast ourselves upon God, and have dared to plead with holy faith, "Thou canst not deny to us that which Thou hast bestowed upon Thy Church." We have been made aware of a new force within, and a voice has whispered, "Now that you are possessed with the Holy Ghost, surely there can be no falling away from that."

I have been struck with Paul's words to the Corinthian Christians, exhorting them to abstain from one of the grossest immoralities to which man could stoop. He says: "Your bodies are the temple of the Holy Ghost," and speaks as one who is apprehensive of appalling danger. Take the case of the Galatians who had fallen from grace. He asks: "Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?" The Divine Spirit had taken up His abode in their hearts, and yet there was an appalling danger of this blessedness being lost through unfaithfulness. Surely this teaches us that while God intends us to be safe, in another sense we are never safe. While we are saved we are never out of reach of adverse forces. So Paul writes: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." We often sing, "I need Thee every hour;" but it is possible to have Him every hour.

THE CHRISTIAN POSITION.

So the moral of all I have said is that the relation of the true Christian to God must always be of an extremely delicate character. Do not let us think that He is a "touchy" friend, but He is a jealous God. There was a time when I wished I had not to read those words in the Commandment, for they seemed to cast a slur upon His character. But He taught me that His jealousy was the jealousy of a pure and holy love; He must have His own place, which is always first and foremost. When we allow anything to come between us and God we wound the heart of love and lose touch with Him.

Some have come here in the hope that the Convention will do you good. Christ will, but the Convention will not. Whatever happens in this sacred season, there must be no more of this losing of the Divine presence. We must not be satisfied with an occasional visit of the Wayfaring Man, turning in only to abide for the night. And shall He continue to be the "Mighty Man that cannot save"?

The abiding presence of the Holy Ghost in the human heart is what God expects, what the heart needs, and what the world demands. He is here among us. What keeps the wayfaring man from becoming the Abiding Guest and Lord of all? May the Holy Ghost carry home to every heart the question, till the response comes from each one: "I must, I will have Thee for my abiding Friend.

EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The evangelistic meetings in Eskin Street Tent on Sunday afternoon and evening were seasons of heart-searching to many souls. Presiding over the latter meeting, Captain Tottenham based helpful teaching upon the words of our Lord in Matt. xiv. In verse 16 he sets before his disciples something impossible to them, and afterwards performs the miracle in their presence. In the twenty-ninth verse he invites one of His disciples to do the impossible, namely, to walk upon the water; and on His utterance of the simple word "Come," Peter was enabled to obey the command. "With God all things are possible;" and any who to-day hear the word "Come" may be assured that the power of Christ will be exerted to sustain them in responding to the call.

Rev. Stuart Holden delivered an address on the life of Matthew, as outlined in Luke v. 27-29. Christ met him while sitting at the receipt of custom, spoke to him, gave him power to discern and decide, and then accepted him, kept him, and at length crowned him. Pressing the point that the responsibility of decision lies with all to whom the call to discipleship comes, Mr. Holden related a conversation he had with a man who asked what it would cost him to be a Christian. "I do not know what it would cost you," was the reply; "but I know what it must cost you not to be a Christian." The man explained that he was in the distilling business, and said that his conversion would mean the giving up of an income of £4,000 per annum. At the end of the interview the man said that to be a Christian "would cost him too much." Matthew the Levite, occupied as a tax-gatherer, was viewed as a typical backslider. Matthew the Apostle was a monument of the reclaiming power of Christ, and affords some idea of the possibilities before a redeemed soul. We may not all be able to write a Gospel, but we may be Epistles of Christ, known and read of all men.

In the after-meeting many were led to express a desire to follow Christ.

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.

There was a goodly muster at the early prayer meeting on Monday. The subject of petition was Ireland, and in the various prayers God was asked to bless the land, and give wisdom and guidance to the many workers in the Gospel cause there. Captain Tottenham, who presided, said that his statement a year ago that the Roman Church is trying to capture the public offices and appointments in Ireland is still true, in fact, the policy is being pursued with much determination and diligence. Boards of guardians and other bodies are used as machinery for disseminating sacerdotal views and the guidance of public opinion Romeward.

Captain Tottenham recommended a perusal of M. J. McCarthy's "Priests and People," as showing what Romanism means in Ireland. Moreover, in essence the Papal Church is always and everywhere the same, as may be learned from another book, which the captain advised his hearers to read—Dr. Alexander Robertson's "Church of Rome in Italy." The Land Bill will not, he said, give peace to Ireland; nor will the visit of the King, though an event in which all could rejoice. Ireland needs the Gospel of Christ, and nothing less will heal her wounds. God's richest blessing was invoked upon King Edward, in the hope that his visit to the sister island would be productive of peace and goodwill, and advance the best interests of the Empire at large.

Opening of the Convention.

The Convention proper opened on Monday evening, when meetings were held in both tents. The attendance was large, and the proceedings full of promise. In the Eskin Street Tent Captain Tottenham occupied the chair, and the speaker was Dr. Elder Cumming, who took for his text Revelation iii. 20, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." In an address delivered with much of his old vigour he presented thoughts that must have searched many hearts. Speaking first of the knock which all men hear, the knock of God in Providence, he explained that the message of Keswick is to Christians, to those who are already children of God.

After giving timely counsel to those who were not sure of their standing, he passed on to consider, as a second point, the voice that only some men hear, "If any man hear My voice." Here Christ speaks to the individual, not to the crowd; and he says, "Open to Me, your Lord, the door of your heart." Now the door opens from within, and naturally the proposal causes some commotion in the heart, for the world is already in occupation; and among other companions whom the soul is entertaining are compromise, love of pleasure, and love of gain. For Christ to be admitted would upset established customs and arrangements, so the thought is not encouraged at the outset; but, should the Lord at length be let in, what then? Immediately, the other guests go out, and Christ asserts His position as Master. Then comes a great change. The soul becomes the friend and servant of the indwelling Lord, who is no more Guest but Master of all. No one is admitted henceforth but such as the Lord approves, and the purse is in the keeping of the blessed One who rules the household and provides for its every need.

What follows—Communion: "I will sup with him, and he with Me." A Lord's Supper and a Lord's Table within the surrendered heart—and when admitted the Lord will stay. He will abide as He said, "Abide in Me and I in you." To everyone who has been sprinkled with the precious blood, the still small voice comes, "Open the door to Me, your Lord."

In solemn tones Dr. Elder Cumming besought his hearers to heed the call, and open the door of their hearts to Christ. Silent prayer followed, and the closing hymn was Bishop Moule's "Come in, O come; the door stands open now."

IN CANAAN OR THE WILDERNESS.

In the Skiddaw Street Tent, Mr. Head directed the proceedings, and exhorted all who had accepted the invitation to allow nothing to become an obstacle or hindrance to the fulfilment of God's intention and purpose in bringing them together in these days. With many voices of abstraction and perplexity, in school and university, in current literature and the daily press, it is more essential than ever that Christians should seek to know more of that Spirit who was promised to guide us into all truth.

Rev. J. J. Luce, in the course of an address befitting the occasion, made an earnest appeal to those into whose life there had not come the joy of complete and unbroken fellowship with God. Directing attention to Matt. xi. 28, 29, 30, and Heb. iv. 11, he emphasized the fact that by taking up the yoke which Christ imposes, the rest of God enters the soul. God's to-day is not yet over. He still invites men and women to enter into his rest. It is the need of this blessing that Keswick seeks to bring home to the hearts of those who assemble at its gathering. Every Christian is living either in Canaan or the Wilderness. In the one case we are pleasing God, in the other we grieve him. It is for us to answer the question, "Are we living the life of faith?" Some may come to conventions thinking how much they can get from God, never asking, "What does God get from me?"

Our life is either in fellowship with God or centred in self. We cannot live both at the same time. If we would live in Canaan, we must take a definite step by faith into it; and, having entered in, we must learn the secret of progress, by continuing in the place of nothingness, abasement, the crucifixion of self, and death to sin. How can we make the progress for which we pray?

Do not think that you must attend two or three Conventions, or even two or three meetings, before you can get the rest of God. The step may be taken any moment. Embrace the Christ who died, and trust the Holy Ghost to make union with the crucified Lord a reality to you. Do not trifle with holy impressions. If you do not find yourself better for this Convention, you will be worse. If you are not softened, you will be hardened. If you are not brought nearer to God, you will be removed farther away from Him.

The prayer meeting on Tuesday morning was very largely attended. Mr. Albert Head presided, and the speaker was Dr. Harry Guinness, who based his remarks on the words of Christ in Luke xviii. 41, "What wilt thou that I should do unto thee?" Here the Lord challenges definiteness, and unless we are prepared to be definite our experience cannot reach the point of complete blessing. We should be definite in object, conviction, confession, renunciation, and request. Then with definiteness of faith and prayer, we shall have the blessing which we need. Dr. Guinness' words were timely and made a distinct impression.

The name of Mr. Meyer is on the programme to deliver four addresses, besides speaking at minor meetings, and the same number of engagements stand to the name of Mr. Evan Hopkins. Dr. John Smith is also a speaker at three meetings.

Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander

[BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

Chicago, July 7, 1903.

THE Christian Workers' Convention proved of deep spiritual influence. The motto, "Pray Through," has laid hold on the minds of hundreds of busy workers, and they have returned from the Chicago meetings determined to put it into practice. The last service of the Convention was made memorable by the address of Dr. Torrey on the Baptism of the Spirit. All through the meetings a high level of power has been maintained, and night after night men and women publicly confessed Christ.

A very interesting conference on the place of music in Evangelical work was addressed by Mr. Charles Alexander, who showed a large audience in Chicago Avenue Church how he taught a new hymn to a congregation. His account of how the great choir in Melbourne was organised was heard with deep interest. Professor D. B. Towner also spoke from his long and varied experience, quoting D. L. Moody as to the power of Gospel song to "lift" a service. He regretted that so many hymns in various books were unsuitable for use. Major Cole, a veteran evangelist, known and loved by many British friends, has spoken frequently at the Convention, and his stirring appeals have awakened many to a sense of sin.

After the Convention Mr. Alexander travelled with a quartet of male singers from the Moody Institute to Waterloo, Iowa, where he began many years ago his earliest public work. The city welcomed the party most heartily. Immediately the churches arranged for services on the Sunday; white sheets with the announcements were displayed on the trollies and at the street corners, and though the Fourth of July celebrations precluded any printing, everything was done to make Mr. Alexander's visit known. He and his friends took part in five different services on Sunday, and each place was full of eager hearers. The quartet, under Professor Trowbridge's leadership, sang beautifully; and the tidings of the great revival were related by Mr. Alexander, Mr. David Williamson, and Mr. Robert Harkness to most attentive audiences. What God has done elsewhere He can do in Iowa was the impression left on the minds of the Christian workers, and prayer circles are to be formed at once to ask God for a revival in the city. Only about one-seventh of the population goes to worship, so that there is a deep sense of need in the hearts of the pastors. The next day the ministers were invited to lunch by Mr. Alexander, and heard more of the tour round the world. In the evening a great audience assembled in the Normal Auditorium, Cedar Falls, for a service which will live long in the memory. On the following day Mr. Alexander and his friends addressed a meeting in Manchester, another city, amid equal interest.

Dr. Torrey is soon to leave Chicago for a rest at Northfield, though he has promised to speak at some special gatherings. Both the evangelists are in excellent health, and are anticipating with joy the resumption of their work in Great Britain. D. W.

Converted Italian Priests.

SO frequent are the requests for admission to the Home Refuge for Converted Priests in Rome that it has become absolutely necessary to enlarge its borders. In consequence, the Rev. Dr. W. Burt, its hon. sec. and treasurer in Italy, expects to come to England in October to speak on its behalf.

The work is deepening and widening. The labours of Sig. Boretti, ex-priest, have been much blessed among the navvies of the Simplon Tunnel, near Brigues, Switzerland. God has used Sig. De Angelis, ex-seminarist, to start an evangelical boys' club, the first of its kind, in Rome. Sig. Naldi, ex-monk, is preaching the Gospel in power to his countrymen in Italy.

The Spirit of God is evidently calling out from the priests of Rome, through persecution and loss, "a people for His Name." Will any Christian friends ready to assist Dr. Burt as to his October meetings, kindly communicate with Miss C. M. Ward, Gottesruhe, Montate Road, Woodford Green, Essex?

Legislation for Publicans.

THE deep feeling throughout the country of opposition to the granting by legislation of any further privileges to the publican, found outlet last Friday in an enormous demonstration held at the Royal Albert Hall. The number attending has been estimated at close on ten thousand, and underneath the prevailing enthusiasm there was a universal determination to use every means of protest against the already excessive number of liquor licences, as well as against the creation of any vested interest therein. Such gatherings are of the highest possible value as a means by which the people, and especially the electors, may be made to realize the true extent of their responsibility with regard to the drink evil. The various speakers were most emphatic in their condemnation of the Government's attitude with respect to the liquor traffic, and more particularly in regard to interference with the discretionary powers of licensing justices.

In his opening address as chairman of the afternoon gathering, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P., recalled with satisfaction that it is fifty years since the great International Exhibition was held in Hyde Park, and that no intoxicating drink was allowed to be sold in that building.

It was what would now be described as an uncontaminated zone, and he hoped that many of them would live to see the day when the whole of our native land would be an uncontaminated zone. There was a gleam of encouragement in the outlook. There was reason to believe that the people of this country were now beginning to understand that the description of the drink traffic as a gigantic evil was no exaggeration.

It was shown by Mr. George White, M.P. (Norwich) that the bill at present before Parliament, in the name of Mr. Butcher, would deprive licensing justices of some of their most important and useful powers, and would seriously check such action in the direction of reducing the number of licences as is almost universally admitted to be necessary, and which was unanimously recommended by the recent Royal Commission on Licensing. The measure was a mischievous and retrograde proposal which could not be too strongly condemned.

A message of thanks to licensing authorities which have seriously undertaken to consider the need of suppressing licences in over-licensed areas found expression through the Earl of Carlisle, who described Sir William Hart Dyke's Bill as an uncalled-for interference with the discretionary power of the justices to refuse renewals.

In the evening a second large gathering was held under the presidency of the Bishop of London, when the same attitude of opposition was maintained towards all proposals for compensation or interference with present safeguards.

Conference at Stony Stratford.

A UNITED Christian Conference was held in th tent pitched in the grounds of the Orphanage Stony Stratford (in connection with Mr Fegan's Homes), on July 7 and 8. This was the first gathering of the kind ever held in that neighbourhood, but the attendances at all the meetings were most encouraging. Marked attention was shown, with a desire to know more of the precious things set forth. On the Monday evening evening a preparatory service was held by Rev. J. J. Luce, who pleaded earnestly for a full surrender of the Christian's life, holding nothing back that would hinder blessing. Addresses were also given by Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, Pastor W. Y. Fullerton, Pastor George Soltau, Pastor Hancocks, and Mr. W. R. Lane.

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan has been conducting four Gospel services each Sunday during June and July, and Mr. W. R. Lane has had a fortnight of week-night services, which have been attended with marked blessing. Some striking cases of deep conviction of sin and conversion have been recorded. There seem to be indications of a real awakening in the district, and we pray that in the coming months many may be brought from death unto life. F. D. Hollaway.

Distributing The Word.

A NEAT little brochure entitled "The Gospel of the Kingdom," sets forth in interesting fashion the report for 1902 of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures. It is an inspiring record and will be read with pleasure wherever it may be sent. The Society holds that every human being needs to hear the voice of God, and unless His Word comes to them freely and unasked, myriads will never even know of its existence. Thousands of copies have been placed in the hands of those who, in all probability, would never have purchased it.

From all parts of the world letters come to hand testifying of the blessing which has rested upon the free distribution of the Word. Many of these testimonies are cited in "The Gospel of the Kingdom." Writing from the Asiatic Home of Rest, Mr. A. Challis says:—

Our talks in the Strangers' Home with Brahmins and Mohammedans from India, with Buddhists from Japan and Ceylon, as well as with Roman Catholics from Goa and Mauritius, have had the desirable effect of creating a disposition to accept and read the Holy Scriptures. The coronation of England's King attracted men of strangely different rank, occupation, and belief to London. Some of these I supplied with Bibles in some cases, and in others with Testaments.

Perhaps the most interesting work was that amongst the fourteen hundred of his Majesty's Indian troops at Hampton Court. Never did we have a more interesting sphere of labour. These native soldiers gathered round us in groups as we passed from one regiment to another, and were most eager to possess a copy of the Book from which they heard us read the words of Jesus Christ in their own language.

In the hospital and in the ships, too, the grant has furnished us with the ever-living Word, and although we see not its fruit at present, we know that it shall accomplish that for which God intends it.

An unusual demand for the Scriptures at Tarn Taran is evidence of the Spirit of God working mightily in the hearts of the people. Mrs. Guildford writes that at the largest sacred mela or pilgrimage there was continual preaching for three days, and a larger number of Bibles, Gospels, and tracts were distributed than has ever been known before. Of the Bibles distributed at Mogra Hat, Miss Bergin says:—

Most are in the hands of our former school pupils who have learnt to love and reverence God's Word in school with us, and have greatly rejoiced to possess a copy of their own on leaving us to be married. Several of these girls are bright, earnest Christians, and are taking active part in the Christian movements in the villages in which they have been married. Several of the Bibles have been given to Hindu young men and girls. Lately a girl of about eighteen came to me saying, "I want a Bible." As she was a perfect stranger, I asked what she knew of the Bible and why she wanted one. "Oh," said she, "when I was a child I went to the S.P.G. school and learnt about Jesus, but I have no Bible to read, and so I thought as I had come to my uncle's house and heard of you, that perhaps you would give me one." She and her aunt and two brothers had walked in over a mile, twice, to obtain this Book. When, on testing her, I found she could read very well, I gave her a Bible, and she went off with it in triumph.

Encouraging news also comes from China. After acknowledging a grant for free distribution, Rev. W. Dean, Ichang, adds:—

There is such a demand at present for them that we cannot keep up the supply. We do not give to all and sundry, only to those who are inquirers or members of the churches. The people as a whole are too poor to buy so we are glad to be able now to supply them. The work in China is at present very encouraging. We have a great opportunity if only we had men to enter in. I have just returned from a country visitation, going about 130 miles. I had the joy of baptizing over a hundred adults besides children. The great need now is careful and systematic training in the Word.

Another sphere of missionary activity which has benefited through the operations of the Association is West Africa. Rev. R. Shields writes from Loanda:—

It is a great privilege to be able to put "His Word" into so many hands, and to witness the joy it gives, to both black and white, to be possessors of a Bible or a Testament. One man, a Portuguese, about to remove to another place, asked if we had a Mission station at that point. When informed that we had not, he replied: "Thank God, I have my Bible which you gave me; I shall always read and study it." Young men and boys come with their Testaments and ask us to find certain passages of Scripture, such as John iii. 16, 1 Tim. i. 15.

Your gift has been a great blessing to our work among these people, and the Word of God is to be found in the workshop, and in the shops and homes of this city, doing its silent work in the midst of superstition and darkness.

The hon. secretary is Mrs. Arthur E. Pridham, Chesils, Christ Church Road, Hampstead, N.W.

Missions to Hop-pickers.

DURING the forthcoming hop-picking season many efforts will be put forth to reach with the Gospel message the poor people who go forth to this industry, very many of whom come from the slums of the great cities.

We have received a number of communications from the heads of several missions to "hoppers," in which the hope is expressed that Christian people will manifest practical sympathy during the season that is near at hand.

Rev. J. J. Kendon (Goudhurst, Kent) organizes a Medical Mission for the Weald of Kent, the centre being a Shelter and Medical Hall. These are very popular with the people. Several have stated that the only way to get a letter written—before the Shelter was erected—was to go to the public-houses, where for 1d. they could have the use of pen and ink, or if they bought beer, free. A woman said that often it had cost her 4d. to get a letter written at a public-house, because she had to buy beer for herself and someone else who wrote for her.

It is estimated that no fewer than 60,000 persons work in the Kentish hop district, so that the desirability of a medical mission is clear. It is a golden opportunity for making known the Divine Message of love and healing to a great many individual souls. Upon the workers there is laid a burden of prayer for the unsaved and a deep yearning for the children and young people.

Rev. John Burnham ("Fern Bank," Brentford, Middlesex), has laboured in Worcestershire and Herefordshire, particularly in the hop-yards of the Malvern district, where the pickers include local farm labourers; respectable townspeople from large towns; gipsies; and tramps and other undesirables from many places. Gospel literature is largely disseminated; lantern services are held in barns and outhouses where the people are collected at the conclusion of their day's work; and many evangelistic meetings are held on the Sabbath. Fourteen missionaries took part last year, and they tell of striking cases of blessing. This year Mr. Burnham desires to place a dozen more workers. He writes:—"Doors are opening on all sides. We are mapping out our 'plan of campaign,' and earnestly plead for help."

Lambeth Crèche and Mission.

UNDER the suggestive title "Inasmuch," the story is told of the work done during the past year in connection with this useful institution. It is a story full of pathos, describing as it does the efforts of consecrated Christian women to bring the saving and sanctifying influence of a living Saviour into the lives of the poor, and fallen, and helpless of South London. The work amongst the women who toil in the dust yards of Lambeth; the loving service cheerfully bestowed upon the little ones cared for in the Crèche—now removed, for sanitary reasons, to 95, Kennington Road, S.E.—and the efforts made permanently to benefit neglected babes; and reclaim lost women (in the Home at Tooting), constitute the burden of this interesting and soul-stirring record. "Cases" received "straight from prison" have been helped to a better life; and neglected girls have been rescued and placed in situations, where they are doing well. A dear little babe, with sweet face and fair curly hair, who was found on a doorstep with a drunken mother, has now found a home where she will be nursed and loved, and by God's blessing trained in the fear of God. Local workers rejoice in this "open door" to which they can bring those who need temporary assistance, whom they would be compelled, but for its welcome shelter, to abandon at the moment when kindly treatment and Christian care are most needed, and most likely to lead to permanent blessing. At the annual meetings held at the Crèche on the 8th inst. words of cheer and encouragement were spoken by Revs. F. B. Meyer, J. Tolfree Parr, J. Watkins (Surrey Chapel), and others.

The Mission is voluntary and undenominational, and the founders, who carry on the work, are: Miss Reid (33, Keildon Road, Battersea Rise, S.W.) and Mrs. Dupe (86, London Road, Southwark, S.E.).

For Motherless Children.

IN his seventh annual report, Mr. R. T. Smith (The Roystons, Spencer Road, Chiswick), of the Homes for Motherless Children, pleads with readers to "pity the man whose partner has left him to bear the burden alone, the widower with his motherless ones. Pitiful indeed are many of the black-edged epistles written by bereaved husbands, commencing with the words which mean so much, 'Unfortunately, I have lost my wife, and am left with little ones.' Simply heart-wringing is the pathos of the tragedies disclosed."

The need is illustrated by a letter addressed to the Lord Mayor of London, in which one poor father wrote:—

I beg to take the liberty of asking if you would kindly put me in the way of getting my little son into a school, or if I may go as far as to ask if you will kindly interest yourself on his behalf. He is seven years of age. I have been a widower for fifteen months. . . . My reason for approaching you on this matter is I feel I should like to get the little boy in a school where he will be properly looked after, as that is impossible for me to look after him while I am out at work. I am willing to pay a small amount per week within limit of my wages. May I venture to ask if you will kindly intercede on my behalf?

This letter was sent by the Lord Mayor's secretary to Mr. John Kirk, the well-known secretary of the Ragged School Union, who forwarded it to Mr. Smith, and soon after, the little fellow was received at the "Twentieth Century Home."

Many expressions of gratitude have been received by Mr. Smith. Quotations from typical letters read as follows:—

I need hardly tell you I have much appreciated all the good care you have bestowed on these little lads. Thanks to yourself, and all who have kindly cared for these little motherless boys.

Should I be able to get a good start again, nothing would please me better than that my little boy, of six years, should be in your school with his sister Florrie, under your care and kind treatment, which I am convinced she is receiving. I hope you may ever prosper in your great work of kindness for the motherless little ones under your care.

Mr. Smith is just now endeavouring to build a ward for cases of infectious disease, and in this connection Dr. W. Egmont Kirby writes to him:—Up to the present time you have been fortunate enough to escape any serious outbreak, but a time might come when such an isolation ward would be a necessity. I would therefore strongly urge upon you the advisability of making such provision at "The Roystons." A room might be built at the back of the house, communicating by a staircase with the basement, with an intervening passage and double doors.

Bethnal Green Free Library.

WHEN the late Mr. Samuel Morley and other like-minded philanthropists put up the building which now contains the fine reference collection of books—nearly 40,000 volumes—of the Bethnal Green Free Library, they could not have anticipated unto what the thing would grow. At that time, or in 1876, the elementary schools, as the outcome of the Education Act, had only just begun to exercise their influence; but as a taste for reading was stimulated by the 500 volumes which the builders of the house placed upon the shelves, it soon appeared that the right thing had been done.

Soon afterwards, educational classes and lectures were commenced, so that at the present time we have to regard the library as a centre of secondary and technical education on a Christian basis, carried on in a densely-populated parliamentary borough which is the seat of some 200 industries. The work has outgrown the accommodation, however; a much larger building in a more favourable situation is now urgently needed, and with this, much greater possibilities of service would offer themselves. Among other things, a separate reading-room for boys and one for girls would be opened, and the influence on the rising generation would be beyond calculation.

The Mayor of Bethnal Green, Mr. James Walker, presided at the annual meeting. The report, as presented by Mr. G. F. Hilcken, the secretary, showed that the income for the year was £1,761, the expenditure leaving only £1 7s. 2d. with which to commence the new year. The gifts received included a valuable book from the King, who is patron of the institution, and £10 from the Prince of Wales. Two of the great city companies, the Goldsmiths and the Merchant Taylors, sent £10 and £10 10s. respectively. The borough represents an area of 759 acres, with a population of 130,000.

How Soo Thah Found Christ.

Hymn: Sacred Songs and Solos.—No. 568.

ONE of the most interesting stories of the spread of the Gospel among the heathen is that of the marvellous progress made in a short time among the Karens of Burmah. When the missionaries first went among them, they found them a poor people, living among the hills. They had little intercourse of a friendly nature with the outside world, and so were compelled to grow their own food, make all their own clothing, and in other respects live independently of others. Their religion was peculiar, because though the tribes round about worshipped idols, they had none. It is very much to their credit, and a great contrast to what was found among nearly all other heathen nations, that before they knew anything about the true God or His holy law, they lived honest and truthful lives. Where two generations ago the name of our Lord Jesus Christ was entirely unknown, there are now more than a hundred thousand people calling themselves by His name. This becomes all the more striking when we learn that these form about one-sixth part of the whole tribe.

One of the most charming features about Christian work among the Karens has been the earnest way in which the young converts have taken up the work of telling to others what Jesus has done for them (Mark v. 19, 20). They have gone even further than that, for they have a warm and hearty Foreign Missionary Society of their own, being so grateful to the missionaries for going to them that they cannot rest without doing something to pass on the Good News to those who have not yet heard.

In a village away up near the top of a mountain, a little Karen baby was named Soo Thah, which means "Pure Fruit." His parents loved him very much; and the first time his grandmother saw him she said, "This is a pretty child. He must be kept out of the way of the nats or they will seize his kala, and then he will sicken and die." They were very superstitious, and thought the nats were evil spirits, always going about "seeking whom they might devour." They also believed that every person and animal had a kala, or spirit, separate from the body, and which lived in the invisible spirit country. These kalas were the food of which the nats were fondest, and the people believed that if a nat could succeed in seizing any child's kala the little one would be sure to die. All sorts of queer things were done to protect the little one from this supposed danger.

The Lord was very kind to these parents, though their minds were full of such wrong ideas. Soo Thah was spared to grow up a beautiful boy, and to learn when he was older how it is in God alone that we must trust to "deliver us from evil" (Matt. vi. 13), as we so often pray. He was a lively boy, and lived as merry and active a life as you can imagine among the woods and fields.

One summer a little girl belonging to the village lost her way in the jungle, and was missing for more than two days. Every one who could be spared went out to search for her; and when Soo Thah and a companion were taking part in this, they came suddenly on a great bear which growled fiercely at them. They had old-fashioned guns with them, and bravely stood their ground, firing at the bear. Many a time had they been warned of the danger of going near a wounded bear, but Soo Thah followed this one after they had hit it several times. With great pluck he persevered in the hunt until he shot the bear in the head, wounding it fatally. The exploit was felt to be a great one, though all the people were hunters, and there was much rejoicing in the village. Shortly after Paw Wah, for that was the name of the little girl, was found, and the search was at an end.

News did not often come to the village, but, when Soo Thah was about fourteen years of age, they heard a strange story about two "white foreigners," a man and woman, who had come to live in a town a long way off. An uncle of Soo Thah, whose name was Shway Dee, had been to that town to buy salt, and heard about these travellers, who were the first missionaries in that part of Burmah.

The news spread very rapidly. The Karens had a tradition of a deliverer who would come to them across the sea in a ship. He was to come from the west, with white wings, and to bring a white book. Shway Dee and many more at once made up their minds that their deliverer from oppression had arrived. There was great excitement throughout the country, and anxiety to learn everything that could be told about the missionary's sayings and doings.

Soo Thah took the deepest possible interest in all news that reached the village. By-and-by a Karen teacher, who had learned the truth from the missionary, came on a visit. He explained that the Deliverer they needed had indeed come, and that He was the Son of the true God, who had sent Him because of His great love (1 John iv. 14). The white teacher, he went on to say, was not the Deliverer, but His messenger.

A school was quickly formed, and Soo Thah was one of the first pupils. They had no books, no paper, and no slates. So they made smooth boards of hard black wood, and wrote the lessons on them with charcoal. Besides the reading Book, the teacher had a wonderful book of hymns, with "the most beautiful tunes" Soo Thah had every heard, and he was one of the very best singers of their own songs.

After a time the missionaries themselves came to the village on a visit. Soo Thah and all his friends made great preparations for the occasion. The following Sabbath, Soo Thah's father and twenty-two other friends were baptised. Soo Thah had not asked to be baptised, but his mind was busy. His father was one of the leaders of the little church, being known as "the one-eyed deacon."

As soon as Soo Thah had learned all his own teacher knew, he went off to another village to one who knew arithmetic, geography, and many other things besides reading. By-and-by a narrow escape from death, and the killing by a tiger of a boy who lay beside him one night, made him think more than ever about Jesus. He felt his need as he had never done before, and gave himself up entirely to the Lord and His service. From that day he became a leader among the young Christians, and while still a young man became a most useful teacher and preacher of the Gospel, bringing many to know the Saviour, whom he himself loved.

* My young friends who wish to know more about Soo Thah and how the Karens were led to Christ, will find the story told in Soo Thah: A Tale of the Karens, by Rev. Dr. Bunker. (3s. 6d. Oliphant.)—Uncle Tom.

A Great Wide Sea to Play With.

He'd a great wide sea to play with,
Though only a tiny boy,
With a tiny spade and a bucket—
But the vast sea was his joy.
He had wee small hands and fingers,
And wee small feet and toes,
But he never thought of his smallness,
As the great tide round him rose.

The sand that he digged—how little!
The drops in his pail—how small!
How little he knew of oceans,
And why the seas rise and fall!
He was only himself a pebble,
Thrown up on Time's shore, yet he
Had the great wide sea to play with,
And was happy as boy could be.

And I thought of our Father's children,
By the side of our Father's sea,
The sea of His boundless mercy,
How happy our hearts should be!
We have only a little bucket,
We dig but a narrow space,
But we are His twice-born children,
And play by His sea of grace.

So let us not waste the moments,
Lamenting that we are small;
But think of our Father's greatness,
And know that we have His all.
We know and can do but little;
Self-measure will give no joy;
But I have my Father's fulness,
And I am my Father's boy.

CONTINENTAL MISSIONS.

(Acts xvi. 8-12, Rom. i. 9-15.)

THERE was no doubt as to the intention of the Divine Spirit in guiding the steps of the great Apostle and his companions to Europe. They had tried to turn to the left into Asia Minor, but they were absolutely and unmistakably forbidden. Then, after traversing the great north road, they had endeavoured to turn off to the right, to Bithynia, but again an unmistakable barrier was raised against them by the same Divine Guide—so they had no alternative save to follow the track they were pursuing until it led them to Troas, the ancient Troy, where, apparently, judging from the pronoun we, they were joined by Luke.

Troas was a busy seaport town; its streets and quays were thronged with merchants, visitors, and sailors from all parts of the world. As the little band of Christian missionaries passed through the streets a babel of voices sounded in their ears, and motley costumes met their eyes. It may be that one man, Greek in his physiognomy and dress, specially caught the notice of St. Paul. As the apostle slept that night, wondering eagerly which way the Spirit of Jesus was leading him, such a man appeared appealing to him to cross over the Ægean, whose blue and sparkling waters lay between Troas and Europe, in order to help those who were sinking in the deep morass of sin.

On narrating this to his friends on the following morning, the whole band accepted the expression of the Divine will. They gathered that the Lord was calling them to preach the Gospel there. The event proved that they were right. And thus it befell that the Gospel was introduced to the most advanced and active races of the world, and those in whose hands the future destinies of the world were to rest.

The south wind sped them fast on their destined course, so that they traversed in two days the distance which occupied them five days on the return journey. The first European ground on which their feet alighted was Neapolis, in Thrace; but Paul did not linger here. He was a great strategist, and knew the vast importance of touching strategic points, and therefore nastened on to Philippi, which, as the historian tells us, was "a first city of that district of Macedonia."

The first converts were women, and the work very inconspicuous in the eyes of the world; but to what dimensions was not that tiny seedling destined to grow, covering the whole continent, and thence the world!

As the Apostle tells us, there were special reasons why he was not ashamed to preach the Gospel on the classic soil of Greece and Rome. The people of those countries were the acknowledged leaders of the world of that time. In the one all that science, art, and literature could do had been done. Some of the greatest intellects of the race had done their utmost to find the unknown God and decipher the riddle of the universe. In the other all that made for imperial glory, for force in government, for the reign of high human ideals had been illustriously achieved. In spite of all, however, men in these great states had reached the lowest depth of degradation. It is impossible for the ordinary mind to realize the depths of moral infamy to which even the philosopher Seneca had fallen.

The one thing that was needed was "power to salvation." Their ideals and moral teaching were irreproachable, but how to perform that which was good they found not. It was, therefore, a glad opportunity in Paul's esteem, which brought him amongst these cultured races with the message that all who believe in Jesus become permeated with the mighty power of God.

But the same message is needed in Europe to-day. Many of its countries are dominated by the Roman Catholic Church, which has sapped all faith and purity; others have thrown off her yoke, but have nothing to replace it; others again, are rationalistic and infidel. Everywhere the Sabbath is desecrated and the Bible discredited; and the deadly poison is spreading through the world. Let us help every Continental missionary agency, and when we travel let us scatter the Bible and good wholesome literature. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

The Congregational Society at Wimbledon has given one of its most earnest and active workers, Miss M. Barrie, to foreign missions. Miss Barrie has just sailed for the West Indies. She is widely known as the compiler of the "Good Ship Christian Endeavour," and other musical settings for young people.

Miss Lloyd, superintendent of junior work in the Leeds C.E. Union, and a member of the Cavendish Road Presbyterian Society, has volunteered for mission work in China. She is to labour in Formosa, under the auspices of the Women's Missionary Association. The interest in missions, which has led three members to volunteer for service during these two years, is due greatly to Miss Lloyd's advocacy. The members are also rejoicing in the raising of the sum of £16 for a Cavendish Road Cot in Sua Bue Hospital, South China.

SAMUEL ANOINTS DAVID (1 Sam. xvi. 4-13).

GOLDEN TEXT—1 Sam. xvi. 7.

1. THE final parting between the aged prophet and the king (1 Sam. xv. 35). Saul returned to his royal residence a self-willed backslider from the Lord (xv. 11), great in his own sight. Hasty, imperious, crafty, and rejected. Samuel returned to his home in Ramah, disappointed and sad. One whole night had been spent before the Lord (xv. 11, and Psa. iii. 4, xxxiv. 4-6). He had delivered the Lord's message of judgment on Saul, faithfully. 2. He was not allowed to let grief disable him for future service (xvi. 1). The Lord's purposes must be carried out by His servants without delay. "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it" (John ii. 5).

SAMUEL'S MARCHING ORDERS.

1. "Fill thine horn with oil" (Eph. v. 18).
2. "Go, I will send thee" (Acts xxvi. 17, 18).
3. "I have provided" (Luke xxii. 35).
4. "I will show thee what thou shalt do" (Acts ix. 6-16).

Lessons learned in old age.—Samuel was fallible, like others (Ex. iv. 1-10). Not to ask "how?" for that shows lack of faith. "Trust, and obey." A step at a time. We have:—1. A king provided by God. 2. A son of Jesse. 3. Which son? 4. Why chosen? (vv. 1, 2, 7, 12). Same plan with Saul of Tarsus (Acts xxii. 10). Samuel's natural judgment had to be set aside for the Lord's commands (v. 6).

Go when bidden; do not hesitate or question. Listen to the Lord's voice (vv. 6-10). Obey His orders (v. 12). Never fail. "The Lord said."

THE LORD'S MEASUREMENTS

are made according to a different standard to that of men (Luke xvi. 15). The heart must be—

Clean (Psa. li. 10).	The natural heart described (Jer. xvii. 9; Rom. iii. 10-18). How renewed? (Psa. cxxxix. 23, 24). How kept? (Psa. cxix. 11; 1 Peter i. 5).
New (Eze. xxxvi. 26).
Pure (Matt. v. 8).
True (Heb. x. 22).
Tender (Eph. iv. 32).
Upright (Psa. xcvii. 11).
Perfect (1 Chron. xxviii. 9).

Some bechives are opaque, others made of glass. In the first we can see the bees go in and out only; in the second we can see them working inside. God sees our hearts (Dan. v. 27, "found wanting"). An electric bell is useless unless it answers to the touch. Does our heart answer to God's touch? David's did as a king over Israel.

I. What was David when the Lord called him "a man after His own heart?" A simple shepherd lad, taught in the Scriptures like every Jewish boy; but he had much to learn. He had physical strength and courage, and gifts of music and poetry, but was content to do common daily labour. He proved himself when king a strong character, a brave national defender, and a powerful monarch.

II. David was as much a King when he went back to the sheepfolds as when he stepped up to the throne of Israel. He did each duty "unto the Lord" as shepherd or king. "Whatsoever ye do as unto the Lord."

III. Heads that have been anointed, hearts that have been filled with the love of God, cannot bow to idols, or stoop to do a mean action at home, in school, or workshop. Our homeliest duties will be done as by the children of a King.

IV. Samuel "cried unto the Lord" about his trouble. Had he "rolled it upon the Lord" (Psa. xxxvii. 5) he would not have lacked courage before Saul, or needed reproof. Nursing his grief made even Samuel timorous. "The fear of man bringeth a snare" (Prov. xxix. 25).

V. Why did the elders tremble? (v. 4.) What made Adam say, "I was afraid"? "Sin in the camp" (Prov. xxviii. 1).

VI. If one instrument fails the Lord can find another. Israel was a deceitful bow, and the Gentiles were called in.

Slum Children's Holidays.—For the sum of ninepence, an organization connected with the Ragged School Unions sends a boy or girl to the country for a day, and gives him or her two substantial meals. In simple words this means a day's happiness for a few pence; and only those who are familiar with the surroundings of life in the one room, and in the stifling court and alley, can fully realize what lies behind the phrase, "A ninepenny holiday."

S.S. Lesson Illustrations.

BENEATH THE SURFACE.

To illustrate the fact that men generally look only on the outward appearance of things, one has but to consider the various goldfields scattered about the earth. In many instances the discoveries have been quite accidental, and not at all the outcome of any foreknowledge on the part of the finders. The riches of California were found by a saw-mill contractor, who chanced one day to note a particle or two of gold in the millrace. While a Russian convoy was toiling over the Siberian steppes, a stumbling horse laid bare a rare auriferous spot. One of the finest goldfields of Victoria was discovered accidentally by a poor wanderer, who noticed a little grit in the water he was boiling for his supper. While man in his ignorance is still looking on the outward appearance of affairs, the Lord looked on the heart (Golden Text).

A SANCTIFIED LIFE.

Adoniram Judson, the famous American missionary to Burmah, was sanctified to God from his very earliest days. At the age of four he used to collect the children of the neighbourhood around him, and, mounting a chair, go through the form of a public service in a very earnest manner. At the age of twenty he made a solemn dedication of himself to God, and then became a working member of a leading Plymouth church. Afterwards he and several other young men formally consecrated themselves to missionary work, and his after life was spent in the East, labouring to the utmost to evangelize Burmah. As Samuel asked the men of Bethlehem to sanctify themselves and join in the sacrifice (v. 5), and as the missionary consecrated and sacrificed himself, so the call comes to us to put away all that is unclean and be washed in Christ's precious blood.

FROM HUMBLE BEGINNINGS.

Dr. Carey, who did so much for India, was once dining with the Governor-General, and overheard one of the guests whispering to another that the noted missionary had once been a shoemaker. "No, sir," replied Dr. Carey; "not a shoemaker, only a cobbler." God's best workers are often to-day drawn from humble surroundings, and we need not fear that He will despise us because of our positions. As David came from the fields, and the disciples from the seashore, so we, in our humdrum positions of life, may be used of God in the extension of His Kingdom throughout the earth. May we pray that the Spirit of the Lord shall come upon us, as upon David, from this day forward (v. 13.)

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

THE "EDINBURGH CASTLE," E.

AFTER a brief season of rest, Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones have resumed their campaign at Dr. Barnardo's well-known mission church, the "Edinburgh Castle," in Limehouse, E.

Although the holiday season is in full swing, there were good congregations on Sabbath last, and Dr. Henry again enlisted the sympathy of his hearers by his telling appeals. His arguments from Scripture were cogent, and the vigorous character of his exposures of the widespread ills wrought by the liquor traffic aroused enthusiasm and gave much encouragement to the many devoted workers at "The Castle." Dr. Henry's addresses, while dealing effectively with the great question of total abstinence, were essentially evangelistic, and tokens were not wanting of the effectiveness of his ministry. Gospel truth was clearly stated, and both the addresses and the delivery of the message in song were manifestly blessed to not a few among the crowds that assembled. The mission at the "Edinburgh Castle" continues through July.

Strangers in Our Gates.

THE Mission to the Foreign French-speaking Population in the Metropolis and Great Britain held its forty-first annual meeting, a few days ago, in the beautiful grounds of Grove House, Regent's Park, where, by the kind courtesy of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Greer, these gatherings have taken place for some years past. The Mission owes its origin and support to the Reformed French Evangelical Church (Eglise Reformée Evangelique Française) in Monmouth Road, Bayswater, under the zealous direction of Rev. J. Du Pontet-de la Harpe. The Rt. Hon. James A. Campbell, M.P., occupied the chair.

The report showed that the church is well attended. Many young men take an interest in the mission work, and numerous personal testimonies have been received of benefits enjoyed. The Zambesia Mission, under Mons. François Coillard, is one of the links binding the spiritual family together. The schools in Bedford Passage have given teaching to 200 children. They were never more prosperous, and have now pupils in excess of the normal number. The Bible class is well attended, and the Home Bienvenue in Colville Houses has afforded shelter and comfort to 287 governesses. The Society for Befriending Foreign Servant Girls registered 350 girls, and 511 applications for servants.

The Y.M.C.A. work has been specially effective, drawing together many young foreigners, and maintaining their religious and moral tone. The report dealt also with the poorer members of the French colony in London, and enumerated some of the minor agencies for relieving want and raising the tone of these strangers. The report made a strong appeal to all those interested in evangelization work, to enable the Committee to crown their present effort by the reopening of the Medical Mission.

The chairman said that for forty two years he had been cognisant of Pastor Du Pontet's work, and sympathized with it fully. Vast progress has been made during the past forty years in missionary work in such fields as Madagascar and Africa. This is mainly due to the exertions of the Reformed Protestant Church. As to the work in Great Britain, it is skilfully directed, and has stood the test of forty-two years.

The meeting was also addressed by Revs. G. R. Thornton, G. H. Giddens, R. Wright Hay, and M. Paul Doumergue.

A Providential Escape.

MANY readers of The Christian will be deeply interested to learn that Dr. Barnardo was travelling by the Liverpool to Southport express which recently sustained such a terrible disaster. That afternoon a party of emigrants from the Homes was leaving England for Canada. Dr. Barnardo had accompanied the children to Liverpool, and after the vessel sailed in the afternoon he took the 4.30 train from the Exchange Station at Liverpool, to go to Birkdale, where there is a Home for Incurable Children in connection with his institutions. When the crash came, Dr. Barnardo had an escape which may well be described as providential and miraculous. He was thrown to the roof of the carriage, and greatly shaken and bruised, but happily he did not sustain any serious injury. One passenger sitting close to him was so frightfully crushed that she has since succumbed. Dr. Barnardo was stunned for the moment, but presently he recovered sufficiently to be able to take some part in attending to the wounded and dying as they were dragged out of the wreckage. Numerous inquiries have been made concerning the "friend of the children," whose name is so well and widely known, and we are glad to report that he has been kept through this peril by the gracious hand of God.

Welsh Notes.

THE annual meetings of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist General Assembly were held at Amlwch on July 14, 15, and 16. Several important conferences and public meetings were held; the conference on foreign mission work especially was of marked interest. In addition to addresses by returned and departing missionaries, a letter was read from the Chief Commissioner of Assam, bearing the highest testimony to the value of the work carried on by the missionaries in the Khassia Hills. They were spoken of as having "effected wonders."

All who deplore the increasing tendency in the country to disregard the sanctity of the Lord's Day will rejoice at the following resolution which was passed by the Town Council of Newport (Monmouthshire) on July 14:—"Having in view the fact that the Council are requesting tradesmen to keep their shops closed on Sundays, also seeing that the recent poll of the burgesses as to Sunday trams gave a large majority in favour of a quiet Sunday, the Council anxious to extend the principle of Sunday rest, asks the member for the Monmouth boroughs to bring in a Bill for the Sunday closing of publichouses."

At the meetings of the Welsh Congregational Union just held at Dowlais, the statistics of the denomination for 1902 were presented. There is, in most departments, a gratifying increase. The churches number 1,074, an increase of fourteen. The communicants have increased by 2,274, and now stand at 151,151. The Sunday-school attendance is 710 less than for 1901, the total at present being 152,774. Ten new chapels have been erected during the year. The sum of £9,445 was contributed towards missions.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE new Y.M.C.A., at Long Eaton, has taken possession of the Literary Institute premises recently purchased from the trustees for about £1,400. Already over 130 members have been enrolled.

A Conference of the Associations of the North-Midland District Union was held at Lincoln on the 15th inst. After a sitting of the council at 11.30, under the presidency of Mr. W. B. Mason, of Leeds, an excellent address to the delegates, on "Reading, Thinking, and Public Service," was delivered by Rev. H. H. Carlisle, of Newland Congregational Church. In the afternoon Mr. Thomas Bell presided at a session, at which the topics, "How we may improve our religious agencies," and "The literary side of Y.M.C.A. work," were discussed.

The "Welcome Home," Canning Town, E.—Col. H. G. Macgregor and Lady Napier took part in the recent muster of "The Christian Lifeboat Crew" at Miss Child's Welcome Home for Sailors, Canning Town. Col. Macgregor alluded, in the course of his address, to the home call of Col. Bentinck—for many years a valued helper in the work, in the old home as well as the new. Mr. Luff told of the Lord's work at the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, and the text for the month, given by Miss Child, was, "I will trust and not be afraid."

Obituary.

MR. S. W. PARTRIDGE.

THE death of Mr. S. W. Partridge, the founder of the well-known publishing firm in Paternoster Row, removes a Christian business man who had done much in the course of his useful career for the dissemination of pure literature. He had retired from active pursuits for some years, and the end came on July 10. We hope to give a portrait and sketch of Mr. Partridge in an early issue.

MR. THOS. WILLIAMS, MERTHYR TYDVIL.

The death, in his eightieth year, of Mr. Thomas Williams, of Merthyr Tydvil, is a great loss to the Principality. For many years he was known as "the Samuel Morley of South Wales," and his removal has left a blank which will be very difficult to fill. In 1891 he presided over the annual assembly of the Union of Welsh Independents, being the first layman elected, even as his close and intimate friend, the late Mr. Henry Richard, was the first to fill a similar position in the larger Union of England and Wales.

DR. SAMUEL KINNS.

The death is announced of Dr. Samuel Kinns, for many years past held in high esteem as a Christian author. The son of a Congregational minister, and born at Colchester, he early developed parts that gave promise of a useful career. For thirty years he carried on a private school in North London, and in 1882 published his first work, entitled "Moses and Geology," in which he showed the scientific accuracy of the sequence of events in the first chapter of Genesis. It was a remarkable work, compiled with extraordinary patience in research, and it ran into many editions. In 1891 his second work, "Graven on the Rock," was presented to the public. This book is an elaborate defence of the historical accuracy of the Bible, established upon the evidence of inscriptions on Assyrian and Egyptian monuments. In the preparation of this work Dr. Kinns spent six hours daily for over three years (Saturdays and Sundays excepted) in the British Museum. It was not until late in life that Dr. Kinns entered the ministry, and then it was in association with the Church of England. For some years he was incumbent of Holy Trinity, Minories, of which church he wrote an interesting record, entitled "Six Hundred Years." For some time before his death last week, in his seventy-seventh year, he suffered from a form of paralysis.

Personalia.

Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, B.D., goes straight from Keswick to Northfield this week. He is one of the speakers at the Northfield Conference.

In connection with the evangelistic campaign which Rev. G. Campbell Morgan is to conduct at the World's Fair, St. Louis, next summer, Rev. Albert Swift, of E. Dulwich Grove, S.E., is to go out to take charge of the young people's work. Mr. Swift's church has released him for six months for this purpose. A list of Mr. Campbell Morgan's forthcoming meetings in this country appears on page 31.

On Tuesday, July 7, at Hastings, Dr. Grattan Guinness was married to Miss Grace Hurditch, daughter of Mr. Russell Hurditch, of the Evangelistic Mission. The gathering of relations which followed included all Dr. Guinness' sons and daughters, as well as Mr. and Mrs. Russell Hurditch, with their son Philip and daughter Lillie. Dr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness have since gone on a tour to the Continent.

Mr. Thomas Payne, who is now sufficiently restored to health to be able to conduct meetings, has felt severely the strain of being laid aside so many months through his accidents, and desires the continuance of prayer by God's children for his speedy and complete recovery. His address is 23, Hyde Grove, Manchester.

Rev. A. Casalis, of the Basuto Mission, hopes to visit England again at the end of October for three weeks, and will be glad of openings to speak on behalf of the work. He has a deeply-interesting story to tell. Mrs. Sutherland-Taylor, hon. sec. for England (190, Albion Road, Stoke Newington, N.), will correspond with friends.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Secularists and the Gospel.

THE secretary of the N.W. Branch of the Secular Society, who has withstood the preachers of the Gospel in the London Parks and other places, more especially in Regent's Park, for some time, and who has been a great opponent of the Christian Evidence Society, has come under the power of the Gospel of God, and has been brought to acknowledge the Lord Jesus Christ as his Saviour. He gave his first address for Christ recently from the platform of the Christian Evidence Society in Regent's Park, and each Lord's day since has preached the Gospel from his own platform, so that not only is he himself converted, but in a sense his meeting is also.

We have not much to fear from Hyde Park infidels; that they are daring, we admit, but they are not taken seriously by thoughtful men, and their ignorance of the Bible is patent.

I have just heard, through Mr. A. Holness, of another man, having the advantages of education and culture, but a pronounced agnostic and a regular attendant of secularist meetings on Peckham Rye. His absence from these assemblies of late was noticed, and on inquiry being made it was found that he had forsaken all gatherings of the kind, and now frequents Gospel meetings and attends a place of worship.

Tent Work in Glasgow.

A mission, in one of the Evangelization Society's tents, conducted by Mr. J. W. MOODIE, is at present being carried on near the Round Toll, at the head of Garscube Road, and large companies of people are gathering night by night. The district stands much in need of a great flood of salvation, as some of the streets in the neighbourhood bear a bad name. Mr. Moodie preaches with great energy, and follows no man in his manner of dealing with "Bible characters." The Old Testament particularly is to him a mine of wealth, and the heroes and historic personages of its pages are used by him for setting forth in his own characteristic style the great truths of salvation.

From the very beginning of the mission evidences have not been lacking of the working of the Spirit of God. Men and women have heard and believed the Gospel, and entered into life. "The old, old story" has afresh demonstrated its suitability to meet every form of human need. Whatever the particular sin, the atoning work of Christ has proved its sufficiency to cover the case. The workers from Grove Street Institute have rendered splendid help. J. C.

Tent Mission at Aylesbury.

A Tent Mission is being held at Aylesbury by Mr. FRANK PENFOLD (of Hove), who came to the town primarily through the invitation of the Congregational minister (Rev. J. Hilton Stowell).

The meetings have been in progress a week, and are held every evening, as well as at noonday, the latter being principally for the benefit of the workers in the adjoining factories, who flock in large numbers to spend part of their dinner hour in listening to the message of salvation. The result of the first week's effort is that over 200 decisions for Christ have been made, among the number being many who do not attend any place of worship and some who were once attendants at Sunday-school.

On Sunday evening the tent (which seats about 1,000) was filled to its utmost capacity, and a stirring address was given by Mr. Penfold. In response to the evangelist's invitation, a large number confessed Christ, while many others left the meeting deeply impressed. The mission will be continued for several weeks, and Mr. Penfold, who usually conducts every meeting, is receiving valuable support and co-operation from ministers and other friends from the different churches. Except for the purely local liabilities, the expenses of the mission are being kindly borne by Mr. W. Willett (of Hove). H. MIDDLETON.

We have received the following through Pastor D. J. Findlay, of Glasgow, regarding the awakening in Banffshire:—I have been visiting along these shores (Findochty) again. Was at the meeting last night (July 19), and have seen or conversed with many of the young converts. Glad to report that the work is proving to be a real work of God. Visited many of the young converts, and had sweet fellowship with them. W. S.

Mr. Edgar Geil at Singapore.

An effective mission has been conducted by Mr. EDGAR GEIL at Singapore.

The Malaysia Message says: "If God set a hedge about Job to protect him from the devil, Satan has found a degree of retaliation in the barriers that many of Singapore's residents have erected against the admission of the Gospel to their hearts—barriers both literal and metaphorical. The average European lives in the centre of a large "compound," surrounded by servants, hedges, and social obstacles to making his acquaintance, that effectually thwart the local pastor, and, regarding himself as temporarily exiled to the Far East, he spends the days of his sojourn here as if he had no soul or, in many cases, intellect either. . . . But there is abundant evidence that Mr. Geil's vigorous proclamation of the Gospel created an interest in many directions usually quite indifferent to the matter, and in every church in town are many who will long remember with very great gratitude and pleasure, the time he spent with us.

"The afternoon meetings were very greatly enjoyed, the addresses being to believers. At the evening services Mr. Geil dealt uncompromisingly with sin, and hundreds heard the truth about matters that are often little commented upon by the pulpit, and the truth found auditors that the pulpit does not often reach."

Mr. WILLIAM FORBES had a large number of theatrical ladies to tea on Thursday last at Orange Street Chapel, Leicester Square, W.C. Sacred songs and solos were sung, and an earnest and practical address was given by Miss Newnes, sister of Sir George Newnes. "Marked" Testaments were given to the guests.

Mr. W. R. LANE addressed four audiences on Sabbath last in the Hippodrome, Blackpool. At the closing service a limelight lecture was given on "The Bedford Tinker and his Book." The attendances were most encouraging for the evening services, the building being full. Rev. John McNeill returns for Sabbath next. L. J.

A correspondent who writes in advocacy of the organization of tract distribution among visitors at seaside resorts adds to his letter: "At Blackpool, during a few days I spent there recently, I saw a lady walking up and down the promenade carrying a board exhibiting some striking texts of Scripture, and I noticed that her good work was not in vain in the Lord."

Although Keswick is world known through its annual muster of Christians, there are many other places in this lovely county of Cumberland scarcely ever heard of, and which stand greatly in need of the Gospel comprehending the fulness of life in Christ, little known in these parts. For the second year, the writer has adopted caravan life, and in a Gospel van moves from village to village singing and preaching the Gospel on unsectarian lines. A. S. LAMB.

A cheering spirit of Christian enterprise is observable among various country districts of South Wales and Monmouthshire. At Blackwood, the Free Church Council conducts two open-air services each Sunday, and have arranged for a week's temperance mission by MRS. HARRISON LEE. In the same town a Christian Workers' Convention has been arranged on a scale which should attract many and do much good. Again, some friends who saw with regret that no place except the public-house was open to young men of an evening, have rented premises for the purpose of a Free Reading Room. D. T.

Requests for Prayer.

That a dear father who is afflicted with rheumatism may be restored to health.

Church of England.

The Dean of Hereford has issued an appeal for £5,000 towards the rebuilding of the west front of the nave of Hereford Cathedral. He states that a further sum of £5,000 will be required later on for the front of the side aisles.

On Thursday last, Dr. Moorhouse forwarded to the Prime Minister his resignation of the See of Manchester, the resignation to take effect at the end of October next. The Bishop, who is seventy-seven years of age, gives advancing years as the reason for his wish to retire. He has decided to forego his right to a retiring allowance, leaving his successor in full possession of the income of the see.

A protest has been sent to the Bishop of London against the institution of Rev. Henry Ross, formerly curate of St. Bartholomew's, Brighton, to the parish of St. Michael's, Shoreditch, on the ground that "he is a member of the Society of the Holy Cross, working for the restoration of auricular confession in our churches, and that in Brighton notices were exhibited that he would hear confessions at such and such a time, and further that he has been seen performing the ceremonial of the Roman Mass."

Rev. the Hon. W. Talbot Rice has been preaching a short course of sermons in Swansea Parish Church against theatre-going. Alluding to a critic in the local Press, who had said it was better that the moral cesspools which exist in society should be ventilated on the stage than kept closed, the vicar said that he had never used any language so strong as that respecting the theatre, but he now invited his congregation to consider whether "moral cesspools" should be opened in theatres for the amusement of young people.

At St. Philip's Church, Kennington Road, S.E., Rev. W. H. Hornby Steer has given an address on "Betting and Gambling in the Light of Christianity." He said the vice of gambling had increased enormously of late years, especially in South London, which was the real home of street betting. The open space at the "Elephant and Castle" was, during the racing season, crowded with betting men. So great was the business of bookmaking in this district that it was worth the while of one evening paper to open a department in South London, so as to be able to supply results a few minutes ahead of its rivals. He urged that bookmakers should be imprisoned instead of being fined.

At the forthcoming Conference of the Evangelical Protestant Union, Rev. J. B. Waddington, Hon. Secretary, and Vicar of Low Moor, Clitheroe, is to move a resolution urging the committee of the Church Missionary Society "to take any well-advised steps for meeting the changed circumstances of the times, and excluding those dignitaries whose teaching and attitude are manifestly at variance with the doctrinal standard of the Thirty-nine Articles, from the position of vice-presidents in what has been from its foundation an undeniably Protestant and Evangelical Society." The resolution will also "urge the C.M.S. Acting Committees to prohibit co-operation on the part of any of their agents with societies which employ such unscriptural and Romanizing teachers as members of the E.C.U., C.B.S., &c."

The Year Book of St. Paul's, Portman Square (Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, vicar) tells of the maintenance of many departments of Christian service. The report says:—"Of necessity, it will take time for the people resident in the boundaries which constitute our parish to realize their parochial connection with us, more particularly as a good part of the parish is occupied by boarding-houses whose tenants are necessarily 'birds of passage.' We are, however, doing our utmost to remind those around us of the parish and church to which they belong, and to assure them of a very hearty welcome to our church and its services, and to anything we can do for them in case they are not already associated with any other church. We are in great want of more ladies as district visitors. We desire to have visitors in all parts of our parish that can be visited, so as to ensure a loving interest and prayerful sympathy of Christian hearts with the poor in our midst."

Congregational.

Rev. H. J. Perkins, of Southampton, has accepted the pastorate of New Court Church, Tollington Park, N., in succession to Rev. G. Campbell Morgan.

Rev. J. H. Jowett has announced to his congregation at Carr's Lane Chapel, Birmingham, that Rev. A. J. Naylor, of Moseley Street Mission, has been appointed his assistant. Mr. Jowett preached a very interesting and helpful sermon in connection with the Sunday School centenary.

Queen Street Church, Wolverhampton (Rev. H. C. Carter), is undergoing extensive renovation. The erection of another branch church in Lea Road has been decided on.

The anniversary of the church at E. Dulwich Grove, S.E., has been celebrated. The pastor, Rev. Albert Swift, conducted the services, and made appropriate reference to the special circumstances of the day. In connection with the anniversary, special prayer meetings were held daily and were well attended.

A meeting was held a few days ago in Hawkstone Hall, S.E., to celebrate the completion of twenty-eight years of service of Mr. Benson, as evangelist at Christ Church and Surrey Chapel. A very interesting paper was read by Mr. Benson, giving reminiscences of his long period of work, and Revs. F. B. Meyer, H. Grainger, and others spoke.

The new issue of the Yorkshire Congregational Year-book gives a return of 272 churches and fifty mission stations in that county, with accommodation for 155,218 persons, and a membership of 33,674. There are 214 pastors, thirteen evangelists, with forty-nine retired ministers or temporarily without charge. There are nearly 200 recognised lay preachers.

The new scheme of superannuation for Congregational ministers has at length been launched, and proposals can now be entertained. Henceforth it will be possible for the majority of Congregational ministers to provide themselves with an annuity of varying value for the time when the onerous duties of the pastorate are heavier than they can physically bear. The new scheme includes professors at colleges and secretaries of denominational societies, for whom no provision can be made by the Pastors' Retiring Fund.

Baptist.

The quarterly fellowship meeting of the Putney Church (Rev. F. J. Feltham) has just been held under encouraging circumstances. Rev. T. J. Hazzard gave a helpful address on "The Divine searching of the human heart."

The third anniversary of the settlement of Rev. F. E. Hall at Shefford was held on Wednesday, July 15, when Rev. John Wilson, vice-president of the Baptist Union, preached in the afternoon, the subject being "The blessing of God." The speakers for the public meeting in the evening were Revs. J. Wilson, H. Jenner (Hitchin), and R. C. Law (Biggleswade).

The series of services held in connection with the opening of the new church at Oldfield Park, Bath, has been most encouraging. The preachers who took part include Rev. John Thomas, M.A., of Liverpool, who conducted the dedicatory service, and, on successive Sundays, Revs. Dr. Glover, Richard Richard, and the pastor, Rev. Benjamin Oriel. The new chapel affords sitting accommodation for 610, and is well adapted to Nonconformist worship.

Methodist.

The new Wesleyan Hall at Deptford is to be opened in October, and a theatre will probably be taken in September to prepare the way for this important mission.

The local preachers of City Road Wesleyan Circuit have begun a series of Tuesday evening open-air services in Wesley's Chapel Yard. Seats and hymn-books are provided. The organizing secretary is Mr. Stanley W. Baxter.

Mr. A. M. Broadley, writing to a Bridport paper, tells of the discovery, in the parish registers of Lyme Regis, of the burial there, February 15, 1670, of Bartholomew Wesley, the ejected minister of Charmouth, and great-grandfather of John Wesley.

The memorial to the late Mrs. W. D. Walters was unveiled a few days ago in Highgate Cemetery. Councillor Edmund Barnes, ex-mayor, who initiated the public subscription by which the memorial was erected, gave briefly a statement of Mrs. Walters' heroic sacrifice of her life to save that of a little child at Woolwich, October 8, 1902.

A further step towards the union of several of the Methodist bodies was taken at the annual assembly of the Methodist Free Churches in Sunderland. The subject was introduced by Rev. E. Boaden, who moved the first resolution of the Connexional Committee, which affirmed the utility of union between the United Methodist Free Churches, the New Connexion, the Bible Christians, and the Wesleyan Reformers. This was carried unanimously, and the basis of union was discussed.

The eighty-ninth annual report of the Wesleyan Missionary Society states that a reawakened interest in Wesleyan missions is the outstanding feature of the year. The committee, despite deficiency in its income, sent out additional missionaries during the year, and preparations are being made for further extension. There is also to be a further development of medical mission work. The receipts from the district auxiliaries of Great Britain, the main branch of the Society's regular income, show an increase of £7,600, which is the largest increase in regular income known in any year.

Presbyterian.

Manchester Presbytery has resolved to raise the Singleton Hall Mission in Tully Street to the status of a preaching station.

On Saturday week 150 young people from Bow Road, East India Road, and St. Paul's, Millwall, were entertained by the members of the Young People's Guild of St. Paul's, Redhill. Mr. J. Hill Duncan, of Hollycroft, kindly gave the use of his beautiful park and gardens.

The contributions of congregations towards the synodical schemes of the Church for the half year just ended show an increase over not only last year but several previous years. The total raised in 1899 was £5,436, and in 1903 £6,635. This is the more cheering as a sum of £7,000 is being raised for foreign missions in view of a serious deficiency.

Society of Friends.

Extensive alterations have been made in the meeting-house premises at Newcastle-on-Tyne, in order to provide increased accommodation for the growing mission work without interfering with the convenience of Friends. As a result of these alterations there is now a fine mission hall, ventilated by an electric fan, and capable of seating 350. It was decided by the committee to celebrate this important epoch in the history of the mission by holding a "housewarming." The enlarged hall was crammed to its utmost capacity. There were a number of people quite fresh to the place, brought in by the efforts of members.

The Royal Naval Mission, The Brook, Chatham, maintains work for sailors, and also for young people and others of the district, and Bible class is led by Commander Salwey, who is president of the Mission, and a Sunday-school, formerly independent, is now included among the branches of the enterprise. Mr. A. E. West continues his labours as director; he frequently receives letters from sailors on foreign stations who have taken active part at Chatham, who continue to express a lively interest.

Fallen Asleep.

Aged seventy-six, Alderman George Bottomley, J.P., of Derby. Mr. Bottomley was a noted Midland Congregationalist, and chairman of the Derbyshire Union. He was an ex-Mayor of Derby, and an active worker in educational and philanthropic movements.—Aged eighty, Mr. Edward Marriage, one of the oldest members of the Society of Friends, for many years president of the Colchester Adult Schools, and an earnest worker.—At Toronto, Dr. E. H. Dewart, aged seventy-five. In his time, Dr. Dewart held a very prominent place in the Canadian Wesleyan ministry.

Connemara Orphans' Nursery.—The Misses Florence and Emily Lighton (15, Pembroke Road, Clifton, Bristol) are now the honorary secretaries of this useful enterprise. There are two orphanages—one for boys at Ballyconree, another at Glenowen for girls. Among other visitors to the latter was Rev. N. F. Duncan, who wrote:—"Found just the same happy state of things prevailing. It is always a refreshment to see the Glenowenites and talk to them of the things which belong to our peace." Mr. R. T. Smith, Inspector, Congested Districts Board, expresses the opinion regarding Ballyconree that "everything is efficiently managed."

A REMARKABLE BOOK BY A KESWICK MISSIONARY.

Things As They Are:

Southern India in Mission Work

By AMY WILSON CARMICHAEL (KESWICK MISSIONARY C.E.Z.M.S.). With Preface by EUGENE STOCK.

A Series of Reviews of this Work.

Handsomely bound in Cloth Boards, Gold Lettering, with Thirty-nine beautiful Illustrations in Collotype from Photographs taken specially for this Work. 319 pages.

SIX SHILLINGS.

The LITERARY WORLD says:

"Those who wish to know what mission work in India really is, and what the lives of the people are, will do well to give this book their studious attention; it is completely sincere, and so free from prejudice. There are many excellent illustrations after photographs. Passionate earnestness is apparent on every page, and although there is much to depress and discourage, the author never abandons hope and confidence."

The DAILY CHRONICLE says:

"To anyone interested primarily in human nature these impressions cannot fail to prove both fascinating and suggestive. The writer has a distinct personality. With a fiery and consuming zeal for the work of Christian propaganda, she combines clearness of vision into the meagreness of the results so far attained."

The METHODIST RECORDER says:

"This is the most extraordinary missionary book we have ever read—the most intense, vivid, realistic, and, on the face of it, true to fact. One looks at the collotype pictures, of which there are thirty-nine, and there comes a feeling of awe. . . . ."

The ILLUSTRATED MISSIONARY NEWS says:

"No one would rise from gazing on this series of living pictures with a ray of hope for our Indian sisters, if they could not say with a trust begotten by the God of Hope, 'I believe in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and Giver of Life!' Some thirty-nine photographs speak in a wonderful way, painfully emphasising the sorrow-burning words of Miss Carmichael."

American Notes.

THE annual report of the American Tract Society, just issued, says that during the year just ended eighty-five new publications have been issued, distinct from periodicals. The society is now publishing seven of these latter—four in English, two in German, and and one in Spanish. The aggregate circulation of these during the year has been 3,000,000 copies.

Recently K'ang Yü Wei, the celebrated Chinese reformer, whose effective representations to the Emperor of China in 1897 and 1898 had so much to do with the stirring events of 1899 and 1900, delivered a speech of four hours' duration in the Chinese quarter of Philadelphia. He was accompanied by another reformer of the same stamp as himself, Leung Kai Chu. Though not Christians, each of them declared that if China has any hope of taking a place among the Powers with anything like equal rights she must recognise and accept Christianity. Leung Kai Chu said that no insurrection or revolution was contemplated in the movement he represented, but that its success was to be achieved by moral influence.

Mr. Herbert H. Booth, third son of General William Booth of the Salvation Army, has had a most successful stay in New York of several weeks with his bioscopic lectures on the early Christians. He has also achieved some distinction as a preacher, and has occupied several important pulpits. He is about to leave for the West to fill a number of Chautauqua engagements, and expects to return here in the early fall and get his scheme of a bureau for the indefinite production of such lectures, as are now proving so successful, established. This bureau is intended to be international in scope.

"Sam" Hadley, the head of the renowned Water Street Mission, has celebrated the twenty-first anniversary of his conversion. His invitation to the public to be present was couched in these terms: "Come and celebrate with me the twenty-first anniversary of my freedom and redemption from the awful thraldom of whiskey and sin and death in the human heart and life. I have proved beyond a doubt that the Lord Jesus Christ, and He alone, can by His own almighty power, without the aid of drugs or nostrums of any kind, in a moment, and for ever, kill and cast out from the brain, the blood, the stomach, and above all else, the imagination, the hell-born appetitite for whiskey or alcohol in any shape whatsoever, and by faith in His atoning blood a soul can be kept free as a little child from its dreadful power."

Mrs. Ballington Booth, of the Christian Volunteers of America, is inaugurating a Volunteer Prisoners' League in the State Prison of Connecticut. This will bring up to seventeen the number of penal institutions containing branches of her excellent work. Mrs. Booth expects soon to have an interview with the Govenor of New York State with reference to the enactment of legislation permitting of a parole system, such as exists in Illinois.

Holiday Time. Rev. Davies Wortman, D.D., has aptly named the place to which Jesus commanded His disciples to accompany Him "and rest awhile" (Mark vi. 31), the beneficent desert; for, as he says, the words come not only as an invitation, but also as a command to those who are "too self-willed, and who work beyond their strength and need." And in these days of hurry and worry, the lesson cannot be too strongly impressed that there is a law and a gospel of rest as well as of work. To rest well one must labour first; but always there is a duty to the body, "the temple of the Holy Ghost," that it may be preserved for future service. Taken with that object, and in that hope, the rest will not be one of loneliness, even in the "desert place apart," for it will be with the Son of God. And in that Divine companionship even the desert will be found to blossom like the rose.

The Church and the Nation. Dr. John Smith's address at Keswick (see p. 19) was a message whose force and power may well extend far beyond the limits of the Convention tent. The all-sufficiency of God to deal with the infidelities of Church or people is the only hope of the believer in these days of stress, on the one hand, and of widespread indifference, on the other. The spiritual vicissitudes of Israel find their counterpart in ourselves, for the human heart is the same in all ages. The vaunting of self and "behaving itself unseemly" go hand in hand, and are the antithesis of the love which God demands. Well may the Church of God examine itself, and consider wherein it lacks the faith that overcomes the world, and the power to direct its steps in the ways of God; and the Church can be influenced only by its individual members. To each of us comes the call to "understand and know" the Lord who has redeemed us, and to declare Him by life as well as lip.

Y.W.C.A. Secretaryships. It becomes more evident year by year that there is a large and promising field for Christian service in the secretaryships of Y.W.C.A.'s. The letter signed by the Bishop of Durham and other friends (see p. 25) calls for the attention of those who feel free to devote themselves to such work. Only some are naturally gifted to take it up; but those who have heard or may hear the call in this direction, will welcome gladly the opportunity for acquiring such special training as will greatly enhance the value of their efforts.

A Neglected Weapon. Among other students of the recent religious census, Rev. James Travis finds occasion for rejoicing in the evidence of the figures that real Gospel preaching has not lost its power over the people. He lays stress, however, upon one painful sign of weakness, the decline of the prayer-meeting service.

> In Chelsea (said the enumerator) we included the attendance at prayer-meetings, and it is a thought-feeding and significant fact that the total only came to thirty persons.

If this would be a fair average for other districts, it may well, indeed, be urged that the supreme need of the Church to-day is, as Dr. Parker once said, "The recovery of the lost miracle of prayer." With such a revival there is the other need, that of real living men in the pulpits, with a real living message of salvation through Jesus Christ. Where these two means are faithfully employed, there is bound to be an overflowing harvest.

Precept and Practice. The last number of the American Congregationalist to hand, contains an article on the late Pope by Professor Egan, who is known as a "liberal Roman Catholic." The article possesses a certain psychological value, inasmuch as it reveals the extent to which a man of education can, under the influence of Rome, renounce even elementary judgments in morality. Professor Egan says:—

> If all the charges made so light-heartedly against Alexander VI. were true, it would not in the least alter the attitude of Catholics towards him as the successor of the spiritual position of St. Peter, the first pastor. A bad man in the chair of Peter would not make a bad Pope—since the Pontiff, when he speaks ex cathedra as teacher of the Universal Church, must, in spite of any personal defect, utter an infallible message. Such a man might commit personal sins or political crimes, but his position as the interpreter of the deposit of faith would be no more affected than St. Peter's could have been by the betrayal of His Master.

A paragraph like this helps us to understand how it is that intelligent men can give their allegiance to the Roman Church; but it is none the less astounding that they can accept a position which involves the destruction of the elementary ideas of spiritual religion. Everything is reduced to a system of mechanics, and is as foreign to the spirit of the New Testament as anything can be. Yet it is upon this anti-Christian foundation that Romanism reposes. No wonder that loose morals prevail in Romish countries.

Roman Catholic Leakage. Father Pinnington's paper on "Leakage," read at the recent Liverpool meeting of the Catholic Truth Society, will not prove pleasant to those who have been proclaiming the development of Romanism in the northern districts. The writer stated that the Roman Catholic population of Liverpool, despite the remarkable growth of that city, "is less, not merely proportionately, but numerically, than it was forty years ago." As the population doubles itself in twenty-five years, the statement is a striking one; but it is borne out by the fact that forty years ago the Romanists numbered 135,587, and that last year they were 175 below that figure. There has, however, Father Pinnington claimed, "been a deepening of religion," and he asserted that the leakage is that of the children of ignorant and hopeless and criminal parents. The results shown in the figures are, however, too great for that to be the only or the chief cause, and those who are familiar with Roman Catholic immigrants know well that the leakage includes large numbers of adults who drift from dense superstition into indifference.

Anti-Clericalism in France. From the first it has been clear that the atheistic party in France meant, if possible, to exploit the law against the congregations in favour of suppressing all religious worship. There are one or two journals (notably L'Intransigeant), which have unhappily a very large circulation, and whose motto is the infamous "Ni Dieu ni maître." Their anti-clericalism is a war upon religion itself, prompted by blind, unreasoning hatred of God; and they are as averse to Protestantism as to Catholicism. Every reform contains dangers of this kind, which need watching. It is a good thing, however, for the iconoclasts to know at once that the Government is not going to play into their hands, but that its measure is directed solely against the unauthorized Romish societies.

Roosevelt and the Negro. Through good and evil report, the President of the United States is adhering to his policy of defending the coloured people in their rights of citizenship. The recent brutal lynching cases were not without the effect of reducing the influence of America in regard to the Russian persecution of the Jew, and it is to be hoped that the pronouncement of Justice Brewer, of the Supreme Court, that each person taking part in such illegal executions is legally guilty of murder, will go far to prevent their repetition. In his view of this racial question, the President is supported, not only by the highest principles of civilization and humanity, but by that solution of all racial difficulties which has been divinely given: "God hath made of one blood all nations of men" (Acts xvii. 26).

India Once More. The decision of the British Government to charge against India a large portion of the cost of the army of 25,000 men which it finds necessary to maintain at the Cape, certainly is one to be deeply deplored. Lord Curzon has already stated that the new impost will seriously affect "the desire to alleviate the burdens of India;" but our Administration, unhappily, prefers to keep only one side of the ledger. It is true that during the last twenty-five years the excise revenue of India has gone up by £2,484,000, but the consumption of intoxicating drink has been more than doubled. Within the past ten years the excise revenue has increased sixteen per cent., and the population less than three per cent.!

"By thy Words." A correspondent makes this profoundly true remark:—

> It does seem the most rank dishonesty to put forth the crudest scepticism and then get out of it by saying that it is a mere question of words. According to that there is no difference between truth and falsehood, it is merely a question of words. But this seems the tendency of the day, to call darkness light and light darkness, and say it is only a question of words.

Our words are the fullest and truest expression of ourselves. Jesus is called the Word of God because God spoke out His whole being in His Son, who is the brightness of His glory and the express image of His Person." Our words are more really the outcome of our being than are our sons and daughters. "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." The question of our words is the question of our destiny in the age and the ages to come.

Recognition in Heaven. In the course of a striking sermon on "The Resurrection Body"—preached this week in London—Rev. Dr. G. C. Lorimer (New York) touched the hearts of many of his hearers by his lucid exposition of the subject. Dealing with the question how identification can be certain when the body is glorified, he said:—

> There is one thing that gives identity to the body, and that is the soul. If you were stripped of your body, and clothed upon with a new body, you would be found out to-morrow. You could not disguise yourself; the soul would speak in you. It is the soul that gives identity.

The immediate effect of these words showed to how many a real difficulty had been cleared up, and we feel sure the words will convey a welcome message to a wider circle.

The Power of a Smile. Dealing with the common expectation that the wound marks of the Saviour will awaken responsive chords in the hearts of His people, Dr. Lorimer passed on to say, by way of personal application:—

> There is something peculiar and unique about every one of you that will betray you, and make you known in the other world. It may not be a gash. I think sometimes it will be a smile. As one star differeth from another star in glory, one face differeth from another face by its smile.

It is a beautiful thought. How shall we cultivate the spirit that will show itself in such smiles as those of the preacher who was assured that he had smiled a convert into the Kingdom!

Professor Romanes on Christ's Ethics. It is to be hoped that it was only through want of thought that an ethical lecturer recently announced his intention to speak upon some ethical points overlooked by Jesus. The Lord's Prayer and the Sermon on the Mount may safely be asserted to contain all that the sociologist and the ethical thinker need require to have a place in the framework of a perfect society. Professor Romanes, who for years was an agnostic, an opponent of Christianity, and a brilliant Darwinian, but who, in later life, accepted fully the Christian faith, and found joy and peace in it, recognised the wide comprehensiveness of Christ's ethics. One great evidence which struck him most forcibly was the absence from the biography of the Saviour "of any doctrine which the subsequent growth of human knowledge, whether in natural science, ethics, political economy, or elsewhere, has had to discount." And, on the other hand, that Divine teaching included all that the growth of human knowledge has shown to be essential factors in happy individual and national life.

The Physique of the Nation. In view of the often repeated statement that the physique of our national manhood is on the decline, a correspondent calls attention to the restrictions which are placed by employers upon their male servants (gardeners, coachmen, &c.) as to the number of their children. We have more than once referred to the phrascology prevalent in advertisements for such servants, namely, "no encumbrance," "without family," &c. This is no doubt due to the lack of living accommodation provided; but our correspondent urges that, if these barriers were removed, there is, perhaps, no class in the community from whom a robust and healthy offspring would be more likely to arise than those spending much of their time in out-door work. Local conditions are a strong element in the case, but, where it is feasible, the suggestion is a right one that reasonable accommodation should be provided for a family.

Pope Leo XIII.

[From an Italian Standpoint.]

By Rev. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

POPE LEO XIII. has died, and the English newspapers are full of notices, which sound his praises in loud and almost unqualified strains. The Italian newspapers, on the other hand, have comparatively few notices of him, and few articles on his character and life; but when I find that such as they have differ in tone and statement entirely from those in England, I must ask the question, Which statements are in accordance with truth and historic fact? The natural supposition is that the Italian accounts and estimates are the correct ones. The Pope lived nearly all his life in Italy, and chiefly in Rome. The Italians know, therefore, what they are talking about.

The notices in the English newspapers do credit to the generosity of heart of the writers, but do little credit to their judgments and intellects. Unconsciously they distort history, and obscure great moral distinctions; in a word, they write pleasing fiction, not solid fact. Let me give a few facts about the late Pope, in the words of Italians who knew him personally, and who were eye-witnesses of his deeds.

AS ARCHBISHOP OF PERUGIA.

In June, 1859, Perugia rose against the cruel tyranny of the Papal government, and on the 20th of that month General Schmidt, with his mercenary Swiss troops, sent by Pope Pio Nono, bombarded the city. The late Pope (then Cardinal Pecci) was Archbishop of the city. On the night of the assault he appeared preoccupied and nervous. A priest, Adamo Rossi, called upon him, and in the words of the Gazzetta di Venezia conjured him to use his power and influence to hold in check the soldiery of Schmidt. But the prayers of the good priest were useless. Pecci would not move a finger, and at last he replied, "Volete che io sia un ostacolo perché il Santo Padre reprenda i suoi beni legittimi?" (Do you wish that I should be an obstacle to the Holy Father getting his own legitimate property?) The next day the massacre began (men, women, children were indiscriminately butchered), the Archbishop remained shut up in his palace, indolent, inactive, indifferent to all appearance; hence he is judged one of those responsible for the inhumanities committed by the Swiss.

But the day of vengeance came. In November next year the Italian General De Sonnaz marched to the relief of Perugia. The spirit that animated his soldiers was expressed in the words, "L'inulta Perugia domanda vendetta e l'avrà." (Unavenged Perugia demands revenge, and it will have it.) After four days' fighting, De Sonnaz succeeded in driving General Schmidt into the citadel. To besiege that, he planted his cannon under the Archbishop's windows. Then, as the loss of life had already been considerable, he mercifully turned to Pecci, and said: "I pray you, Cardinal Pecci, use your influence to save the shedding of Italian blood." Pecci answered: "Sono addolorato per lo spargimento del sangue Christiano ma non no poteri politico." (I am grieved for the shedding of Christian blood, but I have no political power.) Notice the double infamy of his answer. The general said Italian blood, meaning that of his own countrymen and Pecci's; the late Pope said Christian blood, meaning that of the Swiss mercenaries who were fighting for the Pope. Then he had "no political power;" it was the only power he exercised; he was political governor of Perugia in those days. This is the gentle, kind-hearted "Vicar of Christ," according to the English Press! Even the Herodian Schmidt was more merciful, for he surrendered at discretion.

HIS ELECTION.

When the first Conclave was held in February, 1878, for the election of a successor to Pope Pius IX., and a conclavista expressed his hopes that Pecci would be elected, the future Pope answered, "Sono vecchio. Ho poche forze ancora, e non posso accettare un fardello, vi soccomberò in pochi giorni; non è la tiara che vogliono darmi, ma la morte" ("I am old. I have little strength left. I am not able to accept the smallest burden. I should sink under it in a few days. It is not the tiara you want to give me, but my death"). Yet at this very time Pecci was manipulating the Press of Europe in his favour by pretending to be a liberal Pope, and it was in part to the support of the European Press that he owed his election! The promises then made, which secured him the votes of the non-Italian cardinals, were never kept.

HIS WANT OF GENEROSITY.

The evening of the day of his election, the Swiss Guards mutinied; they seized their arms, broke open the doors of the Vatican prison, and let free three of their companions. They then fortified themselves in the barracks, intending to proceed to any extremes. The mutiny was quelled by measures of conciliation and concession taken by Cardinal Franchi. And what was the cause of the mutiny? The new Pope's penuriousness. The Swiss Guards were accustomed to be liberally dealt with at a Pope's election. Pope Leo XIII. dealt with them in the meanest way possible. His next act was to reduce the pay of all servants in the Vatican, civil and religious, and at the same time increase their hours of work. Then during his long pontificate it has never been recorded of him that he gave a penny to relieve distress in Italy, caused by inundation or fire, earthquake or cholera. King Victor Emmanuel II., King Humbert, and now King Victor Emmanuel III. are all alike famous for their generosity on such occasions. Because he never spent, the Pope has left a large patrimony.

HIS MARIOLATRY.

There is no Pope in history who has done what Pope Leo XIII. has to diminish the worship of God and of Christ in favour of that of the Virgin Mary. She was his god or rather goddess; or rather, I should say, these female idols were his goddesses; as there are as many different Madonnas as there are virtues and vices—and desires. Pope Leo was called the Pope of the Rosary, because of his efforts to extend the Pagan practice of counting beads or saying the Rosary. He extended very considerably the indulgences (liberty to sin with impunity) attached to Rosary sayings. Mariolatry—the worship of Mary, of the Madonna, of Venus—has been mightily extended in the Roman Catholic Church through the exertions of Pope Leo XIII.

THE POPE versus VICTOR EMMANUEL.

The Italian newspapers call attention to the humanity of King Victor Emmanuel on the occasion of the Pope's illness and death, and the inhumanity of Pope Leo XIII.'s conduct on the occasion of the assassination of his father, King Humbert. King Victor Emmanuel has put off his arranged journey to Paris, at great inconvenience to himself and the State, that he might not seem to be enjoying festivities when the Pope lay dying. When King Humbert was assassinated, the Pope prohibited funeral services from being held, excepting of a maimed character. He had no word of sympathy for the royal widow; on the contrary he condemned her prayer. Many of the priests of the Church were put in prison because they justified the murderer Bresci in his crime.

Writing of the conduct of the Pope at this time, La Tribuna said, "The policy of irritation pursued by the Vatican does not disdain to carry its offensive conduct against the moral character, the rectitude and nobility of soul of him who declared Rome the capitale intangibile, even over his unclosed grave. In this instance it has outraged all sentiments of religion and piety."

THE

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Matt. v. 1-12.

LET us now turn to the active side of the Blessed Life. The merciful are not content with bearing wrong, they pity the wrong-doer, pity him with a great compassion, because they realise that the heart which inflicts wrong must itself be tortured by remorse, scourged with the whips of the Furies, and certain to have an even more terrible awakening to shame and everlasting contempt. The merciful, therefore, go forth with a great longing to deliver the evil-doer from himself.

It was thus that the Master felt when He bore the sins of His murderers in His own body on the tree, prayed for their forgiveness, and from His throne of glory sent the Spirit to turn the hearts of fathers to their children, and of the disobedient to the wisdom of the just.

The eyes of mercy are deep with compassionate glances, full of tears, the homes of prayer; the feet of mercy are soft in their tread, for they will not break the bruised reed, nor quench the smouldering spark in the dimly-burning flax; the voice of mercy is generous to the fallen, gentle to the weak, and gracious to the offender.

The only way in which thou canst become merciful is to remember how much mercy thou needest, and hast obtained. "Seeing," said the Apostle, "that we have obtained mercy, we faint not." Ah, think of the ten thousand talents that have been forgiven thee, and thou wilt not take thy brother by the throat and demand the hundred pence, in which he is a defaulter. Hast thou forgotten the moment when thou heardest thy Lord say, "Thy sins which were many, are all forgiven thee," and art thou going to resent the approach of a sinful soul, which loathes the miserable past, and longs to be emancipated from the burden of unforgiven sin? Remember thine own exceeding bitter cry, which God has recorded in His book. "Have mercy on me, O Lord, according to Thy loving-kindness, and according to the multitude of Thy tender mercies."

The divinely merciful become, in the very nature of things, the pure of heart. They have come to estimate by their own inner experiences and by the long effort which the inveterate sin of others has demanded, how terrible and horrible a thing sin is. The mother who has nursed one of her children through some loathesome and painful disease is filled with horror at it, and will take extravagant precautions to ward off the least germ or microbe that menaces her home. Only those who have been forgiven again and again, and who have forgiven, are quick to discern the first symptom of impurity, and to turn from it with shuddering horror. Yes, and to know what sin costs to those that have to deliver the sinner, is such a revelation of the bitter suffering of the Redeemer, that in view of what impurity costs Him, the soul flees from every taint of uncleanness, lest it should add one pang more to that heart which is already pierced through with many sorrows.

The way to purity is by love. Wouldest thou be pure? Love Christ best of all, and love sinful men with a great pity, and love shall be in thee like a fire. It is said that when Adam and Eve were created and lived in Eden, they needed no garment of any kind, because the native innocence emitted rays of light, which enswathed their persons as an atmosphere. As much may be said of love, for where it fills the heart it sheds forth light and fire, which proceed from the very centre of our being, as the fire of God in the midst of the burning bush.

The pure in heart, naturally the peacemakers, because they cannot rest satisfied that the world of men should remain alienated from the life and holiness of God. They become, therefore, messengers of peace and benediction, seeking to reconcile between God and man, or between man and man, which is a most needful work, if ever the wrongs of time are to be righted, and earth become the home of love.

The way to this is to ask God to tell thee what work He is doing in the world, and whether thou mayest be permitted to help Him. He will tell thee that, having laid the foundations of peace in the Cross, He is going on to reconcile all things to Himself, whether they be in heaven, or on earth, or under the earth; and if thou wouldst have fellowship with Him, thou must set thyself to deal with all that breaks peace in thyself and in others.

Often, in their prayers, God's servants ask Him to help them. Without doubt the phrase can be abundantly justified; but does it not suggest that God is to shape His activities to the mould of our schemes, and accompany us along our chosen path? Is it not better to realize that all the burden and responsibility rest upon Him who is mighty; and that all working, whether to will or do, must emanate from Him as the fountain, and pass through us as the channel—submerging us as it passes forth to its blessed and victorious end?

Pre-eminently God is entitled "the God of Peace." He is ever engaged in healing the wounds and reconciling the enmities of the world. As nature covers the battlefield with golden harvests, so does God seek to undo the results of feud and strife, and lay foundations of justice for the temple of peace. Blessed indeed are they whom He associates with Himself in such pacific ministries.

But all such become persecuted and hated. It cannot be otherwise, apparently, in such a world as this. To have fellowship with the Lamb, we must have fellowship in His rejection and suffering. The servant is not above his Lord, and therefore the Master said sadly: "Ye shall indeed drink of My cup, and with My baptism shall ye be baptised."

It is impossible to follow the Lord closely, and not be bespattered by the mud that was cast at Him. Indeed, to miss it may fill us with questionings. The soldier who follows the colonel through the thick of the fight will almost certainly have some scar to carry to his after years. We must see to it that all the evil is said against us falsely, and that we are reproached for the name of Christ. Is this thine experience? Be of good cheer. Thou art on the track bedewed by the tears and blood of the martyrs of Jesus, and as they overcame so shalt thou. Be thou faithful unto death, and He shall give thee a crown of life. But through all thou shalt have a secret joy, a secret supply of strength, and a sweet intimacy with Him who before Pontius Pilate witnessed the good confession.

It should be noticed that these beatitudes run in a parallel line with 1 Cor. xiii., and show

WHAT LOVE CAN BE AND DO.

Poverty in spirit is Love in her chosen garb of humility, for she vaunteth not herself, and is not puffed up. Meekness is Love in the presence of wrong. Mourning is Love in tears. Hunger is Love's appetite. Mercy is Love on her errands of beneficence. Purity is Love on fire. Peacemaking is Love's effort to adjust the wrong of the world. Persecution is Love's requital at the hands of those whom she would help. And Love is all this, intensely, perennially, constantly, because she cannot help it. Character has been defined as being what a man is in the dark: and Love is all this, not for fee or reward, not for notoriety or advertisement, but because she cannot be other. To be this is to be herself.

But who is sufficient for these things? How can they be originated and perpetuated? What is their nutriment and support? There is but one reply. The Holy Spirit must come upon thee and overshadow thee; Christ must be formed in thee; Heaven must descend to thee before it can shine out from thee.

It has been said that there is neither Cross nor Pentecost in the Sermon on the Mount, but surely they are implied. The broad much-trodden road foretells the great city whither it leads, and these wonderful chapters inevitably conduct to Calvary and the Upper Room.

Let a man seek to attain to Christ's ideal, and he will discover the infinite disparity between its crystal heights, and his ineffectual efforts to clamber to their majestic crest; he will need the propitiation and cleansing of the Blood of the Cross; he will confess to the weakness and impotence of the flesh; he will lie at the feet of the Crucified as one dead, until the life of His resurrection enters to infill, indwell, and empower.

There is no hope of our being able to realize this exquisite portraiture by imitation or even by meditation. No, He who originally conceived this ideal, who Himself lived it, must incarnate Himself within us by the Holy Spirit, that He may reproduce in and through us that which He has inspired us to desire. He must give us what He commands, He must be in us what He prescribes.

Evangelist and Pastor.

By Mr. J. S. HARRISON

NOT every minister of Jesus Christ is an evangelist. We think that the evangelist has a special qualification for his own peculiar work, and a distinctive position as a herald of Christ; and here we take our stand upon the word of inspiration. In Paul's letter to the Ephesian Church, we get the source, diversity, and purpose of the Christian ministry. Setting forth the various gifts bestowed by our Risen Lord for carrying on His work on earth, he says: "He gave some apostles; and some prophets; and some evangelists; and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." It is evident, then, that not all are evangelists, any more than all are pastors or teachers. The same writer adds to this above statement, in 1 Cor. xii. 5, 6: "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit; and there are diversities of administration, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God who worketh all and in all." And again: "Are all apostles? Are all prophets? Are all teachers?" Paul evidently thinks not.

We recognise the apostles as ever with us in their writings, and from time to time the Lord gives to His Church, expositors or teachers who unfold the Divine Word; but we regard the evangelist as the pioneer of the Christian Church. He breaks up new ground; the pastor and teacher cultivate the newly-acquired territory, and produce from it the fruits of good living. The evangelist goes down into the quarry and blasts the rocks; the pastor and teacher square the newly-hewn stones, and shape them and polish them for the Lord's temple. Whilst the pastor is tending the "ninety-and-nine," the evangelist goes after the one which is lost, to bring it back to the fold. In a word, the evangelist's mission is to the world, while the other gifts are for the edification of the Church. This, we think, is why the Apostle omits to mention the evangelist when enumerating the various gifts of ministry in 1 Cor. xii. 28, because there he is speaking of the gifts—"set in the Church."

We also recognize the fact that some ministers have both evangelists and pastors—as in the case of Timothy, to whom Paul wrote: "Preach the Word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and teaching. . . Watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry." Here we have both teaching and evangelizing, under Divine direction, by the same man.

The Apostle Peter was first called to be an evangelist. "Follow Me," said Christ, "and I will make you a fisher of men." Subsequently, he had a pastoral charge committed to him, when Christ said, "Feed my sheep." It is a grand thing to know how to catch men, and then to shepherd them afterwards. But if the minister of a charge be a teacher, and not an evangelist, where will the Gospel testimony be? The visit of an evangelist to such a congregation will be like life from the dead; it will send fresh blood pulsating through every member; it will be "like rain upon the mown grass, and as showers that water the earth."

But even suppose the minister have the gifts of both the teacher and the evangelist, he will probably look at truth from a certain standpoint, and he will have his own way of presenting it. The result will be that there will be those in his congregation whom he never has touched and never will reach. For instance, the logical preacher, in whom the argumentative faculty is largely developed, and who has perhaps more head than heart, will miss those who can only be reached through their emotions; and the emotional preacher will fail with the cold, calculating, thoughtful hearer. Are these people to be lost because their own minister cannot move them?

THE USE OF VARIETY.

Here the service of the evangelist comes in to "the help of the Lord against the mighty;" and, further, we all know how the same voice, the same attitudes, the same style of preaching, as years roll on, lose all the surprise power; while a fresh voice, a new method of preaching the same truth, a different mannerism, will reach hearts which hitherto have been unmoved. This may account for the fact that not always will the same evangelist succeed the second time in the same place; he reached all the minds that his way of presenting the truth would affect, at his first visit. Now another must come, and under the hand of God influence those whom his predecessor missed.

In the Acts of the Apostles, we see the itinerant element very strongly marked. However gracious and powerful the ministry of any given church may be, there will surely come lulls when it will not see souls confessing Christ; when, if it be a limited sphere, the pastor will have thoroughly fished the pond, so far as he is concerned. Months pass, years go by; that church becomes stagnant, its activities decline, the minister himself gets disheartened—for pulpit and pew act and react upon each other; whereas the visit of an evangelist would have set all the machinery in motion, and netted the fish the pastor failed to catch; so the church and its pastor would have been saved the dreariness of this condition.

We may be sure of this; the evangelist has his place in God's plan of saving men, and we commit a sorrowful blunder if we think the work can be carried on without him.

"With Christ, which is Far Better."

(Phil. i. 23.)

"With Christ;" it is enough,
Our dear ones whom we miss
Are with Him now, where all is joy,
And holy heavenly bliss.

"With Christ;" free from all sin,
From sorrow, grief, and pain,
At home they are for evermore—
Our loss, but 'tis their gain.

"With Christ;" for ever blest
Our dear ones now abide,
So for their sake let us rejoice,
And every tear be dried.

"With Christ;" oh, sorrow not,
Our hope is not in vain,
We shall behold them face to face
When Jesus comes again.

"With Christ;" let us give thanks,
For dear ones now so glad,
And in God's will let us rejoice
In praiseful garments clad.

"With Christ;" our dear ones wait
The resurrection morn,
When all in Jesus shall arise
And "we" to heaven be borne.

"With Christ;" we then shall be
On the eternal shore,
Together praise the Lord, our God,
Where partings are no more.

Good News from Chili.—Rev. Robert Elphick (Copiapo), who is the only Protestant minister in a district with 100,000 people, writes:—"Praise the Lord, there is the beginning of a revival in all the churches in Chili. There are about forty Presbyterian and Methodist congregations in the country, most of them organised, with an average attendance of about two thousand. The total membership is 1,200."

Words on Service.—3.

By Captain W. H. DAWSON.*

EQUIPMENT—HOW SECURED.

WE have seen and considered the pattern for service, showing the perfect servant. Then, the persons for service, "as the servants of Christ." Now, the power for service, "the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you" (Acts i. 8). Read Luke xxiv. 49; Acts ii. 32, 33, 39; iv. 29-31.

The only power for service is Holy Ghost power. Supernatural work requires supernatural equipment. God is the source of power; Christ is the channel of power; the Holy Ghost is the power. This is a day of organization; there is wonderful development of modern apparatus, new methods, increased effort, varied work, but the question is, How much real power?

Someone has contrasted the days recorded in the Acts with to-day; then, the paucity of organization, but the plenitude of power; now, the plenitude of organization, but the paucity of power.

"Ye shall be My witnesses." We are all witnesses, but the danger is that we are often witnesses without the power; a bad witness has often lost a good case. God wants the personality of each one fully yielded, wholly surrendered, so that He can work through us.

FURNISHED—FITTED—FILLED.

For service we must be "furnished completely unto every good work." Words of Holy Ghost power must be "fitted in thy lips." We must be "filled unto all the fulness of God." "A vessel unto honour, sanctified, meet for the Master's use, prepared unto every good work."

Where does service begin? "And when Moses went into the tent of meeting to speak with God, "then" he heard the Voice speaking unto him from above the mercy seat . . . and He spake unto him" (Num. vii. 89, R.V.). All practical power over sin as regards ourselves and over men in service depends upon real communion with God. "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thine inner chamber, and having shut thy door, pray to thy Father" (Matt. vi. 6, R.V.). Service begins in the Sanctuary, specially in the chamber sanctuary—silent, secret prayer, shut out from all, shut in with thy Father, for there is only room for thee and thy Father. Elijah was told, "Go, hide thyself;" then "Go, show thyself." Are we humble enough, quiet enough, earnest enough, patient enough, to be much alone in the presence chamber of the King?

Prayer is the chief part of service, and prayer imparts to us His power, for the power is a Person. Prayerless in life means powerless in service, and therefore prayer is an indispensable condition of equipment for service. In Ezek. xlvii., the river which brought life and fruit issued out of the Sanctuary, and we must take time in prayer to dwell at the footstool of the throne of God and of the Lamb, whence flows the River of the Water of Life.

But the Sanctuary is also the Oratory; it is the place of intercessory prayer. There we learn to speak to God for men, and how to speak to men for God. Isaiah "saw His glory, and spake of Him." It is there the voice is heard, "Who will go for us?" and the servant learns to answer, "Here am I, send me." "They have seen Thy goings . . . in the sanctuary." Submission to the will of God is the life mission in Christian life for ourselves, and intercession will become the life mission in service for others.

The Sanctuary becomes the Observatory, because it gives

A WORLD-WIDE OUTLOOK.

Here we begin to see the needs of mankind. It is the standpoint for clear seeing, far seeing "unto the uttermost part of the earth." It is also the Armoury where we learn to take and use the Sword of the Spirit, which is the only weapon for service.

And again, it is the Treasury where we receive the riches of grace, "the unsearchable riches of Christ," and where "the riches of His glory" are revealed to us, so that we may carry them forth in service to others.

But once more, the Sanctuary is the Machinery room; the place of power for ministry. The Holy Ghost is the Worker here, the Lord and Giver of Life, He is Power. Here the servant must be "anointed with fresh oil." It is the place to "be filled with the Spirit," and to keep on being filled with the Spirit. Ministry without the Holy Spirit is useless.

THE ELECTRIC CAR.

How is the electric car equipped for service? There are two systems; one, the storage battery in which power is laid up so that, when charged, the car is for a time an independent source of power. The other, the trolley system; the car powerless, inert, must be endued with power. The car is linked on to the electric wire that comes from the machinery house, and then what a transformation! It is equipped for service. The principle of the trolley system is the one for our service. We must keep in constant touch with Jesus Christ, to know the continuous manifestation of the Holy Spirit; nothing less than continuous contact! Self-dependence means emptiness, barrenness; Christ-dependence means fulness and fruitfulness.

The in-filling of the Holy Spirit comes as we fully yield to Christ, wholly surrendered to do His will. Then the out-flowing through abiding in Christ; "out of him shall flow rivers of living water." Though we cannot hold much, yet we can overflow much to others, for the glory of God.

* Notes of an address at Mildmay Conference.

"Filled with the Spirit."

DEAR SIR,—Many earnest souls are troubled because they are looking to be "filled with the Spirit," by which they mean they expect, by prayer, to get such a sense of fulness of spiritual life that they will feel themselves fit for the battle of life.

May I point out that there is no such command in the Bible in this sense, as to "be filled with the Spirit." The Greek is plêrousthe en pneumati—"be fulfilled (or complete) in the Spirit," a different word to that used at Pentecost, eplêsthêsan. I venture to think that the filling there spoken of is for a special service, whereas for all the daily life "Ye are complete (peplêromenoi) in Him," is the basis of Christian life, for "in Him dwelleth all the fulness (plêroma) of the Godhead bodily."

The action of the Holy Spirit is to testify of Christ, in whom is that fulness, and then we, by faith in Him, draw from that fulness. This may seem unimportant to some; but I believe very many are seeking to walk by feeling that they have the Spirit, instead of seeing that the order in the Old Testament was always, first the blood, then the oil on it. The priests had to put on Aaron's garments "to be anointed in them." For "on man's flesh shall it not be poured." In the New Testament the order is "be baptized in His name (that is, the burial of self and consequently of self-consciousness), and "ye shall receive the Holy Ghost." So Paul says to the saints at Ephesus, "In whom, having believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise."

May dear troubled souls see, "ye are complete in Him," and go forward restfully to the every-day service to which He has called us. The experience of the Holy Ghost is the result of obedience, "the Holy Ghost whom God hath given to them that obey Him."

Yours for Christ's sake, R.

The National Refuges. — The Earl and Countess of Jersey a few days ago entertained, in the grounds of Osterley Park, 600 boys and girls and the staff from various homes and ships of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, of which Society his lordship is president. The party, which was under the charge of Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, secretary, included the 200 girls of the Sudbury and Ealing Homes; the boys of Fortescue House, Twickenham; those of the Farm and Shaftesbury Schools, Bisley; and the sailor lads of the "Arethusa" and "Chichester" Training Ships. A feature of the proceedings was the presentation, by Lady Jersey, of prizes given by Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, to those boys and girls who had best acted up to the motto of the Mayflower Guild, "Be good and do good."

SUNDAY, August 2. Psalm lxxvi.

A Song of Judgment.

IN the Septuagint, this Psalm is connected with the overthrow of Sennacherib's army, and may therefore be grouped with Psalms xlvi. and xlviii.

1-6. The Act of Divine Judgment. Notice the fourfold iteration of the locality in which God's judgment befell—In Judah, in Israel, in Salem, in Zion, all gathered up in the emphatic There of verse 3. The reason why so great an act was wrought there, was because Jehovah had chosen it for His dwelling-place, going forth from thence as the mighty champion of His people.

The effect of His interposition is described in majestic brevity. He comes forth from the everlasting mountains (so the phrase may be rendered), and in a moment the stout-hearted warriors and their steeds are sunken deep in their last sleep; the hands that shot the swift arrows are nerveless; the camp which a moment before had teemed with life is silent as a city of the dead.

7-12. The Effects of the Divine Judgment. The earth is hushed in awe. When the story passes through its marts and homes, men put their hands upon their mouths in face of God's awful sentence. Even though mercy was in His heart, and His intention was the salvation of the meek, who can stand when He is angry? What a terrible doom do men incur when they are full of wrath against God's people! Their wrath but serves as a foil for His deliverances, and He restrains it from going beyond a certain point. Let us vow and pay our vows, and let all men bring their tribute to Him who can cut down our pride as a grape-gatherer the clusters of the vintage.

MONDAY, August 3. Psalm lxxvii.

The Litany of the Exile.

The singer appropriates the dire calamities which had befallen his people, as though they were his own. Delitzsch shows its close similarity to Habakkuk iii.; hence it may be referred to the awful close of Josiah's reign, when the lamentation of the people over the death of the sovereign was heart-rending in its extreme anguish.

1-9. Clouds of the deepest gloom. The suppliant's hands have been stretched out in prayer, but no boon has been placed in them. His prayers seem to have miscarried, and have dropped into sighs. It seemed as though it were useless for him to plead further for help, and so he had taken to communing with his own heart. All through the dark night his self-scrutiny continued. It seemed as though God's own fingers were keeping his eyelids from shutting over his eyes, which glared into the mid-night.

10-20. The Psalm goes on to contrast Now with Then, the present with the past, the storm that was brooding heavily on the soul, with the blessed days of light and peace that had faded as the light fades off clouds. Could God cast off for ever? Could He permanently change?

O soul of man, when thou comest on times like this, remember the years of the right hand of God. The mind of the Psalmist travelled back to the Exodus. His language is borrowed from Ex. xv. In magnificent diction, God's march with His people through the depths of the Red Sea is depicted. We can hear the crash of the thunder, our eyes are blinded with the zigzag lightning; but, as the waters return unto their place, who shall trace God's footprints? Lord, make us, so long as Thou leadest as Shepherd, to follow as Thy flock!

TUESDAY, August 4. Psalm lxxviii.

A Psalm of Commemoration.

There is a close resemblance between this Psalm and Psalms cv.-cvii. It recites the history of the past as a warning to the new generation, that they in turn might pass it to their children (4, 6, &c).

The recurring phrases of vv. 12, 43, suggest a division of the Psalm, but there is no very clearly defined arrangement of thought. It is enough to see that the first part of the Psalm deals with the passage of the Red Sea and the wilderness, whilst the second begins with the plagues of Egypt, touches lightly on the story of the wilderness, passes to the early history of the Judges and Samuel, and ends with the call of David to occupy the throne.

The great message of the Psalm is the want of stedfastness, so lamentably evident in the chosen people, which was met by the unchanging love of God. "Their spirit was not stedfast with God" (8); they "turned back in the day of battle" (9); "they went on still to sin against Him" (17); "their heart was not stedfast" (37, R.V. marg.); "they turned again" (41); "they turned back, and dealt treacherously" (57). We read these charges with deep compunction of soul, for there is not one of them that does not apply to ourselves. We are verily guilty of similar inconstancy and failure in the midst of the most favourable circumstances, and in the face of a never-failing love. O heart of mine, why dost thou fail thy God so often, when He needs thy faithful response!

But His compassions failed not. Day and night He supplied their needs. Though His anger was kindled, yet He opened the doors of heaven, and gave them manna. Being full of compassion, He forgave. When their calamities became unbearable, He awaked as from sleep to their help. Again, how true is this description of the love which has suffered so much at our hands, and still loves us!

WEDNESDAY, August 5. Psalm lxxix.

A Litany of Sorrow for the Cause of God.

There is a close resemblance between this and Psalm lxxiv. It was evidently composed during the reigns of the kings, when the Temple was profaned by the entrance of the heathen into its holy courts.

1-4. What a vivid description of the ghastly sights that had wrung the patriot hearts! And next, God is reminded of the dishonour which is being done to Him. They are His inheritance, His holy Temple, the corpses of His servants that call for His interposition. Surely such scenes as these, in which His honour was so deeply implicated, must move Him to help! Let us see to it that men hate us only so far as our relation to God is in question; then our cause and His are one, and we can confidently count on Him.

5-8. The singer realizes that God's anger is the secret reason of all the calamities that had befallen, and that the heathen were simply God's method of chastisement. But He urges that in this they have greatly overstepped God's original purpose, and have gratified so needlessly their own passion and greed (Isa. x. 5, &c.).

9-13. Let us confess our sins, both for ourselves and our nation, and ask God to interpose for the honour of His own name. Lowly confession is always omnipotent with our God. It is only thus that we can get right with Him, so that His power may pass freely to our deliverance. The groaning of the captive and the greatness of His arm are indissolubly connected (11). The image of the flock with which the Psalm closes, is characteristic of Asaph's psalms. From each member of that redeemed flock let songs of adoring praise arise for ever.

THURSDAY, August 6. Psalm lxxx.

The Psalm of the Vine.

Some great national calamity gave its origin to this Psalm. The designation of the nation as Joseph, and the mention of the three tribes in verse 2, suggest that it is a prayer, which was offered by an inhabitant of Judah for the captive people of the ten tribes. If this is so, the Psalm dates from the period after the captivity of Israel, but before that of Judah.

The refrain (3, 7, 19) divides the Psalm into three parts. God is the Shepherd who shepherds all our life long (as the dying Jacob said). He sat throned on the cherubim which overshadowed the Ark, for the light of the Shekinah shone between their wings. In the opening verses He is compared to light, and is asked to shed forth His delivering help, as when the sun breaks out from behind a concealing cloud. In the old wilderness march, the three tribes mentioned here set forth third, that is, immediately in the rear of the Tabernacle; and this explains the use of the word, "before." The prayer, "Turn us," asks for a return of the glories of the ancient days, when God's people were united, victorious, and saved from their enemies. In our time, we may well ask that God would return to us our ancient love for the Sabbath, and those days of revival that swept over our country when Wesley, Whitefield, Brownlow North, Radcliffe, and Moody were His spokesmen.

The figure of the vine is wrought out with much beauty. The Exodus was its transplanting, the books of Joshua and Judges tell how the ground was cleared for it. In the days of Solomon, its boughs spread to the Sea and to the River. But the wall was thrown down, and the vine lay at the mercy of every passer-by and the wild things of the forest. We, too, know what a terrible loss it is when the Church no longer lives inside the ring-fence of God's care. Revive us; restore us; cause Thy face to shine!

FRIDAY, August 7. Psalm lxxxi.

The Psalm of the Feast.

On the first day of the month in which the Feast of Tabernacles occurred, the trumpets were blown, and this probably points the reference of v. 3. The heart of the people, freed from anxiety, was full of gladness and praise. There should be more exuberant joy and thanksgiving in all our services. Let not respect for decorum and high classical music detract from spontaneous congregational psalmody.

Presently (v. 6), the glad noise of the musical instruments is hushed, and God Himself speaks to impress the lessons of the past, and excite the thoughts and emotions befitting the feast. He calls to mind the compulsory labour of Egypt (6), the thunders of Sinai, the experiences of the desert-march; and pleads His yearning desire that His people would hearken to His voice, and, putting away strange gods, let Him fill their widely-opened mouth.

This is God's message to us. It is His one regret that we receive so little from Him, when He only needs our enlarged capacity. We might have a greater abundance with each passing day, if only we dared trust for it. But note, in vv. 11 and 12, the terrible result which accrues to those who shut their hearts against His pleading love.

If we are right with God, He becomes the enemy of our enemies. Whatever their strength and hatred, the proud billows break impotently on the protecting coral-reef of the Divine care.

SATURDAY, August 8. Psalm lxxxii.

A Psalm of Judgment.

God is represented as opening a great assize, and summoning the judges of His people to His bar. Messengers go forth to call together the nation, and the judges confront the Divine Judge. "The congregation of God" is clearly intended to represent the assembled people of Israel. Our Lord's reference to verse 6 (John x. 34-38) explains why the august title of gods is applied to human judges. They acted as His mouthpiece, and were clothed with His authority.

In verses 2-4 the supreme Judge upbraids His earthly representatives with their unfaithfulness to their high office, and calls them to right the wrong, and avenge the oppressed. Then (5) the Divine voice ceases, as though to give an opportunity for repentance, but there is no response. These men of light and leading swagger in their self-importance, and walk in the darkness of their self-esteem; but they are subjected to the inevitable doom of human life. They are stripped of their honours, and are left to take their chance with the common people, whose rights they had disregarded. Then the righteous Judge Himself judges and inherits the nations! All injustice and unrighteousness must ultimately pass away before the majesty and stability of His reign. F. B. M.

Students in Conference.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE tenth annual Conference of the British College Christian Union opened at Matlock Bank on July 22. This gathering of students is growing to such dimensions that great difficulty is being found in providing suitable accommodation for the delegates, especially for the women. The men are happily situated in a camp on the summit of the hill near the town reservoir. From this spot there is a magnificent view of the surrounding country along the picturesque and well-wooded valley of the Derwent, with the Heights of Abraham on the opposite side.

A large marquee, seating about 400 persons, has been erected near the camp. In the evenings especially the capacity of the tent is taxed to the utmost. This year the women are in the majority, and thrice a day they climb the steep ascent, being located in several Hydros lower down the hill. Fortunately a common meeting ground for tea and conversation has been secured for them in a large central hall.

The daily programme begins at 10 a.m. with a meeting for prayer, with a short devotional address. On the first three mornings this took the form of a Bible-reading, and Rev. W. B. Selbie, of Cambridge, gave expositions of a thoughtful and practical kind on 2 Cor. v. 14-31.

The second meeting in the morning is usually longer, and at this various questions relating to the work of Christian Unions are treated. Among those discussed are "The Raison d'Etre of a Christian Union," "Conditions of Success in Christian Union Work," "Missionary Study," "Study of Social Problems," "The Preparation of a Student Volunteer," "Science and Christianity."

This year it has been found possible to omit much discussion of details from the conference, as, following a commendable American precedent, the incoming presidents and secretaries assembled a day earlier to go over technical points of their work. The result of this experiment has been found satisfactory, and many who were quite new to their duties have received valuable hints for the work of the coming year. One of the chief advantages of the summer conference is that it makes possible an interchange of experience; and Unions where strong and effective work has been done, are able to assist others which have found difficulty in holding their ground.

HOW THE MOVEMENT HAS SPREAD.

Over 110 British universities and colleges are now represented in the movement, and this number does not include some forty theological colleges which are embraced in a special department. Through the World's Student Christian Federation, the British movement is linked to a number of other national movements in the colonies, the United States, several Continental centres, India, China, and Japan. Over 80,000 students are now in this Federation—a force rich in the promise of a great spiritual harvest in the centres of education throughout the world, and through the Student Volunteer movement, already doing much to provide workers in the great and needy countries of heathendom. In our own country, over 2,000 students have joined the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, and of these more than 800 are already at work in the foreign field.

The afternoons of the Conference are left free for recreation and social intercourse. Some make excursions into the surrounding country, which is rich in many and varied interests. Haddon Hall and Chatsworth are within easy reach, and there is much to be explored in the immediate vicinity.

Many prefer to seek the solitude of the hills and meditate over the messages received, seeking to be alone with God, that His truth may be assimilated and impressed in quiet and restful communion. Special emphasis is laid on the need for this individual waiting upon God. In past years it is these opportunities for private prayer which have led to crises in many souls, and not seldom to the entire consecration of the life to the purposes of God.

The evening meeting is the centre of special interest. Rev. John Kelman, of Edinburgh, whose work among students is so well known in the north, has spoken twice at these meetings. His personality is striking, and he has the gift of presenting truth in a singularly fresh and unconventional manner. In dealing with the idea of sin, he took the idea of lawlessness as one of its characteristic aspects. Sin is a breach of nature's laws—a quarrel with nature; but the sinner soon finds out that these laws are real, that nature is inexorable, and that punishment is sure and certain. It is a breach of judicial law, of an external commandment involving the penalties of condemnation. It is a breach of the law of reason—a missing of the mark, foolishness, failure. But, above all, sin is a breach of the law of God. We can do nothing for it ourselves. Let us leave our sin with Christ, and set our face to the future. God offers us an open door, a clean sheet on which to write life's story, and through Christ we may be as if the past had never been.

Not the least helpful feature of the conference is that the various speakers usually spend some days at it, and are always accessible to students who need counsel or help.

While the Conference is not exclusively missionary in character, opportunity is always found to bring the subject of prominently before the attention of the delegates. Among the meetings so far there have been addresses on the watchword of the S.V.M.U.—"The Evangelization of the World in this Generation." This is to be followed by a discussion later on, with a view to leading to a clearer perception of its meaning and the great issues involved. Rev. D. Butler reminded us of the great movements originated by Augustine, Gregory, St. Bernard, St. Francis, Luther, and Wesley. All these had their watchwords. The same was true of the French Revolution and of modern Imperialism. Just as the Crusaders roused Europe by their enthusiasm to rescue the tomb of the Saviour, so the world needed to-day such a movement as the S.V.M.U., with its inspiring watchword, to stir up the Church to its duty towards the unevangelized world. If only the Movement remains Christo-centric, rooted and grounded in Christ, it will be in the line of all the great movements which have influenced European history. It must also have a clear perception of the world's need—the world which needs to be at peace with God.

Among those who have been in camp are several returned student volunteers: Mr. A. G. Fraser, of Uganda; Mr. J. H. Oldham, Lahore; Mr. Oliver McCowen, Rangoon; Rev. J. H. McLean, Rev. R. McCheyne Patterson. The possibilities of the great movement among Christian students can hardly fail to strike the thoughtful student of modern times. The men and women in the colleges to-day will be the leaders of the future. The colleges have been well called the strategic point in the world's conquest, and the more this movement is supported by the sympathy and prayers of Christian people generally, the sooner will its great ideals be translated into achievements, and its marvellous possibilities become realised facts.

Mr. and Mrs. Kirlew's Work Among Boys.—Many Christian friends are familiar with the work which Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Kirlew have carried on for some years at Preston. From time to time encouragement comes to them by visits from boys whom they have helped into positions of usefulness in God's service. One of these recently visited Preston. He is an ordained minister in the Baptist Church. Beginning life as a newsboy, in addition to poverty he had to fight against the disadvantage of total blindness; but pluck and perseverance, with a little help from friends, brought him through college. Letters lately received from other "Old Boys" at work for God in Newfoundland, the States, and Canada tell of the Lord's seal upon earnest labour. Mr. and Mrs. Kirlew have three Armenian boys in their care, preparing if the way opens for missionary work. Their address is—Iaxal Mount, North Cliff Street, Preston.

Among Jews in Calcutta.

The following particulars of the work of Mrs. Lennard, Y.W.C.A. Home, 31, Free School Street, among Jews in Calcutta, have been gathered from her journal by Rev. A. W. Young.

AMONG the wealthy Jews are to be found a few orthodox individuals; but many belong to the so-called "reformed Jews" who have thrown over their allegiance to the Mosaic Law. The older people are more orthodox, the younger generation is careless and indifferent, fond of dress, and much addicted to the reading of trashy novels. Invitations may be given; but, as a general rule, they are chary of entering Christian homes, lest they should be expected to do homage to a crucifix, image, or picture of Jesus. Despite the difficulties in the way, Mrs. Lennard has secured admittance into several of these well-to-do families. One of the rich young Jewesses has not only been delighted to have the New Testament read to her, but has invited her friends to have a regular Bible-reading with hymns and prayer.

Many of the middle-class Jews, though nominally orthodox and careful to observe the feasts, &c., are wofully ignorant of the deep religious spirit underlying the Law's observances, and traverse it at many points. As a rule, Mrs. Lennard is received among them very cordially. Visits are made chiefly on Saturday, when all the members of the family are at home. The Jewish Sabbath is strictly observed, the older people keeping the younger ones up to the mark in this respect. The old men and women keep somewhat apart and in the background, while their sons and daughters surround the teacher; and, when the name of Jesus is mentioned, a shadow on the wall sometimes betrays the uplifted deprecating finger, yet the invitation to repeat the visit is generally made. Regular Bible-readings are held with certain families. In one there are two grown-up boys, a daughter, and younger children. One of the youths, eighteen years of age, was heard to say: "Mother, dear, I want to be a preacher of the truth. Fear not. If I do, the Lord will bless us with a blessing greater than riches can give us." Another family, being diligent searchers of the Scriptures, became convinced that the Messiah must have come. They sought help from more learned Jews, but obtained no satisfaction, and in their distress sought help from the missionary.

PLEADING FOR THEIR DAUGHTERS.

The poor Jews are chiefly emigrants from Jerusalem, Constantinople, and Egypt. They live in the slums, and are illiterate and ignorant to a degree. The stories Mrs. Lennard tells of her experience among this class of people are very piteous. Certain of the parents do seem to realize the terrible condition in which they and their children are, and would welcome any organization which would rescue their girls from the moral danger which immediately surrounds them. Again and again do they say: "Take our girls away. Provide them with a home, teach them."

An endeavour is made to reach and reclaim the many Jewesses who are living lives of immorality. The ease with which a Jew can obtain a divorce is well known, and this fact leaves many of the innocent and beautiful young Jewesses of the Continent an especial prey to wicked and designing men. In all good faith marriage is consummated, and thereafter the journey is taken to cities of the East. When there, wives are divorced upon some trumped-up charge, or are coolly deserted; while the so-called husbands, really agents, make off to repeat their nefarious practice.

To win their confidence Mrs. Lennard proposes to open and furnish a room in the district where these women live. Tea and refreshments will be provided, also journals and papers, and by entertainments, addresses, and lectures, she hopes to win their confidence and establish a base from which to do definite evangelistic work. A gift from a lady in England makes it possible to anticipate at least a six months' experiment without anxiety, and, as soon as a suitable worker can be found and a room be rented, this scheme will take a practical shape.

Methodists in Conference.

MEETINGS AT CAMBORNE.

BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

THE Wesleyan ministers and laymen assembled in the Representative Session of the Conference at Camborne, have had a busy week. Cornwall is famous for its Methodism, and great public interest has been taken locally in the Methodist parliament. Many questions of deep interest, not only to Methodists, but to all lovers of Evangelical truth and of religious progress have been discussed during the week.

Rev. MARSHALL HARTLEY, the new president of the Conference, in his opening address, expressed his gratitude for the missionary awakening which had marked the Methodist church during the year. He trusted the movement was only in its infancy, and that Methodism would not be content until it had re-captured the position it once held among the missionary churches of the country. He believed that the spirituality of the church would be in ratio to their zeal in endeavouring to carry the Bread of Life to the Christless nations far away. He had heard of someone who complained of the everlasting moan of the Mission House. It was and the moan of the Master who saw them so often apathetic about the state of the world, and so often indifferent to the pleadings of His love.

In regard to the education question, the president said the feeling against the action of the Government was very strong, but they must not recklessly abandon their own schools. The Education Act satisfied nobody. It met with their uncompromising hostility, and must be amended. But to give up their schools, in which no offensive formularies were taught, would be to play into the hands of the sacerdotalists.

The Conference was warned of the danger of any attempt to make the Methodist Church the ally of a particular political party. He quoted with approval the saying of John Wesley, "We break with no man for his opinions. We think and let think." Political differences ought not to be allowed to hamper the union of spiritual forces on the common ground on which as Methodists they loved to work. The question was sometimes raised whether there was

A FUTURE FOR METHODISM.

They have a specific work to do in spreading Scriptural holiness through the land. It was said the nation wanted soldiers to meet their enemies from without, but they believed it wanted soldiers of Christ to defend them from the enemies within. In the great army of the King, the Methodist regiment must not be wanting.

The president closed a timely address by warning his brethren against trusting in second causes. There was a danger in the development of organization, and the multiplication of agencies, of removing God out of their sight. With earnestness Mr. Hartley declared they were as dependent upon God, with all their complex machinery, as was the early Methodist, who faced the crowd upon the common with no other equipment than the Bible in his hand and his prevalence in prayer. Their church must keep very close to God in the devotion of the individual members of the church, and especially of the ministers, if it was to be a prevailing church. The remedy for the immorality and godlessness around was to be found in as they preached and lived it. Great social questions were waiting for settlement to-day, and he wanted every member of the Conference to come into real personal relation with Jesus Christ, so that they might go back to their circuits so charged with holy fire that they would become a great power for good.

The deepest interest was taken in the discussion on the education question, especially in its bearing upon the continuance and management of the Wesleyan day-schools. The position of the Wesleyan Conference in this matter is unique, as the Wesleyan Methodists alone among the Free Churches conduct day-schools bearing the denominational name, but free from all sectarian influences. Mr. R. W. PERKS, M.P., moved a long series of comprehensive resolutions. He carried the Conference with him, with practical unanimity, in appealing to the Government to repeal or materially to amend the Education Act, so as to secure a national system of education under complete public control and free from ecclesiastical tests. But on the proposal to transfer Wesleyan schools to the educational authorities, the majority voted that they should be retained until the Education Act was amended in accordance with the principles repeatedly affirmed by the Conference.

"PASSIVE RESISTANCE."

A resolution was passed by 348 votes for, to 37 against, to the effect that while expressing no opinion on the Passive Resistance movement, the Conference expressed its profound sympathy with many men and women who had deemed it to be their duty as Christian citizens to resist by lawful means the payment of compulsory education rates. The attention of His Majesty's advisers was called to the great and growing gravity of this movement, and it was represented that in the interests of civil order and domestic peace it was essential that heed should be paid to the conscientious convictions of millions of the King's loyal subjects.

Rev. J. SCOTT LIDGETT contended that the action of the Government had made impossible the old ideal of the existence side by side of a voluntary system, and a national system of education. He urged the Conference should face facts, and remodel their policy to meet new circumstances. He believed that those who prolonged this controversy were endangering Biblical instruction of any kind in the schools.

On the other side, Sir GEORGE SMITH passionately pleaded that their Methodist educational institution should not be given up. The net result of a long and animated discussion was a united protest against the Government policy in education, and the expression of sympathy with the "passive resisters," coupled with the decision to continue the Wesleyan day-schools under existing circumstances.

THE CAUSE OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

occupied the Conference during two of its sessions. It was felt in the conversations that the tide of missionary enthusiasm was distinctly rising. Missionary conventions are to be held in the districts not yet visited, and a simultaneous canvass of seatholders and adherents is to be made in order to secure a large increase of missionary income. The week ending March 26 will be observed as one of intercession for foreign missions. In view of the centenary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Conference recorded its deep sense of the great service rendered by the Society to Christianity in general, and to Christian missions in particular. Rev. J. H. RITSON, a member of the Conference, who is also one of the secretaries of the Bible Society, gave a deeply interesting address, in which he dealt with some of the achievements and aims of this noble Society. On the motion of Dr. H. J. POPE, it was decided that March 9 should be recognized throughout the circuits of Methodism as Bible Sunday, and that collections should be made universally in aid of the Bible Society.

A GENEROUS OFFER.

While missionary affairs were under consideration, Mr. JOSEPH RANK, of Hull, made the munificent offer that he would himself be responsible for the support of six missionaries, at the rate of £300 a year, if they could find in his district six men who would be responsible for six others. Stirring addresses were given by Revs. Wm. Perkins, W. H. Findlay, Charles Bone (of China), Owen Watkins (the pioneer of Wesleyan missions in the Transvaal), and others.

An influential deputation from the Free Churches was received by the Conference. Mr. W. J. NICHOLLS, J.P., president of the West Cornwall Federation of Free Churches, in eloquent terms welcomed the Conference, and Rev. J. G. STEVENSON, of Newquay, gave a very happy speech. He agreed with what had been said about the unwisdom of pinning their faith to the coat-tails of party politicians. Indeed, some of these so often turned their coats that such a process would be neither dignified nor convenient. It must be one of their aims to crystallize the spirit of Christianity in the statute books of England.

Mr. JOHN BARNSLEY, of Birmingham, replying on behalf of the Conference, said they rejoiced that a great many of their sectional differences had been smoothed away. They were united in their aim, and in their purposes, and theirs was a common loyalty to the fundamental truths of Jesus Christ.

The cause of Methodist Union was advanced by the decision to welcome representatives of the other Methodist Conferences to that of the parent Church; and to send twelve members to join a committee representing four of the other Methodist Churches in an inquiry into the principles and conditions of the Churches desiring union.

EVANGELISTIC EFFORT.

The conversation on the Work of God gave rise to several contributions of deep interest. Mr. CHARLES PEARSON, of Liverpool, traced his conversion to the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. He directed attention to the approaching visit of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, and spoke of the wonderful movement in Melbourne. He felt it desirable that they should inform the Methodist people of the great work which was to be carried on by those evangelists during this winter. He besought the prayers of the Conference for the movement which begins in Liverpool in September. Rev. C. ENSOR WALTERS, the new superintendent of the West London Mission, paid a warm tribute to the influence and character of Hugh Price Hughes, and dwelt upon some of the qualities which led Mr. Hughes to be so successful an evangelist. Amongst them was his sense of the exceeding sinfulness of sin, his power in prayer, his absolute belief in the living Christ, his enthusiasm and courage. Mr. Walters urged upon his brethren the importance of open-air preaching. He had discovered that a man could neither read nor recite sermons in the open air. They must take their best sermons, and they would soon find if they were their best, for if their sermons did not "go," the congregation would.

Rev. SAMUEL CHADWICK, the Leeds missioner, supported the plea for open-air preaching, and said that ability for this work came by practice. There was no possibility of capturing the masses for Christ except by coming out from the sanctuaries to the people. They would not reach the masses by accommodating their services to the tastes of the masses. They must be true to the old type of Methodism of their fathers, if they were to win the democracy for Christ.

THE DRINK QUESTION.

Rev. THOS. CHAMPNESS once more brought forward his resolution asking the Conference to condemn the nomination for office in the church of any person directly engaged in the liquor traffic. The Conference re-affirmed the resolutions passed several years ago in which it declined to impose disabilities upon those who sell drink which would not apply to those who buy and use it, or to interfere with the rights of circuit authorities in the election of church officers But the Conference recommended the Methodis people to keep themselves free from complicity with a traffic the results of which are so injurious to the interests of religion, morality, and social life. Mr. Champness, who was the founder of the "Joyful News" Mission, was heartily thanked on his retirement. Mr. Perks said that glorious irregularities had been the salvation of Methodism. Mr. Champness commended his successor, Rev. Thomas Cook, to the affection and support of the Methodist people.

Rev. Marshall Hartley.

PRESIDENT OF THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

REV. MARSHALL HARTLEY, who was designated a year ago as the President of the Wesleyan Conference of 1903, has been elected by the Legal Conference assembled in the Wesley Chapel, Camborne, to this position of responsibility and honour.

The last three Wesleyan presidents have all been taken from the ranks of ministers engaged in the important work of training young men for the ministry. Another department of service, second to none in importance, is recognized by the election of Mr. Marshall Hartley, namely, the foreign missionary work of the Church. Mr. Hartley is not only one of the secretaries of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society, but his protracted visits to the mission fields of India, China, Ceylon, and more recently South Africa, have further intensified his own missionary zeal, and brought him into touch with missionary problems, thus deepening his sympathy with the labourers on the high places of the field. His fervent and impressive appeal at the last Conference in favour of a forward movement in Methodist Foreign Missions will not soon be forgotten. There has been a cheering response to the lead of the missionary committee. The Conventions on Foreign Missions during the year have deepened the spirituality and zeal of that church, and an expanding income has accompanied the revival of interest.

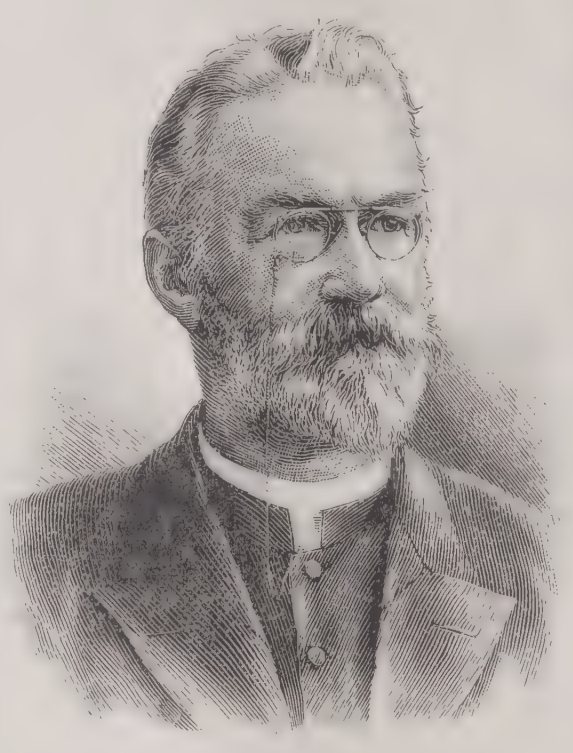
The subject of our sketch is a son of the manse. His father, the late Rev. John Hartley, for more than half-a-century rendered distinguished service to Methodism in some of the foremost circuits of the Connexion, and in the Handsworth College, of which he was in his later years governor. Two sons of this venerated minister followed in their father's footsteps, and entered the Methodist ministry. The eldest son, Rev. T. Galland Hartley, has filled the position of chairman of the Macclesfield and of the Scotland Districts, but the younger has outstripped the elder, and in his fifty-eighth year receives the highest honour his brethren have it in their power to bestow.

Born on January 26, 1846, at Stamford Hill, when his father was one of the ministers of the Islington Circuit, Mr. Marshall Hartley was educated at the Woodhouse Grove School, near Leeds, which in those days was one of the schools of the sons of the prophets.

He then entered into business life, and spent some years in the office of Mr. F. B. Grotrian, a shipowner at Hull. Doubtless this early business training was of the greatest value to the future master of ecclesiastical affairs. Few ministers have developed such faculties for the punctual, precise, and effective discharge of multifarious matters of business as Mr. Marshall Hartley. In his youthful days, the coming secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society gave himself heartily to the work of advocacy of foreign missions, and found employment for his abilities in the service of Christ as a Sunday-school teacher and local preacher.

In 1867 he was accepted as a candidate for the ministry, and sent to Richmond College. After one year's training he gave such evidence of progress in theological and literary study that he was appointed assistant tutor, and for four years he helped in the work of training young men for the work of the ministry.

His first circuit appointment was Bromley, which was followed by the full term of three years' service in each of the following important circuits:—Sheffield (Norfolk Street), Bradford (Kirkgate), Halifax (St. John's), and London (Hackney). His term in his next circuit, Bolton (Park Street), one of the first in Lancashire, was cut short by his appointment to the secretariat of the Foreign Missionary Society. For the last fifteen years Mr. Hartley has toiled with great devotion and unremitting energy in the cause which is very dear to his heart. Some of the greatest men whom God has given to Methodism have served at the Mission House, including ecclesiastical leaders like Dr. Bunting and Dr. Osborn, famous missionaries like William Arthur and Ebenezer E. Jenkins (the latter happily spared to the Church); the erudite theologian, Richard Watson; and the incomparable orator, William Morley Punshon; but none of these distinguished men, however brilliant their gifts, have served the missionary cause with a more self-denying zeal than has Marshall Hartley. His election will cause a thrill of pleasure in many a lonely missionary's home.



REV. MARSHALL HARTLEY.

From photograph by Mr. G. Ridsdale Cleare, Lower Clapton Road, N.E.

In 1895 Mr. Hartley was elected secretary of the Conference, in succession to Dr. David J. Waller, who was raised to the presidential chair. For the last eight years Mr. Hartley has discharged with conspicuous ability the duties of this important office. He is no novice, therefore, in regard to conference procedure, having been the adviser of a succession of presidents. His discharge of business is characterized by rapidity, cheerfulness, and precision. He is one of the chief authorities on all matters of Methodist law and order. It may be safely prophesied that, as the presiding officer of a great legislative assembly, he will make a model moderator.

In the new president there is a happy combination of business capacity and fervent zeal. His soul is not bound by the red-tape of official duty. His enthusiastic devotion to the missionary cause flames out in burning speech. His addresses on missionary topics are full of information, and his rousing appeals are characterized by the old-fashioned Methodist fire. It remains to be said that Mr. Hartley is one of the most brotherly of men. The place he has won in the hearts of ministers and people alike may be gauged from the fact that to both he is known in familiar speech as Marshall Hartley. Mr. Hartley is a comparatively youthful president. We may well pray that he may be spared for many years to lead the Methodist Church in the great work of preaching the Gospel to the heathen.

"Twentieth Century Papers."

AMONG the most useful publications of our day in the re-statement of old truths and the exposure of persistent errors, we should place a very attractive series bearing the general title "Twentieth Century Papers on Great Questions of the Day." (1s. each. Shaw.) Already three Papers have appeared; and having regard to their internal excellence, supported by an outward form that is eminently suitable, we commend them cordially to such as are jealous for the truth, and desirous of helping in the dissemination of sound and instructive antidotes to ancient and modern errors.

JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH.

First comes JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH. By H. C. G. Moule, D.D., Bishop of Durham. It is a noble essay—touching the deep things of God, supplying food for thought, and speaking to the spiritual man. The treatment is broad, the language chaste. It is marvellous what a wealth of teaching has been compressed into this compact work; and the statement of doctrine is attended by illustrative quotations, presented in the manner of which the distinguished author is a master.

HEBREW CRITICISM.

The second book of the series is HEBREW CRITICISM: Its Bearing on the Integrity of Scripture. By R. B. Girdlestone, M.A., Hon. Canon of Christ Church. Here again we have multum in parvo. Modern controversies as to the books of the Old Testament are reviewed, and an answer is given to many of the cavillings of unbelieving criticism. Such a summary as this of the history of the Hebrew canon, and such an exhibition of the many facts and phenomena relating to the various aspects of the subject, will be welcome to many who cannot command the time for more extended study. Canon Girdlestone's work is characterized by much care and research; and to some the evidence which he adduces to show the antiquity of the Old Testament books will doubtless come with the freshness of novelty.

APOSTOLICAL SUCCESSION.

The latest issue of the series is APOSTOLICAL SUCCESSION: Considered in the Light of the Facts of the History of the Primitive Church. By W. Hay M. H. Aitken, M.A., Canon of Norwich. There is no need to enlarge upon the mischief wrought by the doctrine of Apostolical Succession. It is a pleasure to note the ease with which the author of this paper throws light upon the unwholesome conceit. As to the Episcopal office, it is shown, to begin with, that in the sense in which it is now used, the term cannot be traced beyond the second and third centuries of our era. It is an ecclesiastical creation, not an ordinance of revelation; as Jerome is allowed to explain on the title page of Canon Aitken's booklet: "When afterwards one presbyter was elected, that he might be placed over the rest, this was done as a remedy against schism, that each man might not drag to himself, and so break up the Church of Christ." Maintaining further that the Episcopate is in no way the lineal descendant of the Apostolate, Canon Aitken examines the position occupied by Timothy and Titus, concluding that there is absolutely nothing to prove that either of them was a bishop in the now recognised sense of the word. The pages evince on the part of their esteemed author an intimate knowledge of the literature of the subject, and a large-hearted appreciation of Christian doctrine and experience.

We understand that this series is the result of a suggestion made at the Islington Conference last year. They are "Tracts for the Times" along sound lines, and designed to militate against the pernicious influence of the original "Tracts"; also to give an effective answer to the reckless statements of higher critics.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

[BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONERS.]

THIS convocation of Christian people and seekers after sanctification in God's truth came to an end in the midst of much blessing. The thousands that gathered have dispersed, many of them returning to their homes in a peace not known before. Speakers and teachers have added to their life experience, and missionaries and other workers have, in many cases, come into the enjoyment of new powers of service. More than that, large numbers of young men and women with life's opportunities still engaging their hearts, have committed themselves to God's gracious leading. Having declared themselves willing to go anywhere and do anything in work for the Lord, they are now awaiting the word of guidance to arise and go forth in the service of the King.

The meetings were very largely attended. In the course of the week several thousand people were added to the ordinary population of the town, and they assembled day by day in about equal numbers in the tents in Eskin Street and Skiddaw Street. The teaching was for the most part of the type that has come to be known as "Convention doctrine"; but the addresses of some of the best-known speakers showed a refreshing concern to preach a "full-orbed" Gospel. For example, particular care was shown by Prebendary Webb-Peploe to place due emphasis upon Advent truth; the relation of Holiness teaching to the Blessed Hope is so clear in Holy Scripture that it is by no means safe to avert our eyes from the upward gaze—"Looking for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Moreover, in these days of "contempt of God's Holy Word and commandment," it is well that champions of righteousness and true holiness should speak with no uncertain sound regarding the Sacred Scriptures and their claims upon Christian confidence. Mr. Webb-Peploe was also heroic in this line of teaching, as also were Dr. John Smith and Rev. Hubert Brooke. Canon Hay Aitken likewise spoke strongly on the place of Divine revelation, when he urged that we must judge everything by the Word. "The standard of sin is not to be found in man's conscience, but in the judgment of God." If that is so, how dependent we are upon inspiration for a disclosure of God's mind regarding Holiness!

THE NEW GENERATION.

While it was a great joy to meet once more those who have attended the Convention many times, it was pleasing to see a host of young people, coming under the heading of "first-attenders." Among the elders were friends who had been present twenty times and more; men and women who had seen and heard teachers of bygone days—Canon Battersby, Henry Bowker, Charles Fox, and George Macgregor. Their recollections were very precious, and how they treasure them is apparent from the glow that accompanies their description of Convention gatherings of the seventies and eighties. The new comers include many who are now looking forward. Having heard of the stimulus ministered by the Convention to earnest workers in the past, they are longing for the enrichment of coming years. With the blessing of God upon Scripture study, these will have no need to wait for instruction in the Divine will. Let them "search the Scriptures" with all diligence, and so prepare for the illumination of such Convention opportunities as God may graciously have in store for them.

The increasing attendance of young men year by year has called for special provision for their particular needs. Meetings were held in the New Tent after Mr. Brooke's Bible Readings, and they were largely attended. The addresses were given by ministers whose appreciation of the temptations which come to youth was accompanied by an intense sympathy, combined with a yearning desire to point out the only source of deliverance. Time after time the speakers were encouraged by evidences that their messages were Divinely directed; and in many hearts a determination was awakened to test the freedom from the law of sin and death which is the outcome of the Spirit's indwelling. Meetings for girls were held each day in the Lecture Hall, addresses being delivered by a number of ladies.

THE AFTER-MEETINGS.

The after-meetings were times of much heart-searching. The measures adopted to assist decision on the part of such as desired a fuller realization of the power of God, both in personal life and daily service, were not helpful to all alike. It could not be expected that all varieties of temperament would yield to one form of appeal, however well calculated to guide the perplexed and point the way of light and liberty to the weary and wandering. Yet in the course of these solemn moments, often as many as twenty or thirty signified their determination to cease from self and yield all things to Christ in the light of the truth which had dawned upon their souls.

It fell to the second speaker at the evening meetings to plead for a demonstration on the part of any who were convinced that they had not realized the full meaning of consecration, and were prepared to accept the leading of God's Holy Spirit. Young and old alike were among those who thus showed a desire to have everything put right in their lives—to be in the hands of God for the daily round and the special demands of duty—to be in the perpetual enjoyment of God Himself. And how many and fervent were the prayers that went up that these may be abundantly blessed, and "satisfied with the favour of the Lord!"

The good fellowship of the week will live in many hearts as one of the great blessings of the Convention. In the quiet lodging house, and in the more animated circles of the hotels and boarding houses, Christian men and women enjoyed sweet communion. Sometimes there was an interesting comparison of notes regarding the various efforts; but it was rare that one came across words of criticism or disparagement. When the Praise Meeting convened on Saturday morning, many were waiting to pour out their hearts in grateful acknowledgment of God's goodness. In the silence of the chamber, men and women whom God had visited with new light and joy had already been praising Him; hence the gathering definitely called for the purpose, by no means exhausted their heart's devotion.

ABSENT FRIENDS.

The absence from the platform this year of one or two whose names have been inseparably associated with Keswick, formed the subject of occasional remark and inquiry. It was with mingled feelings that the congregation in the new tent on Friday morning listened to a message from Dr. Handley Moule, Bishop of Durham (who was detained on account of the serious illness of his daughter), which was read by Rev. Hubert Brooke. "My heart to-day," wrote Dr. Moule, "is full of the thought of Keswick, and I feel constrained to tell you how my love and prayers and deepest, most earnest, and longing sympathies are with you all. God's Providence has been, I think, clear for my foregoing the happiness and refreshment of being with you this year, but He knows that it is from no chilling of the heart towards that dear and sacred place and its work. I shall be constantly following the work through the week in thought and supplication. May a very, very great blessing be showered upon both speakers and hearers, and 'may some droppings fall on me.' I don't think Keswick, in its true message under the Lord's blessing was ever so much needed. The tremendous forces of evil round us, above all a deadly indifference to revealed truth and the revealed will of God, call for just that strength in the believing Church which comes alike to churches and persons only through faith in surrender towards the Saviour and Master as the Spirit brings Him into every heart to dwell. Oh, may our Keswick friends so see Him this year as to go back to life in homes, professions, ministries, everything, possessed afresh by Him, to glorify Him in the utmost reality in humble love and dutiful consistency of walk, following those beloved friends who have gone over the river a little in advance of us and whom we long for so much." Rev. F. S. Webster and others sent messages.

Following Christ.

By Rev. W. DARLOW SARJEANT.

He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness (John viii. 12).

Here we have a summary of the Christian life—a statement of the duty, joy, sacrifice, and reward of serving Christ. Let us look at a few traits of Him, and His call upon us to follow Him.

First of all, Christ's life was one of sanctification, or Consecration. The Lord consecrated the whole of His life to the will of His Father. Recall the scene at Sychar's well. After the conversation with the woman of Samaria His disciples brought meat which they had been to the city to buy; but they found Him satisfied (John iv. 34). To bring a soul from darkness to the marvellous light of God brings its own satisfaction, and makes one for the time being independent of material sustenance. Jesus said, "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me, and to finish His work." That is consecration—sanctification. In John v. 30 you find the same teaching, "I seek not My own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." He never wavered in the whole of His life from that intention; and looking back on the life which He lived He said, "I have glorified Thee on the earth." That was the mastering idea of Christ's life on earth, and He says: "He that followeth Me (in consecration) shall not walk in darkness." Christian life needs purpose, resolution, definition of object. Many Christians seem to live an objectless life—to have no object in harmony with Christian judgment, and which satisfies Christian aspiration. The Christian life wants focus of intention and mark. What is your focus? St. Paul said, "This one thing I do." Jesus Christ said, "I have one goal, every hour and every day, to do the will of My Father."

Take another trait. The life of Christ was a life of Humiliation. Turn to Philippians ii. 6-8, and see how great was the humiliation. Christ "made Himself of no reputation"—emptied Himself of the quality and form of God. He was ever going lower—to shame and contempt, to destitution and betrayal, to desolation and to the death of the cross. Only by going down can you ascend; thus you will get nearer to God and to men. Every step downward may be one of ascending. You say your life wants influence, peace, power. Are you low enough? It is only on the lowest ground that you can find the anointing you desire.

Further, the life of Christ was one of intense Sympathy. Our Lord entered fully into the sorrows and joys of other people. He wept with those who wept, and rejoiced with those who rejoiced—which is a still harder thing. He had "a heart at leisure from itself to soothe and sympathize"—and sympathy kills self. This was the secret of His influence, the basis of His power. Think less of yourself, less of your circumstances, and then you will have a larger sphere for spiritual life and service on every side. The more the self-life dies, the more will love live! Jesus Christ had no self-life.

Oh, hide this self from me, that I
No more, but Christ in me, may live!

Then Christ's life was one of Labour. No lazy Christian can be a holy Christian—a true disciple of Jesus Christ. Christ never played with life; He was hard at work every hour of every day, and night as well as day. Frequently he found no time in which to take food. In public and in private He was always on the full stretch. He said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." He turned the very curse of life into blessing. Oh the privilege of following Him! It is essential to holy living, and to holy dying; yea, essential to eternal bliss. "Whether we live, we live to the Lord; whether we die, we die unto the Lord; whether we live therefore or die, we are the Lord's."

Then it was a life of Love—always love. In studying the life of Christ, it seems as though life and love were the same thing. He lived to love; He loved the man who was lying on His bosom; He loved the whole twelve; He loved the multitude. His love flowed out to all, and even Judas, in the very darkness of his sin, He addressed as "friend." He loved his murderers, and prayed, "Father, forgive them!" Boundless and unquenchable love! Will you follow Him? Not with a dreamy love to be talked about, but a conquering love that shall go out in compassion for others; a love that will breathe in the home, show itself in the church, appear in business life, and be manifested to the unlovely! You say that is the very thing you want. It is the very thing the Holy Ghost will shed abroad in your heart.

O Love Divine, how sweet Thou art,
When shall I find my willing heart
All taken up by Thee?

You say, Christ was God, and that makes a difference. In this He was man; He had emptied Himself of the quality of God, and foregone the immunities and prerogatives of the Godhead. Under the anointing of the Holy Spirit, we may be indwelt by love.

"If any man follow Me, he shall not walk in darkness." There is a condition to every promise of God. We have considered the condition; now the promise. You say your life wants light and brightness. You may have it You want more light in your mind, more distinctness in your faith, more soul in your labour, more hope in your spirit? Follow Him. What then? You shall not walk in darkness. Here is sunshine for you—heart and spirit; here is the light of life. There is a relation between light and life; as these decline, the soul pines, sickens, decays, and dies. Everlasting darkness is everlasting death. In the work of creation light came first; in the very happiness of heaven light appears—"The Lamb is the light thereof." In the life of to-day all depends upon the nearness of your following Christ. Follow closely, and it will be perfect day; follow at a distance, and it will mean shadow and darkness. "Shall not walk in darkness; but shall have the light of life!"

What is this? First of all it is the full sense of Pardon. How many Christian men and women think that a full sense of forgiveness cannot be theirs this side of death! Yet it is part of the light of life. The burden of unforgiven sin is darkness to the spirit. It means more than that—Spiritual Illumination. Follow Christ, and your Bible will be a speaking book. It also means Fellowship. Jesus died to live, and He lives to save; and He saves to bring His people into communion with Himself. Moreover, it means Guidance — absolute guidance. You want to know where to go and what to do. "You shall not walk in darkness." The light which Christ gives is also the light of indwelling—The Spirit of Revelation. And this is a light that never grows dim and never goes out.

The late Archbishop Thomson, visiting a sick woman who had been in the habit of leading the singing in a village chapel, asked her to sing him one of her favourite hymns. Though old and weary, she ventured, and began:—

My God, the spring of all my joys,
The life of my delight,
The glory of my brightest days,
The comfort of my night.

Placing her bony hand on the hand of the archbishop, she said, "It is true, my lord." Beginning the second verse—"In darkest shades, if Thou appear," emotion choked her utterance, as she said: "Fourteen years ago I buried my husband; then I had two sons, the eldest of whom died seven years later, and the youngest three years after that. I have had sorrow upon sorrow, difficulty upon difficulty; but it is true, IT IS TRUE:—

In darkest shades if thou appear,
My dawning is begun;
Thou art my soul's bright morning star,
And Thou my rising sun."

God's Way of Pardon.

Isa. lv. 6-13.

By Rev. HUBERT BROOKE.

When we try to measure the Divine mind by human standards, we never fail to find the truth contained in verse 8 of this chapter, "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord."

Naturally and normally, God's thoughts are unlike ours. They are set forth as being infinitely higher (v. 9), far more gracious and free than we had expected, and more certain than we had believed (10, 11), having an issue of triumph (12), and possessing a mighty transforming power (13). But perhaps there is no single point at which the difference between the thoughts of God and man comes out more clearly than in verse 7, where the wicked and unrighteous man is called upon to forsake his thoughts and "return unto the Lord, and He will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon."

I want us to consider specially the subject of pardon, because without that foundation we cannot erect the structure which we are here to build. We need to do the same as the wheel-tapper on the railway—test the foundations on which we are running, and see that they are safe and solid; we must test the wonderful foundation on which a life of holiness can stand, to know what is God's way of pardon for all those who desire to believe on Him. We think of His title as given in Micah vii. 18, "Who is a God like unto Thee that pardoneth iniquity?" and Neh. ix. 17—"Thou art a God ready to pardon"—indicates His character. In 1 John i. 9 we find He is ready to pardon all who confess their sins, and to cleanse from all unrighteousness. His title, nature, and work, are bound up with pardon, and we cannot know God until we have experienced the forgiveness of sins.

WHAT BECOMES OF FORGIVEN SIN?

You will notice that in Isa. lv. 7, we are told that God will "multiply to pardon" (marg.). Let us consider some examples of this. "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us" (Psa. ciii. 12). Hezekiah sings: "Thou hast cast all my sins behind Thy back" (Isa. xxxviii. 17). Look also at Isa. xliv. 22, "I have blotted out as a thick cloud thy transgressions, and as a cloud thy sins"; also at Jer. xxxi. 34, "I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." In Daniel ix. 24 we read that Christ should make an end of sin, and "make reconciliation for iniquity." Take yet another passage: "He will have compassion upon us; He will subdue our iniquities, and Thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea" (Micah vii. 19); while in Hebrews we are told that Christ came to put away sin, just as in Leviticus xvi. the scapegoat upon whom the sins of the children of Israel were laid, was led away to a desert place, never to be seen again.

This is the abundant pardon which God gives to His people. Well might we ponder its wonders and sing to His praise, and say what He has done for us, how He has brought us

Out of disaster and ruin complete,
Out of that terrible dreary defeat;
Out of my trouble and sorrow and shame,
Out of the evils too fearful to name;
Out of my guilt and the criminal doom,
Out of the terror that dreadeth the gloom;
Into the sense of forgiveness and rest,
Into inheritance with all the blest;
Into a righteous and permanent peace,
Into the grandest and fullest release;
Into a comfort without an alloy,
Into a perfect and confident joy.
Wonderful holiness, bringing the light,
Wonderful grace, putting all out of sight,
Wonderful wisdom, devising the way,
Wonderful power that nothing could stay.

Between those of us who have accepted Christ, and others who have not yielded fully to Him, there is a dividing line. Some of you have come to Keswick in pursuit of holiness, but it is not possible for you to obtain it unless you are resting on the foundation of the forgiveness of your sins. There is no doorway into service or holiness except that of pardon and forgiveness in Jesus Christ.

THE MEANING OF THE ATONEMENT.

Let us now see how it is that He pardons like this. In Lev. xvi. 16, we read of the high priest making an atonement in the holy place, while Israel looked on. The atonement means God's covering, the great foundation work of the Gospel; and we should beware of the man who in dealing with atonement leaves out the substitutionary work of Jesus Christ. Think also of Col. i. 20, 21. Reconciliation comes out of the atonement, meaning the removal of the bar that hinders the flow of God's love to human souls. It is well to know that your sins have separated between you and God, but it is better still to know that the blood of Jesus Christ has removed the barrier. When justified before God, we can say, "Bold shall I stand in that great day"—and in this little day too. It is God's own way of pardon. You cannot have a hand in the work. The only hand you can have is the outstretched hand to receive His wonderful gift.

SIN AND ITS REMEDY.

We must admit that sin is an awful thing. It can only be measured by the awful depth of the word "lost," just as pardon can only be measured by the infinite height of the word "saved." God brings us to see the exceeding sinfulness of sin, but He also reveals to us the remedy provided, and exhorts us to build upon the foundation of abundant pardon. And one purpose of this foundation is that we may begin to build.

Those who do not know pardon never understand it. The world always says that pardon means antinomianism, and that once forgiven a man may go on sinning from day to day. The world cannot see that the consciousness of forgiveness of sin is the greatest provocative to holiness. When we have gone into God's confessional, sin appears ten times more sinful. It is not so with man's confessional. In his remarkable book, THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH IN ITALY,* Dr. Robertson, of Venice, sifts some of the products of the confessional of man. A gentleman was disturbed in his mind as to the influence it was having upon his wife, and he requested that she should have done with it. The lady replied that she must go to the confessional. "If I do not go, I shall not be able to sin without remorse!" How different it is with God's confessional which causes us to shrink from sin. There is no better foundation for obedience than a consciousness of sin forgiven. Let us then think of that riven side, from which there flowed water and blood, till we know the double cure of sin, which saves us from its guilt, which is pardon, and its power, which is holiness.

Deliverance by the Cross.

By Rev. Canon HAY AITKEN.

The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death (Rom. viii. 2).

How shall an awakened, penitent man become justified before God? Is it by the abrogation of law or the fulfilment of law? Uninstructed Christians, I cannot help thinking, if asked this question, would reply, "By the abrogation of law; the mercy of God triumphs over His justice." Paul would answer, "Not by an abrogation of law, but by a fulfilment of law does man stand justified before God." To charge God with any disposition to abrogate His own law, is to charge Him with vacillation and inconsistency. The result of establishing a law and then abrogating it, is demoralizing, and we are quite sure that God never demoralizes Himself.

Paul says, "he that is dead is justified" (Rom. vi. 7, marg.). Suppose the extreme penalty of the law to have been carried out and the culprit executed, and that one possessed of the supernatural power of Christ when on earth, were authorised by God to approach that corpse and say, "Arise and live!" Against the man thus executed the law would have no further case, because the majesty of the law has been vindicated. Even so Paul regards us in the judgment of Christ. He regards God's own people as one with the Lord Jesus Christ, and therefore as judged in the judgment of Him with whom they are one. Hence we can say, "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God." The very terms and conditions of justification carry along with them the certainty of deliverance. He who is dead to sin is justified, because freed from that power which held and controlled him. God cannot justify us as fallen men, but as new creatures. I am in this favoured position because the "old man" has been crucified, and judgment has been carried out on my fallen habit of life.

DIVINE INTERPOSITION.

The next inquiry is, "Is this view of the case to be regarded as some legal fiction?" This is how I think a good many Christian souls regard this Divine possession, "We are not dead. The 'old man' is very much alive indeed; but God is kind enough to regard us as dead, and accepts the legal fiction as He smiles upon us." But surely we cannot worship a God who deals in legal fictions. If this is not legal fiction, what is it? It is Divine interposition. God sees the thing as He is going to create it. He sees me dead to sin, and alive to God as He intends to make me so. I am justified because I am living no longer in the "old man;" it has been crucified, and I stand before God a new creature in Christ Jesus. And what about this new creature? The love of God flows into its heart, purifying its desires, will, and purpose. When I take my stand in the new life, deliverance is assured me. It is not a question whether God will deliver me; in the very act that justifies I have the assurance of deliverance. And having emerged into a new plane I have God's own pledge to enable me to rise to that life in which the characteristics of Christ can be exhibited.

According to our faith it is done unto us; but I am afraid that many do not see this Divine plan of Redemption. It not infrequently happens that after the first flush of new joy has passed away, the old sins begin to reassert themselves.

GOD'S METHOD.

Some years ago I was preaching a sermon on the possibilities of deliverance, when a young man, who had at one time been a believer, was introduced to me. He said in course of conversation with me: "I wish I could believe that what you have been saying was God's method, then I would accept it." What, I asked, do you consider God's way? He replied: "It seems to me that God's way is to deliver us from sin in the process of our experience. Sooner or later we shall rise above these habits, and become more than conquerors." I asked, "Is that your theory about pocket-picking? A pickpocket is converted in London. Do you expect him to kneel down and say, 'The other day I stole no fewer than twenty watches and a dozen purses, but glory be to God, I have to-day only stolen half a dozen?' Of course you don't. Then if you expect God to find grace for the thief to rise above his besetting sins, do you not believe that the same grace is for you?" The fact that we expect the thief to master his disposition towards dishonesty, bears witness to the truth that the grace of God brings deliverance. Yet we do not always expect it, and according to our unbelief it is done unto us. Am I wrong in saying, that in virtue of the atonement every believing soul, from the very first moment he grasps redemption, has a right to be kept from all known sin? Not that I am a believer in sinless perfection.

THE STANDARD OF SIN.

May I dwell upon a definition of sin? There are such things as sins of ignorance. I may not detect them as sin; my conscience may not condemn them as sin. How, then, shall I prove them? First, by the fact that the standard of sin is to be found not in the conscience of man, but in the judgment of God. The conscience of man may be strangely warped. But there is more to be said. Some of you can say, as I can, that there are things I cannot do now which I could do without condemnation a few years ago. The action has not changed, but my conception and apprehension of it has become changed, owing to the action of God's grace. We can only escape these sins of ignorance by an educational process. Another man, boasting that he is of the "John Bull" type, speaks without tenderness. One who hears says: "If that is a Christian, I do not want to be one." If Christ acted like that, could we say He was sinless?

LIFE A SCHOOL.

Then there are sins of commission and omission. Even the Holy Ghost will not tell me all at once, because life is a school, and more and more the Master teaches us His will. As soon as the sin of ignorance ceases to be a sin of ignorance, the perpetration of that sin carries condemnation along with it. Then there are sins of heedlessness and sins of will. When a man says, "I know that this is a distinct breach of God's law, but if I risk my soul I will do it," that man comes from under the Blood. With regard to this last class of sins, Christians expect to be delivered from them, but what of the sins of heedlessness? sins in which the will is but little concerned in giving way in the passing moment. Can we be saved from these? If Paul told the truth, then we can. These are surely a part of that lawlessness from which, by the blood of Jesus Christ, we are redeemed. No one can regard these as trifles. I must feel that they are things which come between me and God, mar my character, and spoil my life. I cannot call them little, for they grieve my Saviour. From all such known sins we are redeemed by the blood of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world; and as we are redeemed, we have a right to be free, being justified from sin.

THE INDWELLING POWER.

Now the question comes, "How does this work? What is the power that brings about this great change?" I am not ashamed of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Can we dissociate the power of God from the One who exercises that power? When we speak of God in our own personal consciousness, we think of the Holy Spirit. When you ask me "Am I to be delivered from sin by the Holy Ghost or by the atoning work of Jesus Christ," I reply, "You are to be saved through the atoning work of the Lord Jesus Christ and by the personal intervention of God the Holy Spirit.

Is it not wonderful that the power of the Holy Ghost can come in and take possession of me? The power being within, I shall always be able to depend upon it. My manhood takes sides with God, instead of being in an undecided condition. No one speaks more clearly than the Apostle Paul on the close connection of deliverance and the Cross of Calvary. It is through the death on the Cross that deliverance comes. The Cross of Christ removes the barrier and allows the love of God to flow into my humanity. Till by the Cross my "old man" had been slain, God could not and would not allow the Holy Spirit to enter a desecrated heart, unconsecrated by the work of Christ. But when I claim the fulness of my deliverance, I have a right to claim a positive and negative blessing; I claim to be delivered from the old, and to be led into the new.

THE SECRET OF DELIVERANCE.

When I turn to Rom. vii., I find that the teaching of the Holy Spirit is the supplement to the teaching of the Cross, and His grace is equal to the task of liberating men from the power of sin and death. And, having died in Christ Jesus, I dare draw near and say, "Now, O God, there is no barrier between me and Thee, and I am in a position to take possession of this one power by which alone I am elevated above the very thoughts of sin." The question is often asked, "How deep can we expect the process of purification to go?" To this I would answer: "Where sin abounds, there grace will much more abound." Did sin abound in the region of habit? Then grace will abound there. Did sin abound in the region of thought? Then grace is going to abound there. So Paul, when he points to the secret of deliverance, points to a Person who brings a new law with Him—God's law. And we may have it.

GAINING THE VICTORY.

Take any one of the forces of evil to which we are exposed. How shall I master my passions, and keep my body under control? Paul answers: "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh." Suppose I have been living in the sin of intemperance. Paul says: "Be not drunk with wine, but be filled with the Spirit." So I want to remind you that we are entitled to a full and free deliverance. It is by His own self, that the Spirit proposes to win the battle for us; it is by His own indwelling presence, that He is going to fulfil his purpose.

Some of you say, "I must get a blessing. I cannot go on working for God while these things are holding me under control." It would not be wise to tell you that you must claim deliverance, and then in a few years come to Keswick and claim the Second Blessing. It is the function of the Holy Spirit to be the Divine sequel to the work of Christ. The two claims may be made and realized now. They are just the positive and negative sides of the same claim. I look at the Cross and say: "The 'old man' is dead. Lord, I believe it. But if the house is well swept and empty, seven other spirits will come in and dwell there. My God! I dare not be empty; I must be filled. I leave the 'old man' dead, and take Thee, the Living Spirit of God, to liberate me from the tyranny of sin; I take Thee that Thou mayest break the chains by which I am bound, and lift me up into higher spiritual experiences. I take Thee to be my life indeed, that the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus may make me free. Christ has assured me that He will make me free, so I take my freedom in humble confidence at the Cross, in the full belief and expectation that God the Holy Ghost will respond to my challenge, and take possession of that which I now surrender to Him."

Glorying in God.

By Rev. JOHN SMITH, D.D.

Thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches; but let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth Me, that I am the Lord which exercise lovingkindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth: for in these things I delight, saith the Lord (Jer. ix. 23, 24).

We are living in the midst of a very trying and perplexing situation in this great empire, and what we witness here, obtains, in nearly equal measure in almost every civilized nation in the world. We have been conscious of mighty forces opposed to the Christ of God, and have been humbled to the dust to feel how little power we have, how little vision of the present needs of men—how those methods of presenting truth that formerly seemed to win their way to the hearts and consciences of men fall blunted back from the grosser unbelief and hardened worldliness of the present day. We have been driven in upon ourselves, and perhaps driven back upon God. We are in His presence at this time to prove Him, as Elijah proved Him at Carmel, to prove Him that He may answer by fire, and give us such an unveiling of His glory as shall make all things new.

God often teaches us by an extreme instance; and the passage which I have quoted, in its immediate context is associated with a very extreme instance. The words are from an open-air sermon (recorded in vii.-x.), presented by the prophet at the door of the Temple, to people that were going in and out, to the priests and the lawyers, to the great men as well as the small. There he stood, that man with a brow of brass, rebuking the Israel of his day, and giving them to see the sequences of God, that such unbelief, rebellion, self-will, and secularity of mind as prevailed, could only have one issue, namely, the overthrow of the city and the Temple!

But as they hear him, unveiling their sin and predicting the judgments of God, they say: "The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord ARE WE!"

All the threatenings of God are conditional on the moral attitude of the people. In chap. xviii. we are told, "At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it; if that nation against whom I have pronounced turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them." In the midst of threatenings of judgment, God turns to mercy. Even yet, even now, there are magnificent possibilities of grace. If men would but forsake the past and break with their self-sufficiency, if they would put aside all that self-confidence that has shut them out from God, and humble themselves, God's glorious power might break forth, and everything might be retrieved, and a day grander than any of the past might be realized.

A WORD TO HUMBLE.

Note, first, a word of humbling. I can go back, and so doubtless can many others, to a time when every hope was shattered, every ground of self-confidence was broken down, when life was one disillusionment and disenchantment, and there broke in upon the humbled spirit the truth that God was willing to take me in my nothingness, as I was, and fill me full with His strength. One can go back to the time and place of surging emotions of mingled hope and a despair that had not wholly fled; and one can remember the first impression of what has only been deepening through the years—the faithfulness of God to His promises. I suppose we all began down in the dust—realizing that we were nothing in the sight of God, and that His grace was sufficient for us, that the whole fulness of God was at our disposal if we yielded to His will. But we have got far from that now; we have been shifting our ground, and some have become recognised forces in the religious world, and are read about in the Christian Press!

We are apt to indulge a false confidence in our gifts, and to think that since God has illumined us somewhat, and has been pleased to use us, He will continue to do so—that there is some quality of good in us. We do not say it; but there is a subtlety of self-deceit in the human soul which only the Holy Ghost Himself can reveal. Just as there has been that feeling with regard to wisdom, so Christian workers have relied upon their might; they have become jealous one of another. That is not the spirit of Christ, but of man. Further, just as with those who are animated with a regard for great conceptions of truth that God has given them, and a wisdom into which He has led them, so there are other, simpler, hearts who cannot speak of great conceptions, but to whom God has given wonderful power, that can break men down; and all up and down the land you meet men who have the reputation of being able to fill the largest halls—and they know it!

And then as to riches, or sources from which some people get their spiritual life—not the riches and resources of God. All this we only see the Infinite when self is broken and in the dust. The moment we yield to the solicitations and flatteries of self, we are shut into the bounded periphery of our own individuality or attainment. We are not our own, but bought with a price, and are here for God's glory. So far as we have been building on our own gift, and vision, and reputation, and power, let us put it away; and as far as we have been considering ourselves princes in the midst of great resources, let us go out into the wilderness and realize our own nothingness. We want to get at the end of ourselves; and when we get there, we shall find ourselves at the beginning of infinitude.

A WORD TO ENCOURAGE.

Now for a very encouraging word. "Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom . . . but let him that glorieth glory in this, that he knoweth Jehovah." God wants us to glory—to live a full life, to have a consciousness of strength. But in what are we to glory? We are to glory is Jehovah—that GOD IS that I AM JEHOVAH; not I was, but I AM. God is not the God of the Reformation; He was that, but praise to His Name, He is not that alone. God is not the God of the great Evangelical Revival of the eighteenth century, though He then caused rivers of living waters to flow that are fertilizing the land to this day. God is not the God of twenty-five years ago, when this Convention was founded; that would not help us. We have come into a new time—a new England, a new Empire. We are standing in the midst of a situation absolutely new, and are facing a temper and spirit in men that, in our experience, has never been faced before.

I want a God, not of the past, but of to-day—a God of the present, in the heart of the present. Face to face with worldliness and blasphemy, and self-sufficiency in the hearts of multitudes of people, I want a God who sees the superficiality of much that is called religion among the people of the world. I say, if you have come away from yourself, and your wisdom, and power, and riches, and are helpless, glory in this, "I am Jehovah!" Let us get under the shadow of the Infinite God. The world is too mighty a problem for you and me, and the forces that are against us are far too mighty for us. But God is mightier than they. God is in the heart of all these problems. More than that; as Jehovah, He is in them and carrying out His purpose of mercy to men. He is at His work, engaged on that which has been His business all through the ages. He is here to create a new day of opportunity if you and I only have faith enough to see it.

SURRENDERED FOR SERVICE.

Jeremiah brought before the people the possibility of the ruin of the State, and even then God said: "I am Jehovah; willing here and now to create a day of glorious opportunity and power if you are ready to meet Me; if you are ready, I am." When drawn to the Empire of China, Hudson Taylor heard the word of God to him in some such form as this—"I am going to bring many souls to Myself, and I am willing to use you, if you will go." God says the same thing to us to-day—"I am Jehovah who exerciseth lovingkindness. I am here to begin a great revival, to pardon these Jerusalem sinners, to pass by the transgressions of the men against whom I have been inveighing, to begin a great work of love. If you would glory, glory in that. In your nothingness, put yourself into My hand; as poor, helpless, unworthy children of Mine, say, 'Lord, I give myself to Thee, and if by my heart and lips and hands anything can be done in the new day of spiritual power, Lord, do it. I do not care what comes to me or happens to me; it is Thy glory I seek, and I glory in the very thought of being sacrificed on the altar of love.'"

I always think of the rivers of power that came from the Upper Room. "The number of names together were about a hundred and twenty." Look at this tent. I am unworthy to speak on behalf of God; but I believe God has been speaking through me, and I say, if we put ourselves into His hands, there will break forth a fire from this meeting that will cover the land, in souls, first emptied, then filled by God to carry the message of His lovingkindness to perishing sinners.

GOD'S ALTERNATIVES.

God had been speaking to Jeremiah, and it was to be judgment to the uttermost. God always has his alternatives; and if men will accept His mercy, He will not visit in judgment. He says to us: "I am Jehovah which exercise judgment. I have a great many things to say to My people, to My believing people of the Church to-day, about its unfaithfulness and unworthiness, its tampering with God's revelation, and saying, 'Peace, peace,' when there is no peace; its dishonouring the full testimony of Jesus Christ with a half Gospel; and I will say them through you, I will so fill you with My power that you shall be My mouth to men, and they shall be humbled in the very dust before Me."

"I am Jehovah which exercise judgment." This is an awful word; but it makes me think of Ezekiel's roll that was written without and within with lamentations, mourning, and woe; and yet, when he ate it, it was sweet as honey. When we are in the hand of God, even in judgment, it is sweet because for His glory. There have been days in the past when God has so revealed Himself that humble men have rebuked kings and councils through the majesty and the holiness of God; and it is such a Church that we want to-day, filled with such a sense of God.

THE CHURCH AND THE NATION.

Do you want the new day of power—to be lifted up out of this time of weakness and feebleness? Yield yourself to Him. The Spirit is here to baptize the people of God that they may become powers of judgment among men.

I believe that the national level has sunk; I do not believe that this nation would to-day pay £20,000,000 to free the slaves—or anybody else. God needs a holy Church to quicken His own people, to gather in His elect, and to lift the very moral life of men for the furtherance of His Kingdom. And, says the Father: "All that I have revealed in the past has only been the beginning of what I desire in my children who would glory in Me. I desire so to reveal My love and My holiness that I shall work upon men by tenderness and majesty until they are brought under the power of My supernatural revelation, and the whole Church of Christ is lifted into a sphere of realized righteousness through the supernatural grace of Christ." God is summoning us: "I am Jehovah—glory in Me. I am here to do a work, and will accomplish it through whomsoever may yield himself to Me."

GOD'S LINE OF PURPOSE.

What are we going to do? "Let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth that I am Jehovah." First of all, God has a mind of His own, and from that mind none can turn Him. He has a plan for the redemption of mankind. He has a great salvation, thought out in a past eternity, into which He is going to bring men. And the first thing you and I have to do, if we are going to be used in this great new forthshining of God, is just to come into line with Him. Let us seek to understand His mind. Are we willing that God should take us and break us in the place of dragons, and take us into His mind? More than that; (2) God has a will, and He is going to carry out His thought along one line of purpose. We have to put ourselves into God's hand that He may use us in the way that seems best to Him. He only uses a surrendered vessel, and takes only such a man as is willing, and, asking no question, says: "Here I am, nothing in myself, but almighty through Thy grace; and do as Thou wilt with me!" And a man finds, in the discovery of that will, that God has taken account of all his gifts, so that in losing himself he finds himself, and enters into possession of all that God has for Him.

Having humbled His children, and having revealed Himself to them, God is ready to give power and victory. In these things God takes delight—not in anger, and wrath, and judgment. He exhausts every measure to discover the excellency of His holiness and the all-reaching comprehensiveness of His truth. Shall we give Him the joy? What can we bring—this poor life of ours, of which we could not make anything if we tried. He makes a man out of that which would have been otherwise a failure. He says that if we put ourselves into His hands He will glorify Himself in us, and find joy in the issue of our work.

The Keswick Mission.

The seating capacity of the Eskin Street Tent was severely taxed on Wednesday afternoon, for the annual gathering in connection with the Convention Missionary Council; and the various addresses were followed with the closest attention. The report presented was most cheering, and the following extract will be read with interest:—

Fifteen years have passed away since the anonymous gift of £10 at the Convention Missionary Meeting of 1888, like the first drop of a refreshing shower, proved the precursor of a blessed rain of gifts for mission labours under the auspices of Keswick.

A year later Rev. G. C. Grubb and his party were sent forth with much prayer upon a mission, which extended to Ceylon, South India, Australia, and New Zealand; and Miss Townsend, as an honorary Keswick missionary, began work in Palestine at the mission station of Shefa-Amr. Since that year seventeen missionaries have gone forth to tell the glad tidings of full salvation in our Lord Jesus Christ, while our missioners have held convention meetings in many parts of the world.

The Council trust that the names of our dear missionary brethren and sisters are well known to those who have attended the Keswick Convention in the past: Miss Barry, Dublin (retiring this year); Miss A. Wilson Carmichael, Tinnevelly, India; Miss Eva Carmichael, Pondoland, South Africa (on furlough); Miss Fugill, Japan; Rev. and Mrs. Cyril Green, Pondoland, South Africa; Dr. G. Whitfield Guinness, China (on furlough); Dr. A. C. Hall, Egyptian Soudan (on furlough); Miss Luce, India (on furlough); Miss Townsend, Palestine; Rev. T. Walker and Mrs. Walker, Tinnevelly, India.

To these must now be added the name of Miss Mary Stiles, who was last month accepted by the Council as a Keswick missionary. Miss Stiles sails for India under the auspices of the C.E.Z.M.S. this autumn. She will be supported by two ladies, who attend the Convention, as their representative in the foreign field.

It is not much to ask that we who abide at home should bear up in prayer before God's throne the men and women who are bearing the burden and heat of the day in far-off lands, and very many we know are thus "helping together by prayer" for them. Are there not many others, hearers or readers of this report, who will henceforth make this all-important spiritual contribution to our Keswick Mission Work?

The Council have had before them appeals for missioners from various lands. The appeal from South Africa came with special force at a time when the grave events of the past were still so fresh in all our memories. The difficulty in this case lay in the apparent impossibility of getting together a representative local committee in a country in which so much of the organization of the churches was shattered and broken up. But such difficulties are passing away, and if only the friends present at Keswick this year show by word and deed their interest in such a mission in South Africa, the Council will gladly accept "the mandate," and will do their utmost to carry it out.

The balance-sheet showed the expenditure to have been £1,321 13s. 10d., including the sum of £4 0s. 8d. in hand.

General Hatt Noble, in occupying the chair, voiced the feelings of all hearts when he asked, "What shall we render to the Lord for all His benefits?"

REVIVAL IN INDIA.

The secretary, Rev. J. Battersby Harford, in reviewing the present position of the work, mentioned that twelve missionaries are now supported from the Council. Reference was made to the remarkable revival which has been experienced in Tinnevelly, where Rev. T. and Mrs. Walker are labouring. One of the results was seen last January, when twelve to fifteen thousand people gathered for a series of meetings, while 30,000 Syrian Christians assembled for a week's waiting upon God.

At the invitation of the Council, Rev. J. Stuart Holden has undertaken to visit China next year as a deputation from Keswick, and in introducing him to the Convention, the Chairman assured him of the intercession of God's people on his behalf. A new Keswick missionary is Mary Stiles, who sails for India this autumn, and she was earnestly commended to God by General Hatt Noble. Miss Luce, who has been in the field for six years, spoke of Arimgur and the special hindrances to the people of that land as to accepting the Gospel. Miss Eva Carmichael brought tidings from Pondoland, a country she described in the words of Job x. 22—"A land of darkness as darkness itself, and of the shadow of death, without any order." Ephes. iv. 19 gives a true picture of the people who "have given themselves over to lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness." Yet God has gathered out a little company on whose foreheads may be seen the mark of the Lord, and whose lives are entirely changed.

A VISIT TO JAMAICA.

A memorable feature of the year's work was the remarkable mission held by Revs. H. B. Macartney and F. B. Meyer in the island of Jamaica. A full programme had been prepared, and with the good hand of God upon them they were able to visit the most important centres, setting forth the power of the Lord to deliver from sin and to enable His people to walk in newness of life. Mr. Macartney prefaced his account of the visit of the delegation to the West Indies with a word on the history of Jamaica, and went on to remark that it was in 1860 that the Holy Ghost came to the island. The Christians fought against His working; but no fewer than 25,000 converts were brought into the fold of Christ. "The next coming was a message from Derwentwater. They have their 'Keswick' in Jamaica, called the Mandeville Convention, at whose invitation we went. When we landed, Mr. Meyer took in the situation at once. He recognised that what was eating out the vitals of society was public vice; he stripped himself for the fight, and soon we saw the Goliaths falling. He spoke on some 120 occasions while we were in Jamaica."

Many were greatly impressed as Mr. Macartney pictured the spiritual desolation of one of the centres visited, where fruit seemed impossible, and read a letter from a minister in the town telling of a wonderful revival that followed. Week after week the special services continued, the wave of blessing deepened, and churches were crowded as early as five o'clock in the morning.

Following up Mr. Macartney's narrative, Rev. F. B. Meyer spoke of the cordiality with which they were received by the Archbishop and the clergy of the island. A spirit of true catholicity animated the ministers. All the churches were open to him, in which he was allowed to preach not from the lectern merely, but from the pulpit. Referring to his tours on the Continent, Mr. Meyer testified to the wonderful influence which the Convention exerts upon Christian life and thought in Germany, Norway, and Denmark, and other countries of Europe.

SUFFERING FOR CHRIST.

An echo of the Boxer risings in China was heard in the address of Dr. Whitfield Guinness. In July, 1900, the little party with which he was connected was shut up in Honan, and as the speaker detailed those days of anxiety until deliverance came many were deeply impressed. After leaving the city, thirteen days were spent hiding in the cabin of a boat. Time after time the boat was examined by the customs officials, who, in the order of God's providence, failed to detect the presence of Englishmen. To indicate the genuineness of the Honanese converts, the speaker told a pathetic story. In a few weeks after one of the converts had been baptized, the Boxers pillaged his home, and securing the man's hands behind him, drew him up by a rope to the roof. While thus suspended the man was asked to recant. On refusing, the poor fellow was subjected to horrible tortures and suffering. Some time afterwards Dr. Guinness put to him the question, "Was it worth while to suffer like that for Jesus' sake?" The man replied: "Worth while! I would go through it all again to-morrow for His sake."

The Missionary Meeting.

The Saturday morning missionary meeting is always an outstanding feature of the Convention; but it was acknowledged by many who have attended this gathering for a number of years that few have been more memorable than that of Saturday last. While there was much that was encouraging in the addresses of the missionaries concerning what has already been accomplished; there was much also that caused deep heart-searching, and the vast congregation was manifestly humbled by the thought of the work undone, the fields wholly unoccupied, and the great contrast between Christ's demand and the Church's response to it.

In his opening remarks Mr. Eugene Stock, the chairman, mentioned that it was fifteen years since the first official meeting was held in the tent. Three passages of Scripture came as appropriate to the object of such a gathering: "The whole world lieth in the wicked one," "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son," and "Go ye into all the world." He urged that these words should be allowed to sink deeply into all hearts, that more lives should be given to pray and labour for the evangelization of the world. It was with joy that the chairman announced that since the meeting commenced Mr. Head had received a promise of £100 towards the object of the gathering. Mr. Stock then read out a number of countries for which prayer was specially asked; and when Rev. S. A. Selwyn had led in intercession, Mr. Walter B. Sloan was asked to take charge of the proceedings.

THE GOSPEL—THE POWER OF GOD.

Rev. J. Gregory Mantle drew attention to the fact that the British and Foreign Bible Society is about to celebrate its centenary. In giving some particulars of its operations, he said that 180,000,000 portions or entire copies of the Word of God had been put into circulation. Sixteen thousand copies are sent out by the Society every day. Yet, while the Scriptures have been translated into 360 languages, there are still 450 million people speaking languages into which no single word of the Bible has been translated. For the first time in its history the Society has found itself compelled to tell its agents not to avail themselves of every opportunity for distribution. Endeavours are about to be made to raise 250,000 guineas, that open doors waiting in all parts of the world may be entered.

Emphasizing the place which the Word of God has in missionary work, Mr. Mantle recalled his recent visit to India, and related a striking incident with which he became acquainted in Amritsar. An educated Hindu in reading the Koran found a reference to the Old and New Testaments. It occurred to him that in these two books he might find the rest of soul which he felt he needed. Securing a copy of the Bible, he began to read John iii., and before he had finished the chapter the peace of God entered his soul. Eventually he proceeded to the missionary for the purpose of being baptized. The young man's father became enraged at this conversion, and offered 500 rupees to anyone who would put his son to death, and 200 rupees to anyone who would bring him tidings of the act. In searching for his son the man found his way to the missionary's house, and was led to accept a copy of the New Testament, and on returning to his home he read it to the mullahs. "If this is a 'New' Testament," said the mullahs, "then there must be an 'Old.'" A copy of the Old Testament was taken and read, and in a little time the man returned to the missionary, saying, "I don't want to murder my son; I wish to be baptized."

DISASTER AND ENCOURAGEMENT.

The next speaker was Rev. Samuel Wilkinson, who was thankful that the Divine order "To the Jew first" is being observed all the world over. He spoke of the recent atrocities at Kischeneff, perpetrated, sad to relate, by those who profess identity with the Name of Christ. What can be the impression this calamity has left upon the minds of Jewish children? He urged that there should be some link between Kischineff 1903 and the attitude of Christians at Keswick 1903. Rev. W. M. Chambers, of the American Board, had a deeply interesting story to tell concerning a fruitful and extensive work in Adana, Turkey, in an area stretching from the Balkans to Ararat. Some 70,000 Christians have been gathered out from among Greeks, Bulgarians, and Mohammedans, over a hundred churches have been organized, and schools and colleges have been established all through the territory.

THE NEGLECTED AND DARK CONTINENTS.

Pastor Emilio Olsson made an earnest plea for more sympathy to be shown towards efforts to give more of the Gospel to the "Neglected Continent" than it now possesses. In his travels, covering over 50,000 miles, he had circulated some 20,000 copies of the Word of God among forty-two different nationalities and tribes, many of whom had never heard of Jesus Christ. Tidings of a cheering nature were brought from Angola, West Africa, by Mademoiselle Chatelain, who labours in connection with the Philafrican Mission (Swiss). The work was inaugurated a few years ago in this region of 300,000 square miles. The efforts among the Caluquembes have borne fruit, and the missionaries are encouraged to look for equally good results from what is being done among the southern tribes.

SOME CHEERING NARRATIVES.

An incident related by Miss Graham, of the English Presbyterian Mission, Chin-Chew, China, shows how far-reaching may be the influence of one man's conversion. A slave to opium was persuaded to accept Christ, and put away his pipe. Proceeding from the city in which he lived to a market town, his change of life so impressed a notorious thief and gambler that he decided to try this Christ. And having accepted the Saviour he visited a village some distance away, and was the first to preach the Gospel there. The foreign missionary brought the Gospel to the large city, the city sent it to the market town, and the market town to the tiny village. Mr. John Logan (Suez), in the course of his address, gave an encouraging account of what is being done in some parts of Egypt for the evangelization of the people.

A remarkable story of progress was related by Rev. A. Gillon Macalpine, of the Livingstonia Mission. He recalled the manifestation of the Holy Spirit's power in 1895, on the west shore of Lake Nyassa, giving an impetus to the work which is felt to this day. Slave-owning and beer-drinking, two of the greatest evils with which the people were formerly cursed, are now unknown in the Church circles. Not only so, but where £1 was raised toward carrying on the mission, £50 is subscribed regularly, and a church to accommodate 1,200 or 1,400 is now a necessity. Rev. Walter Searle (South Africa General Mission) drew a cheerless picture of the darkness of Islam, but was able to show that the Gospel is not being preached in vain to the Kaffirs, scores of whom have entered the Kingdom.

INDIA'S NEEDS.

Missionaries representing India also spoke. Miss Davies, from the United Provinces (Zenana Bible and Medical Mission), pleaded for the villages. She told of a missionary who, after a day's arduous labour, was returning to his tent, felt impelled to visit a village to which he had never been. The people listened with eagerness to the Gospel. One of those into hearts the light of God's truth found its way that night, was an old man who said, "I have wanted to learn of Jesus for fourteen years, but no one came to teach us." The missionary left him rejoicing in Christ as his Saviour; and when on the following morning he called at the cottage and found that during the night the old man had passed away, he knew that it was none other than God who had directed his steps to the village the previous evening.

Rev. C. G. Mylrea, of Bhagalpur, Behar, followed. India, he remarked, is a land of villages, and Behar is least evangelized. To visit the 130,000 villages in Behar would take the present staff of the Church Missionary Society at that station 130 years. Pioneering in Nepaul was described by Mr. J. W. Innes Wright. Through the bazaars some thousands of Nepaulese are reached, and they are carrying the Word to numbers untouched by missionaries. Besides the evangelistic movement there is a medical mission.

A MOVING APPEAL.

In the closing address Mrs. Howard Taylor gathered up the lessons of the meeting, and made an appeal which is not likely to fade from the memory of those who listened. The speaker brought back to mind and described an experience she had when going through a district in China, where there were ten million people and no missionary. In begging Mrs. Taylor to remain and teach them of Jesus Christ, the leader of a number of the women cried with anguish of heart: "If you go away, how shall we find the road to heaven?" "The cry of that heart," said the speaker, "has never left me. I pass it on to you. Would you not like to go back and win these souls? Everywhere it is the same story."

Many were deeply moved as Mrs. Taylor pressed home the necessity of having the same mind as was in Christ Jesus, when He laid aside His glory, and took upon Himself the form of a servant. In all parts of the tent there were those who were broken down as the speaker urged in impassioned terms that the path which the Saviour trod must be taken by His followers, if they would meet the world's need, and have a share in the tears and cross of Christ.

Lord's Day Services.

Although there was a large exodus of visitors on Saturday, all the places of worship in the town were crowded on Sunday, in addition to the full tent in Eskin Street. At St. John's Church, Rev. Stuart Holden preached in the morning and Rev. Preb. Webb-Peploe in the evening. At both services in the Congregational Church Dr. Harry Guinness occupied the pulpit, a united communion being held in the evening, when an address was given by Rev. William Houghton. The Primitive Methodists assembled in the Drill Hall, the building being too small comfortably to accommodate the large number who were desirous of listening to Rev. George C. Grubb. Two sermons were delivered at the Wesleyan Chapel by Rev. J. Gregory Mantle.

Who Will Go?

SOME eighteen months ago there arose in the province of Sichuen, West China, what has been called the New Movement. Many workers had not yet been able to return west after the outbreak of 1900, when scores of cities and country places began to open Gospel halls on their own account. In some cases they were started by wealthy influential men; in other cases they were men with little education, simple country farmers. They were willing to pay large sums of money if only they could have such a hall—it was but a simple house at the best. Native helpers available did not supply the demand for teachers, and every man in the churches who was at all suitable was pressed into the service. These helpers were exposed to a new temptation from without, in the form of popularity, and men splendidly suited for quiet evangelistic work in an ordinary way proved unequal for such an emergency.

When I came over the ground last month it was very sad to find some of these places entirely closed, and a greater indifference shown toward the Gospel than formerly. And what was the reason? The lack of workers and leaders for the new movement, which I am convinced is of God. We have prayed for it for years. Now the answer is coming, and many are sceptical. God forgive them for the cold water they are pouring on to these poor heathen. Of course, their motives are impure. How could they be otherwise at the outset, all steeped in idolatry and devilry? Did the father of the prodigal keep him awhile to test his motives? Now, I do not advocate hasty admission into the visible Church. Far from it. But again and again we have to lament over opportunities having been missed. I have seen many, and heard of more, cases of these places being closed for lack of workers.

God was calling loudly to His Church by the martyrs of 1900. At the time I thought there would be thousands who would rush in to fill the breach. But I don't know of even one hundred. Oh, that God would lay the burden of these facts upon the hearts of many in the homeland! The indifference of heathendom does not absolve Christendom from blood-guiltiness. The wrong motives of the heathen do not relieve us from the responsibility of giving them the Gospel.

Rev. Dr. Cameron.—Many who read with interest the American magazine Watchword and Truth, which was so used to the blessing of Christian people under the direction of the late Dr. Gordon, will be glad to know that his successor in the editorship, Dr. R. Cameron, is on a visit to this country. He has arranged to speak as follows:—Aug. 2 and 23, Talbot Tabernacle, Notting Hill; 9, Kenyon Chapel, Solon Road, Brixton; 16, Lansdowne Hall, W. Norwood; Sept. 6, Highgate Road Baptist Chapel.

Chicago Bible Institute.

NOTES BY A VISITOR.

SITTING writing in the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, on a holiday, with one's door open to get as much air as possible on a sultry day, we have been much edified by overhearing in the opposite room one of the private tuition classes, that have had much to do with making the Institute the power of good that it is. The teacher is a student with two years' experience, and the scholar is one of the new-comers who, after his regular college training and holding several pastorates, has come for a short time to get more experience here, and is getting it. The important theological lesson is how to scrub the bedroom floor clean. The scholar has already had a lesson in washing in the laundry and enjoyed it, and is now giving all his energies to master this other art. His education in these lines having been neglected in youth, this is his first lesson, and so the teacher takes one side of the room and scrubs it while he takes the other, and patiently follows the instruction given and example shown, and has just completed the task so well that only an experienced housekeeper's eye could see any difference in the work of novice or teacher.

THE VALUE OF PRACTICAL TRAINING.

Whatever some may think of this style of training, to me it seems to be excellent. Every man in the building has to do one hour's house work a day, and thus the work of the building, waiting on tables, washing dishes, &c., is all done by them. By this means the cost of maintenance of the establishment is reduced to a minimum, and lower rates for board charged than would be otherwise possible. The greatest value of this work, however, is for the students themselves. It is a decided aid to humility when a young man from a well-to-do family happens to be set to work scrubbing the front doorsteps the first day or so of his term here; but, to their credit be it said, the majority stand these tests, and come out better and more useful men in consequence.

Another excellent phase of the work here is that which requires every student to have five appointments per week for practical mission work in the city, except those who are "working their way through," who have only three. Each week reports of work in this line have to be filled up and handed in.

The spirit of unity and good fellowship among students and members of the faculty is all that could be desired, while the spiritual tone is above the average of many religious institutions.

During the fortnight there has been a most practical Convention of Christian workers, and also a reunion of old students, beginning with an immense public meeting on June 23, in the auditorium which seats from 6,000 to 7,000, to welcome Messrs. Torrey and Alexander home from their trip round the world. The Convention continued each day for one week, and all phases of aggressive Christian work were discussed. Right through the hot summer weather, the classes are going on daily, with a good attendance of students, many of whom come either from Great Britain or her colonies but the winter session, which begins in October generally sees a much larger number at the Institute. As the classes are free to all, we would recommend any visitor to Chicago to drop in any day except Sunday or Monday and attend the class which meets from 11 to 12.

The "Christian" in the Colonies.—Rev. D. B. Hooke sends us the following extract from a letter received from a ministerial friend in the Transvaal, to whom he recently began to send his copy of our paper:—"I think I ought to mention that I get The Christian regularly. A friend in Essex sends it to me. I hand it on to the Rev. —— and he to a friend in Johannesburg. That Christian has quite a round of usefulness." Mr. Hooke suggests that many of our readers would do a kindly service if they would post their copy of our paper to friends labouring in the Colonies, and so start it on "a round of usefulness."

Cobwebs and Cables.

NOT much alike, are they? One is the finest of threads, the other the thickest of ropes. You have all seen cobwebs, but perhaps not a cable such as they have on ship-board, so thick that it looks as if it would be impossible to break it. What do we do to cobwebs? Why, sweep them away as fast as they appear; no doubt the spiders think us very cruel to destroy their houses, but the little flies who are so often caught and killed would thank us if they could!

There are so many things in our lives which are like cobwebs to begin with, but if they are not swept away at first may become as strong as cables and bind us so that we can never break away from them. Find a cobweb and bind it round your hands; you can easily, scarcely feeling it, release yourself from it, but find a strong rope and wind it round your hands, fastening it tightly; you cannot break that; a stronger one than yourself only can set you free.

It is exactly like that with bad habits and sins. No one ever becomes a drunkard, a robber, or a murderer all at once. Look at that dear little baby-boy. You cannot imagine he could ever become a wicked man, and yet as he grows up he may begin by being cruel to flies or birds, and like to see them suffer. This is like a cobweb; if he be not corrected and the little evil swept away, it will grow stronger, and become a rope. He will be unkind and vicious to his companions, and may in the end become a murderer. The cobweb has become a cable, and sad will be his end.

A little girl began by taking little bits of sugar, and picking the plums out of the cake, when no one was looking; she grew up to be a thief and was put in prison. So it is with all bad practices and foolish habits; hardly noticed at first, but, ever growing stronger, they soon become our masters.

A boy and girl, the children of a rich man, were very fond of creeping quietly down to the dining-room, after the guests had retired, and tasting the little drops of wine left in the glasses; thus they acquired such a liking for strong drink that as they grew older they took more, and, sad to say, that little cobweb became a cable, and dragged them down to a drunkard's grave. Small boys think it grand to begin to smoke cigarettes, but if only they knew how soon the habit of smoking will bind them fast, and waste their strength and money, they would at once sweep away the cobwebs. James iii. 5 (R.V.) says, "Behold how great a forest is kindled by how small a fire." Just lately in America, miles of prairies and forest have been burned, and all began with a little spark from a match or a man's pipe.

If any of you say, "Oh, it does not matter, this little lie, this little disobedience, this little habit; it is so small, this forgetfulness," remember the cobweb will become a cable if you do not break it while you are young. In Zech. iv. 10, there is this question, "Who hath despised the day of small things?" The answer is, "Only those who are very foolish."

But "COBWEBS AND CABLES" will also stand for good habits as well as as bad. This is why we take young children to God's House, though they cannot understand much at first; this is why we teach the youngest to pray and the older ones never to miss daily Scripture-reading and prayer. We want these good habits to grow with their growth and bind them closely to God. It is the same with habits of truthfulness, kindness, generosity. I knew a wise mother who, if she wanted to give anything away, used to put it in her baby's hand. The child soon felt it her greatest pleasure to give, and grew up to be a most generous woman.

Some years ago, America had a very good man as President, John Quincy Adams. He owed a great deal to his godly mother. When he was dying, an old man of eighty-two, he said that he had never once forgotten to offer the little prayer every night which his mother taught him as a baby boy. Prayer had grown to be everything to him.

Now here is a promise, "The little one shall become a thousand, and the small one a strong nation" (Isa. lx. 22). Why? The reason is in the verse before, "That I may be glorified." In Dan. ii. 34, 35, 45, we read about a little stone, which rolled on and on through the earth, till it became a great mountain and filled the whole world. This meant the kingdom of Jesus Christ, which began with the babe in Bethlehem's manger, and has been increasing ever since, and we know God's Word will come true (Hab. ii. 14). If you are inside this kingdom, the Lord Jesus is your own Saviour and King, and His strong hands will sweep away the cobwebs of little sins and break the cords of greater evils. Yes, He can cut the strongest cables which bind the greatest sinner. Blessed be His Holy Name.

Dear young people, never forget, that it is much easier to sweep away a cobweb than to cut through a cable.

Hymn for Scholars.

Written in Commemoration of the Centenary of the Sunday School Union (founded July, 1803).

A HUNDRED years! how vast their span,
In distant future seems!
Outstretching all we think or plan,
In youth's ambitious dreams.

A hundred years of life and health!
Could we that boon obtain,
What stores of learning or of wealth
Might we not hope to gain?

Yet when in thought the past we trace,
How brief the tale appears
Of those who ran their earthly race,
Within those hundred years!

Men pass like shadows; deeds alone
To lasting fruitage grow;
We reap to-day the blessings sown
A hundred years ago.

Our bond of union then was wrought,
In faith and prayer begun,
Which links the teachers and the taught
And makes the thousands one.

Lord, while our festal songs arise,
O grant our humble claim,
That every child beneath the skies
May learn the Saviour's name!

Paul and His Hindrances (2 Cor. xii. 1-10).

THE "man in Christ" is, of course, Paul himself. He was every whit "a man," and he was "in Christ"; as Noah was in the ark for safety, and as the branch is in the vine for fruitfulness. Be as manly as you will, but let your manhood be ensphered in Christ; live as deep in Christ as you can, but always remember that your relation to Him need not militate against the full development of your nature after the noblest and completest ideal possible.

The "fourteen years ago" takes us back, as nearly as possible, to Acts xiv. 19; and it is a remarkable conjunction. Probably at the time, when it seemed as though Paul were on the point of death—his poor body being bruised and mangled—his spirit had passed through the realms of Paradise in company with its Lord. It was not death, for the dissolution of body and spirit had not taken place, but an anticipation of that hour, such as is given to men and women in highly exalted conditions of spiritual experience. Note that Paradise is the third heaven. How many heavens there are we know not. We talk of the seventh heaven, it may be there are so many strata of blessedness. But the exalted Lord is above them all. He passed through the heavens and is made higher than the highest (Heb. iv. 14, R.V.; vii. 26).

The Apostle seems to have enjoyed wonderful revelations of God. Not once or twice, but often he beheld things that eye hath not seen, and heard words that ear cannot receive; and it seemed necessary for him to have a make-weight lest he should be exalted beyond measure. What the thorn or stake in the flesh was it is impossible to say with certainty.

He probably suffered from weak eyes or some distressing form of ophthalmia. We infer this from the eagerness of the Galatian converts to give him their eyes, from his dependence on an amanuensis, and from the clumsy letters with which he wrote his epistles (Gal. vi. 11, R.V.). And if this were the case, the pain would be greatly aggravated as he faced the keen blasts of the mountains, or the hurricanes that swept the sea. His pain made him very conscious of weakness, and very sensitive of infirmity, and thus kept him near the majority of those to whom he ministered, who did not live on mountain-tops, but in valleys, where demons possess and worry the afflicted. Be content that your visions of Paradise should be transient, and be willing, as the Lord was, to turn your back on the mountain-summit, where the glory shines, in order to minister to souls in anguish.

On three separate occasions, very definitely and earnestly, he besought the Lord for deliverance, and received the assurance that though the stake on which he was impaled could not be removed, yet sufficient grace would be given to enable him to do his life-work, and probably more grace was vouchsafed to him, to enable him to do what was required, ere the sun of his life set.

Looking at the matter thus, he was more than content. On the one hand there was the buffeting of this messenger of Satan, but on the other there were the gains of humility, of meekness, and of greater grace than would have been possible if he had not needed it so sorely—and he gladly accepted an infirmity for which there were such abundant compensations. If any had pitied him, he would have turned on them indignantly, saying, "Keep your pity, I am abundantly satisfied for it to be as it is. I even glory in my infirmities, because they make space in which Christ's grace can reside."

Do not sit down baffled by your infirmities, but turn from them to claim Christ's greater grace, that at the end of life's day you may have done all that is set you to do, and more, because the greatness of your need made you lean more heavily on His resources.

C.E. NOTES.

The annual report presented at the Christian Endeavour Convention, held recently at Denver, was entitled "A Year of Expansion." The present membership of world-wide Endeavour was stated to be 3,822,300, with 1,500,000 more in societies bearing strictly sectarian names, but patterned after Christian Endeavour, and gaining their inspiration from it.

Rev. D. Burford Hooke, secretary of the Colonial Missionary Society, writes:—"I am glad to find that for the first time in the history of the Endeavour movement 'the Colonies' have found their way into the prayer meeting topics, and are to be considered during the last week of August. Already quite a number of Endeavourers from all parts of the kingdom have written to me. I shall be glad to send papers which contain information likely to be useful at these meetings, if friends will write to me at 22, Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, London, E.C. Endeavourers who may be at the seaside will have a splendid opportunity of helping the cause of Christ in our Colonies, and I hope it will be widely utilized."

David and Goliath (1 Sam. xvii. 38-49).

Golden Text—Rom. viii. 31.

TIME, about three years after David had been anointed by Samuel. Place, the Valley of Elah, fifteen miles south-west of Jerusalem and ten miles from Bethlehem. (a) Enemies, the Philistines who had not been completely driven out by Saul (xiv. 37, 46) with their boastful champion Goliath. (b) Israel, "Sore afraid" (v. 24). (c) Soldiers of Saul, the three elder sons of Jesse, to whom (d) David came as a messenger from home (xvii. 17, 28), and overheard the news of the battlefield (v. 23), took up the challenge of "the man of war," and met him "in the name of the Lord of hosts" (v. 45).

Goliath the giant of Gath.—Great of stature and strong (vv. 4-7). Trained soldier, fully armed (vv. 5, 7, 33). Defiant, boastful idolater (vv. 8, 10, 43, 44). Came in the name of a dead idol.

David the stripling of Bethlehem.—A youth, ruddy and fair (vv. 42, 56). Unskilled in war, unarmed (vv. 33, 39). Courageous, energetic, wise (vv. 32, 48, 39). Zealous for God's honour (vv. 26, 45). Humble, but confident in God (vv. 45, 47). Came in the Name of "the living God."

Israel's eyes were on the giant (v. 24). David's eyes were "up unto the Lord." The combat looked unequal; on one side the Philistine army and their champion fully armed, against a stripling in shepherd's costume with a staff and a bag of stones (v. 40). But "the Lord of hosts" stood by him, and victory was certain (v. 47), because he fought in "the name of the Lord." David was "not able" (v. 33), but God was able through David.

The Shepherd Lad, Israel's Champion.

1. Weapons, skill, and practice gave him power. The tribe of Benjamin were noted as slingers of stones (Jud. xx. 16).

2. Faith in God gave him strength such as he had often experienced on the hills of Bethlehem (v. 34-37).

3. He gave God the glory (v. 37, 46; Psa. xliv. 8), and he used the means.

4. David counted on God for strength and a true aim, and God counted on David to sling the stone for His battle. The shepherd conquered, the giant fell.

Lessons.

1. Worldly weapons must not be used for the Lord's work, they hamper rather than help. It was a shepherd with his sling and stone, not with a sword he had not proved, God used to slay the giant. Are you poor, feeble, or young? God can strengthen you to do something the rich and strong and experienced have left undone (Ezra vii. 28).

2. Some Giants.—Selfishness, pride, unbelief, vanity, temper, superstition, greediness, dishonesty, idleness, untruthfulness.

Weapons.—"Spiritual, not carnal," very simple and old-fashioned (2 Cor. x. 4). Why? (Eph. vi. 12).

3. The armour the Lord provides for His soldiers fits each one and never fails any. And you can at any rate learn to sling a stone. One text used with God's blessing will do wonderful things. Try John iii. 16. By-and-bye you will have learned more of the Bible. David only used one of his five stones, but they were all smooth and polished, and slung with prayer.

4. God was very real to the shepherd lad, why should He not be so to us?

"Lord Jesus make Thyself to me
A living bright reality."

He had been "a very present help" in the trouble with the wolf and the lion (v. 37), and now he was so with the giant (v. 49).

5. Boys and girls speak lightly of God in these days. Do you "stand up for" the honour of His name, and only use it reverently yourself, remembering the command in Ex. xx. 7?

6. We may count on Jesus to help us in every time of need. Can He count on you to do what He wants when, and where, and how He wants the work done and to His honour and glory?

7. What can you do? Are you using your one talent in His service? If so, "the Lord of hosts" will bless you in the doing.

HE FIGHTS ON OUR SIDE.

A story is told of one of the battles in which the Crusaders were engaged before the walls of Jerusalem. It seemed as though their forces would be overpowered by the Saracens when a cry rang through the ranks, "St. James is with us! He fights on our side." Certain of the Christian warriors imagined they saw the Apostle in the clouds, and the vision gave them renewed strength and vigour. With a shout they rushed on their enemies, and their fresh enthusiasm secured for them a glorious victory. In our battles of life we need to realize that we have the Lord himself with us to fight on our side. Then shall we have a confidence like unto that of David, who, with but a staff and a sling, faced the overbearing Philistine. "I come," said David, "in the name of the Lord of hosts." So said the Apostle, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" (Golden Text).

HOW TO MEET LIFE'S GIANTS.

One of the Goliaths we all have to meet is a giant within us, whose general name is "passion." It is said that Sir Isaac Newton was a notable conqueror of that inward terror, and his victory was marked on one occasion, when a favourite dog had destroyed many valuable manuscripts belonging to the philosopher. Although they represented the result of years of labour, Sir Isaac replied simply, "Ah, Diamond, you little know the mischief you have done." Newton keenly felt the loss, but a burst of anger would not have restored the writings. He had learned to some purpose to control the giant within him.

CONFIDENCE IN GOD.

Among the real conquerors of this world, Columbus must ever occupy a high position. His idea of a new world was no hasty thought, and he made no rash attempt. He tested it by all the learning and practical evidence within his wide sphere, and then achieved his end, in spite of courtiers and kings. A single man, surrounded by a doubting and faint-hearted crew, crossed the ocean because he believed in the undiscovered world beyond. He was victorious, in spite of opposition that seemed at the time to be insurmountable. As Columbus possessed confidence in his plans, so David, in simple trust, and wholly depending on God, ventured to attack the Philistines. So in our many conflicts we may be more than conquerors if we will but realize that the battle is the Lord's, and that He will give the victory into our hands (v. 47).

DESPISED OF MEN, BUT USED OF GOD.

A short time ago a geologist heard of a builder's yard where an enormous heap of stones might be purchased. The man of science bought the whole stock for a few pounds, and had the collection removed to his own premises. From the heap the geologist was able to discover many unique specimens of fossils, and to-day several of our leading museums have been enriched and smaller museums supplied with collections worth in all a large sum. Common weapons in the hand of a good man are often used by the Lord to achieve victory. Goliath asked if he was a dog that David should approach him with staves and stones; and yet with a despised stone the stripling smote the Philistine, and he fell upon his face to the earth (v. 49).

Prayer from an Old Highland Castle (about A.D. 1600).—Oh Lord of the universe, Creator of heaven and earth, Thou that invitest every one that thirsteth to come to Thee, and promiseth those that cometh unto Thee by Christ, Thou wilt in no wise cast off, by Him I desire to come. Lord remember in mercy all whom I ought to remember before Thee. Bless them wherewith Thou in the world hath blessed me. Make mine Thine by regeneration and adoption. Perform to them the promise of the Gospel. Write Thy laws in their hearts. Cause them to walk in Thy ways. Be Thou their God, and they Thy people. Let that day of power come when they shall be made willing to accept of Christ, on Gospel terms, without exceptions or reservations. Grant them of the necessaries of life a competent portion, and grace to be therewith content and thankful. Guide them with Thy counsel, and afterwards receive them to Thy glory, and all for Jesus' sake, to Whom, with Thee and the Holy Spirit, be all praises for ever. Amen.

Obituary.

DR. BARKLEY, BELFAST.

BY the death of Dr. Barkley, ex-Judge of the Supreme Court of the Punjab, the Irish Presbyterian Church has lost one of its most faithful and honoured sons. He threw himself zealously into the work of the foreign missions of the Church, and, first as assistant-secretary to Rev. William Park, and afterwards to Rev. John Irwin, he took an earnest and laborious part. During his twenty-eight years of life in India he so far carried out his early intention of doing direct work for Christ as to act as Sunday-school teacher in Lahore; and there, too, he gained his wide knowledge of foreign missions and their practical results. In 1886 he returned home from India on pension, and after a few years became joint convener of the Presbyterian Foreign Mission. Although prevented by a weak voice from entering the ministry, Dr. Barkley, during his long and distinguished career, proved himself in many ways a devoted worker. He was sixty-eight years of age.

REV. HENRY STENT, FAIRLIGHT.

After nearly fifty years' work as vicar of Fairlight, Hastings, Rev. Henry Stent has passed to his rest. A local paper says: "The deceased clergyman was very popular among his parishioners, and his generosity towards parochial objects and to his poorer parishioners was great. He threw himself heart and soul into all matters for the good of his parish, and worked quietly and unostentatiously, taking no part in religious controversy or in Church matters other than those connected with his sphere of labour." In the course of an earnest tribute, the Sussex Daily News says, "He was as much respected by the Nonconformists as by his immediate followers. The service in his church was simple and evangelical. The poor felt they had a friend in their pastor, and the afflicted found comfort in his soothing words and gentle manner." A correspondent who knew Mr. Stent well, writes: "The half has not been told. He was such a retiring and modest man that few people know what an amount of good he has done."

MISS GILPIN.

Miss Gilpin, who died recently at Liverpool, was one of those "who do good by stealth and blush to find it fame." Born of an old Quaker stock in Bristol, she settled when quite a young woman in Liverpool; and for more than sixty years toiled to rescue those who had been worsted in life's conflicts, to shield those who were exposed to special peril, and to solace the sick, and suffering, and dying, wherever they were to be found. Miss Gilpin was a niece of the celebrated Joseph Sturge, of Birmingham, and her brother Charles was for many years M.P. for Northampton, holding the seat until his death, even against so formidable a rival as the late Mr. Bradlaugh. Early in life she left the Society of Friends, was baptized by the late Rev. Charles Birrell, became a member of Pembroke Chapel, and ultimately was transferred to the pastoral care of the late W. P. Lockhart, at Toxteth Tabernacle, where she remained in fellowship until her death. Associating herself with the late Mrs. Cropper, she gave her time, energies, and much of her means to the establishing and maintenance of the Benevolent Institution for Reclaiming Women and Girls. Many of the cases were those who, very young in years, had left the virtuous path, but were eager for a chance to recover and reclaim themselves. More than 2,000 such have passed through the institution, of whom the vast majority have been comfortably placed in honourable employment, or married and settled in homes of their own.

In addition to this, and entirely managed by herself, there was the constant taking in and caring for poor little children in her own home, these being sent to school, clothed, and fed by Miss Gilpin until able to earn their own living in domestic service or other employment for which they were qualified. Regular visits to the sick and dying in the hospitals, infirmaries, and poorhouses were paid by Miss Gilpin twice a week for many years. During the summer months she frequently took a cab-load of flowers to cheer these lonely and lowly sufferers, and that at a time when such a form of service was a novelty. It was no wonder that, with the close of such a life of tireless goodness and self-forgetting service, a large company representing all denominations and sections of society in Liverpool should gather at her graveside to pay their last tribute of affectionate esteem to her memory, and should recall with gratitude as they in spirit lay upon that grave their wreath of lilies and laurels, how she had been through many, many years "a succourer of many."

Gosport Soldiers' Home.

THE work at Gosport has been carried on since September, 1888, by the Misses Ridout. The Home is conveniently situated for the barracks, forts, musketry camp at Browndown, and the harbour. It is open daily to all soldiers, sailors, and marines. The Home, which has been enlarged twice, includes a coffee room and temperance refreshment bar, comfortable rooms for reading and writing, a large room for Bible-classes and meetings, and a small one for prayer, and a good lending library. The barracks, hospitals and ships are visited regularly, and books and papers distributed among the men.

The annual report states that "there is much cause for thankfulness for the blessing God has given during the past year. He has indeed 'done great things for us.' The numbers attending have been larger than in any previous year—more than 12,000 attendances—and a very good proportion of the men stationed here come night after night. Last August some of our Christian soldiers united with us in earnest prayer for a definite blessing on the work among their comrades. It was not long before the answer came, and night after night young recruits and older soldiers came to our meetings and told us of their desire to come to the Lord Jesus Christ.

"We continue to visit the large drafts of recruits leaving the Rifle depôt for Ireland. Some of these in course of time return to the depôt or to the battalion at Portsmouth. On visiting a detachment of the Rifle Brigade at Fort Gomer for their musketry course, several lads recognised us and said to our manager, 'We remember you, sir; you came with two ladies to see us off from the station, and we did like the books you brought us.'"

Missions to Hop-pickers.

IN addition to the useful organizations referred to in our last issue, which aim at the evangelization of the hop-pickers by means of Gospel meetings, tract distribution, and medical work, the Church of England Temperance Society undertakes a special mission during the season.

Rev. GEORGE B. CHARLES (C.E.T.S. Offices, 64, Burgate Street, Canterbury) writes:—"Our efforts take three principal directions—the provision of material comforts, such as grocery tents where cheap wholesome provisions can be obtained, refreshment barrows moving round the gardens with hot tea and coffee, shelters at the railway stations, and even the provision of simple nursing appliances, &c.; counter-attractions to the public-house, such as reading and writing rooms, quantities of edifying and also amusing literature, and lantern lectures; and last, but not least, definite reformatory influences, such as visitation, addresses, religious services, and personal talks." Mr. Charles adds that his Society's operations extend through more than 300 hop-gardens.

The British Chautauqua.—The meetings arranged to be held at Aberystwyth for the four weeks commencing July 29 promise to be more largely attended than ever. The Pier and Pavilion are taken for the Sunday afternoon services, and the preachers will be: Mr. Robert Cameron, M.P., Rev. C. H. Kelly, ex-President of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference; Rev. J. R. Wood, ex-President of the Baptist Union; and Rev. Professor Hackney, of the Pastors' College. The holiday arrangements are very complete, and the lectures and addresses to Christian workers promise to be of more than usual interest. Friends hesitating about their holiday should write to Miss B. M. Webb, of Wildwood Lodge, North End, Hampstead, N.W., for particulars.

In Whitechapel Slums.

A MEETING for prayer, praise, and testimony was recently held at the Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel Road, when many friends of Rev. Thomas Jackson, and fellow helpers of his in the Lord's work, gathered to hear the record of another year's toil for the Saviour in Whitechapel.

Alderman L. L. MORSE, ex-Mayor of Swindon, who presided, said, in opening the proceedings, that when, six years ago, in response to what he believed was a call from God, Mr. Jackson undertook the task of re-opening the Working Lads' Institute and commencing an evangelistic and medical mission, apparently without a friend in the locality to assist him, and a debt of £10,000 to grapple with, it seemed to many of his friends that he was attempting the impossible. However, the results of the past six years' work have not only surprised and pleased many Christian friends who took a deep interest in Gospel work in the East-End of London, but called forth the devout exclamation, "What hath God wrought!"

The report submitted by Mr. JACKSON stated that the outstanding feature of the past year's work was the manifest working of the Holy Spirit in their midst. The number of Jews who attend the open-air Gospel services, and give earnest and serious attention to the Word preached, is both significant and hopeful. The same persuasive presence of the Holy Spirit had been manifest in the meetings for the homeless, which had been attended by 5,500 men. Some remarkable cases of blessing have been witnessed. The Medical Mission assists an average of 1,000 suffering poor per month, and, through the ministry of healing for the body, numbers have been led to repent of sin and trust in Christ Jesus for healing of soul. The orphan and homeless lads received into the Home have in some instances made a full surrender to Christ; they are not only earning an honest livelihood, but testifying for the Saviour. The meeting for poor women, held on Monday afternoons, is a remarkable one. It has upwards of 500 members, and many homes had been made happy through mothers signing the pledge, and, better still, giving themselves to Christ. In all these efforts to bless the poor in the slums of Whitechapel, the Gospel is given the first place. After Mr. Jackson had given his interesting report the audience, uninvited, rose and sang the Doxology.

Y.W.C.A. Secretaryships.

IT has lately come to our knowledge that the workers of the Y.W.C.A., desiring to keep in touch with the needs of the rising generation, and to attract into association secretaryship women of culture and power, have opened an attractive home in Bedford Place, which combines the purpose of training home and settlement.

Here students, desiring to serve their own generation, especially the young of their generation, are given, three, six, or nine months' course of teaching on the Bible and methods of Bible study, classes on the social and spiritual needs of girls, and training in methods of meeting their present day requirements.

There are two resident superintendents: one an experienced worker accustomed to and believing in Y.W.C.A. methods for developing young womanhood; the other the secretary who superintends the work of the noon rest room and city branch, with whom students gain an insight into the management of cheap dining-rooms, of evening clubs, and of other association work.

Calls continually come to the British and World's Y.W.C.A. for well-trained and fully-equipped secretaries, and the students can ask for a salary of £100, or its equivalent of £40 to £60 with board and lodging. Untrained workers naturally cannot command so large a salary.

The term commences on September 15, and all applications should be made to Miss Brown Douglas, hon. superintendent, 32, Bedford Place, London, W.C. The charge is £1 1s. per week, or £1 5s. for a single room. May we commend this as a life work to any who, reading this, feel the call to such service?

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

THE "EDINBURGH CASTLE," E.

IT is always with regret that the folks at the "Edinburgh Castle," E. (Dr. Barnardo's), say their "good-bye" to Dr. Henry. He holds a large place in their affections. There is that about him, in his private as well as public life, that commends the Gospel he preaches. This has told upon the people, and has called forth confidence in him, and attracted earnest attention to the message of Divine truth he has proclaimed. By the blessing of the Lord the ministry of His servant has not been in vain. The faithful, fearless, and affectionate proclamation of the Gospel to the unsaved has resulted in the professed decision of many for Christ Jesus, while the opening up of Scriptural truth to Christians has been most helpful and stimulating.

The sweet singing of his colleague, Mr. Armon Jones, has by the grace of God's Spirit played an important part in the services. Mr. Jones is certainly one of the best Gospel singers it has been our privilege to hear. With a heart that knows and feels the love he sings about, accompanied by a fine, cultured voice, he captivates his hearers. We wish them both God-speed, and sincerely hope we may have the joy of fellowship with them again.

WALTER NOTMAN, Superintendent.

Another correspondent writes: Despite the vacation season and the consequent absence of workers from the services, the audiences were increasingly large, and the interest deepened from week to week. Last Sabbath morning Dr. Henry spoke from Rev. xiv. 13, on the "State of our Blessed Dead," showing that according to the Scriptures those who die in the Lord at once enjoy the personal presence of Christ and are perfected in spirit. Whatever their earthly experiences, their days in heaven are always bright and glorious.

In the afternoon, at the United P.S.A. meeting, Dr. Henry spoke on the "Peril of the Priest and Publican," showing how that they combine in their influences to cripple the child, the Church, the school, and the State. It was emphasized that the mission of both is contrary to the genius of Christianity and the spirit of human liberty.

At night there was a great congregation, and the subject was "Why I am a Christian." At the close of the sermon there was a profound spiritual impression, and many requests for prayer that the question of personal allegiance to Christ might be definitely settled. The magnificent singing of Mr. Jones was greatly appreciated, and added much both to the popularity and power of the services.

The Y.M.C.A.

THROUGH the kindness of Miss Cruddas, of Haughton Castle, the Newcastle-on-Tyne Association Lodging-house Mission is about to open a new Mission Room in Pilgrim Street.

After carrying on our work under great difficulties in unsuitable premises for many years, the way has opened to undertake a forward movement in connection with the Birmingham Association. A kind friend has given a large central freehold site of 2,300 square yards, at a cost of £6,500, and the Council are proceeding with the first portion of the building, which will cost altogether £35,000, and will provide accommodation for the effective carrying on of numerous agencies—social, intellectual, physical, and spiritual, including a hostel on modern lines for about forty young men, and ample rooms for a junior branch. Of the sum needed, about £24,000 is in sight; and the secretary, Mr. H. Whitwell, suggests that there are many former inhabitants of Birmingham in various parts of the country who will be glad to co-operate.

Holidays for Crippled Girls.

THE excellent work of the Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission (secretary, Mr. J. A. Groom, 8, Sekforde Street, Clerkenwell, E.C.) in the interests of crippled and destitute girls has been the means of providing a means of living to many who are debarred by physical deformation from entering into the ordinary pursuits of life.

As Mr. Groom points out, "it is no wonder that such girls are refused work in business establishments; hence it must be the mission of Christian people to help them. In the institutions at Clerkenwell, where they are instructed in artificial flower making, there are now one hundred of these girls under our care, and we have applications for admission from all parts, but these at present must stand over until increased accommodation is provided. We could have sold three or four times the quantity of the girls' work this year could they have made it; hence the wisdom of increasing the number of girls in training."

In all parts of London, too, Mr. Groom makes the cause of the blind and crippled girls his own; not a few of them are in depressing circumstances and amid unhealthy surroundings. Mr. Groom is anxious to provide for such a fortnight's holiday at the seaside Holiday Home at Clacton, in order that they may be strengthened in their arduous struggle for bread.

Personalia.

Rev. Dr. McKENNAL, ex-president of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, was among the visitors to Keswick Convention, and occupied a seat on the platform during some of the meetings.

Rev. A. T. JONES, pastor of Duckpool Road Baptist Church, Newport, Mon., having broken down in health, has been ordered by the doctor to have complete rest. He has nearly completed twenty-seven years as pastor of his present church.

Mr. JAMES WOOKEY, 40, Powerscroft Road, Clapton, N.E., is open to receive appointments for missions or evangelistic engagements. He is to preach at the "Edinburgh Castle" for a week in the autumn. Dr. Barnardo writes: "Be assured of my hearty interest in our gifted brother, James B. Wookey."

Captain LUKE W. BICKEL, son of Rev. Dr. Philip Bickel, of the German Baptist Mission, is now in England. Captain Bickel is engaged in a unique missionary enterprise among the numerous small islands of Japan, as missionary and sailing master of the Gospel ship Fukuin Maru; and was formerly manager of the Baptist Tract and Book Society, of London, where he made many friends.

Rev. the Hon. J. W. LEIGH, D.D., Dean of Hereford, has accepted the invitation of the Committee of the National Temperance League to succeed the late Dr. Temple in the presidency. The appointment is most appropriate from the fact that it was at a breakfast given by the League twenty-nine years ago at Leamington that Dr. Leigh, who was present as vicar, was first led to consider the temperance question, through addresses from the late Samuel Bowly and the late Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson.

DR. E. H. EDWARDS, of the Baptist Mission, T'ai Yuan Fu, and author of "Fire and Sword in Shansi," has received, in response to a memorial to the Throne of China by H. E. Wei, Acting Governor of Shansi, the Mandarin Button of the third rank. This is one of several which have been conferred on Missionaries in China in consideration of enlightened services in the settlement of the Boxer troubles, for not exacting full and deserved indemnities for losses of life and property, and for using what the Chinese themselves considered a moderate fine, for the establishment of a University for Western learning there.

It is now nearly twelve months since Mrs. TENNYSON SMITH was taken seriously ill, and on several occasions it has been feared she would not rally. She has for many years accompanied her husband on his lecturing tours, and is widely known amongst temperance people. Mr. Tennyson Smith has on several occasions sustained considerable loss in being compelled to relinquish engagements when his wife's condition was so critical that he could not leave her. We are glad to be able to say that there is a marked improvement in the condition of Mrs. Tennyson Smith, and that hopes are now entertained of her ultimate recovery.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—Mr. C. J. Price, missionary, Heaton Mersey; Mr. Devoir Thomas, Bloomfield Terrace, Blackwood; Willie Hellier, Free Street, Brecon; Mr. W. Bilton, Gospel Tent, Stanbridge, Leighton Buzzard; Pastor S. Aston Fox, 32, Holborn Avenue, Sneinton Dale, Nottingham; Mr. T. H. Franklin, 4, Roxton Villas, Stratford Road, Hendon. London. N.W.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

The Open-Air Mission.

FOUR workers from this Mission spent a week in July in the parish of St. Mary's, New Wortley, Leeds, and had particularly effective meetings. The missioners were Messrs. GRAY, BIRD, ALEXANDER, and PARKER. Brief services were held, and visits paid in the streets every morning, and in the evening a large audience assembled to listen to the preaching of the Gospel. The Christian people rallied round the evangelists, and as a result of the faithful and powerful presentation of the Gospel message a considerable number made open profession of their intention to trust in the Saviour alone for forgiveness of sin. The two clergy of the parish, Revs. H. R. T. Jackson and J. Foster, joined in the open-air work, and were deeply grateful for, and much encouraged by, the manifest tokens of the Lord's presence and blessing. J.

At Lancaster, during the past week, we have been favoured with the help of Messrs. ALEXANDER, BIRD, GRAY, and PARKER, of the Open-Air Mission, and Mr. SMITH, an evangelist from Scotland. During the daytime gatherings have been held in the surrounding villages, and at night good meetings were held in the Market Square. Saturday, being the missioner's off-day, services were held at Morecambe during the day time, and at night a good meeting was held under the portico of the Town Hall. On Lord's Day our brethren took part in ten services, commencing at 9.30 a.m. and finishing at 9.50 p.m. The closing meeting in front of the Town Hall was of a very impressive character, and Christians of all denominations gathered round to assist. During the week services were held at the works of Lord Ashton and Messrs. Helmes. These annual visits of our friends are much appreciated by the people of Lancaster, and we believe that lasting impressions are made upon many who do not attend any place of worship.

G. H. WEEKES,
Hon. Secretary, Town Mission.

Tent Mission at Aylesbury.

The tent mission conducted by Mr. FRANK PENFOLD has been continued. The glorious ingathering of the first week has created great interest throughout the town, so that during the second week the attendances have increased. During the past two days further interest has been manifest through the visit of Mrs. Oakley (Gipsy Smith's sister), who has given very powerful appeals, and who by her individual dealings has led many to see Christ crucified for them. Mrs. Holt (of Luton) and Mr. Willett (of Hove) have also rendered good service in support of Mr. Penfold, whose addresses are proving so helpful. The power of God has been manifest each day in the conversion of many souls—glory to His name. The newly-converted, mostly young men, are being used by their testimonies and their lives to extend Christ's kingdom.

J. W.

Rev. J. H. TUCKWELL is meeting with encouragement in his efforts to counteract infidel speakers in Hyde Park. On Lord's Day last he addressed a large crowd of those who frequent the Park. He spoke on Christian evidences, and also preached the Gospel.

Mr. WILLIAM FORBES has held a tea and meeting for the employees of the Winter Gardens, Blackpool It was held in the Victoria Hall at the Winter Gardens. Rev. G. O. BAINTON (Bethesda Congregational Church) and Mr. LEMUEL JONES (Y.M.C.A.) took part.

A three weeks' mission has been conducted by Mr. H. J. ANDREWS and his helpers from June 18 to July 9, in a field (kindly lent by Mr. F. Smith) at East Peckham, Kent. Meetings for children and adults were well attended, and blessing was derived from the expositions of mere Scripture.

The Free Churches of Enfield have held an Open-air mission in that populous centre, no fewer than 100 meetings being arranged. Vans were chartered and decorated with banners and texts, and illuminated. A plan was carefully drawn up giving details of speakers, soloists, tract distributors, and instrumentalists. Many non-churchgoers heard the Gospel message.

Rev. JOHN MCNEILL made his third visit to Blackpool on Lord's Day last, when some 6,000 or 8,000 people gathered at the three services in the Winter Gardens Pavilion. The Tower and Hippodrome having been secured on the previous visits; an attempt has thus been made to reach and influence the frequenters of these centres of amusement. The buildings have been well-filled on each occasion.

G. J.

Mr. Sidney Vivian, of the Evangelization Society, concluded, last week, a month's tent services in Dawley, Salop, which have been of a very successful character. Each of the local Free Church ministers co-operated with the missioner; upwards of fifty prominent workers connected with the various churches were engaged in house-to-house visitation, &c. Special meetings were held in the open-air, and there were also gatherings for men only and women only. Some have professed conversion, and many have been led to seek a life of fuller consecration.

Church of England.

It has been decided to establish in Bury, Lancs., a Refuge for the help and protection of women and girls, especially with the object of rescuing the fallen. The Home, which will be the first organized effort in the town for the purpose, will be under the auspices of the Church of England, but its doors will be open to all needing help and protection.

The council which, on the appointment of Dr. Barlow to the Deanery of Peterborough, took over the management of the Islington Clerical Meeting has now retired from office. The meeting will therefore resume its original character. The guests will assemble at the personal invitation of the vicar of Islington, who will preside. For 1904, the help of the Bishop of Durham and of the Dean of Canterbury has been promised.

The Bishop of Durham, on the afternoon of Saturday week, preached at the miners' service in Durham Cathedral. This service has been held annually for about seven years on the day of the miners' festival, which brings into Durham vast numbers of the mining population of the county. It has been always a popular service, and on this occasion the great spaces of the Cathedral were nearly filled by the men with members of their families.

In the course of a leading article on the late Pope, The Record says:—"The bulletins and the reports were so contradictory that it has been impossible to feel sure of anything that was published. We have been told, cynically, that false reports as to the patient were issued for political reasons. An important official of the Conclave died suddenly and mysteriously immediately after his appointment. Another is reported to be dangerously ill. We have read of ignoble bickerings and even of open disputes between various Cardinals, especially between the Secretary of State and the Chamberlain. All these things may be accidents. They certainly are misfortunes; and they fit in only too well with that character for suspicion and intrigue which adheres to the Vatican. Whenever the curtain is lifted, as in 'Manning's Life,' these popular and permanent suspicions are confirmed."

Congregational.

Rev. B. Vaughan Pryce, LL.B., son of Principal Vaughan Price, of New College, Hampstead, has accepted a unanimous invitation to the pastorate of the church at Clifton Down, Bristol.

Rev. W. H. Towers has closed his pastorate at Oldham Road, Manchester, which he has held for seventeen years. He will commence his ministry in Chester on the first Sunday in September.

A new mission hall at Hest Bank, near Lancaster, erected at a cost of between £700 and £800, was opened a few days ago by Miss S. S. Dawson, of Lancaster, the opening sermon being preached by Rev. S. Pearson, of Manchester. There has been a Congregational "cause" at Hest Bank for over forty years, and the development of the place as a residential and health resort led the Lancashire Congregational Union to decide upon the erection of a suitable place of worship.

Baptist.

The Meersbrook Mission, in connection with Cemetery Road, Sheffield, continues to prosper. Both week night and Sunday services are increasing in numbers, and in the report of their work the friends write with "a heart full of gratitude, for the Lord hath been mindful of us, and He will bless us."

Leeds Baptists have opened a new chapel at Beeston Hill, where a large building has been dedicated for worship. The school chapel, hitherto used for all requirements, had long been sadly inadequate to the needs and possibilities of this earnest church. Rev. C. W. Bonell has endeared himself to his flock by his fifteen years' labour among them, and the future prospects are bright.

The interesting ceremony of opening the enlarged and practically new chapel at Wilmot Road, Swadlincote, took place on July 15. The old chapel was purchased from the Primitive Methodists. The total amount required to free the building from debt, including the purchase of a piece of land for future extension, is about £850. Towards this amount about £300 has been raised. The first service was conducted by Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, of Leicester.

Anniversary services have been held at Warrington in connection with the settlement of Rev. H. Dunnico, who preached morning and evening. At the evening service the pastor, in speaking of the blessing which had attended the efforts of the past year, stated that he believed the secret of this lay in the fact that people had sought and found God. Large congregations were a marked feature of all the services, while in the evening the church was filled to overflowing.

Methodist.

Rev. W. W. Howard, the new superintendent of Durham Circuit (New Connexion), has held a special meeting to consider the spiritual state of the circuit, and to take action for a "forward movement."

The first annual festival of the Bolton Mission was held on Sunday week. Rev. C. W. Andrews, B.D., presided over one of the most interesting gatherings in the history of the mission. The great building was nearly filled with the members of the various organizations that have a place in the busy life of this growing branch of the Methodist Church. The Sunday-school was represented by nearly 500 scholars, a large proportion of whom were over fifteen years of age. The women's meeting had about 200 members present.

The annual circuit Convention is a joyous anticipation to hundreds of Wesleyans at St. Neots, Hunts. It is held in a different place each year, and so the villagers in turn realize their responsibility, and find themselves important centres. This year's Convention was held at Eltisley, and there was a good rally from all the churches. In the afternoon Rev. J. E. Wakerley preached an inspiring sermon from Mark vi. 45, to a large congregation. Tea in a barn followed, and the tent was crowded for the evening meeting. The chair was taken by Mr. F. Litchfield, and Mr. Wakerley gave a stirring address on Village Methodism.

Sister Elizabeth, of the West London Mission (Cleveland Hall, Cleveland Street, W.), writes:—"The competition of London life falls very heavily on some of the most hard-working of the community. Directly a woman is a little old, or a little delicate, her chance of earning a livelihood becomes precarious. I wish your readers could hear the stories told in the little office where I write. We have at present far more applications for daily work than we can meet, and no one can imagine how distressing it is to refuse people who want work and are starving for want of it. Will ladies requiring charwomen or caretakers kindly write to us?

The South African Wesleyan Conference some time ago commissioned Rev. J. Smith Spencer to engage and send out a number of young men suitable for the ministry. After personal interviews and the examination of manuscript sermons, sixteen young men were selected. Prior to their sailing, a valedictory service was arranged, and a large congregation gathered at Queen's Road Church, Peckham, S.E., to bid good-bye and God-speed to the candidates. Mr. Smith Spencer presided, and invited the young men to give a brief account of their conversion and call to the ministry. Amid breathless interest and deep devoutness of feeling, one by one they told the story of their conversion and call. Almost without exception, the beginnings of their Christian life were attributed to the influence of godly parents.

Presbyterian.

The members of the College Road Presbyterian Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, at a meeting held on the 15th inst., decided to appoint an assistant to their minister (Rev. Richard Leitch), and the office-bearers were instructed to proceed at once with the necessary arrangements. Mr. Leitch has been minister of the congregation for over forty years.

Society of Friends.

In connection with the work of the Howard Association, Edward Grubb visited the convict prison at Princetown, Dartmoor, recently. In the evening he returned to Plymouth, and gave an excellent address on "Quakerism—its inner strength, and outer weakness," at Mutley meeting-house, to a deeply-interested audience. Edward Grubb was present at several other meetings, and also addressed the Adult School.

At Durham quarterly meeting, the prospective Conference on the Ministry provoked some questioning, partly because it had issued from a consideration of the subject in the men's meeting at yearly meeting, and women Friends were therefore wishful for more information than is contained in printed documents. A committee to nominate twenty-four representatives was appointed. The previous meeting for worship was full of service, the ministry being largely concerned with John's words, "I write unto you . . . because ye are strong."

The deputation of three Friends, Margaret W. Haines, with her daughter Mary Morton Haines, and Asa S. Wing, appointed by Philadelphia Friends' Missionary Association to visit their mission work in Japan, have returned home in good health. They speak of the kindly spirit of brotherly love manifested by the missionaries as being especially pleasing, and add that it was very precious to find that this spirit of love and goodwill pervaded all, with no feeling of rivalry or jealousy, but that all were united in the one great work of spreading the Gospel.

In connection with the Holborn Gospel Temperance and Electoral Union open-air meetings are held in the district of Bloomsbury, W.C., on Sunday evenings. The annual report says:—"We rejoice in the conversion of some; hundreds of pledges have been taken; and thousands have heard the Gospel." Much tract distribution is done, and house-to-house visitation undertaken in furtherance of the Gospel Temperance cause. More workers are urgently needed. Particulars may be obtained from Mr. H. E. Bridger, 20, Pratt Street, Camden Town, N.W.

Fallen Asleep.

South Cliff Congregational Church, Scarborough, mourns the loss of its oldest member, Mrs. Jane Dobson, aged eighty-three. She was an abstainer for the last sixty-five years, and for the greater part of her life was an energetic church worker.—Mrs. Hewitt, a well-known Baptist of Jamaica, widow of Rev. E. Hewitt, daughter of Rev. Thomas Burchell, and mother of Rev. E. J. Hewitt. So greatly was Mrs. Hewitt esteemed, and so large a part has she taken in the interests of the denomination in Jamaica that she was usually referred to as "Mother" Hewitt.—Mr. James Grierson, one of the elders of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Hampstead. He expired suddenly during the week-night prayer meeting in the church hall.—A veteran Wesleyan, Mr. Richard Smith, of Padiham. In 1837 Mr. Smith commenced his career as a Sunday-school teacher. For sixty-five years he had been in harness. Fifty years he taught every Sunday morning and afternoon, and he was never late.—Mr. William Makepeace, who fell asleep on the 13th inst. at the house of his son, Pastor Makepeace, of the Gospel Union Mission, Northwick. He was for forty-two years a local preacher in the Primitive Methodist Connexion at Whitchurch, near Aylesbury, Bucks.

The Lord's Day in Belfast.—A great victory for Sunday observance has been won in Belfast. A few weeks ago, at the close of the business of the City Council, when nearly all the members had left, a motion was carried in favour of a delivery of letters in the city on the Lord's Day. As soon as this became known protests were uttered by the Presbytery of Belfast, the Belfast Methodist Council, and other public bodies. Moreover, a requisition to the Lord Mayor was influentially signed asking him to convene a special meeting of the Council to rescind the motion above referred to. Accordingly this special meeting was summoned, and three deputations waited on it, one representing the Presbyterian Church, another representing the Irish Church, and a third representing the Methodist Church, and the upshot of the whole matter was that the resolution to have a Sunday delivery of letters in the city was rescinded by twenty-eight votes to six. This is a great triumph, and one which will prevent any other public attempt in Belfast to violate the rest of the Sabbath for many years to come.

Women's Holiday Fund—Mrs. R., 10s.

Rescue and Evangelization Mission.

THE various departments of this organization are being carried on with vigour, and God is giving much blessing on the evangelistic work at Sheffield and Barnstaple both in the mission halls and in the open air. In the former town Rev. W. A. and Mrs. Wright have secured a band of helpers, and commenced, in four new centres of the city, open-air services, in addition to those which have been worked by the Thomas Street Mission for years past. Several have professed to find the Lord in the open-air—two young women in one service recently, who have attended as often as possible since.

In The Home for Girls and Women we received a woman from one of the large towns of Yorkshire. She was addicted to taking drink, and had a disreputable appearance. She stayed awhile, then took several short terms of service, and returned for a few weeks. She improved greatly, and is now in a situation as housekeeper — happy, respected, and useful. During last year 118 cases were dealt with. We ask the prayers of all God's people on our work in the Mission stations, visiting, and in The Haven.

(Mrs.) E. CORBRIDGE.

The Indigent Blind Visiting Society.

The object of this Society is to improve the condition of the blind resident in and near London, by providing them with (1) Readers of the Scriptures at their own homes; (2) Instruction in Reading, Writing, Knitting, and other branches of education; (3) Temporal Relief where needed.

By a recent Evangelistic Mission the Society reached nearly two thousand blind persons of both sexes. The Samaritan Fund has come to the help of many who would otherwise have been thrown upon the streets. Funds are urgently needed.

Full particulars from Annual Report, to be had from the Secretary, I.B.V.S., 8, Red Lion Square, W.C.; or the Superintendent (Mr. W. Mead), 95, Gurney Road, Stratford, E.

The Royal Irish Visit. It is to be devoutly hoped that the happy and loyal reception accorded to the King and Queen during their visit to Ireland, will help to deepen the favourable impression left on the minds of thoughtful Irishmen by the Land Act just passed, and inaugurate a new era of goodwill and prosperity in the Emerald Isle. The relations of the two islands have for centuries been strained. Gradually this has been modified, and during the last year or two, both in Parliament and in the country at large, there has been a more hopeful and cordial feeling all round. The genial presence of the Royal couple during their tour has deepened the impression left on the populace by the visit of the late Queen, which was one of her last public acts, and was actuated by the kindliest motives. If leaders and people frankly join in meeting these overtures of friendship—which are representative of the true feelings of Englishmen—it will be a good thing for Ireland.

Pope and King. Perhaps the insatiable political ambition of the Papacy has rarely been more evident than it was in the manœuvres which took place to bring about the late visit of the King to the Vatican. A writer in the current number of The Sunday at Home throws a somewhat lurid light upon these "backstairs" negotiations. The revelation is interesting and valuable in face of the fact that the Romanist papers have shown no little anxiety to make it appear that it was not the Vatican that sought and laboured for the interview. The atmosphere of Jesuitry and cunning into which the writer of the article introduces us is by no means a healthy one, but it is just what Rome delights in. In this connection, our readers should refer to Dr. Alexander Robertson's article on "The Papal Election," which appears on page 10.

"He Abideth Faithful." The sceptic whose words are quoted on page 13 should feel foolish when he reads, as we hope he will, the recent report of the Bristol Orphan Homes. What a sure Rock and Defence is the God in whom we trust! Well may we "cease from man," be he an infidel, like the gentleman referred to, or a holy man like George Müller—for the home-call of the latter has in no degree impoverished the exchequer of the Homes. "God buries His workmen, but carries on His work." When infidelity can maintain a mission of love like this, year in and year out, it will have some claim upon the attention of men, but not before.

Courtesy at Public Meetings. Our attention has been called by a correspondent to a practice at conventions and other gatherings which is apt to disturb that equanimity which ought to prevail at such times. It is often found that a few individuals place themselves at the ends of benches or pews, rendering the inner seats more difficult of access. The inconvenience thus caused might be obviated by the exercise of a little Christian courtesy and thoughtfulness: and we feel sure that in many cases the matter only requires to be mentioned in order to secure attention.

Abusing the Weather. The recent spell of wet weather has given prominence to an irreverent tendency of using terms which imply a kind of reflection on the Almighty for permitting such a succession of rainy days. A little thought will show that this is a gravely improper attitude. The weather, like all natural phenomena, is the direct work of God—"He maketh it to rain." When we disparage or satirize it, we are really passing a reflection upon His providence. Apart from this, to judge of the weather purely from our own standpoint is a selfish and degrading act. The Creator has world-wide ends to serve, in giving or withholding rain, and our duty is to enjoy thankfully such weather as we like, and bear the rest with patience and humility. He was a wise man who, when questioned as to his satisfaction at "bad weather," replied: "Whenever it rains it pleases God; and when it pleases Him it pleases me."

Suppressed Profanity. We cull the following extract from the headlines of a daily newspaper:—

Weather forecast—wet, sloppy, with much wind. The only adequate comment is unfit for publication.

We hear, sometimes, too, of "profane silence," attributed to golfers and others. Such references are supposed to be witty; in reality they are only vulgar, and in the end they help on the evil they profess to deprecate. It is not necessary to give vocal utterance to an oath in order to be guilty of profanity. An inward feeling may constitute a sin as truly as an overt act. We may never soil our lips with an obscene or irreverent expression, and yet be deeply guilty of transgressing the second commandment. True self-respect demands the repression of not only the language but the impulse of profanity.

Grace Before Meat. Preaching at St. Paul's Cathedral recently, Bishop Welldon, dealing with the subject of Sanctification (1 Thess. v. 23), remarked that certain virtues, "and those the holiest and the highest," grow up naturally under the shadow of the Cross, that being their proper climate. Touching upon the sanctification of the body (1 Cor. x. 31), he said:—

I am afraid that a good many of the Christians of the present day do not reflect much or often about the possibility of eating or drinking to the glory of God. . . . I am afraid, too, that the practice of saying grace is dying out in Christian society, and if we do not thank God for the food which He supplies it can hardly be said that we eat it to His glory.

There certainly is good ground for Dr. Welldon's fear, for, like other helpful practices usual in the family life of some years ago, that of grace before meat seems to be far less general at the present day. Yet the example was set by our Lord Himself, who when He took food or gave it to others invariably gave thanks (John vi. 23; Mark viii. 6).

The Harmony of Positive Life. The Christian life is, above all things, something positive and definite. It does not consist of a number of prohibitions. It begins with a beatitude, not a "Thou shalt not." If this were only understood and experienced, many of the questions which perplex young Christians especially need never arise. A strong positive life possesses the power of adjusting all minor things that come into it. We are continually asked whether this or that thing is "right for a Christian to do." Those who ask the question are often in bondage to current opinion, or to their own fears. Instead of examining the disputed thing in its own light, or in the light of other people's judgments, the right thing to do is so to cultivate the positive Christian life with all its spiritual force, that all things which present the appearance of discords may be naturally resolved into the harmony of a positive life. The life that lacks this positive note has always to face a number of separate discords; the life that possesses it views the discords from the standpoint of the established harmony, and they present no difficulty. And what is the positive life? It is the full acceptance of the Lord Jesus as Mediator, Master, and Model.

Drink and Crime. The terrible incidents recorded on p. 13 by Rev. A. G. Townshend point yet one more forcible lesson as to the awful power of drink. It seems inconceivable that any legislators should be so blinded by prejudice or personal considerations that they cannot or will not discern facts that are as plain as if they were written on the sky. Yet while they are pandering to this leviathan of national destruction, the gruesome work goes on; and young men in the prime of life, fair women, and little children are being sacrificed daily to this relentless traffic.

The Magistrates and the Premier. The meeting of the magistrates at Derby a few days ago, ought to go far to satisfy the Government that their defence of the brewer and the publican is likely to produce results very different to those which they promised them. Mr. Balfour's recent speech has evoked a strong and growing feeling for the maintenance of the integrity of the Bench, and against the creation of vested interests in the drink business. This "monstrous cancer" (as a contemporary terms the brewers' "evil trade"), with its pernicious influence upon politics, has already done harm enough, and it is for the Christian community to strive earnestly to prevent the carrying out of the iniquitous plan of retrospective compensation to those who have so seriously interfered with the nation's progress in religion and morality.

"A Sorry Day for England!" Mr. Howard Tripp's paper in the National Review, entitled "A Practical Scheme for Solving the Licensing Question," may be placed in the first rank of illustrations of special pleading. Coming from the pen of the managing director of a large brewing company, owning a number of tied houses, the general tone of the article may easily be guessed; but it is surprising and, happily, unusual, to find a defender of the drink trade asking, in regard to the public objection to compensation, "Has religion lost its force?" Surely the strength of the public feeling in favour of the reduction in the number of licences affords a satisfactory answer to the question. Mr. Tripp is surprised that "for the first time in the history of the trade, licences have been refused on the ground that they were not required;" and he thinks that it will be "a sorry day for England and a sad day for our institutions" if "respectable citizens" are to be deprived of their business for "some expected public good"! He has no word of sympathy, however, for the myriads whom the "respectable citizens" have brought to the lunatic asylum, the workhouse, the gaol, and the grave.

Exposition of the Word. A correspondent in the Examiner puts in a strong plea for a return to the time-honoured but now neglected custom of a running exposition of the Bible in public worship, such as Spurgeon and Moody were accustomed to use so happily and helpfully:—

> How very few ministers do more than just, even slovenly, read the first and second lesson, without the smallest exposition of what some involved passages mean?

In view of the lamentable ignorance of many Christian people of Scripture nowadays, the suggestion is worth careful consideration on the part of all preachers. But Bible exposition, to be effective, must be the result of hard and prayerful study.

"Shop Manners." That excellent trade journal, The Draper, has been discussing "Shop manners," and brings a severe indictment against ladies as to their treatment of shop assistants:—

> Nine women out of ten never think of saying Thank you, whatever service you may do for them; and the young people behind the counter are generally reminded that they are only young persons put there to do their calling. . . . Women are seen at their worst when out shopping.

We fear, judging from the independent testimony of many "assistants," that there is too much truth in this charge. Customers may well remember the long hours, the trying conditions, the monotony, and the wearisome detail of shop life, and try to make the duty as pleasant as possible to these young people, who, perforce, cannot "answer back"!

The Nemesis of Speculation. The terrible financial shock that has recently come to many members of the American Stock Exchange bears a much needed lesson to speculators and gamblers in public money. At one stroke the fortunes of millionaires have shrunk, in some cases comparatively to very small dimensions. The Secretary of Agriculture, in an interview which has been telegraphed to this country, attributes the collapse not to industrial failure, but to the tactics of the stockbrokers in placing fictitious values on securities for the purpose of selling to innocent people. For a time this sort of thing succeeds, but in the nature of the case a crash is inevitable sooner or later. Men cannot with impunity ignore law in the financial world any more than they can in the physical or spiritual worlds. These collapses and financial failures can be traced to one root, covetousness, which is idolatry. Men will be rich, and that quickly, and at any cost. But the cost is fearful. Such a disaster as the Wall Street failure emphasises one side of it only. Financial ruin touches the popular imagination. Yet the moral cost is the most serious thing, but as that is more hidden, men do not heed it. The present age has taken upon itself the blasphemous task of criticising our Lord Jesus Christ. If it would heed Him instead, life would be very different from what it is. Men put their trust in the material kingdoms of the world. The Saviour still says, "Seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these (material) things shall be added unto you."

The Consecration of the Motor. A correspondent suggests that now motor-cars and bicycles are becoming so numerous better provision for their entertainment should be made in country towns and villages on temperance lines. This is being well done in many centres of population, but in out-of-the-way places much more is required, and if it were done properly it would probably justify the initial expense. The same writer suggests that these rapid vehicles might become very useful for evangelistic purposes in many little villages and hamlets that are too small to have places of worship of their own, but which during the long, dry evenings of summer would be ideal for open-air meetings. "If," he pertinently asks, "the bells on the horses of old were to be inscribed 'holiness unto the Lord,' how much more should the bells on the bicycle and the motor be similarly sanctified."

The Papal Election.

By Rev. ALEX. ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

THE election of a successor to Leo XIII. lies within the Sacred College, which consists of sixty-four cardinals, namely, thirty-nine Italian, seven French, five Spanish, five Austrian, three German, three Anglo-Saxon and Irish, one Belgian, and one Portuguese. As an Italian Cardinal is ill, and the Australian one cannot arrive in time, sixty-two cardinals will actually take part in the election. Under the pretence of securing them from outside influence the Vatican has been turned into a kind of prison. All the doors and windows on the first floor of the Vatican have been bricked up, except one leading to the Royal staircase. Sixty-two cells have been erected, one for each cardinal.

They are called cells, but they are really gorgeously-furnished apartments, each consisting of sitting-room, bedroom, and study for a cardinal, besides rooms for his secretaries and servants. All telegraphic and telephonic connection with the outside world has been cut off. This "imprisonment" may have been once necessary, when on the death of a Pope all law and order were at an end, and the election of a new one was accompanied by open riots and bloodshed, murders, and all kinds of wild orgies inside and outside the Vatican. But now, under the Italian Government, which maintains liberty and order (to which, without doubt, Leo XIII. owed, to a large extent, his longevity), this imprisonment is only a sham.

As by law the Cardinals must enter into Conclave within ten days of the death of the Pope, they did so last night, and the election begins to-day, August 1. On Friday afternoon there entered the Vatican "prison" sixty-two Cardinals, sixty-two secretaries, sixty-two personal servants, one priest-confessor of the Sacred College, two secretaries of the same, six custodians and servants, two physicians, one druggist, one surgeon, four barbers, twenty porters and other servants—in all some 250 people. Most of the Cardinals have their food alone, in their respective cells, but some dozen of them have resolved to have a common table.

In the Sistine Chapel sixty-two thrones have been erected, all covered with gold and purple, and having large canopies overhead. These canopies are held in place by ropes and pullies, and as soon as the name of the new Pope is announced they all fall down flat to the wall with the exception of that of the throne of the Cardinal elected. All the other Cardinals at once approach him and make obeisance. The new Pope must secure forty-two votes. As the world knows, the Sacred College is divided up into cliques and parties, each intriguing against the other and using fair means and foul to gain the upper hand.

The Italian newspapers say that it is impossible to exaggerate the intrigues that go on, which would disgrace any political election. The mode of conducting the election is by scrutiny. The papers are put in an urn in front of an altar in the chapel and examined. The new Pope might be elected at once, but generally many sham votings take place. Sometimes this is done to draw the veto of Austria, or France, or Spain, and so to get rid of their interference, for each country can only exercise it once. The Conclave misleads these Powers by sham votes. And all this in order that the Pope to be elected shall be the Pope the Jesuits choose, and none other.

The Jesuits control the election, as they control the doings of the Papal Church down to its remotest details. And the Italian newspapers say that they have selected a Cardinal who is without character, without will—a man who is colourless, a nonentity, and, therefore, one plastic in their hands. But, as soon as he is elected, these same Jesuits will proclaim him before the world as a hero, and as a saint, as a man of extraordinary powers of mind, of superlative energy, and of saintly goodness of heart and life. They will make him say fine things, and initiate fine projects, just the things that a Pope of great nobility of soul should say and do, whilst all the time he is an automaton, moving as they pull the strings. In these matters, Italy is never mistaken, and is not easily deceived; the pity is that Protestant countries are, and that thus they, fooled by the Jesuits, very often unconsciously, laud what is evil, and aid them in their evil designs.

 In the end the Conclave elected Cardinal Guiseppe Sarto, Patriarch of Venice, and the chorus of adulation which Dr. Robertson indicates in the above article as certain to come, has already broken out. Cardinal Sarto, who becomes Pius X., is "above all, a spiritual ecclesiastic," and "a lover of justice," and so forth. Those who are alive to the blasphemous character of the pretensions of the Papacy will pay little heed to such flattery, obviously inspired.

Directory of the Devout Life.

Silent Influence.

(Matt. v. 13-16.)

BEING IS DOING. Our greatest work for God and man is to be. The influence of a holy life is our greatest contribution to the salvation and blessing of the world. Though you cannot preach, or teach, or engage in some sphere of Christian service, do not be greatly moved, if only you can live the life of God amongst men. Our Lord for thirty years was content to live an absolutely holy life, as the Lamb of God without blemish and without spot; and His supreme work in the world was not only to give His life as a ransom, but to live His life that He might leave us an example that we should follow His steps.

Too many Christians seem to suppose that the main object of life is to engage in a sphere of direct service, whilst they leave their personal character to take care of itself, and to develop almost at haphazard; whereas our main thought and care should be that Christ should be formed in us, and be revealed in every look and gesture, every word and act. Out of that will come naturally, inevitably, and blessedly our direct Christian service. The best work is that which arises out of the simplicity and beauty of our witness for truth and love.

We must, of course, guard against extremes. On the one hand, we may attempt so much service as to neglect that inner culture which is priceless in its effect on service, and our personal inconsistencies will neutralize the effect of our Christian activities. On the other hand, we may sincerely believe that we are cultivating our character, when, in fact, we are sinking into a dreamy lethargy, from which we need to be aroused by the trumpet-call of duty to a dying world. We are apt to forget that the development of the inner life is not perfect, unless it issue in such going about doing good, as was the flower and fruit of our Saviour's thirty years.

Though Persecuted. Our Lord had been describing the reception which the type of character that He had come to implant would certainly encounter. Instead of attracting men by its heavenly beauty, it would certainly repel them. Instead of commendation and welcome, it would arouse dislike and rebuff. The great world of men would not appreciate the poor in spirit, the mourner, the meek and merciful, the pure in heart or maker of peace, but would reproach, and persecute, and say all manner of evil falsely. But, notwithstanding all, He insisted that they should continue to bless the world by the silent and gracious influence of holy lives. Reviled, they must bless; persecuted, they must endure; defamed, they must entreat; threatened with death, they must still be as salt to their persecutors, and as light to their defamers.

However men receive our testimony, whatever they may say and do against us, notwithstanding the unreasonableness of their dislike, we must continue to be what our Lord would have us be; nay, we must let Him who is within us shine forth through us, so that men may be compelled to admit that the unearthly beauty of our lives is the supreme proof of the divinity and glory of our religion.

You ask, What is the good of being good? Your detractors and oppressors vaunt themselves over you, take every advantage of your quiet unresisting gentleness, and misinterpret your self-restraint. It would almost appear that they are driven to greater extremes of wickedness because of the provocation of your goodness. The soldiers of the Roman governor probably never mocked one of their ordinary victims as they did the holy unresisting Saviour. The gentle and loving wife will sometimes extract the most malignant and bitter hatred of her husband, such as he would show to no other. But you do not know how your behaviour is beginning to thaw that iron-frozen soil, how often and deeply compunction is at work, or how nearly the hatred of your oppressor is being overcome by love. The spring warmth may seem to fall on the frozen masses of snow and ice in vain, but every hour of sunshine is sapping the reign of the ice-king, and hastening the inevitable break-up of his supremacy.

That working-man who has borne the insults of his shopmates for Christ, will presently have the ringleader come to beg his pardon, and with tears in his eyes ask him to pray for him. That oppressed wife will have the pleasure of leading her penitent husband to the cross. That sister will be won by her sister, who has borne contumely and reproach with unswerving gentleness. Be of good cheer, your sufferings will have their most blessed result in overcoming evil by good, as we have said. Remember the apostle speaks of "the kingdom and patience of Jesus," which means that patient suffering ultimately secures a blessed supremacy, a royalty, an overmastery of hardness and unkindness by gentleness, truth, and love.

When the Forth Bridge was in making, the workmen came to a crucial point, where two of the most important iron girders refused by some inches to come together for the bolts to be driven through—a process which was absolutely essential to their union and the stability of the whole fabric. Every mechanical method to bring them together was tried to no purpose; and finally, in despair, all further efforts were abandoned for the night. It was summer weather, and the sunshine of the following morning was very hot, so much so that the great masses of metal expanded beneath the genial rays, and the results were achieved by the silent touch of the sun which had defied the utmost efforts of force. So in human life. Consistency of character, purity, gentleness, sweetness, such holy living as issues from the qualities which our Lord has just enumerated, will avail when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and the strong men shall bow themselves.

The Lord knew well the condition of the world. To His holy and unerring judgment it was a carcase slowly rotting to putrefaction, and sorely needing some influence to stay its corruption. There was never an epoch in the world's history fuller of dazzling genius than that in which He was born. Some of the most brilliant names of history were shining still in the midnight sky when the bright and morning star arose over Bethlehem. But the grossness of the age was unparalleled and indescribable. The allusions made to it in the Epistles are sufficiently terrible, but the whole truth is only revealed in classic literature itself, which survives to show that the earth was corrupt before God, and that every imagination of the thoughts of man's heart was only evil continually.

In our Lord's eyes, also, to advert to the other metaphor, the world lay under the power of thick darkness. In its wisdom it knew not God. Professing themselves wise, men had become fools. The god of this world had blinded the eyes of those who believed not, and they groped in the noontide as in the murky midnight. Such has been, is, and will be the condition of men without the Gospel. The history of the human family is always repeating itself. We cannot be surprised, either at the description given by missionaries of the awful condition of heathen countries, or at the outbreaks of lawlessness and crime in nations which are only nominally Christian. Our inventions, organizations, and boasted civilization may affect the exterior of society; but if it were not for the presence of the Church of the Lord Jesus, and the witness borne by the lives and words of her members, there would be nothing to save it from the pit of corruption, which has swallowed up every great nation that has arisen to lead the race.

Men rage against "Exeter Hall," and revile what is called "the Nonconformist Conscience" as they did against the Puritans in bygone centuries, not realizing that they evince the antagonism of corruption to the salt, and of darkness to the light, and that the very existence of our society is more largely due than they suppose to the very elements they so much dislike.

Salt. Our consistent holy living will act as an antiseptic to arrest the corruption around us. It is said that the presence of a little child, with its blue-eyed simplicity and purity, has often arrested the commission of dark crimes; and as much should be said of the influence of our own daily living. A sudden silence should fall on certain kinds of conversation when we enter the room. This or the other form of worldly amusement which has entered professedly Christian homes, should be felt out of place when we are staying there. And right through the society in which we move, there should be a consciousness of incongruity between our character and all that savours of impurity, falsehood, or selfishness.

We do not want to impose a sense of restraint and gloom on social gatherings when we enter. Our presence should be an incentive to the merriment of the children, the cheer of the depressed, the gladness of young and old. Flowers should burst into beauty at our steps, songs should overflow in our paths, and innocent laughter should be our accompaniment. The mountains and the hills should break forth before us into singing, and all the trees of the field should clap their hands. Instead of the thorn should come up the fir-tree, and instead of the briar the myrtle tree. But to all that is unseemly and unworthy, our presence should act as an antiseptic.

A young boy, fresh from his mother's teaching and prayers, was plunged suddenly into a large lawyer's office, where he was articled. At first he was bewildered by his strange surroundings; then the crimson mantled his cheek, and tears brimmed in his eyes. "What's the matter with you, youngster?" said a coarse voice. "Do you want to go back to your mother's apron-strings?" "No," was the reply, "but we never said such things in my mother's home as you say here." The answer elicited a burst of laughter, but the head of the office said: "Gentlemen, this lad is right, and as long as he stays with us, I must request that you modify your speech." And from that moment the whole tone of that office was altered. The lad's presence acted as salt.

We may easily lose our savour. Salt left in contact with a damp soil ceases to be salty, and is good for nothing but to be trodden under foot. It is neither fit for the ground nor the dunghill. Lot lost his savour. Sodom went on its way, regardless of his presence in its midst. The Seven Churches of Asia lost their savour, and, with those of Northern Africa, were trodden down by the Moslem. Nothing is so useless and worthless as an inconsistent and powerless Christian (Ezek. xv. 3-5). Oh, break your heart if sin is as shameless and reckless in your presence as in your absence! What have you done to forfeit the power you should exert? Repent, and do the first works! Yea, ask the Lord Jesus to infuse into you His own strong, sweet, pure nature, before whom the demons were driven forth, and by whose presence, through His Church in the world, an arrest has been placed on many of those grosser forms of sin which disgraced the world of His time, and which still hold sway in countries where His name is not known.

SUNDAY, August 9. Psalm lxxxiii.

A National Protest of Prayer.

IT has been thought that this Psalm originated in the league against Jehoshaphat, recorded in 2 Chron. xx.; though all the nations mentioned here are not enumerated there. Or it may be a poetic idealization of the antagonism of the surrounding peoples to the Vine of God (lxxx.).

1-8. The Coalition of the Ungodly. What a motley assemblage! A common hatred to the people of God is a potent cause for coalition of very discordant elements. Herod and Pilate became friends in their common opposition to Christ. It is often thus in human life. Troubles bear down on us from all points of the compass. But are we not God's people—His own peculiar possession? Are we not His hidden ones, whose life is hid with Christ in God? Is not our cause His cause? Is not His honour deeply implicated in our well-being? Let us be of good cheer. It is impossible for God to keep silence, or that He should hold His peace for ever and keep still.

9-18. The Certainty of Defeat. The Psalmist does not anticipate the necessity of Israel's drawing the sword. His people may stand and see the salvation of God. He cites first the victory of Gideon over Midian, the most complete type of victory (Isa. ix. 3); and next, the defeat of Jabin and Sisera, before Deborah and Barak (Judges iv. v.). God is asked to chase His foes, as the wind drives light and worthless things before it; and as the swift rush of the forest fire, which licks up the weeds on the hillsides. Verse 15 recalls Jos. x. 10, 11. Oh, that by such means God's foes might come to know Him in His saving might!

MONDAY, August 10. Psalm lxxxiv.

The Psalm of the Sanctuary.

We are reminded of xlii. and xliii. The singer expresses the sentiments of us all. This sweet Psalm is divided into three parts by the Selahs. Note the three Blesseds (4, 5, 12).

1-4. The Blessedness of Those that Dwell in God's House. His Tabernacles are lovely and lovable. The exile longs and languishes for them, not for themselves, but because of the living God. He alone can impart the "life of which our nerves are scant." Perhaps some of us will have to be exiled from God's House before we can appreciate it as we should. What holes are to foxes, and nests to sparrows, that God is to the believer. All creatures have their suitable homes; why, oh why, should man's spirit alone never be at rest? We can never rest perfectly till, with the Psalmist, we can say, My King and my God.

5-8. The Blessedness of the Pilgrimage. If the goal is sweet, the path towards it is equally so. Blessed is the man who loves the ways to Zion, who thinks of them by day and night with tender affection, and through whose heart they may be said to lie. With us, that condition of soul is manifest when we yearn after a closer approach to God. In such cases, even though the Valley of Weeping may have to be traversed, it becomes as a place of springs. The longing we have for God, and our enjoyment of Him, make the dreariest path delightful. And presently we leave the lowlands and begin to ascend the strength of the hills, till we descry the Zion of our quest.

9-12. The Blessedness of the Believer. The briefest moment of communion is preferable to years of worldly pleasure, and the humblest post of service to the fairest delights of men. Sun, the light of all our seeing; shield, against ills and darts; grace, the bud of glory; glory, the flower and fruition of grace.

TUESDAY, August 11. Psalm lxxxv.

The Song of the Return.

The Book of Nehemiah is suggested as supplying the background of this Psalm. Only a part of the nation had returned, to find a ruined city, the ashes of the temple, and a devastated country; and amid the grave discouragements of the position many had lost heart and hope.

1-3. God's acts of mercy had been very gracious and wonderful. Contrary to all expectation, their captivity had ended in their return to their own land; their sin had been lifted off, and covered, and the sting of wrath had been drawn back into its sheath. (Note the repeated use of turn, 1, 3, 4, 6, 8.) May we not appropriate these words?

4-7. In the second strophe, there is an abrupt transition from joyous thanksgiving to lamentation and supplication. The restoration was incomplete. God had done so much. He might be trusted to bring His work to completion. Surely if He has justified, He will sanctify; if He has delivered our eyes from tears, He will deliver our feet from falling; if He has given us grace, He will crown grace with glory.

8-13. Here God's people are encouraged by bright hopes, which are based on God's sure word of promise. "God, Jehovah, will speak peace." Let us wait to hear it. Always where God interposes, His four angels are near. Lovingkindness meets Truth, Righteousness kisses Peace, and amongst men also Truth appears as the heart's response to the benignant smile of Righteousness—the crop that welcomes the sun. Yes, moreover, and Righteousness, as a strong angel, acts as God's herald, preceding Him, and marking out His path, so that we may walk in His steps without fear.

WEDNESDAY, August 12. Psalm lxxxvi.

A Cry for Help.

This Psalm is largely made up of quotations; but when the soul is in great need it is not concerned with inventing new forms of address to God, but avails itself of well-known and well-worn phrases, as our Lord in Gethsemane, who "prayed the same words." The background of the Psalm is faith in the goodness of God. "Thou art good" (5); "Thou art great" (10); "Thou art compassionate and gracious" (15). Be sure to build your prayers on the Nature of God, revealed in Jesus Christ.

1-5. We have many pleas with God. That we are poor and needy is a strong one, because nothing touches Him like our entire dependence on Him. That we are holy might seem a presumptuous one, but it really means that we ask God who has begun a work of sanctification within us to carry it forward. That we cry all the day, is another plea that God honours. But the best of all is the plenteousness of His lovingkindness.

6-13. In this second strophe there is again the cry of need; and faith is helped by remembering that God's power is unmatched, that there is none like unto Him, and that, therefore, all the world will one day own and love Him. Surely One who is so great and good will bend over the one poor suppliant soul, who in the crowd and press touches the hem of His garment! Notice that exquisitely beautiful petition for a united heart! We have known the misery of division, of being torn hither and thither by many interests; henceforth as God is God alone, so would we be only for Him.

14-17. We can readily imagine the rabble of evil men who beset the Psalmist, for we also are beset by men and demons; but nearer than dangers and foes is the calm and holy presence of our God. It is for us to concern ourselves only with Him, knowing that He will hear, and in due time answer.

THURSDAY, August 13. Psalm lxxxvii.

The Glory of the City of God.

This Psalm blends in one great congregation the ancient foes of Israel with the chosen people. It is a vision of the holy catholic Church.

The Selahs divide it into two divisions.

1-3. Here is an outburst of rapturous praise. Zion has been founded by God Himself. The mountains on which it stands are the seat of the Divine dwelling. A light is thus communicated to them which outshines the lustre of all other hills. And the future is bright with prediction and promise. Glorious things have been spoken of the redeemed Church, founded on the Rock of Ages, the home of the Holy Spirit, irradiate with the glory of Holiness.

4-6. Note this enumeration of the nations. Egypt, or Rahab, no longer dreaded and despised; Babylon, no longer detested for its tyrannies; Philistia, the old neighbour and foe, no longer esteemed so; Tyre, the home of worldly pride, now humble and holy; Ethiopia, once far off, now made nigh. All these are viewed as one with Zion.

7. A triumphal procession of singers and dancers chant their joys, for men at last find perennial bliss arising from the city, and, may we not say, from the Church of the Firstborn whose names are written in heaven?

FRIDAY, August 14. Psalm lxxxviii.

A Cry from the Grave.

Most of the Psalms begin in sorrow, and end in exuberant joy and praise. This is the exception to the rule, for it ends in the darkness of an unbroken night. It may be that some will read it to-day who are in such a plight. There seems no break in the long monotony of their grief and despair. But even for these there will come a dawn of hope; the trump of God will issue a summons from the grave into resurrection light.

1-8. The Psalmist is hopeless. He seems already dead. He is free from the stir of ordinary life, with its interests; but it is a freedom hardly to be desired, because it is among the dead. It would appear from verse 8 as though the sufferer were oppressed with some loathsome disease, that made even his friends shrink from companionship, and he lay in lonely misery. Yet it is a hopeful sign when under such circumstances a man can still speak of God as "the God of my salvation."

9-12. He enters into a remonstrance of expostulation with God, on the ground that he is useless to Him for all purposes of service and praise. In his cheerless despair there is no opportunity for him to glorify God or for God to get glory to Himself. Alas, that one of His chosen servants should be left to such a fate!

13-18. Again he mentions the name of God. His prayers are unquenched by his despair, and still rise like fountains in darkness. But the mornings bring no deliverance. The only gleam of light is his constant faith that God has done it all, that he is not the sport of chance, but the object of God's dealings, as with a servant or child. I am Thine, O my God.

SATURDAY, August 15. Psalm lxxxix.

A Psalm on God's Faithfulness.

To understand this Psalm, we must turn to 2 Sam. vii., where God guaranteed that David's kingdom should be continued to his descendants. The words of Nathan are quoted in verses 3 and 4. But in contrast with those promises, the Psalmist sorrowfully recites the condition of the chosen people. Was not even the Divine faithfulness, to which he makes such frequent reference (vv. 1, 2, 5, 8, 14), imperilled by the calamities which had fallen on throne and nation!

1-18. The singer enumerates the Divine attributes, and dwells on them with loving emphasis. Lovingkindness he conceives of as a stately mansion, which is being reared, storey by storey, through the centuries; whilst the heavens are selected as the type of duration and permanence to set forth the stedfastness of God's faithfulness. The mightiest natural forces (9, 10) and the proudest nations (11, 12) are subject to Him, as well as the mighty waves of the sea, and the mountains of the land.

19-37. The promise made through Nathan is drawn out and elaborated in considerable detail (2 Sam. vii.).

38-51. Here we have expostulation and lament. Whether the time was that when Jerusalem was taken by Shishak in the days of Rehoboam, or when the youthful prince Jehoiachin was deposed by Nebuchadnezzar, it is impossible to say; but it seemed almost as though God's faithfulness had failed. Note the repeated Remember, in which God is urged once again to vindicate His word. Subsequent ages, and especially Matt. ii., show how God has vindicated it.

52. The third book of the Psalter closes with this Doxology. F. B. M.

A Holiday Message.

"THEY REMEMBERED NOT."
"HE REMEMBERED."

FEW things are brought out more strikingly in the Bible than the great contrast between God's ever-abiding faithfulness and man's forgetfulness and faithlessness. Psalm cvi., giving a period of the history of Israel, brings this forcibly before us. Three times over in that Psalm are Israel definitely stated to have forgotten. "They remembered not the multitude of His mercies" (v. 7). "They soon forgot His works" (v. 13), and "They forgot God" (v. 21). The very order in which these expressions come is significant and full of warning. How truly, alas, it may be said of many of us, that we "remember not the multitude of God's mercies." We are content so often to receive them as a matter of course, without ever reflecting on the great Giver of all good things. Great is His faithfulness; with shame be it said, great is our forgetfulness and ingratitude.

To many of us a happy home has been our lot all through life, and because of that very fact, we are apt to forget entirely that it is one of the Lord's mercies, and that it would not continue one day if it were not His good pleasure. And so, too, if we have any success in business, or any happiness in our daily occupations, we are inclined to think, or at any rate to act as though we thought, this was due to our cleverness and brightness of disposition, forgetting that every thing which contributes to that happy state of affairs is a gift from God.

Day by day we are kept safe in the midst of known and unknown dangers; while others are stricken with disease or illness, we are preserved in health and strength. "It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed," and yet we remember not the multitude of them.

The holiday season is upon us; thousands are going away to popular seaside resorts. Families and parties seek rest and recreation away from home; some seek pleasure upon sea or lakes, some upon mountains and hills, some in other places; but wheresoever they go they are in the midst of dangers, dangers in connection with travelling, or from storms or from accidents of one sort or another. But how few remember to give God thanks for preservation and all the other blessings accompanying holidays and holiday excursions! Truly, "we remember not the multitude of His mercies."

Now, having forgotten His mercy, it is but a small step further to "forget His works." Many of us, thank God, have experienced the joy of salvation, and have felt as though that joy could never pass away, because the happy assurance, "Christ died for me," is firmly planted in us. And yet, as the freshness of that joy passes away, must we not confess that also there often passes away the remembrance of the great work of our redemption? And often, while we do not forget "Christ died for me," yet we forget the great price paid for our salvation. Is it not so? And if it be so, is it not also the case with regard to God's great work of creation? The sea, the rivers, the lakes, as well as the hills and mountains, all bear witness to the might and power of God; the trees and flowers as well as the animal life all around bear witness to the love and faithful remembrance of our Creator—God. But we, although living in the enjoyment of these created works, forget their Creator. Like Israel of old, we soon forget His works.

The third step given us in this Psalm seems only a natural consequence of the other two. Having forgotten the multitude of His mercies and His works, how can we be surprised when we read "They forgot God." "Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God . . . lest when thou hast eaten and art full . . . then thine heart be lifted up and thou forget the Lord thy God which brought thee forth . . . from the house of bondage, Who led thee . . . Who fed thee . . . and thou say in thine heart: 'My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth.' But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God, for it is He that giveth thee power to get wealth . . ." (Deut. viii. 11-18).

Let us not forget that the sin of forgetting God is indeed terrible in God's sight, as we see in Psa. ix. 17, "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God."

But, thank God, the Psalm does not only bring before us the dark side, man's forgetfulness, it also tells us of God's faithfulness. "He remembered for them His covenant." While they forgot Him and all His love for them and the multitude of His mercies, yet "He abideth faithful." He remembered His covenant. He is the same to-day; let us therefore, with shame, repent of our forgetfulness and ingratitude, and seek forgiveness through Jesus Christ, determining that henceforth we will be not forgetful, but, in the words of Psa. cv. 5, we will "remember His marvellous works that He hath done." And as a proof that we do this, let us show it in the four ways David brings before us in Psalm cv.:—

1. "Give thanks" (v. 1) in our lives as well as with our lips;
2. "Talk of all His wondrous work" (v. 2);
3. "Glory in His Holy name" (v. 3); and,
4. "Seek His face evermore (v. 4)."

Drink and Crime.

MURDERERS' MESSAGES.

ON the night of May 25, a young policeman at Sileby called home to fetch his lantern and belt. His little three-year-old girl happened to be awake at the time, and said, "Daddy, don't go out again to-night." Kissing the little one tenderly, he answered, "I shall not be long, my pet. I shall soon be back." Within an hour and a-half he was shot dead at my church gate. His murderers lay hid behind a gravestone bearing the significant inscription, "Man is like a thing of nought. His time passeth away like a shadow."

On the morning of July 21, Thomas Porter, aged 29, and Thomas Preston, aged 25, were executed for the crime. The same night at 8 o'clock, in the presence of a vast crowd, I delivered their farewell messages to the people of Sileby. Tom Preston's message was, "Will you tell them drink and bad companions have brought me to this? Will you tell the young chaps to have done with the beer, as I don't want any of them to come to my end? And may God bless them." Tom Porter's message was, "Tell them to be good lads and keep away from the drink; it was that which brought me here."

The spot from which these messages were delivered possessed a peculiar interest under the circumstances. It was the spot where poor Police Constable Wilkinson was murdered. It was the spot where, two years ago, a few soldiers of the Cross rallied round me to conduct a temperance crusade. The brewing interest exerted itself to the utmost to crush us. Beer was lavishly and gratuitously served out to the crowd, piano organs were hired to drown our voices, and various means were employed to frustrate our efforts. But, in spite of all, souls were saved and drunkards reclaimed.

Sitting in their lonely cells at Leicester, Tom Preston and Tom Porter both reminded me how they had stood in the crowd on those occasions. "I felt inclined to join you," said Preston, "but I never did." "Oh, that I had attended to what you said," said Porter, "how different it all would be!"

Yes, indeed. On that fatal May 25 those two young men entered a public-house at eleven o'clock in the morning, and remained there drinking until 8.30 in the evening. To raise money for their drink, they sold some articles of clothing. At 8.30 they adjourned to another public-house, where they remained until closing time, when they carried with them beer which they consumed in the churchyard before they committed their awful deed.

Preston and Porter have suffered the extreme penalty of the law for a deed committed when drink had robbed them of their senses. Is not the whole story a trumpet call to God's people to go forth to the fight against that accursed traffic which bears the mark of infamy upon its brow?

The Bristol Orphan Homes.

THE sixty-fourth annual report of the above institution has just been issued, and, like its predecessors, is full of interesting and instructive facts. The testimony which it contains to the faithfulness of God as the Hearer of prayer cannot fail greatly to encourage the hearts of His children wherever the report comes, and for this reason alone the pamphlet deserves a wide circulation.

A SCEPTICAL DELUSION.

Mr. Wright, in his opening remarks, quotes the observation of a sceptical critic in 1898, in a magazine article, who said, "The days of fanatical giving are now passed," implying that the work on Ashley Down could not in the future be carried on on the same lines as previously. It is now over five years since the beloved and revered founder died, and not only has the work been sustained, but it has even expanded; for the number of orphans in the houses is considerably larger than at the time of Mr. Müller's departure. At that time the number of vacancies was large, but owing to the change made a few years back in the basis of admission, these have greatly diminished. During the past year alone 449 orphans were received, so that (but for changes) there would have been at the end of the financial year 2,108 inmates. The actual number under the care of the institution on May 26 was 1850."

Then as to funds during the five years referred to, Mr. Wright says:—"To meet the expenses of the first four objects above mentioned, during these five years the sum of about £27,217 has been received; and, for the orphan work in the same five years, about £130,930; and the whole of these sums (totalling about £158,150) has been obtained simply in answer to believing prayer to the living God, in the name of His beloved Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, without any appeal, verbal or printed, to the public, or solicitation for help addressed to one single individual."

HOW DONATIONS COME.

The pages of the report show how the donations, large and small, come from all quarters and under various and most interesting circumstances, while again and again the letters show how the testimony afforded by the history of the work stimulates and strengthens the faith of the people of God. In concluding one section of the report, Mr. Wright says:—

"The above are mentioned that the reader may see in what a variety of ways the Lord is pleased to supply us with means, simply in answer to our believing and expecting supplications. And thus the work is now going on in the seventieth year of its existence."

In reference to the recent change in the basis of admission, by which children bereft of only one parent are admitted, the following letter is particularly interesting:—"From Morningside, 5s., with the following letter:—'Dear Sir,—It is with great pleasure I am sending you this small sum of 5s. as a thank-offering to God for His great mercy to me and mine, in providing such a home for four of my fatherless little girls in your orphanage. It is not much that I can do, but I know that, small as it is, it is given with a thankful and grateful heart. How hard it is to part with our little ones, no one but a mother knows; but I am sure that we mothers ought to thank and praise God that our dear little ones are being taken care of, and, above all, being brought up in the right way. Oh, I am so thankful when I think how my dear ones might have been neglected while I was working for them, and I do thank you again and again for your goodness in taking four of my darlings.'"

In addition to the orphan work, the school, Bible, missionary and tract agencies have been well sustained, and the letters from many labourers show how much valued the help afforded them is, and what important work is maintained by this means. We recommend to our readers a careful perusal of this simple record of facts, which makes manifest what God has done and is still doing.

Other Lands.

New Conditions in China.

ONE of our guests said the opening of the Roberts' Memorial Hospital, at T'sang-chou, was the biggest function he had ever witnessed in the city. It was even said that a larger crowd gathered to the opening of the hospital than had gathered to its sacking and destruction.

We calculated at first on 300 or 400 guests, but that was far too low. They were of two main classes, those invited specially, and those who, having brought "tablets," "hangings," and "scrolls," were thereby entitled by Chinese custom to a feast at our expense. The former were not invited by us personally, as it would have been incorrect for us to represent ourselves as of so much importance; but the ten leading "gentry" of the city were good enough to issue invitations in their own name and over their own signatures in the most kind and courteous way, entreating all their friends to come and join them in felicitating and doing us honour! This invitation was printed and sent out by the magistrate's own runners to the leading men in all the towns and villages around, even the gentry in Yenshan (thirty miles distant) receiving these evident tokens of goodwill to us on the part of the light and leading in T'sang-chou.

AN INTERESTING FUNCTION.

As notice came of several hundred Mohammedans desiring to accompany their big "tablet;" of scores of "Vegetarians" coming with theirs; of crowds and crowds of people coming to represent "village groups," &c.—we began to wonder whereunto this thing would grow. The ingenuity of our helpers was taxed to the utmost in devising ways and means of lessening the numbers without offence, and the kind, good sense of the people themselves was also very apparent. Hundreds came who would not take food, and went away empty to save us expense. A leading man in the city brought his tablet himself to save us the "tip" to the bearer; and the general in command of this district, Gen. Mee's successor, sent great quantities of expensive delicacies in advance, ordering the men who brought them to make plain that unless they were accepted in toto he himself would not come.

All classes were represented in those throngs that gathered to do us honour. The civil officials were headed by the magistrate himself, who laughingly "opened" the big front door of the waiting-room with a key handed to him for the purpose. The military officials were there, led by the general in person. The Manchu garrison and colony was also represented, and its commandant was, perhaps, the most demonstrative of our many friends that day. The gentry of the city were present in full force, and celebrated the occasion by bringing a huge "tablet" upon which was engraved the new name by which they have chosen to designate us, and by which our compound here is in future to be known—"Lê Shan Yuan," which may be translated as "The compound of

THOSE WHO DELIGHT TO DO GOOD."

The guests we were most delighted to see and entertain were the middle-class folk of the city and district, whom it is so important and difficult to reach and enlighten. And of these there were hundreds. Even the beggars had clubbed together to bring a token of their goodwill, led by their interesting chief, whose life has more than once been prolonged through our medical work here in Y'sang-chou.

One of our Chinese helpers read a short address formally acknowledging all the kindness shown to us; and then going on to show how originally God made of one family all the dwellers upon earth; how we had become divided by language, race and climate, prejudice, suspicion, and many a thing besides; and how we were only now beginning to be united again. This union was the result of Christianity with its teaching of our common God and Father, our common human need, and our common Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Our work here was to make these facts known, and so to further the glory of God, the salvation of men, and the knitting of all mankind in common bonds of brotherhood and love. This address was exceedingly well received, and elicited favourable comments in many quarters.

This great function, and its widespread fame, have brought us prominently before the public of a district the size of Wales, in which this is the only hospital.

To Continental Tourists.

THE saying, "When you are at Rome do as Rome does," has, no doubt, its good side. It is quite true that the traveller who is always expecting to have everything abroad just as he is used to having it at home is a most troublesome individual. And the Christian tourist who goes about in this spirit will not commend the Gospel.

But when it comes to matters of Christian practice and conduct, the motto is wholly mischievous. Long experience on the Continent has brought this home to me. Lately I was travelling in Norway, and went to spend Sunday amongst a little company of Christians, in a beautiful spot much frequented by tourists. On Saturday I had some English tourists as my fellow-travellers; on Sunday it was a grief to me to meet the same individuals on their return from a drive through the country, of course employing Norwegian drivers, who were thereby prevented from attending any place of worship. These tourists were probably not Christians, except in name; but I am afraid there are real Christians who thoughtlessly indulge in Sabbath-breaking on the Continent as they would not think of doing at home. Yet the want of better observance of the Lord's Day is a source of great weakness in Protestant countries, and a terrible hindrance to the progress of the Gospel in Roman Catholic lands. Anything that English can do, by personal example and by kindly admonition (of course avoiding censoriousness) to promote a better appreciation of the Day of Rest will be of no little value.

Another point, not negative, but positive. Do not give up the daily reading of the Scriptures when you are abroad. Where a family party, or even two friends are travelling together, try to arrange that there shall at least once in the day be found an opportunity for meeting to read the Bible and to ask God's blessing and guidance. If you are alone do not neglect private reading and prayer. Even when you have to share a cabin with a stranger do not be ashamed or afraid to read your Bible night and morning. There will certainly be a blessing to yourself, and there may come blessing that you little know of to others. Only be sure that your talk and your conduct are of a piece with your devotions.

In this connection, let me recommend to Christian tourists, especially those of modest means, the "Missions Hotels" to be found now in most towns of Germany, Switzerland, and Scandinavia. In these hotels, family worship is regularly conducted in the morning. The reading and singing are in the language of the country; but one can always at least find the place in one's own Bible. English is not generally spoken in the hotels, so that some little acquaintance with the language is necessary to those who would take advantage of them. Whilst they vary as regards comfort, I have always found them clean and economical; temperance drinks can be readily obtained; and sometimes one meets with fellow-Christians whose acquaintance it is a real privilege to make.

If English Christians, whether travelling or sojourning, whether in lands of Gospel light or of Popish darkness, would always, everywhere, "show forth the Word of Truth" by consistent Christian lives, they would exercise a powerful influence for the evangelization of Europe, and would bring home a double blessing from their stay abroad.

In the Malay Peninsula.

GOD is blessing the American Methodist Episcopal Mission on the Malay Peninsula. During the past year, thousands of heathen men and women in towns, tin-mines, jungle, and hospitals have heard the Gospel of Christ through the medium of open-air services, house to house visitation, and tract distribution. The great curse amongst the Chinese is gambling and opium, and the former, alas, is licensed by the British Government.

Our mission in Kwala Lumpur, the capital of the Federated Malay States, has just had a visit from Bishop Warne, who with Bishop Thoburn, has the oversight of the M.E. Mission in India, the Straits Settlements, and the Philippines. Having returned from Manilla, he gave a glowing account of work in the Philippines. He found there 20,000 people desirous of joining the Methodist Church, and they themselves are putting up twenty new churches this year. Praise the Lord that the power of the Papacy is at last broken in those islands! The Bishop held an eight days' mission here in Kwala Lumpur, when God graciously blessed his labours. From the first meeting till the last, God's power was manifested and souls were saved.

The Bishop preached through interpreters, and his address was first translated into Hokhein Chinese, then into Hakka Chinese, and in the after meeting into Cantonese Chinese. This incident well illustrates the difficulties which we missionaries have to contend with in the Malay Peninsula.

If God's Spirit was busy, so was "the prince of the power of the air." One old Chinese preacher was so stirred up that he had to go out into the street and preach. He was immediately assaulted by a Malay policeman, and one of his three remaining teeth knocked out; he was kicked, and dragged through the streets by his "pigtail." The Chinese crowd tried to rescue him, but they only got beaten in return. Next day the magistrate dismissed the charge of obstruction which was made against him, and he was released. We need the prayers of God's people that we may be faithful here in the midst of heathenism.

The British Resident of the adjoining State of Negri Sembilan has written to me offering an excellent site for a church and school in his capital. In that State, there is not a single Protestant missionary working, but between Kwala Lumpur and that town there are no fewer than four Roman Catholic Chinese churches. To erect a church on this site we need at least £200. In this school we are seeking to train pastors and evangelists for work amongst the Chinese. £10 a year is sufficient to support one student. Mr. G. A. Angus, hon. sec. of the Islington Lay Preachers' Association, 99, Balfour Road, Highbury, N., will be glad to give information of our work.

The Nile Mission Press.

THE bringing forward of a scheme for a mission-press in the Nile country has awakened much interest among the missionaries themselves in that particular branch of work. Representatives of six different missions met recently to consider how best to produce and circulate Christian reading among the Egyptian people.

Three methods are proposed, for each of which help is asked at this juncture. (1) A FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND, by which purchases may be made from the Religious Tract Society. (2) THE PRODUCTION OF CURRENT CHRISTIAN LITERATURE and the SUBSIDIZING OF MAGAZINES edited and carried on by various missions. (3) THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A MISSION PRESS IN ALEXANDRIA, to meet the growing need, and to enable a larger supply of papers to be forthcoming for every class of people than can at present be produced.

In a circular, the Committee say: "We believe that, with a mission press in full work, about ten times as much can be accomplished for the same outlay expended on a smaller supply of papers printed at ordinary presses. The amount in money may be the same, but the result will be far greater in quantity and quality." The hon. treasurer is Mr. Percy K. Allen, Kingsmead, Curzon Park, Chester.

Difficulties in Hungary.

DEAR SIR,—Professor Szabo, of Budapest, who is one of the leaders of Evangelical work there, writes to ask me if I can do anything to arouse Christians in England to pray for them in a time of difficulty. It seems to me that the best way to do this is through the columns of The Christian.—Very truly yours, J. D. Kilburn.

Professor Szabo says:—"At the beginning of the nineteenth century the Church in Hungary had been weakened and wearied through the persistent persecutions of the last three centuries. The Lord used English and Scottish Christians to cheer and help it. Such societies as the Bible Society, the Religious Tract Society, and the Scottish Bible Society, have brought untold blessing to the country. As, however, the sad events of the past winter have proved, many who have been brought into outward union with the Church and with the different Church societies in Hungary have no real and personal union with the Lord of the Church.

"One of the greatest of the so-called Evangelical Societies has set itself to oppose in a very decided way, all manifestations of true Christian life. The work of the Christian Endeavour seems especially objectionable to them. The leaders of this movement are spoken against, and opposed, and are called 'pietists' and 'extravagant.' Many who have been prominent workers in Hungary now seem to be giving themselves up to worldly amusement and worldly pleasure. Those who cannot join them in such things are despised. Many sleep and many limp on both sides, but there is still a small party who try to be true to Christ and faithfully to live for Him. These earnestly desire the prayers and sympathy of their fellow Christians in other lands."

Dufferin College,

SCHWIFAT, MOUNT LEBANON.

THIS institution was founded by Miss Louisa Procter and Mr. Tanius Said (a native gentleman) for the education of the youth of Syria, in memory of the benefits derived from the wise and statesmanlike conduct of the late Lord Dufferin, by which the district of Lebanon enjoys greater freedom than any other portion of the Sultan's dominions in having a Christian Governor.

The school was opened in 1895 with twenty boys; now over 100 are educated within its walls. Among the pupils are Mohammedans, Druses, Greek Christians, Maronites, and Protestants. Side by side they study God's Holy Book. The fame of the education given has spread throughout Syria, Palestine, and Egypt, so that last year there were over 150 applications for admission. At the present time, forty-five who have been trained in the schools are teaching for other missions in Egypt, Palestine, and Syria, giving satisfaction to their employers, and labouring faithfully for the Master.

This great institution has no endowment, but is mainly dependent on annual subscriptions. The sum needed for endowment—to supply what Miss Procter gives annually, which dies with her—is £3,000. This ought to yield a yearly income of £100. The object of Miss Procter's present visit to England is to place the institution on a more permanent basis, by raising a sufficient sum for its endowment, and placing it under trustees who will be responsible to carry it on. Miss Procter is willing on her part to hand over the ground and buildings to those trustees, and to appoint a local committee to see that the work is properly done and the money wisely laid out.

The following gentlemen are willing to act on this committee, with power to add to their number:—Mr. Theophilus Waldmeier, Director of the Asylum for the Insane, Lebanon; Mr. Glackler, of the American Press, Beyrout; Mr. Tanius Said, Superintendent of the Schools; Mr. Murad Baroody, a native gentleman of Beyrout, who has always taken a deep interest in the work.

Nyassa Industrial Mission.

PARTICULARS have lately come to hand concerning our work in British Central Africa. Mr. W. A. Phillips, of Likubula Station, reports a preaching tour by two native evangelists whom he sent to visit a district in Angoniland, far away from any mission station. These brethren spent a month itinerating in the district. They visited 119 villages, and held upwards of 200 services, which were well attended by the people, who for the most part listened to the Word of God for the first time in their lives. So eager was the reception, that Mr. Phillips is anxious that something should be done to occupy permanently this new field, and he pleads earnestly for another worker, who would find full occupation for all his time and energies in preaching and establishing schools among the people. The natives would probably be willing to supply the school buildings themselves if a white missionary could be settled amongst them at once. The cost involved would not exceed £100 per annum for such a work. The population numbers at least 10,000, who, humanly speaking, cannot otherwise hear of Christ and His salvation.

The news concerning our work in general is most encouraging. The spirit of prayer has been largely outpoured. At Likubula a daily prayer-meeting has been maintained for some months past, and nineteen converts were recently baptized. A new Sunday-school, of 150 scholars, under native teachers, has now been started, and the parties who visit the neighbouring villages on the Sunday often gather as many as 300 to listen to the Word. Mr. and Mrs. Deeath, who have rendered such splendid service in the past, are returning from their furlough with a new worker from Australia, Mr. Jensen. These friends, however, will be fully occupied with the work we already have in hand, or in prospect.

Persecution in Brazil.

DISQUIETING news continues to be received from mission centres in Brazil. The recent Bible burning is fresh in the minds of many. It is gratifying to know that the native Christians have stood the bitter persecution so well, and that many others are seeking the Truth. The spiritual destitution of the country calls for far more workers than the Brazil Mission is able to send out owing to inadequate funds. In a recent communication Mr. Kingston writes concerning one of his visitations:—

I arrived in Cortez, and found a happy little company (though much persecuted) worshipping God in one of the believer's houses. On the Sunday we had a good meeting, and were delighted to see among us one who but a short time ago was persecuting the Christians, and had even threatened to take our lives. In the afternoon, at Cortez, I was sorry to find the people alarmed—so many had threatened to put an end to our meetings. One of the Christians had informed the police superintendent of the threats; but he replied that he could do nothing. The following day we had another meeting, but the threats during the service were terrible. It was only by throwing ourselves on our faithful God that we could continue at all.

On the other hand there are many indications of an earnest spirit of inquiry among the people. Inside and outside the church the attempts of the adversary are being thwarted, and the faithful ministry of the Word richly prospered of God. Mr. Telford writes that in Pernambuco alone ten persons were received into the church on the first Sunday of April, besides some thirty-two in the country districts. In one case a whole family has accepted the Gospel and come out on the Lord's side. The head of the house has had to pay dearly for the step he has taken. He is one of the first sculptors of the city, and previously was employed by nearly all the Romish churches. Now he is cut off from this and is poorly provided for.

Awakening in S.W. France.

A REMARKABLE awakening commenced last year in the Department of Gers, adjoining the Department of the Pyrenees, through the conversion of two Roman Catholic priests, M.M. Bonnet and Teulère.

After finding Christ themselves at the end of many years' groping in the dark, they at once commenced preaching salvation through Him at Fleurance and Préchac, where M. Bonnet had been curé. They were enthusiastically supported by their parishioners; and requests soon came in from villages all round that Gospel meetings should be held there. This was done, and Gospel services have now been regularly organized in seven localities, with the result of some apparently very definite conversions.

Last Christmas many of them wished to have a special watch-night service. M. Teulère held one at the village of Jégun, where there is a company of 100 persons who have definitely left Rome and accepted Christ.

The young converts of Bonas, not being able to have M. Teulère's help, held a watch-night service by themselves, at which they prayed and sang hymns, and one of them read a short Gospel address. This means a great deal, considering the absolutely heathen darkness in which they all were a year ago. Pastors from Paris and elsewhere have visited the country, and declare that the movement is thoroughly genuine.

Other interesting cases are mentioned in the report of the Society that works among French priests, of which the hon. secretary for England is Mr. W. F. Hathaway, 1, Gerald Road, Bournemouth. Some of these priests appear to be remarkably gifted men, who may possibly become powerful preachers, and be destined to have a marked influence on the future of France.

Kanaka Converts.

SPEAKING recently at a meeting in Brisbane, Rev. Frank Paton, son of the venerable Dr. John Paton, referred to the results of missions to the South Sea Islanders employed in Queensland. He said that many Kanakas had returned, not only outwardly, but inwardly, Christians, and who, though subjected to tremendous temptations, had won their fellows for Christ. One boy, named Dick, had been in Queensland three years, and then returned to his people. At Tanna he found his tribe had been driven out of their village, and were living in caves on the shore, and the bushmen were constantly raiding them. Mr. Paton offered Dick asylum in the mission station, but he preferred living in caves and remaining with his own people. They fired at him and tried to turn him out, but he stuck to his post, and was successful in winning his whole tribe to the knowledge of Christ.

These missions in Queensland are carried on near Mackay by the Presbyterian Church, and in many districts by an undenominational mission organized by Messrs. Young, of Fairymead, near Bundaberg. The Kanakas must all leave Queensland within three years, by enactment of the Federal Parliament, and all the missionaries are most anxious for a time of great revival and ingathering in these last years of their opportunity. They plead for the prayers of God's people to this end.

A Missionary Revival.—The Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society has issued its eighty-ninth annual report, which takes account of the activities of this organization at home and abroad during 1902. The year has witnessed the spreading and deepening of an aggressive movement, which has stimulated a more energetic policy with regard to foreign missions throughout the connexion. The result of this revival in the home churches is being felt in all parts of the mission field, and indicates that a new era in the missionary work of the Wesleyan Methodist Church has dawned. The report will appeal to all who realize that the grave responsibilities and glorious opportunities of reaching the vast areas still unevangelized must be faced by individual members of the Church of Christ.

Protestant Women.

MRS. W. R. ARBUTHNOT.

THE formation of the Women's Protestant Union in 1891 marked a new era in the education of the people of our land regarding the errors of Rome, and the dangers of its insidious encroachments. In that year circumstances induced Mrs. W. R. Arbuthnot to take part in the annual meeting of the Protestant Alliance, held at Exeter Hall. As the mother of a large family she felt called to protest against Rome's invasion of the home-life. The able address delivered, on the same occasion, by Mrs. Grattan Guinness strengthened her convictions. At the close of the meeting a number of friends gathered round, and the question was raised whether something could not be done for the organization of women on behalf of the Protestant cause. Mrs. Arbuthnot was as enthusiastic as any in the matter, though when she was assured that she was the very person to bring the idea to a practical issue she again shrank from stepping to the front. The hand of God was, however, in the matter, and, after prayer and consultation, the new Union was formed.

Born in Edinburgh, and brought up as a Presbyterian in Scotland, Mrs. Arbuthnot's early married life was spent in India. Personal interest, family circumstances, and the feeling of responsibility for the training of her own children, combined to keep her attention directed to the principles of Protestantism. God had by His grace laid hold of her heart in early life, and her interest in spiritual things led her to a clear and firm hold on Evangelical truth.

Experience soon brought home to an increasing number the fact that it is clearly the duty of Christian women of all denominations to make a definite and united protest against present-day tendencies towards Romish doctrines and practices. It was with this in view that the objects and basis were framed, emphasizing at once the Evangelical and undenominational character of the organization. As a summing up it was added that the acceptance of these implied (1) the rejection of any definition of "the Church" which limited the term to its ordained ministers or rulers; (2) the repudiation of any priestly authority to confer absolution after "auricular confession," to interpret Scripture, or in any way to relieve the individual soul of responsibility toward God; and (3) the rejection as unscriptural, and therefore false, of the doctrine of a sacrificing priesthood, the sacrificial character of the Lord's Supper, the "Real Presence," and the efficacy of either sacrament to impart or to ensure eternal life.

Members who joined the ranks from different parts of the country told the leaders that they had long prayed for such an organization, and that they hailed the Union as an answer to their petitions. One secret of the continuous success which has followed, lies in the volume of prayer which is ever ascending from women belonging to different sections of the Church of Christ, and whose callings and circumstances are as various as they well can be.

Believing that the political aspects of the Protestant question are already ably dealt with by other associations, the Union has been able to hold itself more entirely aloof from party spirit, "recognising that God's warfare is not against persons in error, but against principles of error." Thankful for the liberty thus enjoyed, the close mutual sympathy of the members overrides all ecclesiastical divisions. It is, indeed, a source of satisfaction that many of the members who have long laboured together are ignorant as to the particular form of Church government under which others range themselves.

At the annual conferences workers among Roman Catholics in this and other lands meet for the exchange of views and experiences. During recent years workers from France, for instance, have been able to shed much light on the peculiar dangers attending the influx of the religious orders into this country from the Continent.

As the years have passed many lessons have been learned. The total number of members enrolled from the beginning to the close of last year was 15,699, and there is every sign that the enthusiasm and determination are deepening. The annual addition to the numbers may not now be so large as in early years, because those who were to be readily enlisted have already come together, but the slower work of enlightening others is being patiently pushed forward. This, however, is full of encouragement, and the influx is steady.

Definite subjects of a public and private character are arranged for prayer, and monthly or weekly gatherings arranged wherever possible throughout the country. The addition of fourteen made to the country branches last year brought the number of these up to 174, while there are many more localities where "scattered" members are at least doing something to permeate society with a knowledge of the truths for which they are banded together. The branch officers number about 250.

Wherever a beginning can be made, the work is pushed forward by the addressing of mothers' meetings and house-to-house visitation, for the encouragement of parents to resist the approaches made by the authorities of Roman Catholic schools. Working-people in large numbers are being aroused to the dangers of Ritualism and Popery. Classes are carried on at available centres, as well as by correspondence, for the instruction of the rising generation. Special efforts are made to warn young women against entering Anglican or Roman sisterhoods, &c. A useful feature of the annual report is the list of convalescent homes, in which the inmates will be quite free from priestly influences.

Members are urged to make careful inquiry regarding charities soliciting support in their respective districts, that they may be in a position to avoid for themselves and advise others regarding insidious efforts to further Romish objects. They are also recommended to avail themselves of opportunities for going to the Lord's Table in the evening, in order to show their belief that the evening hour represents the time of the Divine institution, and to mark with their disapproval the unscriptural and false teaching so often associated with "early celebrations." It is pointed out that a high privilege may be exercised by faithful warning of the young against being attracted by music, &c., to churches where practice or teaching are opposed to Protestant principles.

Early in the history of the Union a connecting link between the members was found to be necessary. At first a monthly letter was privately circulated, and through several stages this has developed into The Protestant Woman. Seeing that practically every adult in our land can read, the Union believes that the usefulness of the Press for the propagation of truth has not even yet been fully realized.

In 1898, the first of the "Ready Bands" were formed. It had been found that in some cases the annual subscription (which really pays only for The Protestant Woman sent in return, with postage) was a barrier to growth; and it was arranged to admit groups of six members, one of whom acts as leader, who should be enrolled for threepence each a year, and should circulate one copy of the magazine around them. The number enrolled on this footing is 603.

The hope of every cause lies in its youngest members. Realising this, the Women's Protestant Union fostered separate unions for boys and girls until nearly a thousand names had been placed on the books. Last year steps were taken, in conjunction with other societies, to form the Young Protestants' Union, with which the two older organizations were incorporated, handing on nearly five hundred members. These figures have now been more than doubled.

Parents looking out for schools to which they may safely send their sons and daughters apply for help in increasing numbers; and it is pleasing to learn that in a number of instances plans for sending girls to convent schools have been abandoned.

In an interview a few days ago, Mrs. Arbuthnot expressed herself in the highest terms regarding the good work of the Ladies' League, conducted by Lady Wimborne and others, in a field distinct from that of the Union. Those who are at the head of this fight with sacerdotalism and error, realize that every means must be used to cope with the evil. The Education Act of last year and the present Bill for London are causing the very deepest concern in the minds of Protestant workers, who see in them a call for vigilance, and for prayer that God may overrule the schemes of men for His own glory, and the promotion of His Kingdom.

The office address of the Union is Room 20, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

[BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONERS.]

NOTES AND REFLECTIONS.

By Dr. ELDER CUMMING.

MANY of the old attenders at the Convention are of opinion that the meetings this year stand out as peculiarly marked by the favour of God. That a great blessing has come is manifest, but the means which God has used are unusual and very worthy of attention. For one thing, no one speaker has been a special channel. All have been fairly well up to the mark, but there has been no outstanding name, or address, as has often been in former days. The work has been of a more private kind, done in the house rather than in the meetings. We have even heard the response at the meeting spoken of as not so satisfactory as it frequently is, while undoubtedly the tangible results have been very good. And the work has been largely individual, done through personal dealing, or in silent communion with God.

Many groups have lived together, of which the largest has been a great church gathering of over forty persons, while the Universities, the Church of Scotland and the Scotch Free Church, and the Jewish and China Inland Societies, have all had large parties living under one roof. Very definite work has been done in all of these, as testified by the praise meeting of Saturday, and by the private intelligence passed from friend to friend. A meeting of the "heads of houses," which was held on Sunday, was filled with grateful song for the good news brought in from many quarters. The testimony meetings have this year been wholly private or confined to the "house" in which the givers were resident; but they have been notable.

The girls' meetings, though deprived for the time of one of their usual conductors, have been specially marked by a devout and solemn spirit, and attended by about 200 girls. Other meetings have been held as usual on Sundays, such as the Jews' meeting, the gathering to hear of the Lord's Coming, the Question Meeting—all of them in their own way noteworthy; while the sermons of Mr. Holden and Prebendary Webb-Peploe in St. John's Church had crowded audiences as usual.

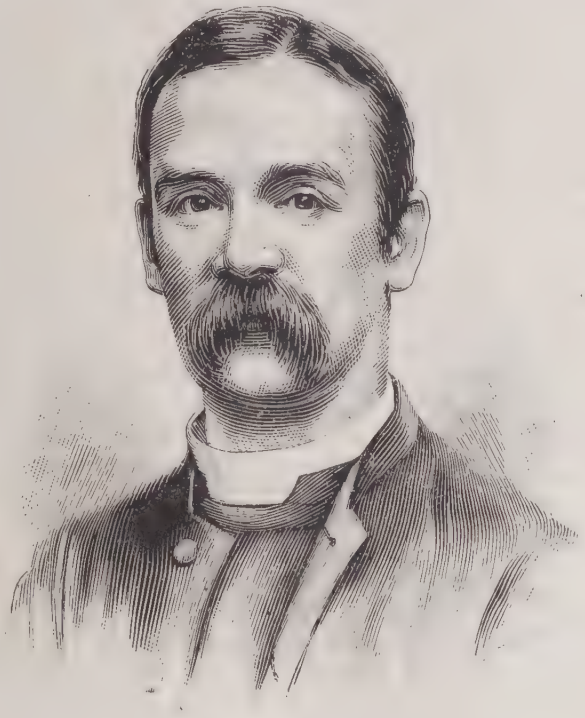
The missionary meeting on Saturday was a remarkable one. Altogether, it has been a solemn and a happy week. A story is told which carries its own interpretation, and is perfectly true. The three flags over the old tent are inscribed respectively, "Love — Joy — Peace." They were lowered every night after the close of the meetings, and pulled up in the mornings. But one night one of the flags refused to be brought down, and had to be left flying amid the darkness. It was the flag of "Love." May that flag long fly over the Keswick Tent, waving to every wind that blows! J. E. C.

THE MINISTERS' MEETINGS.

NOTES BY ONE OF THEMSELVES.

The morning meetings specially for ministers, held in the Drill Hall, were this year felt by those privileged to attend to be most solemn and impressive seasons. Day after day the speakers seemed to be labouring under an unusual sense of responsibility as they realized the nature of the gathering they were called upon to address; and very searching and inspiring were the messages they gave. During the four days the life and work of ministers were dealt with from almost every conceivable point of view. We were reminded that right at the very commencement stands the call of God, without which no man may dare to take upon himself the office. We were shown something of the magnitude of that call—a call to lead men into all truth, and into a full experience of God's utmost will for them. We were shown that in these things it is only possible for us to lead others so far as we ourselves have gone.

We were reminded that one thus called of God may be assured that all needed qualification for his work can be his, and may count upon the accompanying power of God with all right effort. We were warned that only in and through the life yielded to Himself is God able to work His will and manifest His power. We were reminded that from our very position greater responsibility rests upon us than upon others, and that any failure on our part in life or duty must be correspondingly serious. We were warned that, by reason of this very responsibility, we may expect to find ourselves special objects of the hostility of Satan; but we were also reminded of the faithfulness of God and of His perfect provision for our continual victory. We were shown something of what it means to be filled with the Holy Spirit, and the intense need that we, of all men, should enter into this experience.



REV. CHARLES INWOOD.

With every message there rang out the call to a life of greater righteousness, spirituality, and power. And with every call there was clearly put before us the path of consecration and faith along which our response must proceed. And in it all there was, especially in one or two of the meetings, a strong sense of spiritual power and impulse. Many of God's servants who went to Keswick this year with a humbling sense of failure and lack of power, must have left with a changed life, possessed by a new impulse, with quickened faith and with a new sense of power.

Spiritual Leadership.

By Rev. CHARLES INWOOD.

One of the most impressive addresses to ministers was that delivered by Rev. Chas. Inwood. Given under evident physical disability, his message was characterized by a logical clearness and spiritual power which few who heard it will easily forget. The text taken was Isaiah lv. 4, "Behold I have given Him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people." The primary application of these words, said Mr. Inwood, is of course to our Lord Himself; but in a secondary sense they may be applied to all whom God has set over any section of His Church. And in this sense the words deal with a subject which greatly needs to be emphasized. They speak of our leadership as a leadership which is spiritual in its nature.

Of such leadership during the history of the Church the need has ever been great, but possibly never greater than to-day. And the temptations to turn aside from it, or to take away something of its spirituality, are also in these days numerous. The tendency to allow our leadership to become social, literary, cultured, political, ecclesiastical, at the expense of its spirituality, we have all felt. And yet it must not be! It is not what the world needs, nor what God demands at our hands. We are called primarily, at least, not to be leaders of thought, but to lead men into the Canaan of full salvation.

WITNESSES, LEADERS, AND COMMANDERS.

It should be noted that in our text there is a progression of thought, a real chain of dependency, in the terms used. We are called to be witnesses, leaders, and commanders. It is only leaders who can command. If we are to exhort others to progress in spiritual things with any real effect, our word to them must be "come," and not "go." We must be spiritually ahead of them. It is the life and character which really tell. Saintship commands homage and respect in any creed, while without it the most correctly orthodox preaching will leave a sense of something lacking, and will largely fail of its effect. And again, it is only witnesses who can lead. A witness is one who knows by conscious personal experience, and such alone can lead. To speak from hearsay will not be sufficient. It is when we speak that which we know, and when our lives and characters testify to the reality of what we teach, that we can lead men onward, and can with power even command them to follow.

The thought to be emphasized then is this—we can only lead men so far as we ourselves go. How far then may we go? In the Bible we have the record of three great historical revelations, connected, respectively, with Sinai, Calvary, and Pentecost. From Sinai there was given a revelation of Law; on Calvary a revelation of Grace; at Pentecost a revelation of Power. These three combined constitute the full revelation of God to us, and what we have to do is to seek to grasp their significance and experience their power, that we may lead our people into the same.

THE REVELATION OF LAW.

Take first the revelation of Law, on Sinai. It was a revelation of its majesty, its holiness, and its authority over men. In this there was nothing of a merely temporary character—it was a revelation for all time, which no age can afford in any way to depreciate or overlook. We need, no less than the Israelites of old, to take care that Sinai has its right place in our estimation. We need to view God as one whose laws are immutable and righteous, and whose commandments have for us absolute authority. We ought to live and act in all things as those for whom God's Word is final, and that brings into our attitude towards Him the element of awe which too often is largely lacking. The late Dr. Dale, writing to his friend Dr. Berry, once stated: "Nobody fears God now." And, alas, how much truth there is in such a statement! Not only in the world, but even in the Church; not only in the pew but even in the pulpit, God is not feared to-day as of old. And this is an element of our religious life with which we cannot afford to dispense. Where the fear of God is absent, there can be no real strength.

Now we cannot lead men whither we have not come ourselves. Unless the awe of God is upon us, we can never inspire it in others. We need to cultivate this spirit in ourselves, by seeking to realize the majesty, the holiness, and the authority of the law of God, as it has been revealed to us.

THE REVELATION OF GRACE.

Then, secondly, there is the revelation which was given on Calvary. Of course, the fundamental lesson which we learn here is the great fact of atonement for sin. But there are other things included, which we cannot afford to forget. As we see our Lord dying on the cross for us, we feel ourselves called to become partakers with Him in His death by the crucifixion of self. As we view the love which inspired His sacrifice, we feel that it is demanded of us that we too should travail in spirit over sinful men. As we hear Him mocked and derided, we feel that we also are called to share in the reproach of the cross. Fellowship with Christ's sufferings, self-sacrifice, passion, and compassion—all these we realize as demanded of us by the revelation of Grace on Calvary.

And these things we have to preach, and to these things we have to lead men to aspire to, and attain. But can we, unless they are within the scope of our own experience? Can we lead others to the crucifixion of self if we have never been crucified with Christ? Surely not! Unless we have entered deeply into the meaning and the power of the revelation given on Calvary, our spiritual leadership will be sorely lacking both in its scope and its results.

THE REVELATION OF POWER.

Then, thirdly, there is the revelation of Power at Pentecost. We may regard this from two points of view. We may view it as it touches the question of saintliness, or as it touches the question of service. We are too apt to limit our view of Pentecost to the second of these two aspects, and yet, important as this is, it is not of such vital importance as the former. The deepest significance of Pentecost lies, not in service, but in character. It means for us the power to realize in life and character the full purpose of Christ in dying for us. It shows the power which can reproduce in us the character of Jesus Christ. And then, as touching the question of service, Pentecost reveals the secret of conscious strength. It lends buoyancy of spirit in spite of discouragements; it preserves optimism in the face of difficulty and opposition; it inspires self-forgetfulness; it creates and sustains a passion for aggression, and fires with enthusiasm.

All this, and more, is involved. And to live in the power of a perpetual Pentecost is the privilege of every saved soul. It is for us to lead men into the full enjoyment of this privilege. But how can we, if we are strangers to it ourselves?

Such is the many-sided revelation of God entrusted to us. Our privilege it is to lead men in spiritual things. We can only lead where we have first gone, and can only teach what we have first experienced. In a recent war a young English officer was shot while leading his men to attack the zareba of the enemy; and as he died it was with these words upon his lips: "Didn't I lead them straight?" Happy we if, when called upon to lay down our leadership, we shall be able to make the same claim for ourselves.

WHAT LEADERSHIP COSTS.

But let none attempt to disguise from themselves that this spiritual leadership is no easy thing. It costs much. There is the initial cost of Surrender—the surrender of all non-spiritual leaderships. Nothing else can be allowed to interfere in the least degree with the one great aim. This will mean, for some, the loss of position or prestige. It will mean the sacrifice of much which brings and keeps us before the notice of men. It will mean that, later on, we may be spoken of as those whose early brilliant promise has remained unfulfilled. It may mean that our ministry will be confined to the smaller and "less eligible" churches, that our incomes will remain small, or that, from being in the front rank of the ministry, we shall sink to the third or fourth rank. Any or all of these things may be involved, and they must be faced if our spiritual leadership is to be rightly carried out.

SPIRITUAL DISCIPLINE.

And there will be the further cost of continual Discipline. To fit us for our work, God will lead us through many and varied experiences, that we may be able the more effectively to lead those who are travelling along similar paths. We shall probably pass through a more strenuous discipline than those who have either not been called of God to assume the same responsibility, or, having been called, have not responded. We shall, in a measure, be called to sum up in ourselves the experiences of men, that we may the more readily render them our sympathy and help.

After illustrating this thought by references to his own past spiritual experiences and their purpose as seen in after days, Mr. Inwood closed his address with a touching reference to his present voice-weakness, which, having already debarred him from almost all public speaking for some months past, was such as to make his speaking, even in that small hall, a painful and a straining effort. It was difficult, he said, to understand the meaning of it, but he felt assured it was but a new discipline, the purpose of which would be made abundantly manifest in days to come, in increased fitness to help and lead men in spiritual things.

*God's Purpose in Christ.

By Rev. J. STUART HOLDEN.

Let us each ask ourselves the question, "Why did Christ die for me? What is the great purpose of God in giving Jesus Christ, His Son, to be the Saviour of the world, and my Saviour? Let us consider the answers given in God's Word, and pause from time to time to ask whether that which we read has been fulfilled in ourselves—and if not, why not?

Look first at 1 Peter iii. 18, where we have set forth the immediate and ultimate purpose of Jesus Christ in His atoning work: "For Christ hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God." That is the starting point of all; the word "bring" speaks of the Saviour's almightiness meeting the sinner's weakness and inability to save himself. Christ died to bring us back to God, from whom we had wandered and strayed, and whose commands we had broken. As children we learned that Christ "died that we might be forgiven," and also that He might "make us good"—in other words, that we may apprehend that for which we have been apprehended of the Lord Jesus.

At a huge meeting in Chicago a lost child was brought to Mr. Moody, who asked to whom it belonged. On a man presenting himself as its parent, Rev. John McNeill, who was assisting in the service, remarked: "This is what Jesus Christ died for, to pick up lost bairns and put them back in their Father's arms." For what purpose have we been "picked up?" That we may be made, in some degree, in an ever-increasing degree, like unto the One who has "picked us up," and at such a tremendous price.

"I BELIEVE . . . . I BELONG."

The second statement of God's purpose in Christ's death, is found in Rom. xiv. 9: "To this end Christ died, and rose, and revived that He might be Lord both of the dead and living." Not only did Christ die that He might be our Saviour; but He died to master and control us, to become the King and Guide of our life, that He might be Lord. Upon this, special insistence is laid at Keswick—for those who have been redeemed by Christ belong to Him. Those who have repeated the words "I believe" must go on and say, "Therefore I belong;" all I am, spirit, soul, and body, past, present, and future, all that is mine and that I call my own, all belong to Christ. Let each inquire—Is Christ the Lord of my life, the Lord of my home-life, my heart-life, in the realm of my possessions? Is He the Lord, whose word and will are absolute and unquestioned by me? If He is not, you may still apprehend this purpose, in order that Christ, who is now your Saviour, may in deed and truth become your Lord, by a definite act of surrender and consecration on your part, and that in every sphere and level of your life.

The third expression of God's purpose is found in Titus ii. 14: "Our Lord Jesus Christ . . . gave Himself for us, that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Redeem from all iniquity, and A-L-L spells "all." That is God's purpose in the redemptive work of Jesus Christ towards you and me.

THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

From the negative aspect, turn to the positive, in Rom. viii. 3—"God sending His own Son, in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh; that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit." The same righteousness which has been fulfilled for us is to be fulfilled in us by the power of the reigning Christ. You say, does that mean that I am to be delivered from all sin here and now? We say unhesitatingly "Yes," and we say it upon the authority of God's Word. But we qualify the statement—we do not deny it—to safeguard the truth. There is a crisis and a process—a crisis leading to a process. The crisis is a door opening into a process; and the one without the other is not a complete statement of the truth of God. The moment I realize that at the cross sin and iniquity have been dealt with—the moment I recognise my identification with my blessed Lord on Calvary—that moment I am united with a crucified and ascended Saviour, and claim redemption from all sin; and that moment God is true to His word. But that which takes place in the hour of crisis has to be wrought out daily in our experience, even until that day when we shall see Him as He is and be made like Him.

The Lord works in a two-fold way when He redeems from iniquity. He gives us the grace to see the sin, and then the grace to cease from it. He may employ my brother to point out the sin, and say there is that in my life which is not glorifying to God; I accept my brother's word as that of an instrument of God, causing me to see it and to reckon it as put away at the cross. God gives us power to discern, and then to decide. He reveals, and then He removes. Is this purpose of the death of Jesus Christ being, to any extent, fulfilled in your life; and are you being redeemed from all iniquity—from lying, exaggeration, slander, impurity, in thought, word, or deed? Have you been redeemed from unholy living, and led into the life of righteousness, a righteousness which the world recognises, and which shall contribute to the sum total of the glory of our God in the world? If not, ask Him to lead you into the fulness of His purpose in Christ.

A GOD-REVISED LIFE.

A fourth purpose is given in Gal. i. 4: Christ "gave Himself for our sins, that He might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father." In other words, the purpose was to bring us into a life of absolute separation from the world. We are to "come out and be separate, and touch not the unclean thing." The world has eaten into the Church, and its cancerous roots have spread everywhere. If the cross of Christ, whereby we have been crucified unto the world and the world unto us, is to come into our lives, we must count the cost of a God-revised life. It would make much difference in some quarters, and Christ would be able to say, "They are not of the world, Father, even as I am not of the world." This is not the separation of the Pharisee, who draws aside his skirts and says, "I am holier than thou;" it is not the seclusion of the monk, who says the world is so bad that he must get out of it; but it is the separation of the Bride, the Lamb's Wife, who, having been called out of darkness into God's marvellous light, enjoys fellowship with Jesus Christ, involving the asceticism of a great moral purpose. Christ said of His disciples: "They are not of the world . . . but I have sent them into the world." Some will never have the privilege of being sent into the world; they are not ready for contact with the world, and cannot be, until, in heart, soul, and spirit, they are separated from the fascinating power of the world.

* Address in Eskin Street Tent on Tuesday, July 28.

A DIVINE TOUCHSTONE.

Turn now to 2 Cor. v. 15 for another purpose:—Christ "died for all, that they who live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him who died for them, and rose again." This is a shifting of the centre of the circle of our lives. Henceforth we are to live not unto ourselves; in spending my time, planning my life, and using my possessions, I must remember that I am a steward. "I have set the Lord always before me"—that is practically what the reign of Christ means in the soul. Living unto Him, we eat and drink and do all that we do to the glory of God. Every action and attitude, every thought and word, every pursuit—all unto Him. This is the Divine touchstone by which we may test that which is not right or befitting in the Christian life. Is there that which you cannot put down as unto Christ? Then drop it at once; renounce it from this day. "Let everyone that nameth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity."

Another purpose:—1 Thess. v. 10. Christ "died for us, that, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with Him." Not only are we to live unto Him, but to maintain communion with Him. Do we know anything of this—of a life in which heaven is always open, and angels of God are ever ascending and descending upon the Son of Man? What do we know of a life in which the Word of God is instinct with His own presence, and vibrating with His own voice? This brings some of us to acknowledge that the kind of life we are living, and the walk of life in which we are engaged, make it utterly impossible for Christ to live with us. Let us count the cost of a God-revised life. Oh, the reality of the fellowship to which Christ calls us by the Cross—the reality of the access which Christ has made to the holy place!

"GOD'S DYNAMIC TO MEET GOD'S DESIRE."

Is the ideal too high? Are some saying that the treatment is too drastic? Let us turn to one more purpose—Gal. iii. 13—"Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us . . . that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith." Here is God's dynamic to meet God's desire. Here is the power of God to perform the purpose of God in our life; and the Cross is the foundation of the redeemed Church and the fulness of the Holy Ghost; and because of the cross, because Christ was made a curse, and is now the risen and glorified Lord, having received from the Father the fulness of the Holy Ghost—which He has shed forth upon His Church—we may be filled with that blessed Spirit. Thus it is that the impossible becomes possible, and that which we see to be God's demand upon us becomes gloriously easy as He lives out His life in us. "No man can say that Jesus Christ is Lord but by the Holy Ghost." This is the secret of unworldliness and deliverance from sin; the secret of the crisis and the maintained process of holiness; the secret of living to the Lord and having fellowship and communion with Him, being filled with that blessed Spirit which God offers to us to-day. "If we, being evil, know how to give good gifts to our children, how much more shall our Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?"

Every promise of God is a covenanted possibility of power. A new ideal may be ennobling, but nothing short of an enduement of the Spirit will be enabling to us. You may go back to your everyday life with new desires and recognising new standards; but you will go to failure if you do not receive, by simple, unquestioning faith, the gift of the Holy Ghost.

*He is Able.

By Rev. HUBERT BROOKE.

There are in practical daily life two prevailing views of what a Christian desires to have. One wants to have as little of Christianity as will be consistent with safety at the end; another wants as much as possible of Christ and holiness in order that he may anticipate heaven, while upon earth. The first of these are people who really want to be saved, as one said to me, "If I get on the bottom step of heaven, that is all I want." It was these people who gave rise to the French diplomatist's phrase that "Some Christians have just sufficient religion to make them melancholy, and not enough to make them happy."

We want to find out how much Christianity we can include in our lives, and see if there is not a possibility of living days of heaven upon earth. Yesterday we looked at what was possible for God's people in the way of pardon, and now I want us to see what is possible in the way of purity. And in our search for light on this subject we must look into God's Word, for we are like the disciples when they asked: "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." So we come to His Word and ask, "What can God give in the way of holiness?" It is not a question of what we can do in the line of holiness, but what can He do? I suppose we are all agreed that He alone can cleanse us from our past sins, and we had better be agreed that He alone can save us from present sins and all those that are to come. The Psalmist says: "Wash me throughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin;" and later he says: "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." So we are not going to occupy ourselves with the question, "How far can man get in the line of holiness?" but see how far God can bring him in the line of holiness. "Now unto Him who is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of His glory, with exceeding joy; to the only wise God our Saviour be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever."

THE PROMISES OF GOD FOR US.

Let us turn to the Epistles to find what God is able to do; and we can always put in the words, "for me," for it is to us that these wonderful promises are made. Look at Romans iv. 21. Here it is said that Abraham was fully persuaded that what God had promised He was able to perform. I go to the promises to see what this means, and I find that these promises begin in Gen. ii., "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die"; and chap iii., where the Seed of the woman is to bruise the serpent's head. So they go on right through the Bible to the last chapter, where we read, "Surely I come quickly." And all that He has promised He is "able to perform." With that we may read Ephes. iii. 20, 21. Here is the only limit: "He is able to do exceeding abundantly above all we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us." God's promises are the realm of His performance; they began in Gen. ii. and did not finish till the last chapter of Revelation. I know the superscription: "Thus saith the Lord"; I know the attestation: "All the promises of God in Him are yea and amen."

THE CHRISTIAN'S ASSURANCE.

Thus I find the promises are in accordance with His character. I tell you with a good conscience you may believe every word He has promised; and if you have tested Him and tried a single promise why should you listen to someone who tells you they are not true? I am not concerned with what people tell me God cannot do; I want to know what He can do; and a little child that can tell me the Lord Jesus Christ says, "Ask, and it shall be given," is a far wiser counsellor than the man who says he does not believe in God, and is not wasting his time in praying. We have the assurance that He is able to perform all that He has promised, and if, as some tell us, there are 20,000 of these promises, it is no wonder the performance will be abundant. Let us take another realm—that in 2 Cor. ix. 8: "God is able to make all grace abound toward you." What rich words are used here! In the sufficiency of His grace we may abound in good works. "Freely ye have received, freely give." I think the reason why many Christians are not freely giving is because they have not freely received. They have a little, and are afraid to lose it. They are like the Dead Sea, keeping all that flows in and giving nothing out; unlike the Sea of Galilee, which is ever fresh because, as it receives, so it distributes.

PAUL'S CONFIDENCE.

Look also at Romans xiv. 4: "Who art Thou that judgest another man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be holden up, for God is able to make him stand." We look at a Christian with feeble knees and shaking hands. Here is God's word that the weak ones we are most likely to make little of He is able to use. Time after time we find that the weakest are the strongest. The time to be in fear is when we think we are strong, and the time to have confidence is when we know we are weak. Suppose we look further on—2 Tim. i. 12—where we find what the Apostle was assured of: "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day." This implies that the Apostle had committed something. He had committed his soul, his steps, and lips to the keeping of the Saviour. This is the bank in which everything is safe. Whatever you have given over to Him to be kept till that day, you will find again when that day comes.

Then again in Jude 24: "Unto Him who is able to keep you from falling." Here is a wonderful fact. "He is able to guard you from stumbling" (R.V.). That is what the loving mother does for the little child just beginning to walk. He tells us that He gives His angels charge over us to keep us in all our ways, in which we have the assurance of outward preservation; God is able to guard us from stumbling—the promise of inward security. Possibly most of us here this morning have some years of life before us. Just think, that over all those years it is written: "He is able to guard you from stumbling." Of course, if you do not stumble, you do not fall. He guards the steps of His saints.

SUCCOUR FOR THE TEMPTED.

Again, in Heb. ii. 18, we read: "In that He Himself hath suffered being tempted He is able to succour them that are tempted." He having come out of the temptation safe, you will be able to come out safe. This is part of His great substitutionary work. Do not be content with anything but the vicarious suffering; do not be content with the theory that you have a beautiful and representative Man. Suppose I had fallen into the water, and a man on the bank says: "This is the way to swim." What I want is a man who will dive under and allow me to put my hands on his shoulders. So when you are tempted, think how He was tempted, and ask Him to succour you and expect Him to do it. In the same Epistle (vii. 25) you have a familiar, beautiful word, exhaustless in its blessing: "Wherefore, He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him." Put down beside that word anything that has been beyond your experience of His grace; any sin from which you have not found deliverance; any temptation you have not overcome—put these down beside this verse, and ask yourself, "Can I get beyond that?"

THE PRACTICAL OUTCOME.

From these passages we find that no promise is too grand, no prayer, in accordance with the promise, too bold, no weakness too great, no circumstances too overpowering, no temptation too trying for Him to deliver from the foe and keep you to the end. This is God's side, and I want you now to turn to our side. If a life is lived in accordance with these promises, what is going to be its practical outcome? If we turn to Rom. xii. we are asked to give our bodies to Him. This chapter tells us what our life is to be at home, chap. xiii. what our political and municipal life is to be, chap. xiv. what our life in the Church is to be. So the outcome is to be seen in practical holiness of life. Look also at 1 Cor. xiii. and Gal. v. 24. You can turn to Ephes. iv. 24, where Paul calls upon the converts to put on the "new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness;" while in verses 25 and 32 you have a picture of what kind of life it is God requires. The first thing that comes out of a life in God's keeping is that there are no lies—white, black, or grey; in the next place there is no sinful anger, no yielding to the devil, no thieving either in business or out of business; no corrupt communications out of the mouth, the lips as clean as the hands, and both as clean as the heart. There must be no grieving of God's Holy Spirit, no bitterness, wrath, or evil-speaking, no clamour, and no malice. This is the practical outcome on the negative side when the mighty power for holiness comes into the heart. God "is able," even unto the last, when He shall "present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy."

USE THE PROMISES.

I had a conversation with a man who thought that some new revelation would be given to us at Keswick. I said I hoped there would be a new application of the old doctrine. There is no besetment or sin of my life that is not covered by these promises of God, and what we have to do is to put them into practice. Write "He is able" over your life, and go back to the place where you began. It is God who is to be the doer of it. Some of us well remember an address at this Convention many years ago by Theo. Monod on the words, "In the beginning—God." That is to be the case in every Christian experience. "It is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure." We are called upon to take His promises and put them to practical use. You will remember that in 2 Cor. vi. there are quotations from Exodus, Jeremiah, and Isaiah, after which the Apostle says, "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God," which means that we are called upon to put them into practice. When you see before you an obstacle you cannot meet, remember that there is the applied power of the promise of God.

THE SECRET OF PEACE.

Read Psa. cxix. 165, and place it with Jude 24. God's law, keeping power, and promise go together. I suppose there are hundreds in Keswick who can put their seal to the statement that God's Word is true, and have found peace in proportion as they have loved God's law. That is how the stumbling-blocks are removed. Suppose you have in your garden a sweetbriar, the fragrance of which you greatly enjoy. You say to Professor Doubtful, "What a charming fragrance that sweetbriar has!" He takes his tweezers and dissects the bush, and showing you a piece of its wood, says, "There is no scent in it." You would look at the professor's wise face and reverent years, but you would not do as some would, tell the gardener to root up the sweetbriar and put it on the dust heap. And if you have found the fragrance of Jesus and the scent of the Rose of Sharon, and if someone comes along who is not able to discern the fragrance because he has lost the sense of smell, instead of listening to him any longer about all he is sure you cannot know, tell him a few things you do know. I once asked a young man who had begun to doubt Christ if he had the same peace as before. He replied he had no peace whatever. "Great peace have they that love Thy law, they shall have no stumbling-blocks" (marg.).

A Spiritual Temple.—Food is not health. The human body is built just so as to turn food into health and strength. And truth is not holiness. The human soul was made to turn, by the subtle chemistry of its digestive experience, truth into goodness. The duty of physical health and the duty of spiritual purity and loftiness are not two duties; they are two parts of one duty. Be good, that you may be well; be well, that you may be good.—Phillips Brooks.

Beauties of Holiness.

By PREBENDARY H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.*

In two passages in the Psalms we have placed before us the subject of holiness in general, and the source from which all true holiness must spring. In one, Psa. xxix. 2, we read: "Give unto the Lord the glory due unto His name: worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." In another, Psa. xxx. 4: "Sing unto the Lord, O ye saints of His, and give thanks at the remembrance of His holiness." A practical replica of the former verse is found in 1 Chron. xvi. 29, and Psa. xcvi. 8, 9 (see also 2 Chron. xx. 21). Here we learn (1) our attitude in the worship of God, with our thoughts concentrated upon Him; and (2) our attitude towards the world, as we meet the foes of God with a pæan of praise for the holiness which God bestows upon His people.

There is one more passage in which the beauty of holiness is mentioned, but in the plural number. In Psa. cx. 3 we read that the people of the Lord "shall be willing (or rather shall be a free-will offering) in the day of God's power, in the beauties of holiness from the womb of the morning." That shows us what our attitude should be in regard to ourselves—the beauty of holiness in God, the beauties of holiness as appearing in our life and service.

WHAT IS HOLINESS.

Studying the word "holiness" in its Scripture uses, we speak first of its abstract and perfect manifestation as found in God Himself. Only once do we meet with hagiotês in the New Testament, and then in Heb. xii. 10, where we are told that God "chastens us that we may be partakers of His holiness." The word implies the perfect, abstract, idea of holiness as found in God alone. The Revisers have adopted the word in 2 Cor. i. 12 in reference to St. Paul, but I am not satisfied that the reading should displace haplotês ("simplicity").

The second word to which I would call attention is hagiasmos, which occurs ten times in the New Testament, sometimes rendered "holiness," at other times "sanctification." It does not imply the absolute realization of holiness, but rather means the process by which perfect holiness will be hereafter attained, a process, in fact, which is being carried on in believers through the course of this life, the work of Christ who "is made unto us . . . sanctification." The word brings before us the application by the Holy Ghost of God's provision for us in Christ.

The third word, hagiôsunê, is only found three times; it is likewise translated "holiness," and implies the final issue of the process which the Holy Ghost is carrying on in the believer. In Rom. i. 4. the Lord Jesus is spoken of as having been "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of Holiness." The Lord Jesus is there brought before us as the pattern perfected man, the One who has attained to hagiôsunê, a holiness in the sense of the completeness of God's work. (See also 2 Cor. vii. 1, and 1 Thess. iii. 13.)

There are three other words translated "holiness"—hosiotês (piety) found in Luke i. 75, and Eph. iv. 24: eusebeia (godliness, reverence) only rendered thus in Acts iii. 12; and hieroprepês (that which belongs to the temple, or sacred things) in Titus ii. 3. Thus we have brought before us the abstract holiness of God; the process by which we are made holy; and the holiness to which we look forward hereafter in glory.

The occurrences of the words relating to these conceptions are very impressive. "Holy" makes a total of 560; add to that comparative terms ("holier" and "holiest"), and the negative "unholy," then "saint" and "saints," "holiness," "sanctify" and "sanctification," and you reach a grand total of 889 occurrences, which afford some idea of the significance of the subject in Holy Scripture. The cognate terms, "hallow" and "consecrate," should also be taken into account, if we would gather what God means when He charges man, both in the Old and New Testaments, "Ye shall be holy; for I am holy" (Lev. xi. 44; 1 Peter i. 16).

* Notes of two Bible Readings in Eskin Street Tent. In a succeeding issue we hope to report the third and fourth addresses on the same subject.

SANCTIFICATION AND JUSTIFICATION.

What does God's holiness mean? An old writer defined holiness as "consisting in conformity to the nature and will of God, whereby the saint is distinguished from the unrenewed world, being no longer actuated by their principles or precepts, no longer governed by their maxims and customs." There are degrees of holiness, but sincerity is inseparable from the very being of a saint. Moreover, sanctification is distinct from justification or righteousness. Righteousness is a right relation to God; it is absolutely lacking in man, but is provided by God, perfected and completed in His dear Son. We accept by faith the gift of God's righteousness; we have the perfect righteousness of God from the very moment of our new birth through believing in Christ. Sanctification, on the other hand, is the active side of the Christian character and life; it is the exhibition of what God would have in conformity to the image of His Son; and is wrought in our souls by the Holy Ghost. When God sanctifies, He sets apart for His own purposes and use. God claims us absolutely, entirely, and for His holy purposes; and if this purpose is to be carried out, our part is to yield to the will of God.

Can it be that vile worms of the earth are called to the holiness of God? I suppose we might speak of holiness as righteousness brought into action; righteousness is distinctly a passive principle, holiness an active principle. There are those who strive after holiness in order to attain to righteousness, and then to get eternal life. Let us have this clear. Life is the source of righteousness; righteousness is the source of holiness. In dealing with our souls, let us remember this, lest we pervert the truth of God. Hence the error of the Roman system, which starts on the wrong basis of seeking to bring the grace of congruity (as it is called) to bear on good works, and then to claim through personal holiness the righteousness wherewith to stand before God, and out of that to attain to eternal life. If life be the source of righteousness, and righteousness the source of holiness, how can it be possible for any man to think he has attained to perfect holiness? If God's life be perfect, and His righteousness perfect, then His holiness must be perfect; and He will never lower the standard of His demand of His creatures, who must aim at perfection if they would glorify Him and reach the heights that God would have them attain.

God has revealed His holiness in various ways. As Elohim He struck terror to Israel, and the fear of His majesty seemed to separate between Creator and creature. His appearing in Christ was different. He stooped to fallen man, presenting His wondrous holiness in a new and beautiful aspect. By the third revelation, at Pentecost, the Holy Ghost was bestowed, bringing into man's intimate experience that which essentially is far above him and beyond his comprehension. Father, Son, and Holy Ghost have at different periods approached our race to teach the lesson of holiness. Contemplate the holiness of God—his power, glory, purity, abhorrence of evil, and then turn and survey the things of man. As you contrast the two conditions, is not your heart burdened with an agony of shame, and do you not say, "Unclean! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death? . . . I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord; and I give thanks for every remembrance of His holiness."

MAN'S TERRIBLE SHORTCOMINGS.

Having thus considered, in general, God's holiness and the holiness to which believers are called, we arrive at the third stage of our subject—the awful shortcomings of man, and the Divine supply for the process of holiness which God desires to see carried out in His people. Look at Num. xi. 6: "Now our soul is dried away; there is nothing at all, except this manna, before our eyes." That is for the first branch of our present subject; for the second, read Phil. i. 19: "I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ." The children of Israel were in many respects typical of the body of believers to-day. Egypt represents the natural life of sin; the wilderness the murmuring life of a redeemed soul that is unsatisfied with the things of God; Canaan, the privileged life of power and possession and enjoyment of God where rightly entered into and appreciated.

For the most part, Israel was a type of what God's people ought not to be. They had all passed under the blood in Egypt, and were accepted in virtue of the slain lamb; they had been delivered from the house of bondage and brought to Mount Horeb, where the will of God was made known to them; they had been pardoned the terrible sin of worshipping the golden calf, and had been re-admitted into the favour of God; and yet, three days after hearing the revelation of the Divine will, the Lord being manifestly present with them in their journeyings, they are lusting and fretting, murmuring and complaining, and, instead of taking the provision of God with gratitude and holy awe, they say, "Our soul is dried away; there is nothing at all except this manna before our eyes." Is not this a picture of the majority of professing Christians, who, after conversion and a certain study of God's Word, instead of going forward to blessing and victory, to their own good and the glory of God, take to complaining, and lusting after the cucumbers, melons, leeks, onions, and garlick—the stinking things of Egypt. Back goes the heart of the people to the old life of bondage and burden-bearing, and all they care for is the appetite of the body and the indulgence of the flesh!

"THE FLESHPOTS OF EGYPT."

Do not multitudes of Christians act as Israel did—look at the thing they have, and ask, "Is that enough to satisfy me here in a wilderness, without any water except that which comes from one little stream, and without any bread except such as must be gathered day by day? I have no store of wealth, no riches built up; is this all that God can give—all that I was given to expect when called out of the bondage of sin?" Back go their hearts to the fleshpots of Egypt. When God called us out of Egypt, and said, "Ye shall be unto me a peculiar treasure; ye shall be holy, for I am holy," instead of going straight forward, we indulged in some such terrible thought as this: "The present does not satisfy me; I have not what I looked for; I have not received all that I expected." And then, murmuring in regard to the present, we have a hankering and yearning after the things which once gave us a measure of satisfaction.

This is why young Christians go from meetings for holiness into the world and to things that satisfy the flesh—in fact, to the Egyptian life. God hears the murmuring, and sees what goes on in such souls. "O Naphthali, satisfied with favour, and full with the blessing of the Lord!" This is what ought to be; but sad to say it is what is not; and the chosen of God, the redeemed of the Lord, are exhibiting to the world the most painful thing that can be witnessed upon earth—separation from earth's enjoyments, such as they are, but no satisfaction through knowledge of the Almighty. And these are the people who are called to be a peculiar treasure to the Lord, called into holiness and the enjoyment of God!

FORGETFULNESS OF GOD.

When you ask what it is that thus leads Christians into discontent, you will find the answer in Psa. cvi. 12. After being led out of Egypt and taken through the Red Sea—"then believed they His words; they sang His praise." And then? "They soon forgat His works; they waited not for His counsel." And then? "They lusted exceedingly in the wilderness, and tempted God in the desert. And He gave them their request; but sent leanness into their soul" (13-15). Have we not known hundreds of such cases? Things before their eyes were tasteless—simply manna (man hu—"What is it?") Men live with what they see before their eyes, and will not go forward. It is also said of Israel, "They forgat God their Saviour, which had done great things in Egypt. . . . Yea, they despised the pleasant land, they believed not His word" (21, 24). And yet it had been said of them (v. 12), "Then believed they His words." They believed His word about what they could see, but not about what they could not see.

Multitudes to-day believe that God has redeemed them—has set them free, taken them into the wilderness, smitten the rock, and given them water to drink; and yet they wish themselves back in bondage because they have no enjoyment of God. Yet they have been called to be holy—holy unto the Lord! When Aaron was appointed (Exod. xxviii. 36), there was to be placed across his brow a band with the words, "Holiness to the Lord." That was in order that Israel might see what was the call of God to them. In like manner, we are to see in the Lord Jesus, who bears the glory of our holy things, the One by whom Jehovah is unceasingly calling us to be "Holiness to the Lord." Not only did Christ make atonement for the sins of the past, but He lays His demand upon us for holiness to the Lord for evermore. And here we disappoint Him, bringing sadness to His heart. While we cannot be absolutely satisfied with the present, but must ever long for something further on, we cannot but feel how mean is our conduct in continually murmuring at God's provision for us. When Israel found themselves saved, they believed God's word; why not when He told them to go forward?

Do we not say of Israel that, having been set apart for God to be entirely and wholly His, they should have kept themselves from all the surrounding evil, and have yielded themselves to be God's alone and for ever? When we say that, we are but describing the motives, instincts, and actuating principles on which holiness will always be based for us Christians, and on which we are called to be the Lord's, utterly and absolutely.

THE SUPPLY OF THE SPIRIT.

While Israel in the wilderness typifies the discontent and unholiness of God's people, there is no one who, like St. Paul, brings before us the solemn privileges and joys that belong to one who rightly believes in Christ Jesus and His power to save to the uttermost. Placed in circumstances far more distressing than Israel was, lying in a Roman fortress awaiting death, and apparently without friends or hope, with no one ministering to his need except what the Philippians sent him, he writes: "I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ." Who of us is prepared to say: "It matters not whether I live or die, I have learned to be content, to want and to abound; I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me"? How could he say, "I have all things and abound"? Answer: Because he had the prayers of the believers. We little know how we are helped by distant workers in their prayers! Through the prayers of others, Paul was enabled to look forward with joy to complete deliverance, even to "the redemption of the body."

Our circumstances are infinitely brighter than the Apostle's, yet we are prone to excuse our attitude and disposition by speaking of our cases as "so peculiar." Do we thereby imply God is not master of our circumstances, or that Christ is not sufficient for them? Through the Apostle, God tells us that He is equal to all our needs, and that the discipline and opportunities of His grace will advance our everlasting glorification, which is the final issue of salvation, "through the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ."

"The supply of the Spirit." When I come to speak of the majesty of God, pouring out all that He is, and letting it come down to me for my supply, I may well wonder. His name is called "Wonderful," and He pours out His Spirit with the express purpose of making us holy. But how does this become Christ's supply?

THE MYSTERY OF REDEMPTION.

Go back in the councils of heaven, and see God there with Christ by His side. It comes across the plans of God that man must be redeemed from his fall, and Christ announces His will to go and do the Father's will and save the fallen race. In order to do this, the great, high, glorious Son of God emptied Himself of all that He was, that He might give to others. He emptied Himself of the prerogatives and power of the Godhead, and came down to earth. God made Him, in His solemn providence and power, by the Holy Ghost, to be man, and as man He was an absolute pauper for our sakes, and could only give what He received from the Father.

The Father gave the Spirit without measure to His Son, and all through His life He was yearning toward men to give them the Spirit which was in Him. Yet all through His ministry His endeavours were in vain; men could not take the Spirit. In John vii. 39, we read that "the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified." I doubt if "given" is the right word to supply. He said, "I am meek and lowly of heart"; but the people were too proud of spirit to take His Spirit of humility. Not even His disciples could take it; and when He died, His ministry seemed almost an utter failure. He poured out His life-blood on the cross—gave up all that God had given Him as man—and then, ascending to the Father, He "received gifts for men." He gets a resurrection life, and as He rose from the dead, He commenced a new career as the Resurrection Man, with power to communicate all that God has given Him.

Christ emptied out the life of man, and received as man from God the resurrection life—the life of fellowship with God, and a life at the right hand of God. This life is one of power and perfect holiness, of separation from sin, and of love. This life of God's Son, the Man Christ Jesus, is communicated to the believer, that he may be holy as the Son of God is holy. Christ became Son of Man that we might become sons of God, even as it is written, "And I will be a father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty" (2 Cor. vi. 18). We are called to take the gifts of God, and take the supply of the Spirit, the Spirit of Jesus Christ which is offered to us all. And shall we take it?

We next advance to the human side of the subject—the process of sanctification in the believer.

An Opportunity.

HAVE you told them how to trust Him?
Have you said the time is "now"?
Have you asked them, "If not—why not?"
They are longing, tell them "how."

Hungry souls are all around you,
Longing for your words of cheer;
Won't you speak that word for Jesus?
He has saved you from all fear.

Some are longing, longing, longing,
You, you say, are satisfied!
Shall they go away still longing,
When God brought them to your side?

Brought them so that YOU might help them
By your lip and life to show
That the satisfying Jesus
Is THE "ONE" you fully know.

They are hungry, thirsty, longing,
Will YOU lead them to His side?
You are just the one to help them,
You, you say, are satisfied.

Lose not chances of His blessing,
God has placed you where you are;
He sends souls into your "haven,"
Friends from near and friends from far.

Do they see "Him" in your conduct?
Do they see "His" power o'er you?
Will they praise the name of Jesus
Just because you find Him true?

Keswick, 1903. MARY ALICE BOOTH.

Service from All.—There are ways in which even silent people can do service for God and be a blessing in the world. A star does not talk, but its calm, steady beam shines down continually out of the sky, and is a benediction to many. A flower cannot sing bird-songs, but its sweet beauty and gentle fragrance make it a blessing wherever it is seen. Be like a star in your peaceful shining, and many will thank God for your life. Be like a flower in your pure beauty and in the influence of your unselfish spirit, and you may do more to bless the world than many who talk incessantly. The living sacrifice does not always mean active work. It may mean the patient endurance of a wrong, the quiet bearing of a pain cheerful acquiescence in a disappointment.—J. R. Miller.

The Wesleyan Conference.

THE Pastoral Session of the Wesleyan Conference opened on Tuesday, July 28, in the Wesley Chapel, Camborne. No burning questions of church legislation or doctrine have aroused the deep feeling of the Conference as in some recent years, but important matters relating to the doctrine and discipline of Methodism, and to ministerial character and appointment, have occupied the careful attention of the assembled ministers of the Church.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP AND WORLDLINESS.

The President of the Conference (Rev. Marshall Hartley), in his opening address to the pastoral session, touched wisely and boldly upon some questions of paramount importance. He dwelt upon the necessity of care for the children. As ministers, they should cultivate personal relationship with the young people of their churches. Mr. Hartley commended the growing custom of introducing an address to the children into the order of the Sunday morning service. He remembered that as a boy it was his duty to sit under learned divines who scarcely moved a muscle except to knock a fly off the end of their nose, and who preached nothing he could understand. He welcomed, therefore, the innovation of addressing a few suitable words to the children in the midst of the service. They must also seek to gain a personal influence over the young people in their homes, by taking a more active and intelligent interest in their intellectual pursuits, beliefs, and misgivings.

The President regarded some aspects of their church membership with dissatisfaction. With more than 2,000 ministers and 18,000 local preachers, and an army of Sunday-school teachers and other workers, their increase of only a little more than one per cent. must lead to searchings of heart. There was a strong feeling on the part of many that they had not sufficiently widened the doors and given due recognition to the godly people who worshipped with them and would return themselves as Methodists, though the class-meeting did not appeal to them. He believed Methodism had not spoken the last word on the subject. Nothing was more damaging, however, to the spiritual life of the Church than for ministers to talk down the class-meeting. Their own experience and the blessedness of Christian fellowship should give them abounding ground for the advocacy of this institution. The President echoed the wise advice of the late Hugh Price Hughes, that they should continually appoint young leaders of intelligent sympathy and intense devotion.

Mr. Hartley then addressed words of solemn warning as to the wordly amusements that were creeping into the homes of some of their people. It was with a pang that he heard that in some Methodist homes "the whist-drive was more popular than the class-meeting." Some people seemed to think that they could dance into the Kingdom of Heaven. While not discussing the general question of amusements, Mr. Hartley declared earnestly that the grip of wordly amusements, which might be innocent in itself, was alienating their young people from the class-meeting, and from the devotional life. They must speak out on this question, and the people would listen. He asked them to join him in an earnest crusade against that which was sapping the spiritual life of their people. He was anxious they should themselves follow the great features of the past. They were told sometimes that if they introduced any innovation they were not followers of John Wesley. But Wesley was a progressive man, and they must copy not the acts of their founder, but cultivate his spirit. It was said sometimes that Methodism began in the Church of England. It was his view that Methodism began in the work of God in the heart of John Wesley, and as long as they kept true to the great spiritual principles of separation from the world and loyalty to Christ they would make progress along the lines of devotion and service, and Methodism would prosper. The President's outspoken denunciation of worldly amusements among church members was warmly approved by the Conference.

On the subject of the retirement of ministers, a special minute was made regarding the eminent services of Dr. Rigg; and a special record was made in the case of Rev. Thomas Champness, the beloved founder of the "Joyful News Mission," and one of the most original and earnest evangelists of Methodism, whose eminent services to rural Methodism, and in the training of local preachers were warmly acknowledged. A similar course was also followed in the case of Professor Slater, who during a long ministry of forty-nine years has rendered valuable service as superintendent, district chairman, tutor, and contributor to religious literature. Among other honoured brethren who now retire are Rev. Arminius Burgess, a distinguished Indian missionary; Rev. Sampson Weaver, a great temperance worker; and Rev. Isaac E. Page, a prominent leader in the Southport Holiness Convention and similar movements.

ADMISSION TO THE MINISTRY.

The greatest care is taken in regard to the admission of young men into the ministry. There is at present a great demand for trained men in the circuits of the Connexion, but that has not led to any relaxation of the jealousy with which the entrance into the ministry is guarded. There has been some fear lest the mere literary attainments of the candidates should outweigh the more important requirements of "gifts, grace and fruit" in those who declare themselves called to the ministry. The final decision is with the Conference, though the recommendations of the strong committees before which the candidates have been examined have great weight. In quite a number of cases this year candidates have been accepted by the Conference, who were declined by the committees. In one case, notably, the testimony as to evangelistic power led to the acceptance of a young man of very slender educational attainments. About 200 candidates presented themselves before the May Synods, of whom 142 were recommended to Conference. Of these thirty-four were declined by the Conference, eight withdrew, and 100 were accepted.

Some forty young ministers who have served four years of probation in home circuits were received by the Conference into full connexion. They had already passed through many ordeals, the last being a private examination by the president, and a public examination before the Methodist people. The services held for the latter purpose at Falmouth, Hayle, and Tucking Mill were largely attended. Suitable addresses were given by Revs. Jabez Ingram, W. E. Sellers, and Richard Roberts, and each candidate for ordination gave an account of his conversion and call to the ministry.

There were some twenty applications for admission into the Wesleyan ministry, chiefly from ministers of other churches, but only four were accepted. They were—Rev. George Lang, a Congregational minister; Rev. Henry Whitmore, B.A., of the Canadian Conference; Revs. Harvey Swithenbank and A. W. Bishop, both of whom were formerly probationers.

The iron law of the triennial term of the Methodist itinerancy is slowly yielding to the exigencies of the work of God. There were twenty-seven cases where circuits or missions asked for the appointment of ministers for more than a third year in succession. In nearly every case the sanction of Conference was given to the application. In one of the rural missions, namely that of North Cornwall, three ministers are allowed to remain for a fourth year.

A long discussion arose on the affairs of the Connexional Publishing House, which continues the printing and circulation of Methodist literature which Wesley himself began. In common with other publishing houses, the Wesleyan Book Room has felt the pinch of bad trade. But it is felt on many hands that the circulation of Wesleyan magazines is far from satisfactory. Several brethren freely criticized the management of the book room, as well as the editorship of the Connexional magazines. One of the critics was so badly informed that he uttered strictures on magazines that had ceased to exist!

THE OBSERVANCE OF THE LORD'S DAY.

Many public meetings have been held during the Conference, and the interests of various departments of Methodist and social work have been eloquently set forth to large audiences. A great open-air young people's gathering at Gwennap Pit, that historic preaching place of John Wesley, had, however, to be abandoned owing to heavy rain. A largely attended meeting was held to support the work of the Connexional committee, which seeks to secure "The Lord's Day Observance and Defence."

Some of the most influential leaders of the Conference spoke, including Dr. Marshall Randles, Dr. T. B. Stephenson, Dr. T. Allen, Dr. Waddy Moss, and Rev. J. Scott Lidgett. The last-named in a strong speech said this question was one of the most serious Christianity would have to face in the near future. He believed the elements in the character of Protestant Christendom which went to set up and maintain in past generations the Lord's Day were exactly those to which their spiritual and national greatness were due. The observance of the Sabbath was a Divine law. But it seemed to him that one of the great dangers of the age was the inclination to revolt against any kind of law from above. Dr. Bowman Stephenson urged that the question of the observance of the Lord's Day should be lifted from the side of other great questions and be given peculiar prominence. It was resolved that, in view of the rapid increase of Sabbath desecration and the special temptations placed in the path of the young, the Conference be asked to recommend that the serious attention of the Churches be frequently drawn to the evils; and that, where practicable, organizations for the better observance of the Sabbath be instituted.

Amongst the other public gatherings have been meetings in support of foreign missions, work in the army and navy, the London and the Seamen's Mission, temperance, and the Wesley Guild movement. An open session of the Conference was also held at which representatives of the Irish and French Conferences spoke, as well as delegates of sister churches, who brought greetings from beyond the seas.

Hope Trust Work.

EVERY section of the work of the Hope Trust has been well sustained during the past year. The agents have visited something like 320 towns, villages, and hamlets; and have delivered lectures on Protestant and abstinence subjects before 443 juvenile and 530 adult audiences. Protestant Bible Classes have been held regularly in Edinburgh and Leith. In the former, the syllabus consisted of a series of addresses on various aspects of Protestant and Evangelical truth, while in the latter Dr. Blakeney's old and well-known Protestant Catechism was carefully studied.

The seventeen junior and senior abstinence meetings have made substantial progress, a fact all the more remarkable when it is remembered that the principles taught are total abstinence from strong drink, tobacco, and opium.

Limelight lectures were delivered in connection with each of the city meetings. Many applications were also received from churches, Sabbath-schools, bands of hope, and temperance societies. In almost every case an illustrated lecture was given.

Special Communion services with unfermented wine were held in Queen Street Hall in September, 1902, and March, 1903. The circulation of sound Protestant literature has formed no unimportant part of the Trust's operations, copies of The Bulwark, The Protestant Alliance Magazine, and The Protestant Observer finding their way each month into the homes of the people. Grants of tracts have been made to applicants, and the agents have also distributed large quantities in connection with their lectures. Grants of Mr. Forbes Moncrieff's pamphlet against smoking, entitled "Our Boys," and unfermented wine papers have also been made to parties desirous of having them.

Flowers and Favours.

HOW delightful the flowers of summer make the world! They are the ornaments with which Nature bedecks herself when she puts on her prettiest frock. Even when, as this year, "summer weather" is not true to its name, and is very late arriving, the flowers are punctual and up to time, nodding to us in the breeze, and smiling through their tears of rain. There are three classes of these beautiful gifts of God from which we may learn some lessons to-day.

The first are Wild-flowers, or the "flower of the field" (Psa. ciii. 15)—growing just where Nature places them, with no care bestowed upon their cultivation, or protection to shield them from the storm. In shade or sunshine, gale or tempest, wind or rain, they have to struggle against all disadvantages, and do the best they can; and many of them grow in out-of-the-way places, unnoticed, unheeded, unadmired. Do they ever grumble? I think not. They each do the bidding of their Creator, and obediently fulfil His plans.

I am afraid some of us would say more and bloom less if we were in their place! One would be heard complaining, "Why can't I be sheltered by a wall, or be fastened to a stick to strengthen my back?" Another, "If only some kind gardener would help me to grow, and take away these horrid stones that press against me, and the weeds that get in my way!" And others would bemoan their obscurity, and long to be set in a more prominent position where they would attract more attention—or, as they might prefer to put it, "do more good." Yes, if wishes could avail, very few of us would be what and where we are!

The world has a great many human wild-flowers in it, boys and girls and grown-up people, whose life is difficult, whose circumstances are hard, to whom to live is a series of disappointments. Think, for instance, of the very poor, with very few or none of the advantages that we enjoy in the way of comfortable homes, good education, and lots of other things that go to make us happy. Think of the little children left to run wild in country lanes, or "dragged up" in city slums; and of the many who have to struggle on unaided and unblessed, or grow up in obscurity with little or no opportunity of making any mark in the world. You can hardly imagine what life is like under such conditions as these, but you can at least pray for your less fortunate brothers and sisters, and do whatever you can to brighten their restricted lives.

Yet their very disadvantages (as you may regard them), make many of these children strong in body, and others quick-witted and keen in mind. Having no luxurious homes, some live a great deal out-of-doors; others, having to "shift for themselves," learn to think and act in a prompt and ready fashion, which often increases that good quality called resourcefulness which is often lacking in children who have everything done for them.

"Endure hardness," said Paul to his young friend Timothy (2 Tim. ii. 3), and that, in two words, is what the wild-flowers teach us. Endure—that is, be content, and make the best of things; hardness—that is, the difficulties, the disadvantages, the unpleasant things of life. Let us seek to grow for God wherever He has placed us—

You in your small corner
And I in mine—

and as He gives the wild-flowers extra strength to overcome their obstacles, so, if we ask Him, He will give it to us.

"I have learned in whatsoever state I am therein to be content" (Phil. iv. 11). "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer. I have overcome the world" (John xvi. 33). "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne" (Rev. iii. 21).

Passing now to the other extreme in the flower world, we come to Hothouse-plants—those that grow only in a warm temperature, and upon which an unusual amount of care is expended. They are very beautiful, so long as these conditions are observed; but they demand a great deal of attention, and give a lot of trouble. As long as they remain in a certain atmosphere they flourish gaily; but they are not "hardy," and a breath of cold air will make them curl up and wither away. They are very delicate, and live only an artificial life, and the greatest precautions are necessary to ensure even that.

They are like spoiled children, pampered and given in to, who are sometimes very pretty, but vain and conceited, and unfitted to take their place among ordinary human beings. I hope none of you are like them, because you may be sure the day will come when you will have to face the serious things of life; when the friends, or parents, or servants, upon whom you have depended so much will be removed from you; when in school or business you will have to "rub shoulders" with strong, hardy, and perhaps rough persons; and you may find that you will be left behind in the race.

If any of you are highly born, or belong to a noble or wealthy family, pray that these extra advantages may not spoil you, and that you may use them well for the glory of God and the blessing of those around you. There are many who would be better men and women to-day if it were not for their riches, which have made it unnecessary for them to work for their living, so that they have become lazy in their habits, and warped and stunted in those greater and nobler qualities which less prosperous circumstances would have caused to grow.

The third class of flowers lies between these two extremes—the common or Garden-flowers. They are not left to "rough it" for themselves, on the one hand; on the other hand, they do not live in an artificial atmosphere, but in the open air; so that with a moderate amount of attention they grow strong, and thrive.

I expect that most of us come into this class. In Prov. xxx. 8, 9, we read of Agur who prayed: "Give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me; lest I be full and deny Thee, or lest I be poor and steal, and take the name of my God in vain." That is a very sensible prayer, because it leaves our life in our Father's hand, to do for us as He sees best.

Probably the majority of people who compose our nation come under this description. We speak of them as the "middle class"—not very rich and not very poor; fairly educated, and enjoying an average amount of the blessings of life; and I think most of you, my young readers, belong to such homes as these. If so, think what it means. You are freed from the disadvantages that worry the poor, and from the anxieties that perplex the rich. You live, as it were, in a healthy atmosphere, in which you may grow strong in body and in mind, neither starved nor over-fed; not ignorant of God, like the heathen, nor, I trust, hearing about Him without learning to love Him.

But if this be so, if He has surrounded you by loving friends, and placed you in respectable Christian homes, you may be sure that He expects you to honour Him in your life. You may not have great gifts, or ten talents, nor even five, but each of you at least has one. See that you use it well, and do not neglect the opportunities that He has given you—the favours which are suggested by the title of this article. As you enjoy God's gifts, see that you do not forget the Giver. Turn your face to Him as the flower turns to the sun.

Above all, seek that best gift—"the gift of God" which is "eternal life"; then with His life within you, and His grace upon you, live and grow for Him wherever He has placed you; and as His beautiful flowers brighten your life, seek that you may gladden the lives of others also.

Paul's Life-Passion (2 Cor. v. 11-21).

THE Apostle is meeting the charge that he was beside himself (13. See also Acts xxvii. 24, 25). He goes on to show that at least his madness was sane enough in its reasons and method. He knew "the terror of the Lord," i.e., the terribleness of disappointing the Lord, and coming short of His expectations; not because of its penal consequences, but because the heart that loves fears most of all to disappoint love. So he did his best to persuade men (11). He felt that the ministry of reconciliation had been committed to him (18, 19); and that God desired to beseech men through his lips. Therefore, in the teeth of bitter speeches and violent actions, he went on his way. (See also Acts xxvi. 22, 23).

His motives at least were of the highest; and were such as must appeal to those who gloried in heart and not in appearance. The one purpose for which he was prepared to sacrifice everything was to glorify God, and to win men from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to the glorious liberty of Christ.

And this had been brought about by one motive which was always present—the love of Christ. Other men might live from the pivot of self, but this was impossible for him. Such had been his career previously. In his pride of ancestral religion, and precise ceremonial order, he had stood among the foremost of his time. A religious selfishness had been the predominating characteristic of his career. But from the moment that he saw Christ on the way to Damascus, and heard Him speak His name, all this had been altered. He knew that Christ loved him, and was equally sure that he loved Christ.

> "Love took up the harp of life,
> And played on all its chords with might;
> Smote the chords of self
> That passed, in trembling, out of sight."

Henceforth he could not live for himself, but for Him who had died for him, and was now living on the other side of the grave—"risen again."

To Paul it seemed as though the death of Christ lay between him and his past. The Cross, with outstretched arms, forbade his return to the life of self and vanity. "In that He died, all died," and in that all Paul included himself; and now he saw no man but Jesus only. The One who loved him filled the whole realm of vision.

When Tigranes and his wife were summoned before Cyrus, he professed his willingness to die if his wife's life were spared. Afterwards, when they both were set free, someone asked the wife what she thought of Cyrus and his splendour, and she replied, "I remember nothing save the man who offered to die for me." In a yet higher sense Paul could have said self-same words. Zinzendorf used to say, "Christ, only Christ, is my passion."

The Apostle realised that he had been converted for a very specific purpose. To him was committed the ministry of reconciliation. It is as though God were dependent on the co-operation of man in promulgating the message of the Gospel. We cannot do without Him, but He cannot do without us. The vine must have the branches, through which to pour forth its rich and luscious sap.

Mark the burden of the Apostle's ministry! This verse is one of the clearest and most significant statements of the doctrine of the Cross that is to be found in the New Testament. Its value consists in its definite assurance that what was done on Calvary was not the act of our Lord Jesus apart from the Father, but that God was in Him, reconciling the world to Himself by dealing conclusively and for ever with the question of sin. He became sin (note that marvellous phrase) that we who believe in Him might be accounted righteous and become righteous.

So Paul came forth as from the court of heaven as God's ambassador, and when he stood up to plead with men he realized that all the love and urgency of God were accompanying His message. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

The custom for many years to hold a rally for Christian Endeavourers attending Keswick Convention was continued this year, and on July 24 the Congregational Church was filled with earnest young people. Rev. F. B. Meyer presided, and called for responses from Wales, Ireland, Scotland, England (north and south), London, the colonies, and other countries; these were promptly given. There were three short addresses from Revs. James Mursell, Rhys Davis, and Tolefree Parr. The latter remarked that Keswick teaching and Christian Endeavour were on the same lines, no new doctrine. He said the keynote of the true Christian life was "Victory," not defeat. Referring to John xvi. 8, he emphasized that it was when believers were filled with the Holy Spirit that the world would be convicted of sin; even as it was at Pentecost, when the disciples were filled with the Holy Ghost, 3,000 were convicted of sin. Mr. Meyer gave a parting word: It is not our working with God, but God working through us, that we have always to remember.

International S.S. Lesson.

Sunday, August 16, 1903.

Saul tries to kill David (1 Sam. xviii. 5-16).

Golden Text—Psa. xlvi. 1.

Time and Place. Immediately after the defeat of Goliath and close of the campaign (1 Sam. xvii. 52). The royal Court of Saul at Gibeah became David's home. Jonathan, the King's son, his loyal friend. The head of Goliath, his token of introduction to royal favour (xvii. 57). He became armour-bearer to the King and commander of the forces collected as in xiv. 52. The nation's hero (v. 7). Goliath had been a host in himself.

Saul's Failure.

Began when he "rejected the Word of the Lord" (xv. 23). Failed in duty to God (xv. 9). Fear took hold of him (xv. 27). Disease (xvi. 17). Courage forsook him (xvii. 11). A gleam of gratitude (xviii. 2), jealousy, envy (8), hatred, murder (10), meanness, and cunning (13, 21). No happiness, joy, or peace. The Lord had rejected him.

David's Success.

Happy, busy, courageous; at peace with God and tried to do His will in battle, in the King's Court as he had done among the sheepfolds of Bethlehem. Not anxious about his own interests, because he knew the Lord had made his interests His own care. His one aim "to please God" and carry out His word. Did his duty day by day, and left the results with God. Refuged by the Lord in time of danger. Found a fast friend in the King's son. Gained experience for his coming position. Showed plainly by his life and words and conduct to King, and Court, and people that "the Lord was with David." The Lord gave him grace in the special times of need, when he was degraded in rank (v. 13) and tricked (vv. 21-28).

Special Points.

1. If the Son of God is my Friend I can count on a place and a welcome into the courts of the heavenly palace (Rev. iii. 21).

2. While David was the object of Saul's praise, blame, envy, jealousy, hatred, cunning, or murderous intentions, he was all the time in God's care, and in God's school of training for the kingship of Israel.

Our circumstances may be very different; those around us may spoil us by over praise (songs of the women), or depress us by continual blame; may be jealous or envious of our powers or possessions; try to injure us or trip us in our Christian walk, damage our character, or tempt us to evil, but if we have the Lord Jesus as our Almighty Friend, "He knows, He loves, He cares," and He will use these trials to train us for His own service here and in His higher service (Rev. xxii. 3, 4).

3. David's position contained many hidden pitfalls, but he made the All-wise his Counsellor. "If any of you lack wisdom" (James i. 5) the Lord's promise is you shall be supplied for the asking, liberally. "Jesus is our wisdom (1 Cor. i. 30) though we are foolish, weak, and base." "He that is able to keep you from falling" (Jude 24).

4. David "showed himself friendly," and thus made many friends (vv. 5, 13). Any boy or girl can do the same by being cheerful and bright, unselfish, generous-hearted and loving; willing to lend help to anyone who needs the help they can give, but not by seeking their own interest first. David knew he was safe to be king some day, but he was willing to wait God's time, obey Saul (5) as his servant, even when in jealousy Saul degraded him from his rank in the army (13).

A TRUE NOBLEMAN.

At the time of Lord Shaftesbury's death, two ragged boys, almost denuded of clothes, stood gazing into a window. The one remarked to his companion, "Lord Shaftesbury is dead." His little friend replied, "That's not our Lord Shaftesbury." "Yes," replied the other, "it is our Lord Shaftesbury." The great man whom the lads spoke of was their real friend. He had sunk self and associated himself so much with them, that they could speak of him as one of themselves. In contrast to the hatred of Saul in the lesson, the love of Jonathan to the shepherd lad was indeed remarkable. The prince, like the good Lord Shaftesbury, recognized the godliness of David, and in loving him "as his own soul," Jonathan displayed a fine spirit, far removed from all thoughts of jealousy or envy.

TURNING FAILURE TO SUCCESS.

Gordon Hall and Storrs were two students at Andover Theological Seminary. On a certain Sunday, Hall was preparing to go to Braintree to preach with a view to receiving a call to that church. In the act of splitting some wood, however, the student's hat fell from his head and was cut in two by the axe. In the dilemma, his friend Storrs undertook the engagement, and his preaching being appreciated, he became pastor at Braintree. Hall, disappointed, turned to the foreign mission field and became the first missionary of the American Board, and his name is for ever linked with the early enterprise of that organization. God turned the seeming failure into a brilliant success in another direction, and singularly, in the lesson, the apparent non-success of David in the court of Saul to his advantage elsewhere (v. 11).

THE PERILS OF EMINENCE.

A Swiss medical authority has sounded a note of warning on the ills likely to attend those who climb rapidly, after being accustomed to a lower level of life. The heart may be affected by the sudden change, and the doctor advises all visitors to the higher regions of the Alps to indulge in preliminary exercises to induce a more rapid flow of blood through the arteries. How often a man is spoilt by success. He may do well in a menial position, but fail utterly when raised to any eminence. David, however, displayed a spirit at once worthy and admirable, when he "behaved himself wisely in all his ways." The secret is discovered in the words which follow, for it was "because the Lord was with him (v. 14) that success did not spoil the shepherd lad.

RECOGNISING WORTH.

Some time ago a discharged soldier was travelling through Yorkshire in search of work. A stranger who casually observed a curious tattoo mark on his arm inquired what it meant. He was told by the soldier that while serving in South Africa he had performed an act of bravery which the other members of the regiment considered entitled him to the Victoria Cross. His comrades, therefore, conferred this honour upon him by stamping on his arm in indelible ink the letters "V.C." Just as the bravery of the soldier led his fellows to esteem him highly, so the bravery of David caused all Israel and Judah to love him because he went out and came in before them (v. 16).

"I Will Be as the Dew."

O Lord, revive Thy work (Hab. iii. 2).
Wilt Thou not revive us? (Psa. lxxxv. 6).
Thou wilt revive me (Psa. cxxxviii. 7).

"Revive Thy Work."

Lord, this Thy Church is needing,
Send showers of blessing down,
Extend Thy sceptre to Thy people pleading,
Their faithful service crown,
For Jesus' sake, our High Priest, interceding,
And for His great renown.

"Revive us, Lord."

Each home, and friend, and neighbour,
Where'er our lot is cast,
Grant us Thy light, the sunshine of Thy favour,
Alike in calm and blast.
Till Christ shall come enable us to labour,
Win His "Well done!" at last.

"Revive me, Lord."

My heart with grace infilling
Make me a witness true,
In this Thy day of power may I be willing
Thy will to bear and do;
Revive the thirsty land Thy word fulfilling,
"I will be as the dew."

Lord, hear our prayer, for all our expectation
Is from Thyself alone;
We bend the knee in lowly adoration
Thy kingly sway to own,
And claim Thy promise now with exultation,
For Thou art on the throne. J. H. S.

Students in Conference.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE Conference at Matlock closed on Thursday evening, and early next morning the students dispersed in all directions, many to help in schoolboys' and schoolgirls' camps, or in the seaside services of the C.S.S.M. The closing days of the Conference were marked by the manifest presence of God's spirit. Day after day the delegates became increasingly conscious of a Power within their midst, summoning them to the life of consecration and communion. All through the arrangements the hand of God was guiding, overruling human plans and purposes, and making all things work together for good. Now at the close we thankfully acknowledge that prayer has, indeed, been answered, and many lives will be turned into new channels of service, and will be reinforced by a new spiritual power as a result of Matlock, 1903.

Two great lessons have been impressed upon all with constant insistence from a variety of standpoints. First, that Jesus Christ demands an entire and absolute self-renunciation from every follower, and that in losing our lives for His sake and the Gospels we find the true fulfilment of our personality. Secondly, that the work of Christ is one, and whether the call be to labour in the mission field among the heathen or among the neglected and degraded masses of our English slums, in either case the same inspiration is to be at the root of our service, and the great watchword of the movement, "The evangelization of the world in this generation," applies with equal force and relevancy. No man is fit to serve Christ at home who is not ready and willing to go to the uttermost parts of the earth in the ministry of the Gospel.

Among the speakers during the past few days were Rev. Professor Masterman, of Birmingham University; Rev. H. D. Lockett, of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford; Mr. G. Hare Leonard, of Bristol; Dr. Emmeline Stuart, Persia; and Dr. Adriani, of Holland. The last-named speaker represented the Dutch Student Movement, and in view of recent political events his presence was a remarkable testimony to the good feeling that exists between the students of both countries. The fact that all are one in Christ is strong enough to outweigh all suspicion and distrust, and as the movement grows it should play no small part in the removal of international jealousies, and so help to bring in the true brotherhood of all nations.

In the circumstances, Dr. Adriani's address was on a significant and interesting topic, "The enthronement of Christ in the life of the nations." He pleaded that the Christian student movement should realise its responsibility in this respect, and contribute towards the leavening of society by a constant affirmation of Christian principles in all relations of life. Later in the day his address was supplemented by some practical and homely recommendations to allow our Christianity to influence our choice of a tailor or milliner, the investment of money, and other affairs which are not always regarded by Christian people as coming within the scope of their Christian obligations.

On Sunday evening the subject of "Consecration" was brought before the Conference by three short addresses from students. These plain and earnest appeals, coming as they did from students in like circumstances with ourselves, seemed to voice the call of Christ in clear and unambiguous fashion, and when all bowed in solemn silence at its close the presence of the Master Himself was felt by many as never before in their lives.

This was followed on Monday night by an appeal from Dr. McCheyne Patterson, of the Punjaub, and Dr. Emmeline Stuart for a dedication to service in the foreign field.

The story of the four lepers who found the Syrian camp empty, and after satisfying their hunger and seizing what treasure they could hold, suddenly remembered their companions in the famine-stricken city, brought home to every heart the intolerable shame that attaches to the Christian Church for its past neglect of the heathen. "We do not well; this is a day of glad tidings, and we hold our peace." Our thoughts were turned to another and a heavenly Messenger who brought glad tidings to men—tidings of great joy, which is for all people. There was no delay on the part of the angels in carrying that message. When will God's will be done on earth as it is in heaven?

But lest any should be led to make hasty and unconsidered resolves we were warned of the difficulty of the task. As Garibaldi offered to his countrymen no reward save that of hard work, suffering, and death, so Christ does not promise an earthly crown. "Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of?" The disciples thought they were, and said, "We can." Jesus saw their weakness and foresaw their desertion of Himself, and yet to their weak, human, "We can," He added His Divine omnipotent "Ye shall."

Humanly speaking, the watchword is an impossibility in the present state of the Church, and to speak of the Gospel being brought home to every human heart within some thirty years, seems like presumption, and yet we fix no time limit. In holding to our watchword and summoning others to accept it as a life-motto, we point to what is the plain and obvious duty of Christians.

England is not yet truly evangelized; our own country is part of the great world into which Christ bade the disciples carry the glad tidings, but in view of the open doors throughout the world, and the scarcity of the workers, the indifference of many Christian people is positively criminal. We have prayed for open doors, and the doors have been opened; nay, they are actually off their hinges, and we who have prayed for this linger on the threshold, refusing to enter in.

For many present at the Conference these few days have brought a clear and unmistakeable call to serve the Lord in heathen lands, and it was pointed out that whatever choice lay before us, and whatever the result of that choice might be, to obey Christ in this particular instance would be the secret of a closer communion in the future and a more effective service.

As the Conference drew near its close, we were again and again pointed to the Divine resource at our disposal. Our sufficiency is of God, and the grace and strength of Christ are made perfect in weakness. As we looked at the difficulties confronting us in the near future in our work in the colleges, our hearts failed us, but it was a joy and comfort to be reminded that God hath chosen the weak and base things to confound the things which are mighty.

Another lesson frequently impressed was that the common daily life would provide sufficient opportunities of service, and would be a real test of our consecration. If the way to a great decision did not seem open, there was no need for despondency. In a great orchestra the piccolo player once ceased to play, thinking that his contribution was insignificant and unnoticeable, but the conductor stopped the orchestra at once, detecting the omission. So God misses our little piccolo if we fail to join in the heavenly music.

The closing meeting was not least impressive, as seven outgoing student volunteers gave brief farewell messages, and were specially commended to the care and keeping of God.

New Forest Gipsy Mission.—The quiet, useful work which is carried on among gipsies in the New Forest continues to yield much fruit. The work is under the management of the Country Towns Mission, and in the annual report, Mr. G. R. Shaw gives some of his interesting experiences among the Romany tribe. He tells of the readiness with which many of them listen to the Gospel message, and the appreciation of any kindness shown. While the mission keeps the spiritual side of its work to the forefront, the temporal needs of the poor are not overlooked. Through the kindness of friends many a gipsy van has been brightened by gifts of blankets, new tent covers, boots, clothing, grocery, etc. Mrs. Bullen reports that there has been more sickness than usual among the gipsies. "It is in such seasons of sorrow and pain that our visits are most welcome. There are eight families continuing in houses in Bartley and neighbourhood whose children are able to attend school. None are allowed to remain at home for want of proper clothing." Parcels and other help will be gratefully acknowledged by Mr. G. R. Shaw, Ashurst, Lyndhurst, R.S.O., Hants.

Oxford Notes.

THE venerable and beloved rector of St. Aldate's, Canon Christopher, has left Oxford for his annual holiday in the Isle of Man, where, if spared, he will spend his eighty-third birthday. The affection and prayers of many go with the beloved rector.

Keble College is this week extending hospitality to ninety Diocesan Lay Readers who have come to Oxford for their annual quiet time. This society of Lay Readers numbers no fewer than 2,500 members who do loyal lay work in the Church of England. Rev. J. O. F. Murray, warden of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, is the acting-principal, and Rev. J. H. Greig, warden of Rochester Diocesan Readers is the acting vice-principal.

Methodism has made another forward movement in Oxford this week by the stone-laying of a new chapel in the Cowley Road. It will, when finished accommodate 700 worshippers, and the total cost will be £8,000. The stone was laid by Miss Perks, daughter of Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P. The day's proceedings realized £2,878.

The Oxford University Extension Lectures are this week in full swing, and our beautiful city is filled with visitors from all parts of the world. The inaugural address was given in the Examination Schools by Mr. Choate, the American minister. The sermon was preached in the University Church of St. Mary's, to an immense congregation, by the Bishop of Oxford.

Welsh Notes.

THE latest statistics of the Welsh Forward Movement are decidedly encouraging. There are now forty-four mission centres with four branches. There is also a travelling centre in the form of a van in connection with which are two evangelists. The regular hearers now number 20,390, an increase of over 700 over the previous year.

The statistics of Calvinistic Methodism in Wales have just been made public. The report has both its cheering and depressing features. The number of communicants has increased by 1,951, the hearers by 8,615. As a set off to this record of growth and progress comes the discouraging statement that the Sunday School attendance shows a serious decrease.

Romanism in Ireland.

ONE by one the public institutions of Ireland, at least in the South and West, are coming under the control and management of the Roman Catholic religious communities. One of the latest instances of this kind has just occurred in Cork. Some time ago it was determined to open an auxiliary asylum at Youghal, and now the committee of the Cork District Lunatic Asylum has decided by a majority of fourteen to one that the offices of matron, assistant matron, and hospital nurse in the new institution should be given to nuns. Dr. Meade, Protestant Bishop of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, spoke with great earnestness against the proposal as being unfair to lady officials of the asylum, who were thus excluded from promotion; and to ladies outside who had given their lives to the work, and had passed the necessary examinations.

The Bishop called attention to the Privy Council rules, which were laid down in regard to the appointment of matron:—Candidates shall be between the ages of twenty-five and thirty-five, except in the case of existing officials; they shall produce certificates of hospital training, or the certificates of the Medico-Psychological Association. He asked if the Roman Catholic bishop intended that these qualifications should be insisted on. The answer was that he did not, as it would not be necessary for the class of patients sent to Youghal. Dr. Meade then further urged the unfairness of all this to ladies who had been specially trained, but his remonstrances were without any influence on the decision, and he was left in a minority of one. Nuns are being put into similar positions in workhouses, asylums, and infirmaries in many parts of the country, and thus these institutions, which are kept up by the public taxes, are turned into nurseries for the Roman Catholic Church.

Blackheath Conference.—A prophetic conference was held at Alexandra Hall on Tuesday and Wednesday last, when important questions were discussed concerning the Second Coming of Christ in relation to the Church, the world, and the nation of Israel. The gatherings, which were fairly well attended considering the very wet weather, were presided over by Lieut.-Gen. Halliday and Lieut.-Col. Hogge. The addresses were given by Revs. I. Levinson, J. W. Sloan, J. Spruit, S. Wilkinson, and Messrs. M. Bergmann, J. Brunton, J. H. Lowe, R. McKilliam, M.D., E. A. Rawlence, and J. Rose.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Mrs. Baeyertz at Newport, Mon.

FOR the third time I have had the joy of Mrs. Baeyertz's help in the work of preaching the Saviour to the lapsed masses of South Wales. Her mission, which closed last week, was (notwithstanding several local drawbacks) well attended, especially towards its close; and the petitions often offered during the fortnight of special preparation, were amply answered during the sixteen days Mrs. Baeyertz was with us. The logical way in which she dealt with some of the subjects was more convincing than ever. This was especially so in the addresses on the Atonement and the Passover; while the teaching concerning the baptism of the Holy Ghost, prayer, and fruit-bearing, was so conveyed that few could fail to understand.

During the mission there were many pleasing incidents. After the address on prayer three men out of work were prayed for, one each evening, at three successive meetings, and each man the next day had his desire.

The scene on the last Sabbath evening was one which will not easily be forgotten. Not only was the large Malpas Hall full, but over thirty of the hearers marched out into the after-meeting held in the smaller Hall, and rejoiced in the possession of eternal life ere they left.

Two great lessons were driven home by the Holy Spirit to the hearts of the Christians present during the mission, viz., the necessity of being silent before God to know His will, and the necessity of the complete surrender of the human will to the will of God before man can be fully used by the Holy Spirit.

W. T. Griffiths, Pastor.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

The great problem that seems always to be uppermost in the minds of the Evangelical section of the Christian Church is still "How to reach the masses." The controversy that has been going on in the daily press on "Why people do not attend public worship," is followed with interest. The question baffles most writers, and therefore experience in this matter ought to be of great value. Anyone who had attended the services of the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E., during July might reasonably ask, "What is it that draws, in the month of July, such congregations?" The primary answer would be, "The pure Gospel of Jesus Christ is preached, and that always draws where faithfully proclaimed." Secondly, "The preacher must be a man out and out for Christ."

When Frank Weaver undertook to fill his brother's, as well as his own part, in the mission arranged over a year ago, it was with much trembling that he entered upon his task. It is cause for much thankfulness to know how much God has blessed the Weaver brothers. When, years ago, these children stepped into the gap left vacant by their honoured father, Richard Weaver, the eyes of Christian people were upon them, wondering whether they would be able to fill the position. Time has proved their great usefulness in the Master's service. Their separation must have been a wrench, but anyone who knows the circumstances feels that Bewley has taken the right step. Let us now see what has been the effect of Frank's first mission alone. From the very first Sunday he won his way to the people's hearts, and until the finish his congregations grew in numbers till it is recorded that never before have such numbers been seen in the Great Assembly Hall in the month of July.

Frank has an individuality entirely his own. He solemnly cautions the unsaved of their immediate danger, and presses them to surrender their will and accept the salvation which has been purchased for them at such tremendous cost. His earnestness reminds one very much of his late father. His descriptive powers are such that he takes his audience with him. So strong has been the imagination that the whole audience sometimes would forget themselves and clap their hands in approval of his stirring address. He deals some deadly blows at the drink customs of our country. Not a night passed without many signing the temperance pledge, and most of them afterwards experienced a willingness to seek that Power by which alone they could keep their pledge.

Many cases of conversion could be recorded, while Christians over and over again expressed their thankfulness for the direct straight talks given to them, and it is a long time since such large congregations gathered every Wednesday to listen to the faithful proclamation of God's Word to believers. Even at these meetings men and women have come forward asking "What must I do to be saved?"

During the last fortnight of the mission Miss Ball, from Hanley (niece of Gipsy Smith), came specially to assist by her sweet solo singing. She has a powerful voice, which she uses in a wonderful way. She has complete control over her voice, and the richness of expression sometimes holds her audience spellbound. She makes one understand that her heart and soul, apart from her beautiful voice, is in her singing for Christ.

The impression made by these servants of God was manifest on the last night of their mission. Despite the rain, the area of the great hall was filled, and some stood at the back. The closing address was an extremely earnest one, and many gathered round the speaker and singer to bid them farewell and wish them God-speed in their future efforts for the Master.

"By the Silver Sea."

"Henceforth thou shalt catch men." So said the Master to Peter when He called him from his avocation as fisherman. The Open-Air Mission has started on its great seaside campaigns once again, for here are the crowds, and if we, like the Apostle, would be "men catchers" we must go where they are. It has been my privilege to attend most of the gatherings at Yarmouth, and last Friday we held our first evening service for the season. It was an encouraging meeting. Earnest addresses were given by Colonel Sage, Mr. Frank Cockrem (secretary), Mr. Gerald Coultas, and others. In the afternoon, a garden meeting was held on the lawn of Mr. Hurry Palmer, a gentleman deeply interested in evangelistic work, and a son-in-law of Mr. C. Boardman, of Stratford. Addresses were given by Pastor Fuller Gooch, Revs. R. Middleton and J. Alfred Bevan, and Mr. Cockrem. Praise was offered for the many blessings in the past, and encouraging words were addressed to the workers to prosecute in the grand and Christ-like work of saving the lost. Expectation runs high for Yarmouth and other seaside places evangelized by the Mission.

In South Wales.

At the invitation of Mr. John Cory, J.P., D.L., Mr. Alexander Clark has been holding tent missions in the outlying districts of Cardiff, Twynrodyn, and St. Nicholas. At the latter place, the meetings were largely attended, and the preaching of the Word was accompanied by the power and demonstration of the Holy Spirit, souls were saved, and the spiritual life of believers quickened. Mr. Clark is now holding a mission at Ely; and night after night the faithful preaching of the old Gospel continues to attract large crowds of eager hearers. On the 9th inst. the tent will be removed to Dinas Powis. This will bring to a close a very noteworthy series of missions held by Mr. Clarke. Several applications from neighbouring districts have been received for the valuable services of this powerful and acceptable evangelist for next summer.

Awakening at Stony Stratford.

A correspondent writes: "A gracious awakening has been vouchsafed through the services held in the great tent in the grounds of Mr. Fegan's Orphanage at Stony Stratford during June and July. The Holy Spirit has been brooding over the neighbourhood. The attendances have not only been unparalleled in the district, but have been representative of all denominations. The hearts of many of the Lord's people have been stirred to fuller consecration.

"The widespread spirit of hearing has led to a spirit of deep conviction, and in many cases to decision for Christ. The robustness of the work has been evidenced in the number of men who have been clearly converted to God. There has been a marked absence of mere emotional excitement or of undue human pressure to obtain immediate manifest results. The services have closed with seasons of silent prayer, during which some have committed their souls to Christ as Saviour and Lord, while others have taken or accepted Him in their own homes or come to the orphanage the next day inquiring, 'What must I do to be saved?' or entered into joy and peace in believing while about their daily work.

"It was generally thought that the tent (which holds about 1,000) would be quite too large for the locality, but Mr. Fegan's pronouncement that it would prove quite too small was soon amply verified—hundreds having to sit or stand outside on Sunday evenings.

"The services have been discontinued for the month of August as Mr. Fegan will be preaching in his Boys' Camp at Uckfield (Sussex). It is intended, however, to hold meetings after Sunday, Sept. 6, daily, in the Orphanage Chapel (now being renovated), and in the Great Tent simultaneously. Dinner-hour services will also be held in another large tent at Wolverton (two miles off), where there are the great carriage works of the L. & N. W. Railway and where Messrs McCorquodale & Co.'s Printing Works employ thousands of men and women."

Capt. Chas. H. Stanley in Edinburgh.

We had the privilege a fortnight since at our Gospel Temperance Weekly Meeting, held every Saturday in the year in the Large Hall of Carrubbers Close Mission, of a visit from Capt. Chas. H. Stanley, of the Blue Button Army of America (of which Col. Hadley, the brother of Mr. S. H. Hadley, of the Water Street Mission, New York, is the head. Capt. Stanley fairly took the meeting by storm, with his pointed appeals, which made a deep impression on behalf of the Gospel Temperance cause. He also sang some of his own sacred songs. Capt. Stanley owes his conversion under God to that miracle of grace. Col. Hadley, whose conversion and subsequent life has inspired with faith the most hopeless and apparently helpless victims of the drink crave, with that resolution to trust that same Saviour who has made such a grand man out of the once hopeless victim of intemperance.

Capt. Stanley also spoke and sang at a great open-air meeting on the Sabbath, held on the Calton Hill; to the children of Carrubbers Close Mission Sabbath School; and at the evening evangelistic service in the Mission Hall. He comes with the best of credentials, and, moreover, is truly "a man with a mission." It is a pleasure to commend to Christian and temperance friends all over the United Kingdom one whose testimony in speech and song is sure to stimulate a desire to know the power of a salvation which has done so much for him.

Rev. James Lyall in Ceylon.

When on the way to this country from Australia, Rev. James Lyall remained for a fortnight at Colombo (Ceylon), and held a ten-days' mission. Morning meetings were held in the Galle Face English Church Schoolroom, and evening gatherings in the Ferguson Memorial Hall. Before the close the latter was crowded out, and the Racquet Court native theatre (holding 1,500 people) hired. The outcome was of a most encouraging character. About seventy adults professed to receive Christ, and nearly a hundred young people between the ages of eleven and sixteen.

So much interest was aroused that a great united mission has been arranged for September. During the first two weeks services will be conducted in the suburbs by Mr. Lyall, as well as various ministers and missionaries. This will be followed by a central mission by Mr. Lyall, who hopes also to visit Kandy and Jaffna. The prayers of God's people are asked on behalf of the effort.

Mr. Hugh Paton in Queensland.

Writing from the Golden Gate, North Queensland, under date June 8, Mr. Hugh Paton says, "We landed in Croydon on Saturday afternoon and preached in the street that night. The Sunday services drew crowds, and "boomed" the tent splendidly. On Monday we pitched the tent on the side of the main street. It has been a great success; no other thing would have got the people. The men outnumbered the women by three to one. Roman Catholics came in goodly numbers. They do not look upon the tent as a Protestant building. Nearly all the converts were Roman Catholics. In this respect it was the most remarkable mission I ever conducted. The people are almost to a man non-church-goers. The oldest residents declare that they never saw such large religious gatherings. Mr. Caulfield is with me now, but we divide soon. He goes overland to Cairns, taking all the places on the way. I go from here to Normanton, and across to Burketown, where there is no church, and no service of any kind. I am booked to give three weeks to Thursday Island, a stiff place of all nationalities. Mr. Bruce Todd began yesterday in Townsville. He goes up the railway to Haghenden and Winton, and across country to Richmond and Cloncurry."

Mr. John C. Sloan, who is working inland from Rockhampton, in Central Queensland, tells of much blessing in Mount Morgan, a large mining town. On the second night of the tent services about thirty men and women were dealt with by the ministers and workers.

A. S.

A tent mission has been held at Tiverton by Mr. Knight, of the Evangelization Society. The attendances increased so much that it became necessary to secure a larger meeting place, and so the meetings during the concluding week were held in the Drill Hall. The after-meetings were crowded every night, the dearth of workers making it most difficult to deal with the anxious. There was an average attendance of 400 to 500 on week nights and over 1,000 on the two last Sundays. Differences were forgotten in praise to God for the way the Holy Spirit was working in our midst. Tiverton has been deeply stirred.

"For Kings and all in Authority." If ever in living memory we have been called by the tendencies of the time to pray for kings and for all that are in authority, we need it now. The unrest at home; the disturbed condition of France; the anarchy in Eastern Europe; the perils in the Far East—all remind us that while men are saying "Peace, peace," God declares that there is no peace.

Communal Compensation. Neither Sir Wilfrid Lawson nor any other temperance worker expects for a moment that "the Liquor Sellers' Liability Bill," which was introduced into the House of Commons last week, has any chance of becoming law under the present Government; but it is a measure which will serve to awaken public interest concerning an aspect of "Compensation" which the brewers conveniently overlook. Basing itself upon certain laws in Canada and the United States, Sir Wilfrid's Bill presents the claim of the community to compensation for any damage inflicted upon it by a baneful trade. There are many States in the West where persons who sustain injury at the hands of drunken persons can recover damages from the liquor-seller who supplied intoxicants to the drunkard. The principle of such a measure is already admitted in the Workmen's Compensation Act, and it is founded upon justice. Why should a trade which is directly responsible for most of our misery receive every encouragement at the hands of a Government, and accept no responsibility for its terrible work? The list of injuries wrought by liquor is appalling—injuries to body, mind, soul, family, and estate—injuries personal and national. That side of "compensation" may be ignored by the brewers, but it is a side concerning which the people's voice should be heard.

The Lunacy Report. The annual report of the Lunacy Commissioners, issued on the 30th ult., is in every sense a terrible document, showing, as it does, that whilst half a century ago there were only 38,000 insane persons in England and Wales, this year there are 113,964. The increase, which naturally is a cumulative one, was last year greater than ever, the number of persons who became insane during the twelve months being 22,581, or nearly 500 each week. Of course the causes are numerous, but the dread fact remains that the Commissioners set intemperance at the head of the list, as the most powerful and prolific. New asylums are being built as rapidly as possible in all directions, and as soon as they are ready they are filled with unhappy patients who have to be maintained by the taxpayers. And, at the same time, we have an Administration engaged in considering the ways and means of compensating those who are responsible for the creation of a large portion of this mass of misery!

Not too Optimistic. There is something to be said for those who, while admitting that there is much in it to cause the gravest concern, decline to take a pessimistic view of the present situation as regards attendance at public worship. We should be deceiving ourselves if we took for granted that at any period in the past England was "a perfect religious paradise," from which our own generation marks an alarming defection; and the reading of history should save us from such misconceptions. We agree that a pessimistic attitude is a dangerous one, as tending to unnerve the worker; but two blacks do not make a white, and a too ready satisfaction with the present may, after all, blind us to a retrogression none the less real because it does not obtrude itself on the surface.

The Attitude of the Evangelist. We seem to find on all hands an easy complacency to what men do and believe. We have met workers who explained that certain social and other efforts were being made as a means "leading up to" the spiritual. The awakening to a sense of sin cannot, however, be other than a rude shock; and while it is necessary to present the truth in suitable aspects to different classes, the evangelist must never cease to feel distress at the thought of the Christless masses—a distress which usually prevents him from discussing whether they are more numerous than they were—or cease his cry to "flee from the wrath to come." We are constantly hearing excuses for neglect of public worship; but to find merely in a charitable disposition a proof that men are "near" the narrow way, appears to come perilously near lulling them into a false security.

True Evangelism. At the eighty-fifth annual conference of the Bible Christian Connexion, held recently at Newport, a strong note was struck by the new President of that body, Rev. A. Hancock. He said that the ministry committed to them was a ministry of salvation to men, and only so far as they realized that was their highest purpose fulfilled. The history of their Church, he added, had been one of earnest and aggressive evangelism:—

> Its first note was that of full assurance of personal salvation in Christ, accompanied by open testimony and a confession of Christ before men; and its second note was a burning appeal to every believer to work for the salvation of others.

If every Christian were led to live this devout life of personal rest in Jesus, of witness for Christ, and of the declaration of the Gospel to others, what a widening there would be of the boundaries of the Kingdom of God upon earth.

Rational Hours of Work. It is gratifying to find, from recent reports, that several large business houses in London have so arranged their affairs of daily work as to allow the employés to leave at an early hour, and so gain the advantage of open-air life, on the summer evenings. The experiment has wonderfully succeeded, and has led to increased diligence on the part of the staff. This fact ought to weigh with those who have hitherto, in the House of Lords, resisted all efforts to reduce the hours of labour in shops to reasonable proportions. The principle adopted by the two great houses whose example we have quoted, can be applied to shops with equal force. Reasonable hours of work would lead to increased zeal on the part of the assistants. Everybody would gain—masters, servants, and the public alike. Pending legislation in the matter—which seems so long in coming—it would be worth while for masters voluntarily to try the experiment which has succeeded so well elsewhere.

After a Hundred Years. Few illustrations of the radical changes which have taken place in official and public opinion during the past century are more striking than that afforded by a comparison between the position of missionary effort in India to-day with the feeling in regard to such evangelistic work a hundred years ago. In 1793 the powerful East India Company passed a resolution that—

> The sending of missionaries into our Eastern possessions is the maddest, most extravagant, most unwarrantable project that was ever proposed by an enthusiastic lunatic.

The noble labour went on, however, regardless of official censure, and now we find a contemporary writer saying:—

> Amid the Imperial glamour of her gorgeous Eastern possessions, England will do well not to forget the men and women, of whom Reginald Heber was a pioneer, who have laid down their lives that India might come to the knowledge of Christ.

A Word from India. A Madras weekly journal, United India; has some keen criticism in regard to the causes which lie at the root of the alleged failure of Missions in our great dependency. The painful comments upon national life and policy may well be taken to heart by all those who, naming the name of Christ, live at a low level, and fail to rise to the Master's standard; for it is true that the nation is just as noble or ignoble as the life of the units of which it is composed. Our contemporary says:—

> The merit of Christianity is best appreciated by a non-Christian people from the influence it has had on the nations following it. . . . In judging of the claims of Christianity on the acceptance of the Hindus, they naturally consider in the abstract what national type it has evolved among its followers.

And finding that "human slaughter, slavery, and plunder" are in the forefront of European Imperialism, the writer asks:—

> Is it a wonder, then, that Christian missionaries representing those nations make no headway in persuading other races to embrace the religion they profess?

It is not true that they "make no headway," but doubtless they would make more if Europeans, as a whole, were more truly God-fearing.

Grapes of Thorns? The Catholic Times might reasonably have taken for the text of its recent leader upon Latin and Teuton our Lord's utterances (Matt. vii. 16-20) in regard to the natural relation between the tree and its fruit. Dealing with that condition of things in countries under

Papal sway which faced the dying Pontiff, and which now faces the new Pope, our contemporary, with remarkable candour, makes admissions that are by no means to the credit of the Romish system :—

Here are the facts. The Latin nations are, France and Italy especially, in open revolt against the Papacy; Spain and Portugal, quiescent, apathetic, worse than weak. Where they are not stinging thorns, they are broken reeds. The oldest children of the Papacy, they are now, for its purposes, barren and anæmic.

And this is the result of what our contemporary designates "the greatest religious influence on earth"!

The Ethics of Christ.

A remarkable paper in the current number of The Hibbert Journal, from the pen of Dr. Francis Peabody, Professor of Christian Morals in Harvard University, and dealing with "The Character of Jesus Christ," evidences the deepening interest with which our Lord's daily life on earth is being studied. The contribution is a noble one, and in view of the most conspicuous aspect of contemporary Christian thought, and the changed attitude of many of those who name themselves "outsiders," it should be a singularly helpful one. Dr. Peabody finds that hostility to churches and preachers is hushed to reverence as it approaches the character of Jesus, but, he urges :—

In this detachment of ethical example from religious interpretation we get no just impression of the method of Jesus, who was not primarily a Teacher of ethics, but a Revealer of God. His ethics were rooted in His religion. . . Yet of the many ways in which we may approach the person of Jesus, it may be, for the present, best to follow the indications of His ethical character. . . It was the character of Jesus that first drew men to obedience. . . Doing the will one may come to know the doctrine. . . From whatever side we approach the character of Jesus the impression of mastery confronts us. . . The measure of knowledge, as Schleiermacher has said, is plainly not to Jesus the measure of piety.

"Is not Puffed Up."

The Apostle Paul, in his great panegyric of love, includes in the list of qualities this—it "is not puffed up." That sentence is a measure for all human spirits. Where headiness and conceit are found, there love and the Spirit of Christ are not. Yet we find a number of people who claim to be extra charitable, broad-minded, and "advanced" expositors of Christian truth exhibiting a conceit which is far removed from the Apostle's picture. We have noticed in one or two recent books, which, in the name of Christianity, seek to denude the Faith of the Gospel of all its miraculous elements, this conceit is apparent everywhere. We have remarked the same thing in certain public utterances. The assumption that an iconoclast is necessarily right and all the rest of the world are wrong, is not a sign of superiority—it is a disease of the soul, and is the very opposite of the Spirit created by Christ. Sometimes unbelief is modest and inquiring, too frequently it is rude and domineering. Young Christians especially need to be on their guard against the pretended omniscience of rationalist critics, and to remember that pompous pronouncements by individuals against the Truth which has stood for two millenniums, are consonant neither with modesty, history, nor Christian experience.

Carnal and Spiritual.

When once people sever themselves from the spiritual, and give rein to the sensual, there is no telling to what lengths they may go. The material conceptions of our present time have given birth to a number of harmful things affecting both body, mind, and estate. One of the greatest evils now upon us is the abnormal growth of the neurotic mind, the results of which are pernicious in the last degree. The latest development is a stage play in a leading theatre, in which one of Poe's frightful stories is dramatised. All the sad features of a lunatic asylum are staged; men and women impersonating maniacs . . . and worse. The dramatic critic of the Daily Telegraph has vehemently protested against the exhibition as an outrage upon good taste and good feeling. But it is an outcome of the craving for excitement which marks our epoch. Unless this spirit is checked, it will work yet greater mischief with mind, spirit, and body. What is wanted is a return to health of soul, and then these unnatural cravings would not assert themselves. And this health can only come as men turn to the God whom they have slighted.

Texts.

Dealing with the subject of "The Quest of the Text," Professor Pattison, has aptly remarked that there must necessarily be fertile and barren places in pulpit preparation, and that it is necessary to take pains in the selection of the text, and to spare neither time nor trouble in the search for the suitable one. He counsels the preacher to settle on his texts early in the week, for "a preacher is worried who is not ready. The unsettled text haunts him like an unsettled bill." The Professor is of opinion, too, that the fashion of spiritualizing passages of Scripture which have originally no spiritual significance is very much gone out, and that the fact is not to be regretted. On the other hand, however, "he who can preach allegorically has a rare weapon at his command." In illustration of this, he quotes the sermon preached by the father of Robert Hall from the words, "The snuffers and the candlestick were of pure gold."

The golden candlesticks were emblematical of the purity required in the Christian character; the snuffers were also to be of pure gold, for in Christian reproof and admonition the purpose is not to put the light out, but to improve it, and in doing this there must be no rashness.

As to spiritualizing Scripture, it is one thing for human wisdom to do so; it is quite another for the spiritual man to perceive the spiritual beneath or within the literal.

According to His Righteousness.

"I will praise the Lord according to His righteousness" (Psa. vii. 17). "Thy righteousness, O God, is very high" (Psa. lxxi. 19). "Thy righteousness is like the mountains of God" (Psa. xxxvi. 6 (margin 1). "His righteousness endureth for ever" (Psa. iii. 3). "My righteousness shall be for ever" (Isa. li. 8). "I will bring near My righteousness" (Isa. xlvi. 13). "My righteousness is near" (Isa li. 5).

AWAKE my soul, awake and raise
Your tribute to Jehovah's praise;
His glorious name adoring bless,
According to His righteousness.

High as the highest mountain's head
From the deep ocean's deepest bed,
For ever steadfast, strong, and sure—
So doth Thy righteousness endure.

Thine attributes are all divine;
All-perfect righteousness is thine;
Oh, that I could my praise express
"According to Thy righteousness!"

Thy righteousness is "very high,"
Yet thou, O Lord, hast brought it nigh;
And now with joy my lips confess
Jehovah as my Righteousness.

What though temptations strong assail—
He who is stronger shall prevail!
What though their waves as mountains rise—
My righteousness is in the skies!

Sing on, my soul, thy song of praise
Resound through time and endless days;
Nor cease when with Him thou shalt bless
"According to His righteousness."

W. S. WARREN POND.

"But . . ."

BY REV. J. J. LUCE.

TIMES of special blessing are often times of special danger. There is a tendency to spiritual reaction, which cannot be too carefully watched. The temptation is to go down as low as you went up, to yield to depression and discouragement, and to reckon the supposed "blessing" to have been only a delusion.

These are some of the thoughts in my mind when pondering over the recent Convention held at Keswick. That God deigned to meet with us is a fact that cannot be doubted. And is not that the "blessing" of any gathering of the Lord's people? That He spoke to numbers in a very special manner cannot be doubted, any more than that He was graciously present. This was abundantly manifest. But—

If we have received blessing, there is nothing strange in our being tested. This is no mark of Divine displeasure. It is no sign of failure. It is no encouragement to give way. On the contrary, it is all in the Divine order. It is the way which leads to further blessing. One of our brethren, after having concluded a solemn meeting, and pronounced the benediction, exclaimed: "Mind that the devil does not take away the seed which has been sown!" The advice was sound, and it is greatly needed.

Have you not noticed how strikingly that word, "But" occurs in many a narrative of Holy Scripture? Let me point out three instances—one from the Old Testament, and two from the New.

1. See the "But" of Joshua vii. 1. You remember the stirring account of the taking of Jericho. It was the first act of faith that marked their new departure. In the Divine records of a life of faith, this is what we read: "By faith they passed through the Red Sea. . . By faith the walls of Jericho fell down" (Heb. xi. 29, 30). The wilderness life is not reckoned. That had been left behind, the Jordan had been crossed, and now they were pressing on to the new life, and had won their first great victory in the land. "But"—even then there was an Achan in the camp, a thief who disobeyed God's command, and took some of the spoils of the victory. Is it not possible for us to fail in a similar manner? "They gat not the land in possession by their own sword, neither did their own arm save them; but Thy right hand, and Thine arm, and the light of Thy countenance, because Thou hadst a favour unto them." It is very easy to get off the ground of grace. Flushed with success, elated by the consciousness of a new power, we may secretly begin to congratulate ourselves, instead of ascribing all to God. We flap our wings and crow. We look down upon our fellow-Christians who have not gone through our experience and who have not learned to pronounce our Shibboleth. I have seen Christians fail lamentably in this way.

"But" if we have failed, let us not give in to discouragement. Does not the Lord say, "Get thee up. Wherefore liest thou thus upon thy face?" Let us find out the cause of the failure, and let the sin be frankly confessed and given up. Go back to the place of death, and the blessing will be restored.

2. Turn next to Acts v. 1. The disciples had just had a wonderful prayer-meeting, and they had been filled afresh with the Holy Spirit. This had led to fresh consecration of their all to the Lord, and to a beautiful exhibition of brotherly love, and unity, and power in testimony. What a lovely picture is presented of what the Church of Christ might be, and should, be! There was "great grace" and there was "great power" in those days.

And often have we been reminded of this at Keswick. It is not church or chapel there. The spirit of love and unity prevails, and surely this has much to do with the blessing which is vouchsafed. And yet, the unity is by no means perfect even at Keswick. It is, however, a genuine attempt at the real thing. You see dignitaries of the Church of England sitting side by side with their Nonconformist brethren, and listening eagerly to their teaching. You see mature fathers in Christ willing to learn from the veriest tyros, and all in loving submission to their Lord. You see Church and Dissent at the same table of the Lord, with nothing to mar the Christian fellowship. It only lasts for a few days, however, and as you look at this spectacle of Divine grace, you pray that if the spirit of love and unity cannot be shown all the year round in precisely the same manner, yet it may manifest itself in other ways. Oh! what blessing would abide upon the Church, and so come upon the world, if Christians were "together," and lived, and prayed, and witnessed "with one accord." To get, and to keep, blessings, we must learn the meaning of those words—"with all saints." It is not in the way of isolation, but in the way of fellowship, that the blessing is bestowed.

"But"—how soon Satan comes in with his spurious imitations of the consecrated life! There are those who want to have credit for more than they deserve. They wish to pass for fully consecrated Christians; but they keep back part of the price. How much does it cost to get the blessing? "I counsel thee to buy of Me gold refined by fire, that thou mayest be rich." It is the fire that we dread. It is parting with our own riches that costs us so much. And when it is a question not of doing this once merely, but of continually parting with our all, and living as those who possess nothing, and depending absolutely upon God, it is no wonder that some shrink back. Let us beware of worthless imitations. Either we have yielded to the Lord entirely, or we have not. If we have, we shall know it. If we have not, let us beware of seeking to appear what we are not. No part payment will do in this business.

3. Take, once more, the case of Acts viii. 9. Here it is a question of the baptism of the Holy Spirit. There had been a revival at Samaria, and much joy. This was followed by the gift of the Holy Spirit vouchsafed to the converts. The work of God was going on grandly. The Spirit of God was manifestly in the Church. It is always so where there is a genuine revival. Christians at such times do not suppose that a clear understanding of the letter is sufficient. They are not satisfied with merely knowing about doctrines and blessings. They want the blessings themselves. With many of us is it not the case that we get the blessing first and then learn the theory afterwards? The great question after all is this—Am I filled with the Spirit? Have I ever been filled with the Spirit?

"But"—here again Satan comes in with his imitations. The spirit of Simon Magus is not dead. There are still those who love power, who love pre-eminence. They do not want the gift of the Holy Spirit so much, if at all, for themselves, as in order that they may influence others. What a snare is the love of personal power and influence! We want the power and influence of the Holy Spirit. Self will shrivel and vanish before that power. "No flesh shall glory in His presence."

What a miracle is a man filled with the Holy Spirit! How we feel our nothingness in the presence of such a miracle! With men this is, indeed, impossible; "but with God"—ah! that is what we need to learn! We are being constantly brought to an end of self, and are very slow, for the most part, to learn that lesson. But, oh to learn what God can be to a trusting, obedient soul! "With God all things are possible." Then, this is possible—that we can be kept living always in Him, and for Him. "Thanks be unto God, which always leadeth us in triumph in Christ." "For we which live are alway delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus may be manifested in our mortal flesh." "Being therefore always of good courage"—"we faint not." Yes, God is able, God is able, God is able. Let faith respond, "Amen, Hallelujah!"

Missionary Enterprise.

THE MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

SOME months ago, as our readers are aware, an effort was made to get into actual touch with missionaries on the field, and "The Missionary Association" was formed.

Its object was to wait upon the God of Missions, seeking the creation or revival of missionary interest in every member of the Church of Christ, to encourage and to strengthen one another's hands in God, for obedience to the appeal of the Lord Jesus to go into all the world and proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to every creature.

The results have been beyond expectation. There are presumably about ten thousand European and American missionaries abroad, and eleven hundred of these (over ten per cent.) have replied to the Circular Letters and Occasional Papers which have been sent out to them. Most of these express the warmest thanks for the invitation to become associated as members of a band of workers, seeking by mutual prayer and participation in each other's joys and sorrows, to prove the oneness with each other, and with the Father and the Son, for which the Lord Jesus prayed, in order that the world might believe that God had sent Him.

Such a beginning encourages us to go forth to our brothers and sisters, at least by correspondence, into jungles and desolate and lonely places, as Jonathan went to David into the wood, and strengthened his hands in God.

LETTERS FROM WORKERS.

A missionary in Shanghai hears from a friend in Hungary of "an association which desires to be helpful to, and link together in spiritual matters, the workers in foreign missions." From the Presbyterian Mission Press, he says, goes forth an undenominational monthly periodical, read by most missionaries all over China, and he asks on behalf of the editor for particulars which he could publish for the benefit of his readers, giving the main facts in editorial notes; for he considers the increasing spirituality of all missionary workers to be of the first importance.

Many write that they are cheered by knowing that some are specially caring and praying for missions and missionaries. They are also thankful to hear of the prayer circles that have been and are being formed. "When at home," says one, "I often felt people did not know how to pray for the work in heathen lands."

Other letters come from India, and from Turkey in Asia, Palestine, North, Central, and South Africa, America, North and South, the West Indies, &c. One from the last named says that the writer was converted through the ministry of Rev. G. C. Grubb in Melbourne, and has wished for years to write and tell him so.

It is quite a means of grace to read these letters. Some of them contain thoughtful and edifying expositions of Scripture. All express yearnings after a closer walk with God and increased power of the Holy Ghost in their ministry. May we suggest to some of these a remark which we have treasured from the long ago addresses of Dr. and Mrs. Palmer, that God does not make us reservoirs of power, but that He works by His Spirit through those who wait upon Him. When the worm threshes the mountain into chaff, the power is not in the worm, but in the Almighty Hand that wields the worm; not in Moses when he spoke to the rock and the waters gushed out, but in God who commanded him to speak.

A communication from Kien Ming, dated June 16, says:—

The missionaries connected with the C.M.S. and C.E.Z. meet annually in February for a quiet day, and it has been generally felt that, although not a few of us have joined the Missionary Association individually, we should like to join as a body and in connection with this day of prayer. In this way we hope not only to get much prayer for ourselves, but for this Kien Ming district, and especially for our native helpers. We have one native clergyman, Mr. Li, and thirteen catechists or preachers, and three Bible-women.

The Prefecture of Kien Ming has seven counties, in four of which we have a little work, and we are just opening a fifth—the county town of Puchin. [Names of missionaries given.] The Prefecture is a very large one, as large as seven of the Eastern Counties, and no other mission is at work in it. We are all greatly longing for a far fuller realization and experience of the Holy Spirit's presence in the work than we have ever yet enjoyed.

While marvellous is the way God has opened doors hardly ajar a few years ago (it is only four years since we were driven from the very city within whose walls I am writing in our newly erected house); but in the Church there is much to sadden and discourage. Oh for a purer Church! We shall greatly value prayer.—Yours in His work, (Signed) Hugh Stowell Phillips.

GOD'S WITNESSES.

Doubtless God's witnesses often stand up to speak with a deep sense of weakness and inability. But they cast themselves on God and He answers, "I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." And the power of the Holy Ghost gives effect to their words. From this point of view you may "count your many blessings; name them one by one; and it will surprise you what the Lord hath done."

We propose to keep this Missionary Association before our readers, and in connection with it to open our columns for information and opinion on such subjects as these—The Promotion of Missionary Interest in the Churches; The Responsibilities and Possibilities of Pastors in relation to Missions; The Responsibility of Christian Colleges to regard the Missionary Training of their Students as of Primary Importance; The Relation of Missionary Societies to the Churches on the one hand, and to the Missionaries on the other; The Children of Missionaries, are they a Burden or a Blessing? and, above all, The Cultivation of Scriptural Knowledge and Spiritual Growth in Missionaries.

No charge for membership is made to the missionaries, therefore provision for the expenditure, which must be a growing quantity, becomes the privilege of those who tarry by the stuff at home.

THE

Directory of the Devout Life.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Lighted to Shine.

(Matt. v. 16.)

"NOT that Light." No, not even John the Baptist was that; there is only one true Light, "which lighteth every man that cometh into the world," even He, who is the Life of men. We are lights, He is "that Light." We are stars that have no original glory, and if one differs from another in the radiance which he sheds forth, it is only in so far as he reflects more fully the lustre of that uncreated Sun. Centuries ago that Sun shone in this world, without a dimming cloud between His glory and the world of men, save the veil of His flesh; but, so far as the world was concerned, there was sunset, while it was yet noon, on Calvary; and we have been summoned to take up His mission and shine as stars in the midnight sky, or as candles in the darkened home, until the first beams of the eternal morning break on the Alpine summits of time, white with the snows of millenniums.

It is interesting to apply the analogy between the Disciples of Christ and candles or lamps. "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord" (Prov. xx. 27). By nature we are like so many unlighted candles. As the candle is adapted to catch the light, but stands dark and cold until its wick is ignited, so have our natures been made to burn and shine with the nature of God, but they are unable to produce light of themselves, and remain cold and dark until kindled from the eternal Nature of Him "who is Light, and in whom is no darkness at all." It matters little what the nature of the candlestick may be. In your case it may be of gold, silver, or china. It may be exquisitely chased, or of the commonest possible manufacture. The most ornate is incapable of producing the light, and will be set aside in favour of the commonest "dip" stuck on the end of a piece of wood, if only that has caught the precious light of which the other is destitute. The Pharisees and scribes of our Lord's time were like handsome candelabra which gave no ray of light to the thick darkness of their age; whilst His disciples, humble fishermen, shone with a light which has irradiated all succeeding time.

"Men light a candle." They place the wick against some burning point of light, or they strike a match, or in our days turn a switch, and immediately there is a glow of light. Have you been lighted? Have you come in contact with Christ, or with one of His servants in whom His nature has shone, or with His Word, which may be compared to a box of lucifer matches, because all the potentiality of fire and light slumbers until called into requisition? If not, stand expectant and eager; cry to Him, "Light me, O Light of Life, and let my nature henceforth have no other purpose than to shine on earth as Thou shinest in the Eternal Glory, emitting a radiance of the same nature and yielding the same prism as Thine own."

"The Life was the Light" (John i. 4). Notice those words. Christ was the Light of men, not primarily because He wrought miracles and spoke wonderful words, but because He lived. He was the Light of Nazareth because He lived within the circumference of its hills for thirty silent years. Galilee of the Gentiles—"the people which sat in darkness"—saw a great Light, because "He came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is by the sea." The country of the Jews was illumined because "He went about doing good and healing all that were oppressed." The silent influence of that Life which unfolded itself in the loveliness of perfect deeds has stolen over the world like dawn over the sky; and if the Lord had never spoken a word, the testimony of His life for God and Truth and Love would have been the most remarkable episode in human annals. It must be so with us; we shine by what we are. We shine as there is less of the wick of our own nature, and more of the flame of His. We shine when we are unselfish, when we "do all things without murmurings and disputings," when we are "blameless and harmless, the children of God without blemish" (Phil. ii. 14, 15). Though you were never to speak a word, you might still fulfil the greatest mission and ministry of your life, if only you would live as Christ lived.

"He was a burning and shining light" (John v. 35). The Baptist shone because he burnt. His light cost him life. On one occasion, he said, "I must decrease;" probably his ministry lasted but a few months. The light he gave was so brilliant that it exhausted him prematurely. There can be no true shining without burning. The light that costs nothing is hardly worth the giving. You ought to be burning down to the socket, as you spend and are spent for others. Your zeal for God's house should burn you up.

Burning also stands for heat. John was fervent, intense, passionate in his devotion. His was an ardent nature, that loved as few men love. The love that others give to wife and child and friend, in his case was expended on his Lord. Mary did not more certainly break an alabaster box on the head and feet of Jesus, than he the perfume of his lovely nature.

See that there is fervour, ardour, passion, the fire of a burning heart behind your testimony for the Saviour. Socrates gave light; he shone, but did not burn. Wesley gave light, but he burnt, and it is hardly possible to read a page of his sermons without being warmed at the fire of his intense nature. What shall we say of the Great Apostle, whose nature was ignited on the road to Damascus, and who said that whether he seemed beside himself or sober, he was mastered by one passion, and constrained by the love of Christ!

. . . .

The bushel. It would be absurd to take the trouble to light a lamp, and then obscure its rays by placing it beneath the corn-measure. The purpose of ignition would be counteracted and frustrated if any inmate of the house were to cover the light. How many of God's children have placed bushels on the light of their daily testimony for God? The bushel of uncharitable speech! The bushel of peevish and murmuring complaint! The bushel of an unforgiving spirit! The bushel of some conspicuous failing! Any of these is sufficient to counteract the entire effect of our testimony. On one occasion when a mother was remonstrating with her grown-up son for his not having become a Christian, he replied, "Mother, you have always seemed so afraid of God. Whenever anything has gone wrong in your life, you have been so put out, so fearful about the future, that you have made us think that we can get on as well without religion as with it." Is not this a specimen case of the bushels which cover our light? Whenever you hear men say, "He is a very good man, but ——;" "She is a very good woman, only ——," you may be sure that there is some bushel in the life which is forbidding the outshining of the Light.

Notice what the Master says, "Let your light shine." It is not for you to ignite the flame, to supply the oil, but to guard against anything that may obstruct the outshining of the Life of God from your soul. See to it that everything that might hinder the effect of your testimony and mar your influence is put away, Christ will see to it that your light shall effect the full measure of His purpose. "Let your light shine."

In contrast with the bushel is the stand or candlestick, not under the bushel, but on the stand. What is your stand? Is it not your station in society, your position in the home, the sphere of your influence, your position in that business-house, factory, or workshop?

With infinite care and forethought God has chosen the very place in which you can do your best work for the world. You may be lonely, but you have no more right to complain than the lamp has which has been placed in a niche to illumine a dark landing, or a flight of dangerous stone steps. The Master of the house may have put you in a very small corner, and on a very humble stand; but it is enough if it is His blessed will. Some day He will pass by, and you shall light His steps as He goes forth to seek and save that which is lost; or you shall illumine some great light that shall shine like a beacon over the storm-swept ocean. Thus the obscure Andrew was the means of igniting his brother Peter when he brought him to Jesus.

What a good thing it is when a man takes his bushel off his light and turns it upside down, and places the light above it! Suppose, for instance, a man's bushel has been the love of strong drink. Let him conquer it, and put it under his feet; let him become an apostle of total abstinence; let him win other drink-cursed lives. Then that which had threatened to extinguish his influence will be the means of extending it—for others who have been cursed as he has been will naturally turn to him for help. It is a blessed thing when the fire of Divine love kindles the bushels themselves, destroying them and making a conflagration which compels men to turn from the power of darkness towards its attractive glow.

The motive. Never forget that the one object in Holy Living is not to convince men, but to "glorify your Father which is in Heaven." If you live with your thoughts directed towards men, even though your motive be one of pure beneficence on their behalf, you will have less influence upon them than you will exert if your life be altogether Godward, and your one aim be that He may be glorified.

The glory of the Father was the one motive that occupied the mind of our Lord, from the hour when He said, "I must be about My Father's business," to that other when He stood under the shadow of His Cross, and said: "Father, glorify Thy name . . . I have glorified Thee on the earth." (See also John xiv. 13; xv. 8.) So live, speak, and love, that God may be glorified, and count your life a failure unless men turn from you to Him. It is not enough for your light to shine, it must so shine. Any shining which does not make men glorify God is deficient. Good it may be, but it is not the best. Your light must be so managed that men may not talk about you, but about Him who has made you what you are.

"Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God" (1 Cor. x. 31).

. . . . . .

God will supply the lamp with oil. After all, we are but wicks, to the edge of which, as upon a ladder, the oil climbs from the cistern. Who could see to read or work by the burning of a wick? No; it is the oil that burns on the wick, whilst the wick slowly chars, as it yields itself to mediate between the fire on the one hand, and the oil on the other. Keep on burning, O Christian soul! God will never fail thee, however long life may be, and however dark the night! God will supply thee with the oil that flows from the two olive trees that set forth Christ's dual work as Priest and King (Lev. xxiv. 1-4; Zech. iv. 1-3).

It is the constant fear of some Christian workers that they will never hold out. But that should not be their care. Christ ever lives, Christ ever loves, Christ is ever and all sufficient. Draw upon Him; let all your fresh springs be in Him; let Him be what God meant Him to be, "wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption."

. . . . .

God will certainly have to trim your light. He will leave this sacred business to no other hand than His own; and He reserves for it "snuffers of gold" (1 Kings vii. 50).

Very often the soul dreads the application of His providences which seem to threaten it with extinguishment. It turns out, however, that the love of God was only cutting away something which was hindering our uprightness, that the true flame might break out more completely. There may be limitation on the area of illumination, but there will be marked increase in the intensity of the radiance. The limitation of Paul's imprisonment meant the lasting power of his Epistles. The snuffers of Bedford Gaol produced "The Pilgrim's Progress."

Ask for a radiant life, and trust God to take the best means possible in accomplishing an abundant answer to your request.

SUNDAY, August 16. Psalm xc.
A Psalm of Eternity.

THE majestic music of this great Psalm separates it from all the rest, and lifts it to a unique position in the Psalter. It is like the deep bass stop of a mighty organ. It reminds one of the surge of old ocean passing up into an ancient cave. The whole structure of the Psalm corroborates the inscription. It is worthy of the man who had seen the Eternal face to face, and heard Him speak as a man with his friend.

1-6. The transitoriness of man is set over against the stability of God. His nature is the asylum and home of human generations (Deut. xxxiii. 27). This mortal life is like a bank or shoal of earth surrounded by an illimitable ocean of Divine everlastingness. Creation—the earth with its mountains, the universe with its worlds—was born of Him; but He had no origin, no beginning, nothing before. Time, which seems so long to us, is but a sigh, a breath, the swift rush of a mountain torrent, a tale told by the camp fires at night, the grass of a morning's growth. Human generations go down to the grave as He turns them to dust, and they arise as He says, "Return."

7-12. Here is a wail borne from the forty years of wanderings, as each day scores of graves must have been dug to receive the carcases of those who perished in the wilderness. The cause of this wasting away is traced to the Divine wrath. When man persists wilfully in sin, he comes inevitably into collision with the Divine nature, which is as fire to stubble. Oh, that we could count the brevity of our hurrying days, and give each of them something to keep in store!

13-17. On the eternity of God's nature, as contrasted with the brevity and sorrow of human life, the Psalmist founds his prayer that God would have compassion. Even though we must pass, let us do some work which shall live, and let God's blessing make our children a nobler generation than ourselves. Through the ages let "an increasing purpose" run!

MONDAY, August 17. Psalm xci.
The Song of the Traveller.

The structure of this is very beautiful, although it only comes out clearly in the R.V.

1. We have in the opening verse a general statement of the safety of the soul that makes its home in God.

2. Next we have a solo in which the happy pilgrim, who has found his lodgment in God, says to Him, in tender tones of trust, "My refuge, my fortress, my God!"

3-8. These verses were probably sung by a second voice, or by the choir, assuring the soloist of his absolute safety from two classes of danger—first from his enemies, and secondly from diseases. When we shelter in God, we may look out on the destruction of thousands, as Israel did on the night of the Passover. Where the Blood speaks, the Angel of Death passes over.

9. Here again the soloist avouches his faith in Jehovah as his refuge: "Thou, O Lord, art my refuge."

9-13. Again, as in the former paragraph, another voice, or the chorus, breaks in with assurances. We might speak of this Psalm as the Psalm of the two houses, the one for the Spirit in God (1), the other for the body in the transitory tent (10); but ah! how safe he is whom angels watch and carry in their arms.

14-16. Finally, God himself speaks, filling the heart with gracious assurances in which His "I will" rings out with sweet assurance. How blessed it is to have those assurances of answers to prayer, companionship in trouble, deliverance and honour, satisfaction and salvation. It is as though we were bidden to stand in the cleft of the rock while the mighty procession of the Divine attributes sweeps down the mountain pass, and Jehovah proclaims His Name to the sheltered soul.

TUESDAY, August 18. Psalm xcii.
A Song of Thanksgiving.

1-3. The duty and joy of thanksgiving are extolled. Men are called upon to fill their morning hours with song, and to celebrate in the evening God's faithfulness and truth. It is a good thing to praise. If we would compel ourselves to enumerate God's love and care, we should find ourselves arising as larks do from the steamy mists of morning into the clear heaven of God; and we should lay our heads on our nightly pillows, realizing that the unknown morrow can bring nothing that we need fear. In the darkest skies there are some bits of blue, and whilst we dwell on them, lo! all the clouds break up and roll down the wind.

4-9. Here are the grounds for praise and thanksgiving. Men who are under the power of passion—brutish men—cannot understand our childlike faith in the love and care of God; and fools, i.e., light and self-important persons, are equally at a loss. But their prosperity is brief, their overthrow is inevitable.

10-15. From the wicked the Psalmist turns to his own blessed lot, and to that of his fellow-believers. The strength of the wild ox; the fresh anointing of the priest; the stately growth of the palm and cedar, which outlive a hundred crops of grass and flowers carpeting the floor beneath their shadow; the perennial fruitfulness of some old trees, which may have stood in the temple courts—these are the images of which he makes use, and in their variety finds analogies to the blessed life.

WEDNESDAY, August 19. Psalm xciii.
The Voice of the Storm.

This is the first of the Psalms which treat of Jehovah as King. They form a remarkable group, which celebrate the majesty and glory of His reign. It is only when the Saviour has become King of your life that you can rightly appreciate the soul-music which throbs through this part of the Psalter.

1, 2. Jehovah is King in His own right. No other hands but His own have clothed Him with majesty. He has clothed Himself and girded Himself with strength, but let it be understood that this is no new feature in His existence. As we travel back to the illimitable past, we find that His existence dates from everlasting, and that His throne has been founded on the rocks of eternity.

3, 4. How often have we said these words to ourselves in crossing the mighty ocean, especially at night, when the storm has begun to rise! Then it is that the waves lift up their voice. Throughout the Psalms, and, indeed, throughout the Scriptures, the sea stands for untameable and restless power. It is, therefore, the emblem of the restless will of man, which is perpetually dashing itself in pride against the will and power of the Almighty. But mightier than the scream of the storm, or the dash of the breaker, is the voice of the Almighty. The waves crouch at His feet, and there is a great calm.

5. From the storm we pass into a calm. It seems as though we are suddenly transported into the house of the King, where priests in robes of white perpetually minister before Him.

THURSDAY, August 20. Psalm xciv.
A Cry for Vengeance.

The Psalmist who sang yesterday of God as King here sings of Him as Judge, and specially celebrates the retribution which He will mete out to unrighteous and insolent rulers.

1, 2. First, the invocation. Twice over he appeals to Jehovah as the God of Vengeance. Terrible as it may seem to the devout mind, there is comfort in the thought that for high-handed wrong there is, here or hereafter, inevitable retribution. We wish that God may adjust the balance, not simply to see our oppressors suffer, but that their sufferings may lead them to repentance.

3-11. The crimes of these "judges of Sodom" are described—their arrogant speech and masterful demeanour, the sufferings they inflict upon the widow, stranger, and orphan, their delusion that God is indifferent to their crimes.

12-19. The Psalmist turns from the oppressors to their victims. His note is no longer one of fiery indignation; he suggests that the troubles from which they suffer at the hands of their fellows are permitted for their instruction. He assures them that it is possible to have rest and peace of heart, even in the days of evil, and ultimately they shall be delivered and honoured. How often we have whispered to ourselves the words of verses 17, 18. However great the storm of doubt within us may be, God's comforts stay and delight our souls. Turn your eyes inward and upward!

20-23. Once more we are reminded of the high-handed wrong of the world with its inevitable retribution. Once more the Psalmist reveals his faith in Jehovah, and shelters in Him as refuge and fortress.

FRIDAY, August 21. Psalm xcv.
The Call to Worship.

This Psalm has entered into the worship of the Christian Church, because it is so steeped in the spirit of prayer. There is a swelling note of joy, a jubilation, a surge of irrepressible emotion, which lifts the soul as it meditates.

1, 2. When we enter the courts of God's House, let us call to one another and stir each other, as the note of the first awakened songster of the woodlands startles all the rest into outbursts of melody.

3-5. Here are topics for praise. The greatness of God, that He is King by indisputable right, that He holds the oceans in His hand (as well as His flock, v. 7), that He built up the mighty mountains, that He has formed land and sea, as the potter moulds the clay.

6, 7. But Nature herself cannot yield such themes as Redemption. We are His sheep, redeemed by precious blood, led and kept with Shepherd care, to be enfolded hereafter where ravening wolf cannot come—here are themes that angel voices cannot reach.

8-11. What a sad contrast is here, amid all the joy of worship. Let us remember that our hearts have no natural purity or holiness, and that they may wander from God, as past generations of worshippers have done. Israel praised God by the Red Sea, but provoked Him to wrath in the wilderness. Their jubilant thanksgivings were exchanged for murmuring complaints. The hearts which had beat high with hope missed the rest of Canaan. Take care, Christian, lest the enthusiasm of the hour may pass away, and be succeeded by bare tracks of wilderness wandering. It is only by daily faith that we can know God's rest here and now.

SATURDAY, August 22. Psalm xcvi.
The Coronation Anthem.

The preceding Psalms had dealt with God's Kingship over Israel, this deals with His universal reign. All nations and peoples are summoned to bring their tribute of adoration.

1-3. Israel, newly returned from captivity, is bidden go forth to publish glad tidings about God among the nations of the world; this is still the mission of the Church.

4-6. Note the contrast between the attributes of our God and the vanities which the heathen call gods. To the eye that penetrates to the inner secret of the Divine palace, honour and majesty, strength and beauty stand as His courtiers. God's presence-chamber is thronged with high and noble spirits, that accentuate His glory.

7-9. An appeal is addressed to the families of the peoples, to worship in priestly garb, "to take an offering and come into His courts." It seems as though a vision passed before the Psalmist's eye of the time when those who were "afar off" shall be "made nigh," and when Gentiles should be admitted to share the sacred offices of the ancient priesthood, being made "kings and priests unto God."

10-13. "Tell it out among the nations that the Lord is King." Let it be known everywhere that His Kingship means the perpetuity of moral order and gladness. Jehovah comes in the person of the Man of Calvary to judge the world in righteousness, and set up a Kingdom that can never be removed. So far from that Advent being terrible, it will be the beginning of an era which shall make our world sing, as on the first day of creation, with her sister spheres.

Other Lands.

French Home Missions.

THE Home Mission of the Free Evangelical Church of France supports twenty-two stations, most of which are scattered over Roman Catholic districts. From these centres about 300 localities are being evangelized, and with encouraging results. Genuine conversions are reported from time to time, though, as a rule, as soon as the first excitement is over curious crowds cease to attend the services. Those remaining faithful form little groups of firm, decided Christians.

The present conditions of France press upon the Evangelical section of her Church the duty of persevering in the spread of the Gospel of Christ. Financial difficulties present, however, a serious obstacle to this work. The French Protestants are for the most part poor; yet of the total of last year's contributions, amounting to the sum of 65,650fr., nearly 18,000fr. have been contributed by the stations themselves. A deficit of 7,071fr. is reported.

The other day we had the pleasure of travelling with the secretary of the Union, Pastor Abel Deschamps, of Pau, South of France. From him we learned that the Union des Eglises Evangeliques Libres was founded in the year 1849, at the close of the Synod of the National Reformed Church, which had declined to accept an Evangelical confession of faith presented by several of its members, Pastor Frédéric Monod and Count Agénor de Gasparin, among others, intended to check the invasion of Rationalism.

The principles of the Union are—(1) Independence of State support and control; (2) individual profession of faith in Christ as the sole qualification for Church membership. Immediately after its foundation, the Union felt called to devote itself to the direct evangelization of France, knowing well that if a Church did not evangelize it would soon perish. Therefore, though weak and poor, yet relying on the Lord, it did its part, and at once invested its Evangelization Committee with the necessary authority for pursuing this all-important task.

Its object is threefold—(1) to encourage every congregation in its effort to evangelize, and, if needful, to give it pecuniary aid; (2) to work by means of special agents in Roman Catholic centres wherever a door opens; (3) to preach the Gospel to Protestant populations fallen into unbelief through the preaching and influence of Unitarians and Rationalists.

By God's mercy more has been accomplished than had been anticipated; but the work is not always easy, as the following experience may show, in the relating of which, for reasons easily perceived, we abstain from giving names of persons or places:—

Part of a village population having quarrelled with their priest, an effort was made to introduce the Gospel among the people. The Protestant pastor was welcomed with manifest enthusiasm, and though the opposite party did everything imaginable to prevent his preaching, the attendance at the meetings continued very large for a time. On one occasion about twenty men, armed with axes, kettles, caldrons, tubs, &c., placed themselves in front of the meeting-room, accompanying the singing of hymns with hideous noises, and as the preacher and his helpers were coming out, they vociferated, "Kill them; down with the spies," &c. The consequences would have been serious had not the Protestants deemed it wise to escape by another exit.

Outbreaks like these were followed by quiet intervals, during which incorruptible seed was sown, much of it, however, falling upon stony ground. When it came to the point of paying the price, when those congregating to hear the Bible saw themselves turned out of their situations, beaten, disinherited, despised, and boycotted, then fear came into their hearts, and one after another slipped back into his old customs, and the congregations at the Sunday morning services dwindled down to fifteen and less.

In the evenings more would come, sometimes as many as sixty and even 100, but oh, how many of them frightened and disguised!

The adversary, on the contrary, was bold in his hatred, organising proceedings worthy of the sixteenth century. Frequent visits from the gens d'armes were accompanied by a hooting mob. The evangelist had to appear before the magistrates to answer various charges of a vexatious order. After a year had elapsed, the Romish clergy made a supreme effort to exterminate heresy and heretics. For fifty days two mission-priests, imported for this purpose, delivered virulent discourses against the Protestants and their teaching. As the result of this, a large procession was organized on the last Sunday of their mission. Arriving in front of the preacher's home, a halt was made, and a grand crucifix was solemnly raised. Amid profound silence, the priest raised his hand, and, pointing to the window, shouted: "We shall always remain Catholics — and Frenchmen!" His followers responded by shouting: "Down with the Protestants; down with the spies; down with the English."

After such demonstrations had been enacted before the houses of all in sympathy with the Protestants, the crowd returned to church, as it fondly imagined, to receive priestly absolution and a benediction from on high.

A few days later, while crossing the village, the preacher and a lady relative of his, were attacked by a hooting band, and covered with mud. A woman with the expression of intense hatred in her face, nearly thrust into their faces a "crucifix," and a "sacred heart of Jesus," exclaiming: "Look here! this is my religion." "Religion" was further shown by big bonfires being lighted, round which a crowd danced in wildest fashion. All wishing to see a Protestant roasting had been invited to come to the treat. They came and heartily joined in hooting a mannikin of straw, attached to a wooden cycle, in its progress through the streets. On reaching the place of execution, the pastor in effigy was finally thrown into the fire and burned.

After holding the fort for eighteen months, the brave little band of soldiers of the Cross, followed the call of another village in the neighbourhood, leaving the stubborn place and in it a nucleus of a small church of believers, which lives and perseveres to this day.

The purpose of our telling this story, is (1) to arouse kind, practical sympathy with the work of evangelization in France; and (2) to make us think what we are to expect from the Roman Catholics the day they have the power in their hands. W. M.

Work in Normandy.

ONCE again I venture to ask the prayers and help of your readers on behalf of this terribly neglected part of France, where there are at least 800,000 souls who have never heard the Gospel; and this within a seven hours' journey of London. The few Evangelical pastors are as nothing in comparison with the immense need. I hope to pay another visit very shortly, the length of which must largely depend upon the help forthcoming.

I have a unique opportunity, being offered a place in which to hold meetings in a town where there is no Protestant work of any kind. Here I hope to hold Bible-readings and Gospel meetings, and, in addition, to visit the towns and villages with the attractive and acceptable illustrated Gospels, of which "The Scripture Gift Mission" have promised me a liberal grant. Will your readers help me to lift the burden of responsibility which rests upon English Christians in having left the department almost without the glorious Gospel. I beg to thank those who have helped in the past, but much more is needed.

Contributions may be sent direct to myself at "Normandie," New Malden, Surrey; to The Christian; or to any member of my Council.—On behalf of our perishing neighbours, Samuel Levermore.

Gifts of Lavender (shed, if possible) and lavender-bags, for distribution in the military hospitals will be much appreciated by Miss L. Farrell, 31, Birkbeck Avenue, Acton, W. The men highly value this ministry of kindness, and many instances are known in which the text accompanying the gift has proved a "word in season."

The Gospel in Algeria.

GOSPEL work meets with some encouragement in Blidah, a delightful town near Algiers, called by the Arabs Oreida—"Little Rose." The French pastor, M. Gory, and his devoted wife, have put Christian work on a thorough footing with a variety of institutions. Among these latter is a young women's association, and a growing work among soldiers. This latter has been attended with much blessing; soldiers have the use of a hall, daily open for them, and the Christian influence under which they are thus brought has proved beneficial to them in many ways—moral and material, as well as spiritual.

At length the work has outgrown the accommodation provided, and a scheme has been launched for more adequately meeting the requirements. The needful outlay is placed at 5,000 francs; having come to England to attend the Keswick Convention, M. Gory is now answering kind inquiries regarding his work. Assuredly there are obligations to render him some aid. In his paper, Le Courrier du Dimanche, he has consistently defended our missionaries from the vexatious attacks of enemies of the Gospel. Now, with reason, he looks to us for sympathy and help in his deeply-interesting labours. He may be addressed c/o Höfler and Co., 26A, Soho Square, London, W.

A Chinese Crucifixion.

AMONG the many methods of capital punishment that are in practice in China, there is none more dreaded than the awful sentence of crucifixion. The rarity of the sentence makes it none the less gruesome. In Kwangtung, Anhuei, Shantung, and Kansuh, the cases that call for such an extreme penalty are more numerous. It is usually for some terrible crime. The day is one of revelry and pagan orgies. The punishment and the exhibition of it are both open.

A desperate murderer, named Mah Ling Jin, was recently crucified in his native district of Shun-teh-hsien, Kwangtung. He was decoyed into the capital by the man whose father he had recently killed. The trial was brief and decisive. Thousands of the worst element filled the city. At the trial the prisoner confessed with callous indifference that he had murdered sixty persons. He was a highway robber of a notorious band. It was arranged that the crucifixion should be a public demonstration.

Bound by his hands and feet, the man was carried to the scene. He was then nailed by his hands and feet, stretched to an immense cross. He showed no signs of repentance. After terrible sufferings of thirst, agonies of mind, and amid the taunts of a heathen mob, the demonstrations of the soldiers, and the general pandemonium of such a scene—lengthened out to three days of such revolting and sad torture—the victim was relieved by death.

After death he was decapitated in accordance with the full details of the sentence. This was to ensure the man being ranked in his abode in hell with the decapitated murderers. For several days the flocks of people from all parts of the country went to view the crucified and mutilated man as he was still exhibited, hanging upon the cross on one of the bridges of the city. This was said to be as "a warning to evil-doers." Thinking of these conditions of the masses in China, one is reminded of the age that recalls the names of Tiberias, Nero, Galba, Otho, and Domitian. Down in the lowest depths of sin, greed, debauchery, avarice, and all the unspeakable sadness and hopelessness of heathenism, are hundreds of millions of men and women and children in this land who live in unpitied neglect and shameless squalor.

Amid such scenes and in such an environment, we need the continual prayers of the Lord's people, lest we become wearied in the strife. Oh that these sin-stricken and deluded millions might be led to look unto Him, their only Saviour, who was lifted up that He might draw all men unto Him! W. R. Hunt.

In Dark Nigeria.

WRITING from Pataji, N. Nigeria, a station of the Africa Industrial Mission, Mr. Albert F. Taylor gives a vivid description of the spiritual condition of the people among whom he labours. The Gospel is proclaimed, he says, every day, and on Lord's Days in a more public way. Some villages being within easy access are ministered to and services are conducted at the mission station. "We have just finished our first year's work, and there seems hardly any inclination yet on the part of the natives toward repentance and faith. It is weighing down upon us as a heavy burden. There is no apparent opposition to the truth, but a seeming readiness to assent to what is said, mixed with a little surprise at certain strange statements which are entirely new to them.

"The people are divided in religious matters. The majority, however, are Mohammedans, and others Pagans or Kuti worshippers. With the former their knowledge of the Al Koran is so vague that it profits them nothing; but every man does that which is right in his own eyes, and goes through the forms of prayer, and persuades himself that Mohammed will finally bring him to his desired haven. The latter do not consider that religious observances are necessary, except when trouble or adversity comes upon them. Then they attempt to appease the anger of God (as they say) by offering a sacrifice."

The missionaries in Nigeria look to friends at home to be earnest in prayer for this unfortunate people, so long held captive by the evil one, that the ministrations of the Word may be effective and fruitful.

The Argentine Republic.

AS a self-supporting worker, I left my home, relatives, friends, and Cuninghame United Free Church, Glasgow, in December, 1900, to come to this land to testify for Christ. I have had many encouragements in the Master's service. My present desire is to say something of a little mission for young and old, held in a place named Adrogue, some twelve miles from the city of Buenos Ayres, under Rev. E. Olsson. The times I have gone to preach the Gospel in that mission room have been greatly blessed to me.

The little room set apart for Spanish evangelistic meetings at 7 p.m. on Sundays, has been filled on every occasion when I have gone to speak there, and if God continues to bless the work, another building will be required before long to accommodate more people. There is a Sunday-school, which is progressing well. Some of the children are disciples of Christ, having trusted him from the heart.

We lack workers to help to make known the glad tidings of a Saviour's love. We cannot tell what may be the result of witness-bearing of even the humblest Christian. W. Martin.

Among Postmen in Rome.

OUR Gospel magazine in Italian is finding a ready welcome among the postmen of Rome and other towns in Italy. Mrs. Wall, who most kindly superintends the work for us, writes thankfully of this open door, and also of the great need she feels of a helper or Bible-woman to visit in the postmen's homes in Rome, and to try to reach their wives for Christ. The cost of providing a Bible-woman would be £25 yearly; of this £5 is promised for the first year. Perhaps God may lead some readers of these lines to help to make up the remainder.

One postman in a provincial town of Italy was lately given a copy of our Italian Gospel magazine for post officials, which touched his heart so deeply that he sought out the evangelist who had given it to him, and asked to be told about the way of salvation. He is now reading the Bible daily, and has been so persecuted that he has had to be removed to another post-office. A. Hodgkin.

A Change of Raiment.

(Col. iii. 8-12.)

THE Apostle's Oriental use of metaphor has a wonderfully adhesive power in fastening his teaching on the thoughts; and mine lately have been dwelling with great interest on the picture suggested to us in this and parallel passages. He is writing to converts from heathenism, and, with great frankness and force, criticizes their presentment of the Christian character. He had an exalted idea concerning it, not safety merely, but dignity, being involved. Christ's Bride must not only be cleansed by the washing of regeneration, but must be brought unto the King in raiment of needlework.

Here the Colossian converts were lacking. They had accepted Christ, and were affianced to Him by an act of saving faith in His atoning sacrifice; but their habits—which is but another and older name for clothes—were unworthy of their new relationship. Paul was thankful for their personal safety, but his sense of fitness was outraged by the unclean rags of heathenism that hung in unsightly fashion over their wedding garments. Therefore he vehemently urges them to "put off" all these, and gives a catalogue that would be well-nigh irreconcilable with our conception of practical Christianity but for the recent testimony of a philosophically-thoughtful Indian missionary, to the effect that it requires the training of three generations to bring into the heathen conscience the Christian idea of truthfulness!

Happily for us, we labour under no such disabilities; educated and trained, not only in the evangelical, but in the ethical aspect of Christianity, our garments should surely be always white, and worthy of our high vocation. But is it so? Are we quite clean in this matter?

WHAT TO PUT OFF.

Let us—to be practical—go back to the old word, habits, and ask if, as we began this year there were none of ours that should be "put off"—not to be given away with our old clothes, but cast into the depths of the sea with our forgiven sin. We are not speaking just now of solecisms of speech and manner, the brusquerie, and inconsiderateness, the inattention to established usage, by which some really excellent people lessen their influence, though it would be greatly to the honour of our Father, the King of kings, if more care were taken by us all to cultivate whatsoever is lovely in manner and bearing for His sake. But we would search a little deeper and see if in this outer manifestation of the inner life there are no unseemly habits to be discarded.

Is not selfishness one of these? Perhaps it is worn as an under-garment—a closely-fitting, comfortable vest, and not so discernible as some others, and we hug ourselves complacently in its warmth. But it is not according to the mind of Him who seeth in secret, and who, when on earth "pleased not Himself." Watch it closely, and you will see that it is a contracting garment, with power to dwarf all noble impulse and shrivel the soul it enfolds, until, instead of looking on the things of others, you will, in some moments of clearer vision, be aware that "your own things" and interests are always first, and that generous self-forgetting deeds are a burden instead of a joy.

Murmuring is a habit more visible to the naked eye, and one that finds more ready excuse than selfishness, but its wearer is not pleasant company. Complaints about weather and people—servants especially—soon degenerate into forebodings: and oh, the lions that seem to be always prowling round the murmurer's path! Though they are really chained, they take the heart out of endeavour, and hinder, or mar, a great deal of useful work, besides doing much to spoil the brightness of the home life for those who have no taste for a domestic "Zoo." I think this quaint old quatrain might serve to help in the rending of this garment.

"For every evil under the sun
There is a remedy—or there is none.
If there is one, try to find it;
If there is none—never mind it."

Consider one more unsightly habit, among the legion that surrounds us, and it must have been woven in the same factory as the last, because of the strong similarity—Insubmission. As we look at this unseemly vesture we are ready to echo Jeremiah's words, "It is good for a man to bear the yoke in his youth"—for if parents fail, by lack of wise, firm, kindly training, to clothe their children with the humility of true submission to a superior will, it becomes well-nigh impossible to assume it afterwards when "not to man, but God" the submission is demanded. And yet for those who find that this clashing of wills under the discipline of daily life and providential dispensations always means for them defeat and misery, "there is rest for the weary" in Christ's power—Who is there amongst us who does not need the prayer.

"Renew my will from day to day,
Blend it with Thine and take away
All that now makes it hard to say
Thy will be done."

WHAT TO PUT ON.

The "putting off" is a humbling, self-sacrificing process like the stripping of the trees in autumn. The "putting on" is like the robing of the same trees in the garments of spring. Nothing in nature is more beautiful than this, and nothing in God's Kingdom of Grace so lovely as a soul clothed in the beautiful garments from the King's royal wardrobe.

Let us look at one or two of these robes that we are to "put on," and surely we shall all wish first of all to choose "the garment of praise" as a perennial habit. It is to take the place of "the spirit of heaviness" that has afflicted so many of us in the past with its sackcloth-of-hair roughness. Under its influence we shall begin to "count our blessings" more accurately, and nothing certainly will make our Christian aspect so attractive to others. And perhaps there is no surer way of fastening it securely round us than the daily—mid-day if possible—reading of the Psalms, all aglow as they are with the sunshine and atmosphere of praise. One Psalm read prayerfully each day brings us through the wonderful book in five months, and of the store of comfort and help to be found in the exercise the writer can gratefully testify.

The Master "put on zeal as a cloke"—shall not His servants wear it too? Is there not a crying need for it in these modern times when love to the Highest is waxing cold in so many hearts, and the icy, benumbing breath of worldly interests and companionships is stealing away the fervour of our earlier aspirations? Let us wrap this cloke around us, and "pray, without ceasing"—pray till the old glow comes back. It is the Greathearts that are needed in these perilous times, and they are the men in whom the holy fire of devotion is kept burning continually.

We are bidden, further, to "be clothed with humility"; and time fails to enumerate more of the desirable clothing for the Christian life. As we look more closely into the subject we shall each see for ourselves how poverty-stricken in the matter of character has been our appearance in the past. Much wealth is spent over dress and jewellery for the adorning of the mortal wearers; our Father desires that we who are heirs of an eternal heritage should have jewelled raiment that in His sight is of great price—"the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit," the costly girdle of a Divine charity. No money is needed for the purchase of these; no patent locks to keep them safe—only diligence, and prayer, and faith. M. C. F.

Romanism in Ceylon.—From the Ceylon Independent, I find that the Ceylon Romanists are preparing "a protest against the terms of the Royal Declaration." They say that "in Ceylon there are 3,565,954 inhabitants, of whom 3,214,348 are Buddhists, Hindus, or Mohammedans. The Christians number 349,239, and of these 82 per cent. are Roman Catholics." This fact must be kept before the Protestant Christian public. For every one Protestant, there are four Roman Catholics in Ceylon. A number of these Protestants are Ritualists or moving towards Ritualism.—S. Green Lee, Director Ceylon Mission of Christ's Kingdom.

Pope Pio X.

By Rev. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

THE election of Guiseppe Sarto was to a certain extent a foregone conclusion. I have just seen a letter written from Rome to a friend in Venice, in which the statement occurs: "I hope to see you in Rome soon, all the more that your protector (patron) Cardinal Sarto will probably be elected Pope." This letter is dated July 24, and was written by a druggist to a friend, a druggist in Venice. If a humble druggist could thus write, long before the Conclave sat, to his friend here, the election was pretty well determined.

No greater contrast could exist than that which does between Leo XIII. and Pio X. Leo was of noble family, cultured, had moved about the world, mingling with diplomatists and princes; he was spare of body, dignified, cold in manner, sarcastic, without heart, unloved, and unloveable. Sarto, Pio X., is of humble birth, has received a very ordinary education, was never out of Venetia so far as work was concerned; he is a very big man, full of humour, kind to all, and mingles and mixes freely with the people. Here in Venice, though he had his State gondola, he often used the little steamboats to go to and from the Lido where he used to walk and bathe.

He was free and easy with all. I see that Rosa the sculptor, who knew the Pope as a priest, is making his bust. The Pope handed him his snuffbox. Rosa returned it with a trembling hand. "What ails you?" said the Pope; "it is still I." So with Grossoli, the head of the Catholic Congress here, who, when introduced, knelt. The Pope raised him, saying, "Andemo, andemo, mi son sempre el vostro Patriarca de Venezia" (the Venetian for "Go on! go on! I am always your Venice Patriarch").

Leo XIII. and he thus contrasting, are one in this, that both have a master, and that is the Jesuit General. Only there is this difference, Leo XIII., when elected, rebelled against the Jesuit, until, as they said in Rome, he was tamed, and that was soon after his elevation. Sarto, Pope Pio X., will not need to be tamed, for he is a born Jesuit; his confessor is Father Ignazio Salgari, a well-known Jesuit, and a professor here in Venice. His courteous manner with friend and foe, his quiet, persevering method of working, his not too scrupulous use of means to procure his objects, have made him a very successful progagandist of the Papal Church. When he came to Venice, for example, as its cardinal in 1893, Venice was liberal and anti-clerical. Its Syndic was Riccardo Selvatico, who was instrumental in carrying out the decree of the old Republic of Venice, and having erected a monument to Fra Paolo Sarpi.

Having received a Cardinal's hat, Sarto was elected Patriarch of Venice by the Pope in 1902. But Crispi claimed the right of election for the Government, as the heir of the rights of the Republic, and forbade his entrance. There was a year of contest. And when, in 1903, Sarto came, he received a cold reception. Nobody met him, and as he came down the Grand Canal no public building and few private ones were decorated. Then he wrote to the Syndic offering his homage as a citizen of Venice, and hoping for the Syndic's help in his duties, though their spheres of influence were distinct. The Syndic replied accepting his homage, agreeing with him as to the distinctness of their spheres of labour, and virtually telling him that both dignity and usefulness bade each to attend to his own affairs. The Patriarch is said to have held out his hand with the palm upward, and said, "Venice is like that." Then turning his hand round he said, "When I shall have been here six months it will be like that." And it was. An election came on, and this Patriarch managed to secure class votes by offering class advantages, and got a clerical majority into the council. Then that majority elected Selvatico's opponent, Count Grimani, as Syndic!

By various means Sarto has revolutionized the politics of Venice. He is an intransigente. He will never renounce the claim to the temporal power. Yet he will not openly fight the government. When King Victor Emmanuel was here this year, Cardinal Sarto, instead of going into hiding, called upon him. This he found it politic to do, because when he omitted to do it the time before, the Prefect, as the Government representative, did not pay him the usual formal Christmas visit. He will be a dangerous Pope, just because of his conciliatory Jesuitical ways, and because he will prove himself a fitting instrument in the hands of the Black Pope, who is the real Pope.

Holy Scripture Confirmed.*

By Rev. JOHN TUCKWELL.

THE Scripture history of Israel is perfectly consistent with itself, and does not need reconstructing. Abraham is not represented as a rude and savage sheik nurtured in the wild life of the desert, the progenitor of a tribe of wild nomads wandering into Egypt, captured, enslaved, breaking forth a horde of semi-savages, and adopting a constitution of a highly moral and religious tone.

On the contrary, it represents him as a devout citizen of a great and ancient city, of whom the Almighty said, "For I know him that he will command his children and his household after him," a man therefore who could not but have carried forth with him and transmitted to his posterity the very best elements of the civilization and culture in which he himself had been brought up. How true this is, which the Scripture records quietly take for granted, as a thing not needing to be said, the recently recovered laws of Khammurabi, the contemporary of Abraham, and many other modern discoveries, amply testify. In Egypt also both the people and their leaders were brought into contact with one of the greatest and foremost nations of antiquity. A shipload of English people going to America or Australia do not need to revert to an imaginary prehistoric savagery before they establish a national constitution; why then should it be thought necessary to doubt the veracity of a record which does not assert that an offshoot from Babylonia did so? And why should it be thought necessary to conciliate an irrational unbelief by breaking up the Scripture records into inexplicable fragments and rearranging them in an incredible order?

We may be permitted to inquire whether such indubitable facts as are known to us and a legitimate use of the Scripture records themselves will bear out this hypothesis. In spite of Professor Delitzsch's lecture on Babel und Bibel, no Assyriologist in the world has yet been able to disprove that the historical records of Holy Scripture have received great and remarkable confirmation from the recent discoveries of archæology. If this be not so, let us be told categorically the historic errors which archæology has discovered. Babel, Erech, Accad, and Calneh, the cities over which even Nimrod ruled; Asshur, Nineveh and Calah the first cities of Assyria; Carchemish, the great Hittite capital, and other cities without number, are all found in the very localities indicated by the Biblical records, while historic events almost innumerable connected with other nations contemporary with the Hebrews, with their chief promoters and actors, are directly or indirectly confirmed. Thanks to Dr. Pinches, Chedorlaomer, Arioch, and Tidal have started up out of the buried records of the past; while Sennacherib and Hezekiah, Mesha and Ahab, Sargon and Merodach-Baladan, Shalmaneser and Jehu, "the noble Asnapper" and Artaxerxes, Nebuchadnezzar and Cyrus, possess the same features, speak in the same tones, and display the same characters in the records of archæology as they do upon the pages of Holy Scripture.

Such facts as we know, forbid us to suppose that these records, compiled with such precise geographical and historic knowledge, and covering a period of more than a thousand years, could have been hacked out of the records of unknown writers by mere botchers and trimmers, and patched together in the bias of pride or partisanship.

Christian Conversation.

"THERE is a time to be silent and a time to speak." So said the preacher, the Son of David, King in Jerusalem. The maxims of men, inspired no doubt by the common abuse of the conversational faculty, have declared silence to be the more valuable—speech is silvern, silence golden! We make bold to challenge this as a universal proposition, and to say that it all depends upon the substance of the speech. "A word fitly spoken how good it is!" To speak "the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom," is to engage in a ministry upon which the blessing of God may ever be asked, and a ministry which He continually owns to the glory of His holy Name.

How much there is to engage heart and life in the words and ways of God in providence and grace! It is assuredly urgent that Christians should embrace opportunities of wholesome conversation—to admonish and reprove, instruct and entreat, those among whom they move in daily life. The short-lived friendships of a holiday, the many informal and "accidental" occasions of meeting one another—how these may be employed to speak of "righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come!" Yet we are prone to allow "the weather" to be the be-all and end-all of general conversation, if we do not still further restrain our sympathies, and justify the saying of Novalis, "Every Englishman is an island!"

Conversation has its snares, no doubt. Others beside Pascal have observed that there is no arena in which vanity displays itself in so many forms. But Christian conversation should be free from many of these dangers. Let Samuel Johnson shine in his sphere, and Samuel Taylor Coleridge in his; we have another model in the Lord Jesus, the Word of God, whose various conversations stand out so marvellously in the Gospel of John. The Great Teacher was a listener as well as a speaker; read the stories of Nicodemus and the woman of Samaria. And if we would engage in profitable conversation, we must be attentive as well as ready—have a sympathizing ear, and also be "apt to teach." A considerate spirit, with a tender interest in others, must go along with a preparedness "always to give an answer to every man that asketh us a reason of the hope that is in us." Though there must be a disposition to entertain, there must ever be a desire to teach—carefully steering clear of "idle words," "foolish and unlearned questions," and "corrupt communications."

On a recent holiday, in course of a sea cruise, I held myself at the command of all who desired to engage in conversation. In twelve days I conversed, sometimes for hours together, with nearly twenty people, and in every case questions of serious import were reached. Some of my friends were men of exceptional intelligence and experience of life; but I found my way to supreme things, whatever might be the opening topic. From day to day during the journey several aspects of Christian evidences were studied in a pleasant manner; also present-day topics were debated in their relation to the revealed will of God. Sometimes the discussion was warm—as when I unexpectedly found my companion to be a Roman Catholic; but even then kindly personal consideration was not excluded from its place and influence.

My experience during the holiday referred to was very pleasant; and it has convinced me that, where there is a disposition to converse, there is no reason why the sublimest of questions, as they bring in the Gospel of Christ, should be passed by or left untouched. Of course, we must not "cast pearls before swine"; nor, on the other hand, should we keep the Pearl always locked up in a casket away from the sight of those who might admire it! God give His people grace, in times of holiday and rest, at all times, indeed, to speak "a word in season." J. W. T.

British and Foreign Sailors' Society.

Rev. E. W. MATTHEWS, Secretary.

DURING the present year, Christian work in the Port of London may almost be said to have entered on a new era of more extended service and of greater promise, for the opening of the Sailors' Palace at Limehouse, as the headquarters of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, represents one of the greatest things ever done for sailors in this country in connection with a Christian mission. The cost has been £36,000, and with the exception of a small balance, that large sum has been contributed. Mr. Matthews has just completed twenty-five years of service as secretary; but the building which was opened a few weeks ago by the Prince of Wales actually represents a growth of eighty-five years.

The Society dates from 1818, when Rowland Hill preached the opening sermon in the Ark, a disused sloop of war, which, for the first time, showed the Bethel flag in the Thames. The Sailors' Institute, Mercers Street, Shadwell, was put up in the fifties, and until the spring of the present year this continued to be the headquarters, although the accommodation was altogether inadequate. The new building occupies a site near Limehouse Church where several main roads meet. Besides offices for the working staff, officers have their own parlour, dining-room, and bedchamber. For common seamen there are sleeping cabins, temperance dining-room, and restaurant, the charges being moderate. There is a considerable library, the reading rooms being free to all seafaring men. There are also halls in which Gospel services will be regularly conducted. Competent masters will carry on the King Edward VII. Nautical School with its observatory, and this will alone be no small advantage to all whose ambition has a seaward tendency. There are nearly 100 rooms in the great building, each being named after some notable friend of sailors.

Now a veteran in Christian service, Mr. Matthews is himself a quondam sailor whose earliest recollections belong to the sea. His native place was Bembridge in the Isle of Wight, and certain of his forbears seem to have belonged to the band of smugglers, who, a century ago, did exploits on that picturesque coast. His grandfather's brother was shot dead by a member of the coastguard, and this tragedy had such an effect on the grandfather himself that he gave up smuggling. Better than that, he became a changed character. It was among such adventurers that the lot of Legh Richmond was cast, and in the days of childhood and youth, the lad Matthews may have listened to fireside stories of daring until he also half believed in the romance of robbing the Government. At all events, he grew up in love with the sea, and, as a matter of course, was taught navigation. Three of his uncles had been captains, and his father, who died when the son was fourteen, was a Christian man, who passed much of his life with the British fleet.

Young Matthews commenced a seafaring life at the age of twelve, and two years later he was fortunate in securing an engagement on board a large pleasure yacht bound for the Mediterranean. Though he never lapsed into vicious courses, he had been regarded as a wild kind of boy at home; away from the scenes of earlier days he was not beyond the influence of a praying mother. That good woman's prayers were not long in being answered. The adventurous youth was greatly interested in places visited, which represented famous sites and scenes of the ancient world; and while thus favoured, the great change of conversion occurred, the instrument being an old seaman who was himself looked upon as a miracle of saving grace. At Venice, the youthful sailor was more concerned with his condition before God than with sight-seeing on shore; but from Athens he went to Mars Hill, read Acts xvii., and held a prayer-meeting with the sailors.

At Alexandria it was found that an old vessel had been given by the Government for religious meetings; and thus, for the first time, Mr. Matthews became impressed with the extreme importance of having such Bethels provided in foreign ports. Without knowing it at the time, he was being providentially prepared for his life-work. He was destined to be used of God for reviving the work at home and abroad of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. In those impressionable days, while visiting one port after another, he was brought vividly to realize what sailors needed, and what the mission church was able to give them. If when sailing into a foreign harbour, a traveller now descries the blue flag at the main-top-gallant masthead of a strange-looking vessel, he puts it down as a Bethel of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. That may be typical of what is being done in scores of other ports in the wide world.

While serving on board the yacht, Mr. Matthews was coming to the close of his seafaring life. At Dieppe some ill-feeling was awakened through his refusal to fetch in stores from the town on a Sunday; but the captain ruled in his favour. Mr. Matthews held little meetings on board, and the second mate, as well as several of the men, became changed characters. On reaching Algiers the vessel was found to have sprung a leak, so that the crew were discharged. Mr. Matthews proceeded to Gibraltar; and while lodging by permission with the 78th Highlanders, he laboured for a time as an evangelist in that Fort. During some three or four years afterwards he did similar work in England; but feeling that he needed further training he wrote to the late Dr. David Thomas, who got him admitted to Nottingham Training College. On leaving that institution he took charge of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society's station at Antwerp, and in 1878 he became secretary in London.

At Antwerp he had succeeded so well that the discipline in some measure fitted him for this more important service. In England, Canada, and the United States he collected the main part of the £4,000 for the Mariners' Church and Institute, which was erected in the Avenue du Commerce. A few months after settling in London he started The Chart and Compass, a twopenny monthly magazine, which has continued until the present time, and has an interest for others besides men of the sea.

The Society's new Sailors' Palace would seem to be the greatest enterprise in the way of a single building which has yet been put up in Great Britain to promote the spiritual, moral, and social well-being of sailors. The freehold has been secured, and for the purpose in view the site is said to be the finest in London, being in the centre of what may be called Sailor-town; all the London docks seem to lead to it. While it has doubled the original estimated cost, the addition of the Alexandra Wing, named after the Queen, is intended to make more provision for seafaring men from the northern nations of Europe, "who are destined," as Mr. Matthews tells us, "to be the peaceful rivals and co-operators with Britain in her world-wide commercial empire. Latin nations, and nations from the Orient and Occident, will send their representatives. 'Let all the nations praise Thee, O God!'"

The Ladies' Guild was inaugurated at the town house of Lady Dimsdale, who is the treasurer; and distinguished aid has been rendered by devoted women in different parts of the country. The members of the guild have nobly contributed £2,500 for the endowment, at £50 each, of fifty beds in the Sailors' Palace. The chief enterprise which the Guild at present has in hand is the Royal Sailors' Rest and Bethel in course of erection at Ramsgate, the cost of which will be £3,000. This new haven of rest and entertainment for seamen will be a great boon to sailors coming into the port of Ramsgate.

The Samaritan Fund, named after the Princess of Wales, as Mr. Matthews further remarks in his characteristic way, "has already helped many a poor Jack on a lee shore." The Prince and Princess of Wales have shown great interest in this fund, and each sent a liberal donation to the treasurer before starting on the voyage to the Antipodes in the Ophir.

"The British and Foreign Sailors' Society" has a world-wide meaning, the full import of which we may not realize without looking over a map of the world. The Sailors' Palace will now be the headquarters of about a hundred other stations in as many home and foreign ports. At home, such places as Swansea, Cardiff, Milford Haven, Southampton, Lowestoft, Dublin, and Aberdeen are chief stations; and the missionaries located at them visit smaller places, when, of course, such subjects as boatmen, deep-sea fishermen, and others, are reached. Abroad, the principal stations are at Malta, Genoa, Naples, Hamburg, and Antwerp. During the existence of the Society, two sailors' hymnbooks have been published. To the first, James Montgomery specially contributed several pieces.

It is a very encouraging thing that the work of the Society should have expanded in so striking a manner during Mr. Matthews' term of office. The service has extended on all sides, and is still growing. The calling of a sailor still continues to be far more hazardous to life than the most dangerous trade on shore. The Society's mission is essentially spiritual, and God has greatly blessed it.

The Society has a distinguished history, the Angas family, originally of Newcastle-on-Tyne, being among its chief benefactors. The Hon. J. H. Angas, of South Australia, is still the president, and he has been one of the most open-handed contributors to the building fund of the Sailors' Palace. The late George Fife Angas, father of the president, will rank in history as one of the founders and fathers of South Australia. An elder brother of this worthy, William Henry Angas, turned aside from the most alluring worldly prospects to become the first (unpaid) missionary of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. Mr. Matthews still speaks of this apostle to seamen as a living lighthouse. He did more than any one else of his time to build up the work which now shows such striking developments. He lived so near to God, and was so broad in his sympathies, that he found satisfaction in no evangelistic effort for sailors which did not embrace the ports of the whole world. Hence the comprehensive name which the society has borne for three-quarters of a century. While in the midst of his work, and in middle-age, W. H. Angas was stricken down by cholera in 1832; and Jack's Palace at Limehouse, as the headquarters of mission effort carried on in a hundred home and foreign ports, is the most speaking memorial that could have been raised in memory of him and others who were pioneers in arduous but fruitful service in less favoured days. "One-by-One" Working Band.

AT Keswick, during Convention week, three meetings were convened by Mr. Hogben. The first was held on Sunday afternoon, July 26, in the Wesleyan Church. Mrs. Penn-Lewis spoke powerfully upon "The Word of the Cross to every tongue and tribe and nation." On Monday morning a meeting was held in Victoria Hall; Rev. J. Gregory Mantle was the speaker, and Mr. Hogben, Sister Vera Edmeades, Rev. J. P. Clark, and others gave testimony which touched a responsive chord in many hearts, as to the efficacy of believing prayer and individual effort. In the afternoon Mrs. Penn-Lewis and Rev. R. Middleton addressed a large audience, and Mr. Hogben and Sister Vera again gave a recital of definite answers to definite prayer and honest effort. Many were deeply moved as the prayer-answering God was thus magnified, and the immediate result was the enrolment of many fresh members.

Prayer missions are being arranged for in the autumn and winter. Communications may be addressed to Mr. S. Hogben, Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.

The Dravidian Mission.—Mr. S. Arumugam, director of this work among aborigines, spoke on "Siva for Christ" at a meeting in the Battersby Lecture Hall, Keswick, during the Convention week. Marked attention was paid to the pathetic story told by this high-caste Hindu. Mr. Arumugam's mission is unsectarian in character, its object being to elevate spiritually, morally, and socially the down-trodden pariahs of South India. Within the last three years twenty-seven day schools and a number of night and Sunday-schools have been started in twenty-seven different villages, and about 1,500 children and adults receive Christian instruction daily. It is very encouraging to note that there are now several hundreds who have been turned from their idols to serve the living God. There is an orphanage connected with the mission, in which at the present time there are thirty-three children. The treasurer of the Mission is Mr. Thomas Radcliffe, Rydal Mount, Oxton, Cheshire.

In Norfolk Villages.

REALIZING the need that exists in many outlying districts of Norfolk for the simple proclamation of the Gospel, a Christian lady — Miss Katherine Browne (Norton Hall, Fakenham)—some time ago gave herself entirely to the work of village evangelization. In connection with the Norfolk Village Mission she visits the most isolated districts in the county, and conducts series of meetings extending over one or several weeks.

Being the fourth English county in area, Norfolk affords ample scope for such endeavours, and there is little fear of overlapping in the villages. In a recently-published booklet, giving some account of the work, Miss Browne speaks of a condition of things which it is feared is only too common:—

This last year fresh ground was opened up in the neighbourhood of Downham Market and Hilgay Fens. In one village where I had meetings I was assured the last mission held there was "nigh on thirty years ago." Judging from what I saw and heard, and the pathetic way I was entreated to come again, the people were quite unaccustomed to receive such help as I was able to give, and more than once I was assured that they would never forget the happy times God gave us.

An outstanding feature of last year's work was the number of villages in which missions were held where the people were totally unable to give any financial aid. In those cases the entire expenses fell upon the slender funds of the Norfolk Village Mission. Continuing her report, Miss Browne tells of many encouraging instances of Divine blessing resting upon her labours.

Perhaps I am mistaken in not caring to give figures regarding those who profess conversion to God during my missions and in the course of visiting; yet I can say what a deep joy it has been to me to see how God has honoured His Word, so that looking back upon this year there rise before me numbers of men and women who once were servants of sin, but now have become the "servants of righteousness."

In some places there has been considerable opposition to the work from the "powers that be." At one village, for instance, where I held a mission, it was impossible to get lodgings any nearer than four miles from the place of meeting owing to the fear the people had of offending the said "powers." This meant a drive of eight miles every night during my stay, to say nothing of the fatigue and extra expense for hiring. This is by no means an exceptional case, so that I have become very sceptical about the much-vaunted boast that "Britons never shall be slaves." I quite believe there are those who would endeavour to rob us of our freedom, and there is, without doubt, a need for watchfulness. One is hearing very much just now of how the sea is encroaching along this coast, and large sums of money are being promised to build defences and so prevent further inroads. There is an equal need to be on the defensive against the incoming tide of Ritualism, which threatens to sweep away the old land-marks.

One of the most encouraging missions, apart from the village work, was that held at Wardley Street Hall, Wandsworth. God gave abundant blessing, and at the close a band of helpers and converts was formed to consolidate the work. But it is the neglected hamlets and small isolated centres of population that appeal most strongly to Miss Browne, and she, with the Board of Referees, is hopeful that the operations of the Norfolk Village Mission will become more widely known, and its usefulness extended, through the sympathetic interest of friends who recognise the great need for the work it undertakes.

Marden Hop-Pickers' Shelter.—Miss Julia Smart (Howland Road, Marden, Kent) is again organizing the work at Marden for the forthcoming hop season. In the course of a brief report of last year's operations, Miss Smart says:—"Most of our customers can write their own letters (we provide pen, ink, and paper, and write letters for any who wish it). Mr. Grange (the missionary) was very helpful in taking nourishment to the sick. The pickers were wonderfully well behaved; this was in a great measure due to our tactful police, who kept order without needless interference. The parish that yielded most police cases had no coffee stall, nor any interest shown in their welfare. We most heartily thank our kind friends for enabling us to carry on this labour of love."

George Yard Mission.

IN his annual report of the various activities of this Mission and its ragged schools, Colonel Hayne (superintendent) writes:—

"By the grace of God, George Yard is still reaching out a loving, helping hand to the poorest of Whitechapel and the East End. During last winter we were enabled to help over 500 poor, mostly in great need. The wants of these were personally investigated. This relief is in addition to the many who have been supplied with dinners, teas, &c. George Yard has thirty-three different agencies at work, and in the course of a year, thousands of men, women and children attend the various meetings and Bible-readings, and are thus brought under the power of the Gospel."

The work among Jews is an important feature of the Mission, and deep interest is evinced in the gatherings. The Sunday-schools are prospering; all the teachers combine in the one great object of winning the children to the Saviour. The day (ragged) schools continue to flourish, and the Government report obtained shows that not only are great pains taken to teach the children, but a kindly interest and care is bestowed on the little ones. Breakfasts are given to those sent in hungry, and soup dinners are provided in cold weather. Above all, they are reminded of, and continually invited to the many special meetings for the young.

A useful branch of the mission is the Shelter. Seldom, if ever, is anyone refused food and a night's lodging, and from many parts of the Metropolis homeless girls and others are sent to be cared for. The Shelter also provides a home for motherless children, who have every attention and comfort bestowed upon them.

Through the kindness of H.R.H. the Princess of Wales, Col. Hayne is permitted to send many of the poor women of the district to the Princess Mary Memorial Home, Bognor, where the rest from daily toil, the abundance of nourishing food, and the sea air give strength to weary mind and body. The clothing department of the mission has again been well supported, and the many friends (including working parties) both in London and country have the pleasure of knowing that their gifts have been a source of joy and help to East London poor and their children.

The superintendent will always be glad to furnish friends with fuller particulars of George Yard and its numerous agencies. Col. Hayne's address is 87, High Street, Whitechapel, E.

[BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONERS.]

*God's Ideal Realised.

Psa. xxiv. 3-5.

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS.

IN a very real sense Christianity depends upon Christians. God has not written His message upon the sky for everyone to see it, nor has He given to angels the word of reconciliation and revelation. He has laid upon His people the propagation of Christianity. The type of Christianity which men see will be the measure of their impression of what Christ is. When our Lord departed He promised to send the Comforter who would convince the world of sin, through believers. You have never heard of anyone being saved apart from a message from God's Word or from a Christian. God has laid it upon His people to reflect the Gospel and reflect Him. What kind of Christianity ought ours then to be?

These verses start with God's ideal and work back till they come to the secret of how that ideal is to be realised. In verse 3 the Christian life is spoken of in the light of God's purpose, which is two-fold: (1) That we shall ascend; (2) that we shall stand. Our life is to be an ascending life. The hill of the Lord is before us, and God's ideal is that we should be ascending and also standing in the holy place. This psalm is the Old Testament version of John xv., abiding in Christ. It is the secret of the Christian life, not merely going up to slip down again, but constantly ascending. We have come here to learn the secret of not merely ascending, but standing. This is the place of holiness of which the Psalmist speaks. Our abiding there is to be in holiness. This is the secret of everything in the Christian life: staying in the holy place. You remember how again and again this thought of continuance is brought before us in the Word of God. "And Daniel continued;" "Having obtained the help of God I continue;" "If ye continue in My Word then are ye My disciples;" "Continue instant in prayer." All through there is this exhortation to continuance. It is of no use to remain a Christian for fifteen or twenty years merely; we ought to bring forth fruit in old age. We want to continue in the House of the Lord. Many a man makes shipwreck of his usefulness through not abiding in Christ. It is awfully possible for a man after fifteen or twenty years to backslide and do a great deal of damage to the cause of Christ.

The next verse (4) takes us back a step to the Divine requirement. Here we have four things concerning the man who can stand. "He that hath clean hands"—then a man's outward life must be right; there must be nothing in our conduct that cannot stand the test of God, but continuance and reality in all our outward conduct. Then the inward side: "A pure heart." What is meant by the heart in Scripture? It comprises the mind, feelings, and will. It is the very centre and core of the moral being. There is no contrast in Scripture between the mind and heart. Now the Psalmist goes on again with the inward: "Who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity." Sometimes you find references to the lifting up of the eye and voice, but here it is the lifting up of the soul, which means the outgoing of all that is deepest within us. Is it possible for the hearts and souls of Christians to be occupied with unreality? I believe it is. There is a great deal of vanity which we ought to have out of our lives altogether. If you want to see the contrast look at the first verse of the following Psalm: "Unto Thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul." It means that in the very deepest part of our being there should be—God. Then there comes again the outward: "Nor sworn deceitfully"—genuine truthfulness, the absence of exaggeration.

This is the man, then, whom God requires, who is to stand in His holy place. You say, "But is not this standard impossible?" Look at the next verse, and you have the Divine provision: "He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his salvation." This gives the means whereby his hands may be clean and his heart pure. The blessing here mentioned is righteousness. The word righteousness includes justification and sanctification, and when we receive this blessing we are able to ascend into the holy place. So we want to think of the Lord as our righteousness.

We started with the divine purpose, passed on to consider the divine requirement, then the divine provision, and now we come to the human response. Really and truly Christianity may be summed up in seeking the face of God, which means seeking His presence, turning toward Him in prayer and self-surrender. Our growth and progress will be in exact proportion to our seeking His face. Whether Christ abides daily in our hearts will depend upon our daily seeking the face of God. The secret is: "Take time to be holy;" "Thy face, Lord, will I seek."

*The Inner Meaning of the Cross.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER.

You will remember that last night I spoke of certain things in our lives that must be dealt with so far as our will is concerned. I do not wish you to infer that it was possible for you to rid yourselves by one act of some attachment or fascination which has clung to you through life. All that God asks of the soul is that it should be willing, and directly it puts the ounce-weight of its willinghood to be made willing upon God's side, then God works in it to will and to do. You come then to this point—the illumination of Christ's light has fallen upon something in your life which you feel is not the best. You are willing to surrender it, or you are willing to be made willing to surrender it, and you look to God, who has initiated the process, to work through your life, to absolutely deliver you from the power of this thing.

But now I am compelled to take you a deeper step. And it is a remarkable thing that, whereas on earth you climb up by steps to the throne, in the eternal kingdom you have to climb down. God's thrones are reached by going downstairs; and it is the man who can go down most absolutely who sits with Christ on the right and left of His throne.

CAUSES OF FAILURE.

Now, why is it, since you are willing to relinquish these things, that your life is so full of failure? You remember what our Lord said to Peter, "Thou canst not follow Me now." Christ says to some of you, "Thou canst not." You have got the fairest ideal of Christ that ever smote the eye of man. But perpetually as you have gone down from this tent you have failed. Christ stands face to face with you to-day and says: "You cannot follow Me now."

Surely, it becomes you to look your Master in the face, and ask, "Why is it that I cannot? Where is the source of this incessant failure? Perhaps I do not pray enough? Perhaps I do not spend long enough with my Bible? Perhaps I do not watch enough?" No; it is something deeper than anything yet. And Christ says, "Thou canst not follow Me now, but thou shalt follow Me afterwards." After what? After the Cross. "When you, Peter, have learned what the inner meaning of the Cross is, then you will be able to follow Me."

The Cross and Pentecost must come to you and to me. Peter did not do what he said, because there was so much Peter in it. Peter's "I," strong reliance upon himself, had to come to the Cross of Christ, and so only after he had drunk into the very depth of the consequences of the death of Jesus Christ did he write the First Epistle of Peter, in which he tells us how, through subjection to the will of God, we are able to bear the fiery trial.

Someone came up to me to-day and, with an air of great complacency, told me what was the result of my talk last night in his life. Directly I saw that gleam of satisfaction in that man's face, I knew that his act of last night was ministering to something deeper than he realises. You have been dealing with things—I am glad of it; you have been dealing with fruits—I am glad of it. But before you and I can enter into the fulness of the blessed life, we must be made aware of something deeper than the act or the word or the habit; and we must bring that something to the Cross of Jesus Christ, and know that we are crucified with Him.

OVERCOMING THE SELF-LIFE.

The trouble with you and me is that we do good things from the self standpoint. We do things, and we think they are good, without realising that they are vitiated by the motive that prompts us in the doing. In other words, we have got to understand what the flesh is. As the centre letter of "sin" is "I," so, deep down in you and me, there is this constant assertion of "I." I am not saying a word against our personality, that which makes up our nature, but there is something deeper. Christian ministers, how much is just done from the pivot of self-life? We prepare our sermons that they may attract attention, or, at least, if we do not prepare them with that object, we are very glad if they do attract attention. We consecrate ourselves to God, again and again, in the energy of the self-life. We try, first, to justify ourselves from the self-life; then we try to sanctify ourselves by the self-life; then we try to work for God by the self-life. Then we come to Keswick, get the impulse of Keswick, and say, "Now I'm going to live a Keswick life;" and we have failed within twenty-four hours! My friends, we never will get right until we have learned the inner meaning of the cross of Jesus Christ.

HE EMPTIED HIMSELF.

Of course you believe in the Cross as the means of your justification; but I want you to look at the Cross from our Lord's standpoint. Of Him it was said: "He emptied Himself." What does that emptying mean? This, that when our Lord Jesus Christ came into our world, He gave up His own plan to live on the Father's plan—spoke not His own words, but the Father's; did not His own works, but the Father's; never, in any way, made Himself the origin and fountain of His acts, but became the emptied channel through which God poured Himself. Following His Father's will, step by step, He passed through the first year of popularity, then the second year of loneliness, then the third year that came nearer and nearer the Cross.

It seems as if He went round after round, down lower and lower. He humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross, giving up His own thought, His own purpose, His own will, everything to follow absolutely the will of God—"Not My will, but Thine be done"—and, at last, breathed out His life in obedience to that same will. I hear Him sing to Himself, in an undertone, as He goes down: "Thou wilt not leave My soul in Hades, nor suffer Thine Holy One to see corruption."

THE ONLY SOURCE OF VICTORY.

Out of that, God raised Him. And Paul says, "I am crucified with Christ." Deep down in you there is the strong ego. You are a strong man. You say, "I am going to live a good life, I am going to be a consecrated man. I am going to give up betting, I am going to give up drinking, I am going to abandon that habit; I will." You will never do it that way, never; but it is when you are willing to see yourself and your own energy—your good self, as well as your bad self, brought to an end on the Cross of Jesus—not your human nature, not your personality, but that strong will power, that ego.

* Address in Skiddaw Street Tent, July 22.

In this moment I summon you to come up to the Cross of Jesus, as He hangs there not only as a substitute, but as one that has come to the end of self; and I want you to see your self-life nailed there and say: "My God, I thank Thee that I am there, in Christ, and I want to stop there, My energy, my self-centred power to be a good man, to do good work in the world—I surrender it. I now thank Thee, as I see myself there; and I desire that this should be a living experience with me. I see myself crucified in Jesus." Will you take the cross of shame to-day? And will you let God as much raise you from the dead as He raised Christ?

I just want you to see the helpless Christ, by following God's will, reduced to absolute impotence. Son of God, Maker of worlds, able to roll thunderbolts, the Eternal who holds the waters in the hollow of His hand—see Him reduced to absolute impotence! Are you willing to come down to that, so far as your own resolutions and strength of purpose go?

RAISED FROM THE DEAD.

On the morning of the Resurrection, God, the Holy Ghost He spoke about, raises Him from the dead; and He comes forth and says: "All power is given unto Me, in heaven and upon earth." O all regnant Christ of God, regnant over evil and over the devil, to whom all worlds are subject, I see that it is only through the absolute impotence of death that I can share Thine eternal victory! I pass through it. "Why cannot I follow Thee now?" Not now, not until you know what death is; then God, through your yielded, impotent, helpless nature, God will do what you have been trying to do all your life, and have failed to do.

That is resurrection. Now bring your good self. I am talking about the white devil of your good resolutions. "Jesus, I am such a helpless, broken man. I have tried and tried and tried to follow Thee; but Thou art marching on so quickly, and I am left behind, and I am dropping into this quagmire. Wilt Thou stop?" And He turns and looks at you, and He asks, "Can you drink of My cup, and be baptized with My baptism?" You say, "Lord, I am not able, but I am willing. Carry me through it." And when you have got to the end of yourself—Oh, it is such a wonderful life. I do not think any man can describe it to another. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived what God has prepared for us; but you may enter into it.

UNSEEN BUT ALL POWERFUL.

In my congregation I have a girl employed in a coffee shop, earning, I suppose, about ten shillings a week. She dresses very poorly and simply. When talking to me the other day she said: "I went to Keswick three years ago, and I heard something in the Tent. It was about not trying any more, but letting Jesus do it all. And," she said, "I did want to tell somebody. I have a girl friend, but she was not there. As soon as I got outside the Tent, I said: 'Oh! I wish she was here, that we might start a talk.' And someone said: 'I'm here.' I said, 'Who is this?' And the answer was: 'I am the risen Christ, I'm here; come and talk to Me.'"

"I began to talk to Him," she added; "and He talked back, and I have talked to Him, day and night, for three years. We talk about everything. I have not anybody else to talk to, so I talk to Him. I have to stop them playing for money, and they used to fly out at me when I went to them. But now when I go to them I do not try to do anything, I say, 'Lord Jesus, you and I have got to do it; you had better do it.' Since I started doing that I have no trouble at all." Brothers and sisters, do you not see it? Come to an end of yourself in Christian work and in your resolutions. Seeing yourself nailed to that Cross with the impotent Christ, accept it as your blessed lot. Then lie at His feet and let the Risen Christ do everything in you and through you, everything you have been trying to do yourself.

*Disappointing God.

By Rev. J. GREGORY MANTLE.

"They profaned My holy name . . . I had pity for Mine holy name . . . I will sanctify My great name . . . I will increase them with men like a flock" (Ezek. xxxvi. 20, 21, 23, 37).

I have never been able to read this chapter, carefully and thoughtfully, without feeling that there is something infinitely pathetic in it. It is the wail of a disappointed God—a God whose purposes of grace have been frustrated by His own people. It is scarcely necessary for me to remind you of the position of the people of God when these prophetic words were uttered. They were where God meant them to be, where He had placed them, in a land upon which the eyes of God always were. He had gathered them to His heart and revealed to them His will, made them a people for His own possession, that through them the nations around them in the shadow of death, might be brought to know something of the excellency of Him who had called them from darkness into His marvellous light. The only way by which they could know anything of the character of God was through the people of God, to whom He had committed His law while the rest of the world was in darkness. They held the land and the privileges He gave to them on certain conditions: "If ye are willing and obedient ye shall eat the good of the land." You remember how utterly they disappointed God. "Son of man, when the house of Israel dwelt in their own land they defiled it by their own way, and by their doings" (17). And when we take a certain attitude toward God, yield ourselves up to Him, and then go back from that position, putting our hand to the plough and looking back, we tempt people who are watching us to say: "God is not able to keep them."

PROFESSION AND PRACTICE.

Let us take one of the figures which fell from the lips of Christ to illustrate what I mean. You remember He said to a little company of disciples: "Ye are the salt of the earth." The Jewish people had been unfaithful to their trust. "Salt is good; but if the salt has lost its savour wherewith shall it be salted?" When Jesus Christ uttered these words the Jewish nation was tottering to its fall, and was shortly afterwards swept out into the world by the Roman Empire. What can savourless salt do? We may keep up the old profession and be diligent in religious worship and work, and yet the salt may have lost its savour, and Jesus says it is then fit for nothing except to be cast out; and if I read the recent Church Census aright it is that the world is casting out savourless salt. If the Church of Christ were what God meant her to be we should have a very different set of figures.

REVIVALS IN INDIA.

It came home to me again and again during my visit to India and Burmah, that when the Church of Christ loses her seasoning power she fails to influence the world. We need to pray to-day, "Lord, sanctify Thy people." We pray for the world most effectively when we plead for the sanctification of God's people. Both in India and Burmah I came into the presence of movements of the Spirit of God. I was conscious of that indescribable atmosphere which only the Spirit of God can produce. At one gathering the people were drawn from a hundred villages. The first thing I heard at Rangoon was that there was a prayer circle—the outcome of last year's convention. Between this remarkable manifestation of the Spirit of God and the prayer circle there was a wonderful connection; and now there are hundreds of Karens waiting for baptism. They told me how in the great reality of their repentance they had banished the hogs from their villages lest they should be tempted to return to their heathen feasts. So it was everywhere. The revivals began with the people of God, and any revival in this country must begin with us. My message to you is: Don't pray simply, "Lord pour out Thy Spirit on all flesh," but "Fill me with Thy Spirit." Then you will know a greater power in your ministry of intercession.

* Address in Skiddaw Street Tent, July 24.

WORLDLINESS IN THE CHURCHES.

"I had pity for Mine holy name." Are we affected by these words? Have we infinite sorrow in our hearts because of the worldliness in the churches to-day? We have nothing to fear more than the spirit of the world coming into our churches. When the spirit of the world comes in the Spirit of the Lord goes out. O for more pity with Jesus Christ over His profaned Name!

If the man who went through the city and put a mark upon the foreheads of those who sorrowed for the abominations in the land went through this tent to-night, how many of us would bear the mark? Are we among those who sorrow for the way His Name is dishonoured? I have not so much fear of the foe without as I have of the imperfect expression of the love of Jesus Christ by those who bear His Name. God give us to sigh and cry over the dishonour brought upon His Name. As someone has said: "When the man made the mark he took the measure for a crown"; for if we suffer with Him we shall reign with Him. "From all your idols will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh and I will give you a heart of flesh, and I will put My Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in My statutes, and ye shall keep My judgments and do them."

It is a wonderful programme. How is it to be realised? "I will cause you to walk," etc. The infinite power God has placed within our reach—the gift of the Holy Spirit! Take this wonderful "I will," put your own name in, and ask God in faith to fulfil the good pleasure of His will in you.

*The Demands of Christ.

By Rev. EDWARD ISAAC.

The Apostle Paul and his brother apostles again and again refer to themselves as bondservants (slaves) of Jesus Christ. They gloried in the term as in some special distinction. In order to understand what they meant, we have to think ourselves back into the times in which they lived. The slaves of those days were accounted the mere goods and chattels of their masters. Legal rights they had none; their own wills were theirs only to use in the service of those who had bought them, and to fulfil the slightest whim and desire of their tyrannical owners. The apostles' perpetual boast is that they are the bondservants of their Heavenly Master, that He is the absolute Owner and Sovereign Disposer of their lives. Has this truth entered the depths of our being, penetrating character and conduct, or is it an axiom, acknowledged by the understanding, but nothing more?

It will help us in considering this subject if we turn to Titus ii. 9, where the Apostle, in giving instructions to Titus as to how converted slaves ought to act towards their masters, says, "Exhort servants to be obedient to their own masters." We remember the memorable words of Mary, the mother of our Lord: "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." He claims a surrender all inclusive, a love all absorbing, a trust all confiding. At every moment, and in everything, He expects instant, implicit, and unquestioning obedience, ever putting our own wills on His side. "And to please them well in all things." Wouldst thou have an ambition worthy of a redeemed spirit, let this be the ruling passion—to be ever wreathing with smiles that face which once was shadowed with sorrow for thee; to be ever sending fresh thrills of complacent joy through that heart that once broke under the weight of thy sin's black load; to be for ever pressing the chalice filled with the sweet ingredients of thy loving worship and service to the lips that once were scorched by the blistering sun and swollen by the rough blows of the cruel soldiery.

THE FREEDOM OF SLAVERY.

What a holy independence this will impart to the man who realizes he is a bondservant of Jesus Christ. "One is your Master, even

* Address in Eskin Street Tent, July 23.

Christ." This will banish all feverish fret or fear. Then I shall not go about wondering if I have pleased so and so, or incurred the displeasure of somebody else; my one thought will be, have I pleased Him? And if we have that testimony, as Enoch had, it will be enough. "Wherefore we make it our aim (marg., are ambitious) that whether at home or abroad, we may be well-pleasing unto Him." The secret of the power to live this slave-life of glorious freedom comes from Him who is the Life of our life, as well as the Monarch of our heart's throne.

"Not answering again." If we cannot tolerate servants that are given to the habit of "answering again," how much more intolerable must it be to God? His word is to be final and conclusive. "Lord, I will follow Thee, but"—that is answering again. Not for one moment will He allow anything or anyone to assert claims in competition with His. He will fill every angle of the soul's vision; He will possess every atom of the soul's love; that in all things He might have the pre-eminence. This slavery includes everything from centre to circumference, "bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ" (2 Cor. x. 5). May every impulse and ambition become charged with the one strong, over-mastering ambition to please our Master well, not in some things only, but in all things. May all the "buts" be swept out of our lives, and may we follow Him with a love that knows no waning, a faith that knows no reserve of unbelief, and an obedience that knows no hesitation."

"Not purloining, but showing all good fidelity." We have no right to appropriate any part of the blood-purchase. It would seem to us passing strange if we purchased certain goods, and only a portion of them were sent home. How much of us has the Lord purchased? All. Well, how much has gone home to the Buyer? He is saying to us, Have I not a right to do as I will with mine own? A full and unreserved consecration is showing all good fidelity in the practical acknowledgment of this right. The Apostle does not say, "Ye ought not, or it would be better after all not to be your own." There is nothing optional about it, but the plain statement of fact, "Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price."

There is no bondage like the bondage of being our own; there is no liberty like the liberty of being the bondservant of Emmanuel. The central idea of the word "serve" in Scripture is worship, and we serve truly in proportion as we worship, and we worship only as we serve. My Lord's unlimited government of me is my highest freedom. "I love my Master, I will not go out free," for there is no freedom away from Him.

Mission Testimonies.

Tuesday afternoon (July 21) in the Eskin Street Tent was devoted to Mission Addresses —accounts from those who have proved God in the foreign field. Rev. J. J. Luce presided, and opened the proceedings with a few hearty words.

THE STUDENT MOVEMENT.

Mr. Oldham, of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, gave an account of the Student Movement throughout the world. He told a story full of encouragement to all engaged in testimony for Christ. Beginning with the opportunity of the work, he mentioned first of all the future influence of the student class. The chief positions of responsibility among men are filled with such as once were students; and moreover, the period of college course is the most formative time of life. On entering college, the student is open to outside influences; and when he leaves he has generally become what he will be. Students can best be reached by their fellow-students, who know them.

As to the growth of this movement, Mr. Oldham said: Go to any university or large college, and you will find a Christian union, and these are linked in a national movement; there are unions in Continental countries, America, and elsewhere, and all are linked in a federation. The movement is full of life, and power, and momentum with its 80,000 members. It has channels open for the flow of spiritual life, so that the best of one college becomes the blessing of all. Students of different faculties, colleges, denominations, are combined, their outlook enlarged, and their usefulness enhanced. The progress in Australasia, as reported by Mr. J. R. Mott, was rehearsed as typical. The movement there has impressed the best life of the population.

The great aim is to bring students into living contact with Christ as Saviour and Lord, and God has given great blessing upon the work. Mr. Mott has been used of God to bring thousands of students to Christ. A feature of great importance is the Bible study; and in view of the unsettling tendencies of our time, a patient, methodical, and devotional study of God's Word, such as is promoted, cannot fail to be influential in a high degree.

Then there is missionary study. Men who have grasped world-wide ideas in other respects are content to be ignorant as to the universal Gospel—ignorant of the principles and facts of missions. The movement seeks to counteract this. Among the Union members are many who have undertaken, should God open the way, to become missionaries, and the Union binds them together in the prospect of such service. From this country alone nearly a thousand such have reached the foreign field.

The power of the Student Union is that it deals with individuals, making an appeal like this:—Do you count the knowledge of Christ as your chief possession? Are you satisfied that God can do most by your life at home? Does not God wish you to serve Him in the foreign mission field? "The evangelization of the world in this generation," the motto of the movement, has been much criticised; but it is a constant reminder that evangelization is the primary duty of Christians and the passion of the Saviour's heart. "In this generation" is not a prediction, but a summons to work, because we in our day are responsible to those who are now alive; our children cannot do that which we neglect. In conclusion, Mr. Oldham spoke of the place of prayer in the work, and asked his hearers to remember it at the throne of grace; at the same time he appealed to young men present to consider their relation to God and His work in the world.

GOOD NEWS FROM JAPAN.

Rev. Barclay Buxton remarked that a full salvation meets a definite need in the mission field. The missionary has deep joys and sorrows. He works in a good deal of loneliness, and defeat and failure mean deep heart sorrow. Some of the keenest sorrows of my life, he said, have come in such circumstances. It is good to find God enough in lonely times, in time of danger, in travelling and amid the inconveniences of life. The Gospel of forgiveness of sin and enduement of the Holy Ghost is a Gospel for the heathen. Young men come and ask if there is any way of power to live a pure life; they know they are on the brink of a precipice, and want deliverance. One such, and an earnest Christian, saw in the Word of God a promise of something he had not got. He worked his way to America and sought and found a full salvation under David, the Tamil evangelist. He has been greatly used of God, and is constantly seeing souls brought to Christ.

Another man, than whom I know of none living more nearly to God, goes to the mountains in frost and snow to plead with God in prayer. He is a power for God in Japan. When he has spoken of Jesus our hearts have been melted, and natives have listened with astonishment to words from anointed lips and heart full of love. One brother was given to us in answer to prayer for an interpreter for Mr. Wilkes; he was a Christian, but not sanctified. Having heard the truth regarding full salvation, he, with others, went to their lodging, and they pleaded with God, who led them to Luke xiv. regarding the conditions of discipleship, "If any man hate not father and mother, &c." God's kingdom and affairs must be put first. They yielded. The other conditions, "forsaking all," and "taking up the cross," imposed a tremendous test; it cut down to the very centre of their hearts. In the course of the night, however, they yielded to God; and without delay God blessed them. They came to the meeting next day as men that had met with God; the power of God fell, and the meeting that should have closed about 11.30 a.m. went on till six o'clock at night, when it ended in order that the Gospel might be preached to the heathen. God blesses those who wait before Him.

The man last mentioned has been greatly owned of God. His theatre preaching has been the means of bringing many to Christ. People go to Japan to see wonderful sights; but a "penitent form" in a theatre in Japan is certainly a marvellous sight. It has been seen many a time. Men are preaching the Gospel in Japan with as much power to reveal God as any evangelists in England. God does among the heathen abundantly, beyond what is asked or thought. The brother in question has composed hymns which have been sung up and down the land, and have reached many hearts. In fact they have been a great blessing to the Church, and led to many souls coming to Christ, very much like those of Mr. Sankey in England.

Great good has come also from conventions on a small scale held in various towns up and down the land. At the end of one convention, in 1897, several rose simultaneously to tell what God had done for them. Among the missionaries, conventions in English have been held; two or three or five or six have appealed for me to see them, that testimony might be given as to the power of God. At Kobe, in 1895, the words of Mr. Hudson Taylor were greatly blessed. Mr. Buxton told the story of the Japanese revival of a few years ago, a work which has stood, and the results of which are apparent to-day. In conclusion, he explained that "it is not all hallelujah" in Japan. Though thanking God for what has been done, the missionaries cry for more and greater things to be seen in the land.

Evangelistic Services.

The evangelistic work in connection with the Convention was once again in the hands of Mr. W. R. Lane, whose labours in this direction on former occasions have been so signally owned and used of God. Punctually at 8.30 each evening Mr. Lane took his stand on an improvised platform in the Market Square, and, accompanied by a number of workers, conducted a simple Gospel service. In spite of many distractions, the earnest attention of crowds of passers-by was secured, and as words of hearty testimony and exhortation from Christian friends alternated with Gospel song, many were drawn to listen to the message proclaimed.

By this means hundreds were reached who would remain untouched by the Convention meetings. On the second Lord's Day Mr. Lane conducted two services in the Eskin Street Tent, which was nearly filled on each occasion. In the afternoon he gave a striking address on "A Breathless Religion"—a religion without God or any semblance of life. At the evening service he expounded in an impressive manner the healing of the woman with an issue of blood (Luke viii.), emphasizing the deep faith which prompted the touching of the Saviour's garment. At the close, some of the results of the open-air meetings of the week and the services of the Sabbath were gathered, quite a number of anxious souls being dealt with and pointed to Christ. Miss Lizzie Frost greatly helped the evangelistic efforts by her sacred solos.

Our Daily Tasks.—Duty forbids you and me to spend all our time in meditations, however profitable, or in psalm-singing, however sweet. There is too much work to be done, there are too many battles to be fought, too many crosses to be borne, too many trials to be endured. Spiritual frames should not unfit us for practical duties, but the hours on the mountain tops should fit us all the more for the humbler valleys of everyday life. We can have our Master with us all the time—in our common rounds and daily tasks. And the lowly valleys in which we do our work and meet our friends and business associates, ought to be just as verdant and well-watered as those mountain tops where we "see no man save Jesus only."—Dr. Cuyler.

The Wesleyan Conference.

THE closing days of the Wesleyan Conference were largely occupied by the arrangements concerning the appointments of the ministers in the 777 circuits of the Connexion in Great Britain; by the ordination of thirty-six young ministers who had already given abundant proof of their fitness for the work of the ministry; and by the solemn obituary service, in which "the roll of the honoured dead" is called, and testimony is borne by surviving brethren to the lessons of their life and work.

The Stationing of Ministers was not completed until the last day of the Conference. As may easily be understood, it is a work requiring great patience and wisdom suitably to arrange the appointments of some 700 ministers who are changing circuits. The invitations given by circuits to ministers prior to the Conference are usually followed by the appointment of the ministers thus invited, and the choice of pastors by the people is, as a rule, recognized by the Conference. But the authority of the Conference is absolute, and where more important considerations prevail invitations are set aside, and the circuits must accept the ministers whom the Conference, in the exercise of its discretion, appoints.

The staff of the West London Mission is strengthened by the appointment of Rev. H. Howard May, whose success in filling the Albert Hall, Sheffield, with hearers, many of them drawn from the non-worshipping classes, and experience as a Connexional evangelist, eminently fit him for mission work. The ranks of the Connexional evangelists receive a recruit in the person of Rev. Peter Welsch, who has had considerable success in soul winning. The hands of Rev. Samuel F. Collier, the superintendent of the ever-extending operations of the Manchester Mission, are strengthened by the appointment of Rev. George McNeill, a former colleague, who has done good work recently in Leicester. The business of "stationing" was at length completed, though not without the sudden transposition of a brother from the St. Just circuit, near Land's End, to the Shetland Isles. A Methodist preacher must needs learn to go where he is sent!

MINISTERIAL FIDELITY.

The ordination service, in which thirty-six young ministers were solemnly set apart for the work of the ministry, was held in St. Mary's Chapel, Truro. The President of the Conference conducted the service, and was joined in "the laying on of hands" by venerable ex-presidents like Revs. Joseph Bush and Richard Roberts, by Drs. Allen and Stephenson, and by several brethen whose sons were among those to be ordained. The Ordination Charge, delivered by the ex-president, Dr. J. Shaw Banks, was a powerful and impressive appeal for ministerial fidelity. Dr. Banks took as his text, "Well done! Good and faithful servant." Addressing the candidates for ordination, he said that in one sense their probation was at an end, but in another and higher sense it was beginning. They would not need to relax in watchfulness, diligence, and prayer, but rather increase in all the graces which would qualify them for a successful ministry. Among all the parables of our Lord there was none that deserved to be more closely laid to heart by the Christian minister than the parable of the talents. All Christians are servants and accountable to God for the gifts and responsibility of life. But ministers of Christ are servants in a special sense—servants by Divine call and consecration. The highest grace of a servant is to be faithful. The grace of fidelity covers the entire field of Christian and ministerial duty.

THE PLACE OF PREACHING.

Dr. Banks urged his young brethren to set before themselves the highest ideals. It was far better to fall short in aiming at the highest than to succeed in striving after the lowest. He appealed to them as preachers. He need hardly remind them that it was especially the preaching of the Word that their Church had put first. It was by the preaching of the Word that their Church had accomplished all the good it had succeeded in doing in the world. Their prayers, reading, and observation should all have for them one aim, to prove themselves capable and faithful preachers of God's Word. The ex-President dwelt upon the essential and experimental truths which must be put foremost in their teaching. He warned his young brethren against the practice of reading their sermons. He had faith in the free and unfettered proclamation of the saving truth of God. They should covet the inspiration that only came from the grasp of their own spirit and intellect by the great truths of Jesus. Dr. Banks uttered a word of warning against the depreciation of doctrinal preaching in favour of ethical teaching. Some people seemed to imagine that Christian ethics were something plainer and simpler than Christian theology. There were plain and obvious truths both in the field of ethics and theology, but there were difficulties and mysteries as great in ethics as in theology.

Referring to their work as pastors, Dr. Banks said they knew that it was part of Christ's charge to them to be the shepherds of His people. The one rule a minister of Christ should follow was to go to those who needed Him, to those who need Him most, without distinction of rich or poor. They must find out those who were oppressed and crushed by the burdens of life. They should be known as the pastors of the sick, the needy, and the young. In closing an eminently practical appeal, Dr. Banks said the higher their aim and the greater their earnestness in pursuing it, the more would they be visited with thoughts of self-reproach and condemnation. Only he who aimed at low things would indulge in self-complacency. They must remember that as they were not their own masters, so they were not their own judges. One wiser, more loving, more gentle than any of us can ever be, will judge their life and work, and to all faithful servants He will not fail to give a great reward—to speak a great Well done!

FALLEN ON THE FIELD.

The obituary service was a time of solemn heart-searching and admonition. Thirty-seven ministers had died during the year in Great Britain, two in Ireland, and eight in the foreign field. The three outstanding names were those of three ex-presidents of the Conference, brethren highly honoured and useful in different ways—Dr. William Burt Pope, a saintly theologian; Dr. Walford Green, eminent as an administrator and as the friend of the aged ministers; and Hugh Price Hughes, whose name was a household word in all the churches. Many beautiful tributes were paid to the character and work of Mr. Hughes. Rev. W. D. Walters spoke of his intense spirituality, and gave an illustration of his patient and successful personal dealing with a young man with intellectual difficulties, who has since become a preacher of the Gospel. Rev. W. E. Sellers said Mr. Hughes's death was the greatest loss the Methodist Church had suffered since the death of Wesley himself. His prayers in the family would never be forgotten. He lived the truths he preached with a growing beauty and simplicity. Mr. Hughes was a great fighter. He said strong things, but he thought tender thoughts. His rapier thrust was keen, but the conflict over he felt nothing but tenderness for his foe. Rev. William Bradfield thought Mr. Hughes's greatest service was to teach the world how sublime Christianity was in its application to the affairs of the world. Dr. Stephenson spoke of Mr. Hughes as a great soul-winner; and Dr. Rigg referred to his chivalrous disposition and fervour of spirit.

As the President pointed out, the good and faithful work of the lesser known brethren had not perished, though, perhaps, nobody talked about it. Their record was in the foundations of the City of God.

The intimation of Rev. W. L. Watkinson's intention to retire from the responsible position of Connexional Editor at the Conference of 1904, necessitated the appointment of a successor to this gifted preacher and author. Four brethren were nominated, and Dr. Davison, the theological tutor at Handsworth, one of Methodism's foremost scholars, was appointed.

THE WORK OF GOD.

The conversation on the work of God in the Pastoral Session gave rise to several important contributions. Rev. Joseph Nettleton urged the importance of well-organized open-air services among the great crowds who gathered in the summer at watering places. He told of good work done among the thousands who strolled on the sands at Margate. Dr. H. J. Pope impressed upon his brethren the need of strong leadership in aggressive movements in the circuits. Rev. W. Hudson Smith, widely known as a successful evangelist, thought their work was hindered by the itinerant system which prevented continuity of leadership, and by their too narrow basis of membership.

CULTURE AND EVANGELISM.

Rev. J. G. Tasker spoke some helpful words to his younger brethren as to meeting the intellectual difficulties of their hearers. They were told by Mr. Charles Booth that Methodists trusted to emotions to lift sinners out of their sins to God. His answer was they did not trust to emotions, but the will could never be stirred to lay hold on Christ without emotion. They must never allow the idea that the increase of culture meant the decrease of evangelism. There were certain methods of referring to the Higher Criticism, he thought, that put stumbling blocks in the way of inquirers. He believed that every sermon that opened out the depths of Christian experience to a congregation, was a means of help to those who were troubled with intellectual doubts. He believed there were many in their congregations longing for the light. They wanted to see what spiritual experience meant, and they read books that were helpful to a certain point, but when science stopped short, then the Christian preacher must speak, and tell what the Holy Ghost could do in those regions where psychology failed.

Rev. James Feather called the attention of the Conference to a serious subject—the spread of rationalistic literature in the land. Of one book of the kind thirty thousand copies had been sold. There were eight or nine such publications issued in cheap form by men whose names counted for much in the scientific world. One effect of this literature, which was getting into the hands of their working men and their thinking men, was that many were keeping steadily away from the house of God, and were hiding themselves behind some of these great names. Many of their young people were being affected by this moral malaria. He trusted the commission for London which they had agreed to appoint would take into consideration not only the Daily News census of attendance at public worship, but would inquire what effect the literature he referred to was having upon their young people.

Rev. Nehemiah Curnock presented the report of the committee, to which has been entrusted the work of preparing a new Hymn and Tune Book. He informed the Conference that 700 hymns in the present Wesleyan Hymn Book will be retained in the new book, and 300 hymns would be added from other sources. The book will probably be ready for issue next summer.

The importance of the class-meeting was emphasized by the adoption of a resolution that, in order to promote the training and equipment of class leaders and to increase the efficiency of the class-meeting, the Conference directed the formation of a Connexional Committee, and of committees in every district.

The Fernley lecture was this year delivered by Dr. Sutherland, a Canadian representative, who treated the subject of "Methodism in Canada," in eloquent and graphic fashion. The story of the pioneer days was one of heroic endeavour, and many privations. In the second part of the lecture, Dr. Sutherland traced the stages by which Methodist Reunion became an accomplished fact in Canada. There is now a united Canadian Methodist Church, stretching from ocean to ocean, exercising an undoubted power for good in the Dominion. May this be a prophecy of the reunion of the Methodist churches at home!

Home Mission Week.

"IN PERIL ON THE SEA."

Hymn: Sacred Songs and Solos, No. 630.

THIS week, when no doubt many of you are at the seaside, you may be interested in hearing about the work of the Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. Some of you perhaps are already connected with this Society, and are lending a hand in its excellent work.

Do you watch the fishermen returning home, and have you ever helped them to pull their boats up the beach? I have seen children doing this, and, as they tugged at the strong rope, they looked so important, though in reality it was the fishermen's burly arms that drew the boat along!

Our seaside visits, however, only give us an idea of the "fair weather" life of a fisherman. There are days when the thunderclouds gather, and the sea is a swirl of waters, and even the bravest man holds his breath! There are days when the warmth and gladness of summer give place to the piercing cold and gloom of winter. What of the fishermen then, far out on the seething waters, away from home and friends? What of the fishermen's wives and children, as they watch the tempest, and tremble as they think of their loved ones facing danger and perhaps death? How earnestly they would join in the hymn—

> Eternal Father, strong to save,
> Whose arm hath bound the restless wave,
> Who bid'st the mighty ocean deep
> Its own appointed limits keep;
> Oh hear us when we cry to Thee
> For those in peril on the sea!

Well may we be proud of our brave, stalwart fishermen, who possess much of the spirit of the hardy Vikings of olden times. The life they lead is one full of peril and hardship, which renders it all the more urgent that they should carry with them the knowledge that He who holds the waters in the hollow of His hand, is also their Friend and Guide, and will be with them in life or death,

For twenty-one years the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen has been working, summer and winter, day and night, among the great permanent trawling fleets; first with the North Sea trawlers, and then embracing Labrador and the Continental ports where British fishermen labour.

There are no churches, institutes, or shops out on the seas, though each fleet represents the population of a small town. The vessels sent out by the Mission have therefore to serve the purposes of all these if they are to do permanent service. The need of Christian influence is as great as on land, especially during the times when calms prevail, and there are no fish to be caught. Then the fishermen are exposed to fierce temptation without any of the restraints of shore life. For such moments, the Mission vessels (which remain all the year round with the trawling fleets) organize meetings, distribute good and interesting literature, and teach the men innocent games.

These Mission vessels are also the hospitals of the fleet, and the following letter from a fisherman will show how much this branch of the work is appreciated:—

> No wonder the chaps is thankful for the Mission ships. It was bad times with many of us in the old days, and I can tell you of a turn I had once. We had been towing the gear all night, with a strong wind, and we began to haul about six o'clock in the morning, and after four hours we got the gear alongside, and brought it up to the rail, when the wessel took a heavy lurch, and the bag rolled in and jammed me between the capstan and the trawl-head, breaking three of my ribs. As soon as they hauled the bag off, I crawled aft, and said to the skipper, "I shall die!" He said, "Oh, no, don't say that; we'll run home with you and let the doctor put you to rights." I was three days in that state. My agony was intense. I couldn't lie, and I couldn't get no rest nohow, until I got to Grimsby, where I was laid up for five weeks. There being no Mission wessel there I could get no help. If we could have reached one, I should soon have got eased of my pain, but there was no Mission wessel in those days.

How good it is to know that those old days are at an end and that the Mission is doing much to alleviate pain and to save the lives of many honest bread-winners. We must remember that accidents to the fishermen mean not only loss of health, but loss of wages, and loss of wages means starvation to the wives and children on shore.

Sometimes the poor fellows are too badly injured to be treated successfully even on the vessels, and arrangements have been made at the East London Hospital by which several beds are placed at the disposal of such. The men are cared for and visited by workers, and sent safely to their homes again, when well, and their fares paid if necessary.

The fisher lads are not forgotten. There are several thousands of them engaged in deep sea fishing. In many cases they have come from the workhouses, or from the lowest classes of society, so that even their start in life has been a bad one. Numbers have no relatives or friends, and the life they lead is a very hard one. To help them the Young Trawlers' Union was started, which consists of a band of earnest Christians on shore who are willing to assist these lonely lads by writing to them, sending them books and papers, and letting them feel that they have friends who are interested in their welfare. Many people can find time to write letters occasionally who cannot engage in more active service, and such tokens of friendship are appreciated by the recipients. I am sure the Secretary of the Mission (Bridge House, 181, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.) would be glad to receive books or magazines you no longer require, and cuffs and scarves for the bitter weather, which will be coming in a few months, will find hands and necks ready for them!

The work is not confined to the sea, but institutes have been opened on land for the benefit both of the fishermen and their families. I remember once attending a fishermen's service at a seaside town. It was a very novel experience. The men seemed to think they were still on the water, and their voices rose higher and higher as they spoke, and became louder and louder, as though they were shouting across the turbulent breakers! But what did it matter, for they were so thoroughly in earnest, and one could realize how these simple-minded, honest men would witness amongst their companions when far away from home and friends, and how they would tell others of the One who, walking by the Sea of Galilee, said to the fishermen gathered there: "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men." Paul's Tactfulness (1 Cor. ix. 15-23).

THERE never was a greater soul-winner than the Apostle Paul. It was the passion of his life to take men alive for Jesus Christ (2 Tim. ii. 25-26, R.V.). In his workshop he won Aquila and Priscilla as they sat together making tents; in prison he won his jailer; his first act in the streets of Philippi was to save a young girl. Put him on a great corn-ship, and he will win many among the passengers and crew; attach him to a Roman sentinel, and in a short time all Cæsar's palace will have become permeated by the message of the Gospel. It is probable that you and I could not have been in his company for more than a quarter of an hour without his trying to win us for the Saviour. From city to city, from country to country, from continent to continent, he sped with restless haste, that he might have fruit for Jesus Christ.

The man who among modern Christians makes me think most often of the Apostle in this respect will open little trap-doors in hansom cabs to speak to the drivers about their souls, will put his arm about the neck of railway porters and urge them to give themselves to Christ, and will pour out his heart to every man, woman, and child he meets. Not because of any legal compulsion or sense of duty, but because the Living Fountain is always rising up within him.

No one was stronger, or more resolute in his maintenance of the Truth of God where any essential point was in danger. On one occasion he withstood even the Apostle Peter for refusing to eat with the Gentiles (Gal. ii.), and his life was one long-suffering protest against the Judaizers, who desired to impose the ancient ritual upon recent converts. Where essentials were concerned, no one was more tenacious of the jots and tittles than Paul was. But in non-essentials he was quite prepared to make concessions if by doing so he could gain the confidence of those whose souls he desired to win for his Master. There is a striking illustration of this in Acts xxi., where he yielded to the persuasion of James and others, and subjected himself to the minor precepts of the Levitical law in respect to vows. He had long come to feel that the Temple was to be superseded by the Church, that the observance of vows and other enactments of the Levitical law must needs pass away before the full-orbed glory of the Day of Christ. If any had insisted upon these things as necessary to salvation, he would have protested to the full; but inasmuch as the point at issue was immaterial, he was quite willing to acquiesce, with a view to making his position in Jerusalem more tenable. When, therefore, he says that he became "all things to all men" that he might win some, it simply means that he was prepared to yield in non-essentials, and to adapt himself, as far as possible, without sacrificing principle. For us the lesson is, to touch men in as many points as possible, to manifest a sympathy with them in their special aims and tastes, and to go with them one, and even two, miles along the road if ultimately we can get them to give themselves to God. It is through alert human sympathies that we often succeed in winning men for God.

One of the points in which Paul was willing to make any concessions was as to the remuneration which he received for his Christian services. He insisted that he had a perfect right to receive pecuniary remuneration for his ministry, but he was desperately afraid lest in doing so he should rouse the prejudices of his hearers, and lead them to feel that he was actuated only by mercenary motives; and therefore he resolved that he would not use his right in the Gospel, but maintain himself by the work of his own hands.

In this way, as in many others, he was always endeavouring so to keep under his body and deny himself, that nothing might hinder him from being a "good minister of Jesus Christ," and that his good Master might never have to cast him away as a blunt or ineffective instrument. F. B. M.

David and Jonathan (1 Sam. xx. 12-23).

Golden Text—Prov. xviii. 24.

"SAUL saw and knew the Lord was with David," and became more and more afraid of him. "Michal, Saul's daughter, loved him" (xviii. 28, 29). David's life was in danger at Saul's hand many times. He was Divinely preserved. Found a true friend in the king's son, and a sacred covenant was made and renewed between Jonathan and David in the fear of God (xviii. 3, xx. 12, xxiii. 18). Faithfully kept (2 Sam. ix. 1).

The Friendship Formed.

Jonathan a generous-hearted valiant soldier. A true and loyal son. Heir-apparent to the throne of Israel. A godly young man of strong faith and unwavering trust in the guidance of God, saw in the simple shepherd lad a true-hearted sincerity in which he could trust; in the steady aim of the stripling's arm a valiant courage he could admire; in the modest bearing of Goliath's conqueror, a charm which won his heart. Soul knit to soul, and Jonathan adopted the country lad as his equal, his brother prince, even while he was telling the unvarnished story of his famous victory.

The Friendship Proved.

Jonathan made a covenant with David; robed him in his own princely garments; was neither envious nor jealous of his success; would not be used as a tool against him; warned David when danger threatened; stood by him in adversity; risked his father's anger for him; pleaded his cause before the king; spoke up for him in absence and disfavour.

Love is a powerful pleader (6); love knows no limit for work; love is not slow to speak words of comfort and truth (xx. 2, 4, 9, also Prov. xxvii. 6); love inspires courage and takes an injury done to a friend as to self (v. 34); love counts nothing a trouble (xx. 4); real love is not ashamed of tears (41); love rests firmly on mutual faith in God; love endures (Sol. S. viii. 7; 1 Cor. xiii. 8); love is best shown in spiritual help (xxiii. 16).

The Friendship Sealed.

Cemented by prayer (xviii. 3; xx. 13, 42), and sealed in the presence of the Lord as witness between them (23). Jonathan delighted in David (xix. 2).

The friendship of Jonathan and David a type.

1. The love of Jonathan went out to David first, then David loved him back (1 John iv. 9, 10).

2. Jonathan risked his life for his friend. Jesus gave His life for me (Gal. ii. 20).

3. Jonathan promised to help David, shielded and interceded for him (Heb. iv. 16).

4. Jonathan was willing for David to sit on his throne (Rev. iii. 21).

5. Jonathan revealed to David his secret plans (Psa. xxv. 14).

6. Told David how his father felt towards him (John xvii. 26).

7. The love of Jonathan and David knew no end or change (Heb. xiii. 8).

8. Jonathan gave his princely robes and his armour (Rev. vii. 14; Eph. vi. 11).

9. Jonathan made a covenant with David (Heb. viii. 10).

Jonathan and David were alike in some characteristics—courage, unselfishness, candour, affection, sympathy, fidelity; in some they supplemented each other. Jonathan excelled in self-restraint, and he had all to lose by exalting his friend.

Special Points.

David was in sore need of a friend when he took up the battle of life, but we are in greater need of the Friend. "There is not a friend like the lowly Jesus."

Jonathan was not less a loyal son by being true to David; any companion who leads us to love parents or brothers and sisters less is not worthy the name of friend.

Both friends loved and served God, and helped each other on in the way of life. Do not make a friend of anyone who will not have Jesus in your covenant.

Business Men and Foreign Missions.—The Warehousemen and Drapers' Foreign Missionary Society continues to receive cheering tidings from its worker, Mr. J. H. Harris. Writing from Baringa, a new station on the Upper Congo, this missionary bears testimony to the light that is steadily penetrating the darkness of heathenism. From 250 to 300 children daily attend the schools, and many of these can already read. Besides supporting Mr. Harris, the Society has provided training for Mr. W. P. Hares at the C.M.S. College, Islington. Mr. Hares was ordained in June at St. Paul's Cathedral, and is now gaining experience as Curate of St. Jude's, Kensal Rise, prior to his leaving in the autumn for the Punjaub, India.

A FRIEND'S PERSISTENCY.

On one occasion a young man in South London, a church member, mixed with companions who enticed him from religious practices until he became a regular visitor to the public-house. His pastor was sorely troubled to see his young member's habits, and he determined to rescue him. To that end he followed him one evening from public-house to public-house, and then, seizing a favourable opportunity, confronted him at one of the bars, and urged him to leave the place. The man's companions were so astonished that they remained quite silent, and the minister was able to lead his young friend from the house of temptation. In so doing the pastor was a true friend and a brother, and he was able to effect a rescue by his persistency. Beyond all human friendship is the love of the Lord. (Golden text.)

A FRIEND IN NEED.

Several years ago a ragged dirty lad knocked at the door of a London house. The lady who opened to him recognized a member of her Bible-class, who, several months before, had suddenly disappeared from the neighbourhood. The boy had wished to see life, and his wanderings had been typical of the prodigal of the Gospel. The poor misguided lad had done well just as long as his money lasted. Then he turned to harvesting to earn his daily bread, and at the close of the season turned to London a homeless wanderer. Gradually he sank lower and lower in gutter life. Then it was he came to himself and turned his feet to the house of his former Sunday-school teacher, where he was clothed and fed. The teacher, after a deal of persuasion, prevailed on the father to receive the young wanderer into the family circle. Such a friend was Jonathan to David. At no small risk the passionate father was approached, and when David was yet in adversity and an exile from the royal court Jonathan pleaded with the king for the shepherd lad (v. 12).

UNSELFISH LOVE.

An American lady was in trouble because of her seven months old baby. The child had got an unclasped safety-pin in its throat, and all efforts of the mother and nurse to remove it failed. In order to get the infant to New York, a distance of 400 miles, the lady engaged a special train at a cost of £200, and at a hospital in the city the pin was at last safely removed. Such love of a mother for her child was akin to the unselfishness displayed by Jonathan in the lesson. The American lady, in her desire to benefit the little one, abandoned all thought of her own convenience and comfort; and Jonathan, in loving David and seeking to serve him, considered not himself at all. No jealous thoughts occupied his mind, no selfish ambitions; but knowing full well the meaning of the act, he made a covenant with the house of David (v. 16).

PROTECTED BY GOD.

When Dr. Paton was on Tanna, on one occasion he lost all his belongings, and the natives were bent upon taking his life as well. The doctor was compelled to take refuge in a tree, and he afterwards stated that had he been a stranger to prayer his reason would have given way. However, in his extremity, he found comfort in the words that came to his mind, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." "Lo, I am with you alway." The love of God encompassed the intrepid missionary, and he was eventually rescued. Such a love was around David in his danger, and Jonathan was led of God to display a constant and unselfish love to the chosen of the Lord. All true earthly love is the outcome of God's love, for He is love. If we commit our way unto the Lord, trust also in Him, He will bring it to pass.

Irish Notes.

THE Protestant Orphan Society of Ossory is doing a good work, and has now fifty-five children on its books.

The ninety seventh annual report of the Hibernian Bible Society, which has just been issued, shows that last year the Society issued 41,057 copies of the Scriptures, and that after supplying a great many day and Sunday-schools with free copies of Bibles and Testaments, it sent £200 to the British and Foreign Bible Society for the purpose of helping to circulate the Bible in other lands.

Under the auspices of the Coleraine Temperance Council, a monster temperance demonstration has been held at Portrush, one of the most fashionable watering places in the North of Ireland. Mr. Drummond Grant presided, and there was a very large attendance. Resolutions were carried in favour of Saturday early closing, and against any attempt to interfere with the licensing authorities in refusing to renew licenses which, in their judgment, are no longer required in the interests of the public.

Aldersgate Noon Meeting.

THE presence of several notable American brethren added special interest to the noon meeting at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. on Monday last.

Dr. Cameron, editor of Watchword and Truth, first gave some impressions of the recent Keswick Convention. He had gone to Keswick with some fears, but found them entirely removed ere the close of the meetings. Summing up his reasons for satisfaction, Dr. Cameron said that foundation truths were emphasized: (1) That the Lord Jesus Christ was crucified on our behalf, and that in Him only have we life and peace. (2) That we are identified with Him in His crucifixion, at least representatively: "I am crucified with Christ." By the power of the Spirit we are enabled to keep our members in the place of death. What then—are we so many corpses going about the world? No, for the life of Christ is manifest in us. It is not that we are living in sinlessness, but that the Spirit makes real and personal to us what we are in Christ.

Dr. Taylor, warmly greeting his English friends, said that in his travels he found the same Spirit working for the same purpose, and that he obtained a fresh realization of the truth that God "will never leave us nor forsake us." "I was in Paris, and found Him there; in Brussels and Amsterdam, I found Him there; talking to a vast crowd outside the Assembly Hall at Mile End, I found Him there."

The third transatlantic friend was Captain Stanley, of the Blue Button Army, a well-known Gospel Temperance organization of the United States. Captain Stanley is a converted drunkard, and with remarkable force and freshness he gave incidents from his varied and thrilling experiences, concluding with an original solo, "I believe the good old Bible from beginning to the end."

Mr. R. C. Morgan presided, and among other speakers were Mr. W. R. Lane and Mr. M. H. Hodder, who gave vivid accounts of the Y.M.C.A. Tent work, which is described on page 26.

"Filled with the Spirit."

DEAR SIR,—I should like to thank your correspondent, "R.," for the revelation his letter in your issue of July 30 brought to me. My Christian life has seemed such a failure until now. I have longed to have this filling of the Spirit in my everyday life, yet always fell so short of all it would mean to me. As a constant reader of your valuable paper, I have been many times richly blessed through its pages, as in this, another instance. Your correspondent's reference to the words, "Ye are complete in Him" came to me as an inspiration, and I can now "go forward restfully to the every-day service to which He has called me," knowing I am "complete in Him" for all things.—Yours in His service, A. E. T.

Uxbridge.

Welsh Notes.

AT the last Quarterly Association of the South Wales Calvinistic Methodists, held at Fishguard, no fewer than eighteen candidates were ordained to the full work of the ministry. The charge to the young ministers was delivered by Rev. W. E. Rydderch, of Swansea, and was founded upon 1 Peter ii. 9.

Some important developments of the Welsh Forward Movement are in contemplation. One is the appointment of assistants to the evangelists in charge of the large mission centres; another scheme is the founding of a settlement in Cardiff, in the nature of a Home for ministerial students of the Calvinistic Methodist denomination in that city.

During the summer months the Cardiff and District Temperance and Band of Hope Union have been conducting an energetic campaign. Their activities have taken the form of slum concerts, open-air gatherings, dinner-hour, and workshop meetings. Through the generosity of the president, Mr. John Cory, J.P., two mission vans have been placed at the disposal of the committee, for work in the towns and villages of the district.

About Books.

ALL ABOUT THE JEWS.

THE fourth volume of The Jewish Encyclopædia fully maintains the standard of excellence established in its predecessors. As the entire work will consist of twelve volumes, one-third of the great undertaking is already in the hands of subscribers. To the ordinary reader these volumes are portals of mystery; to the budding Orientalist and student of theology on historical lines, they are gates of knowledge, leading to a world of thought, much of which cannot but seem strange to Western minds. Take the first word—"Chazars"; assuredly it propounds a puzzle, but the explanation is rich in its bearing upon the history of Israel. And what a conflict is recalled by the closing contribution to the volume—"Dreyfus Case." Until the monumental story of Captain Alfred Dreyfus is written, this anonymous sketch, from the pen of a French littérateur whose connections brought him into intimate relations with various personages concerned in "l'affaire," will possess peculiar interest and authority among the various interpretations of a world-stirring drama.

As was the case with preceding volumes, this has contributions from the scholars of many lands. Moreover, it deals with Biblical matters in much the same way; it gives the Biblical data, and the contentions of critics, also the fruit of investigations in Jewish, Christian, and Mohammedan literature. Controversial points are discussed with independence; and many a curious fancy comes to the help of hard facts in bringing on a decision in harmony with historic Judaism. The articles on Death and Demonology, Decalogue and Diaspora, Commerce, Concordances, and Dictionaries are of wide interest; though we would by no means discount the value of the papers on places of interest, and the biographies of men who have been great in Israelitish history, as writers and statesmen, and in other spheres of labour and influence.

The article on "Christianity in its Relation to Judaism," is from the pen of the versatile Dr. Kohler, of New York, and is written in a generous spirit. His admissions and distinctions invest what he says with peculiar interest; all the same, he writes as a Jew. He says hard things of Christianity in some of its forms and manifestations; and no instructed Christian would care to combat many of his statements. Other articles of value deal with the Church Councils and Fathers as affecting the Jews. Workers among Israel will read with special concern the articles on "Conversion to Christianity," and "Modern Converts to Christianity." As we said when the first volume appeared, this is a work which students of Holy Scripture and religious history in general cannot but consult with profit. Though the subject may happen to be ordinary, the treatment will generally be fresh and useful, because of the special point of view from which the writers deal with things.

EXPLORATIONS IN BIBLE LANDS.

IN a recent article on "Digging up Old Babylon," we spoke of a great work on the eve of publication by Professor H. V. Hilprecht, professor of Assyriology and Scientific Director of the Babylonian Expedition, University of Pennsylvania. It is a pleasure now to give a brief description of the book itself. The title is Explorations in Bible Lands during the Nineteenth Century. (12s. 6d. net. T. & T. Clark), and it is a bulky work of 800 pages, embellished with nearly 200 illustrations and several maps.

This is no mere report of operations or narrative of transactions. It is the work of a man who combines an historical sense with a descriptive faculty; and in departments where his own specialism has not led him, he has invoked the assistance of distinguished contributors. Hence, after over 500 pages on "The Resureckion of Assyria and Babylonia," by Dr. Hilprecht himself, we have surveys of other fields of exploration, as follows:—"Researches in Palestine," by Lic. Dr. J. Benzinger; "Excavations in Egypt," by Prof. Dr. Georg Steindorff; "Explorations in Arabia," by Prof. Dr. Fritz Hommel; and "The So-called Hittites and their Inscriptions," by Prof. Dr. P. Jensen. Though the book is interesting from first to last, we are specially attracted by the earlier half, because it contains a larger proportion than do the other sections of recent and valuable information, including an account of the explorations at Nippur and the discovery of the Temple of Bel.

As we recently explained, Professor Hilprecht has done large service in excavating Old Babylon and describing its manifold life and institutions. In this volume he also tells us what others have done. The work aims to show how things were at the beginning of the last century and what was done in the course of the hundred years. It is sufficiently detailed to command the close attention of such as are attracted by glimpses into the distant past, or are alive to the bearings of Oriental archæology upon Scripture history and interpretation. In the preface, Dr. Hilprecht thus expresses his object:—

"The rich material, often scattered through old editions of rare books and comparatively inaccessible journals, has been examined anew, sifted, and treated by a number of experts in the light of their latest researches. It was our one aim to bring the history of the gradual exploration of those distant Oriental countries, which formed the significant scene and background of God's dealings with Israel as a nation, more vividly before the educated classes of Christendom."

Some of the illustrations—representing objects and scenes of great importance—are specially welcome; and many will appreciate the series of portraits of heroes in the work of research. No one supposes that all the conclusions expressed are final; some will, no doubt, be rejected in the light of future investigations. All the same, the volume is sure to prove of service to many a careful Bible student, and especially to such as have leanings in the direction of antiquarian research.

EVANGELIST AND PASTOR.

IT is not often that one meets with the evangelist and pastor so successfully blended as was the case with the late Rev. E. Bacheler Russell, whose story we outlined, to the delight of many readers, shortly after his tragic death while cycling in Scotland, nearly three years ago. It is a pleasure now to call attention to a fuller account of his singularly fruitful career, in a volume written by his wife: Edward Bacheler Russell: Records of His Life, with an Introduction by Canon Hay Aitken (3s. 6d. Shaw). There is no need to rehearse the story of the young man, son of a gentleman farmer, who entered upon life in a light-hearted manner, wasting his money and himself in racing and gambling; and of how God, in saving mercy, met with him in the course of Mr. Moody's London mission in 1875, and led the awakened soul to a hearty devotion to the work of the Gospel.

In the pages of the memoir all this is outlined in the words of the subject himself. What follows, of description of labour in various spheres, and of mission work at home and abroad, is from a loving pen, full of sympathy with the ministry which was so soon completed. We refer our readers to the volume for the picture of the strenuous labourer—in connection with the Church Parochial Mission Society, as a C.M.S. missioner in India, and in parish work in Peel (Isle of Man), Appledore, and at Leyton. Mr. Russell was a monument of the power of Divine grace, and that grace made him a man greatly beloved. As delineating a go-ahead Christian—an out-and-out worker—the pages should prove of particular interest to young men; and assuredly their perusal affords strong evidence of the need of conversion to God if this short life is to be made beautiful and blessed in the service of Christ. We trust this attractive book will have many readers.

The Ritualistic Clergy List: A Guide for Patrons and Others. (New edition, 1s. net. Church Association, 14, Buckingham Street, E.C.) The list contains the names of 9,600 clergymen who are helping the Romeward movement in the Church of England, and it shows by what practices and professions they are doing so. We trust the pages will be diligently consulted by "all whom it may concern." They are calculated to shock those who are unaware of the extent to which Romanising societies have entrenched themselves in the National Church.

A Life for God in India: Memorials of Mrs. Jennie Fuller, of Akola and Bombay. By Helen S. Dyer. (2s. 6d. net. Revell.) We sketched the story of this devoted worker shortly after her home-call. By her life and writings she did much for India, and Mrs. Dyer has put us under a deep obligation by gathering these memorials in so appropriate a manner. A woman of great faith and noble endeavour, the subject of this very readable and attractive biography, "being dead yet speaketh" to young women of Christian training, who may be looking round for encouragement in the fruitful ordering of their lives in work for God.

A new and revised edition of Rev. Nathaniel Dimock's Death of Christ is in the press, and will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock shortly. It will be accompanied by an Introduction by Rev. W. G. Grey, Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Mr. W. D. Dunn at Govan.

FOLLOWING on the effective Gospel campaign recently held in Govan, the assembly of Christian Brethren in Harmony Hall arranged with Mr. W. D. Dunn to conduct a series of meetings in a large tent, which has been pitched in Shaw Street, and the services in which commenced on August 2. From the first meeting the Spirit of God has been working in a marked way with both saints and sinners. So great has been the interest awakened that the tent has now proved too small to accommodate those who wish to hear, and it has been decided to greatly enlarge it. The workers are greatly rejoiced at seeing so many anxious seekers after salvation, and much prayer is ascending that this revival may extend and continue. Another cause for thankfulness is the marked spirit of unity shown by Christians of all denominations and missions, who are joining in the work. Mr. Dunn remains two weeks longer.

In the Scottish Highlands.

We are glad to welcome Evangelist Drysdale once more among us in the Hebrides. Seven or eight years ago a revival began under his ministry in Durinish, Skye, and in the neighbouring islands, very similar in intensity and nature to that in the North of Ireland in '59. A well-known landlord testified to a change in his tenants' behaviour, remarking their desire to live honestly, pay up their debts, &c. A curious instance is well attested of a shoemaker in Skye who had bought leather of a merchant fifteen years ago, but refused to acknowledge the debt. In this revival he was awakened and walked many miles with the money in his hand to pay, and ask forgiveness of, the merchant. At present Mr. Drysdale is in Waternish, Skye, and in spite of the recent divisions of the Presbyterian church here, his meetings every night are well attended by all sects and deepening in interest. Mr. Drysdale desires to know nothing among us but Jesus Christ and Him crucified. D. L.

In the Open Air at Folkestone.

During a stay at Folkestone I was glad to note that while the churches were crowded on the Lord's Days, the Gospel was preached by some brethren in the open air. Outside one of the Wesleyan churches the pastor and others held a splendid meeting on the steps, and hundreds gathered round. At the close a soldier came to me seeking to be led to Christ, and I did my best for him by voice and pen.

Another friend, of the same church, Mr. W. B. Davidson, after his own indoor meeting, goes among the poor women who cannot come to church and conducts a service at which there are at least forty perambulators and their contents, plus the mother attendants. It is a service delightful to behold.

One week night I noted also a good open-air meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association, and, though trying to rest, could not refuse to speak when asked. The service was held in a conspicuous part of the town, at the fountain, near the harbour. At the close a gentleman of the Stock Exchange, who began by interrupting, finished by confessing, with tears, that he was broken-hearted. "And to think I was once in the choir," he said. I had an enjoyable walk with him, and exhorted him to accept Christ as his Lord. Mr. Jonathan Lynn and his son are busy on the sea shore with the children's special services, and not a few of "Fashionable Folkestone's" adult visitors grace the meeting, where wisely and well, by song and sermon, young and old hear the story of a Saviour's love. On two occasions Rev. J. C. Carlile, the Baptist minister of Folkestone, gave the address, in language to be "understanded" of the little ones.

The Salvation Army and other brethren in other parts of the town were also in the open air almost nightly. Thus Folkestone at least is doing her part to obey the command: "Go out into the highways and hedges."

Mr. A. E. Green is doing a splendid work in distributing Gospel literature in the open air. He has given up his life to this work, and in the many Convalescent Homes he is able to obtain admission where others are refused. There are quite a number of these places in Sandgate, and here among the sick and dying his labours are incessant, and he is continually being used of God in these houses of sadness and sorrow. Heathfield, Sussex.

From the very commencement of the recent five days' mission of Messrs. W. Olney and F. Spencer Johnson, God set His seal to the meetings held in the Welcome Mission Hall and the Gilbert Chapel. The elder scholars belonging to the "Saturday School" at the Hall were most responsive to the loving invitations given them, and at the first gathering on Saturday, August 1, again on Sunday, and the following Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons in the chapel, witnesses for Jesus Christ came through the inquiry rooms. One of many satisfactory features of the series of adult services (which were largely attended), was that some of the mothers of the young people were also found receiving Jesus into their hearts. In one case we rejoice in the fact of three daughters in one family, and then the mother, coming to a saving knowledge of the truth. There had been a prayerful preparation among the workers for a considerable time prior to the visit of our beloved brethren, and the latter expressed the sense of real "touch," in the Spirit, as soon as they came among us. Christians, too, were brought into fuller liberty, and testimony speaks of deep blessing received. "To God be the glory, great things He hath done."

Tent Mission at Aylesbury.

The tent mission conducted in this town by Mr. F. Penfold, of Hove, has been greatly owned of God. During the month's visit of the missioner, hundreds of souls have professed faith in Christ, and it has been encouraging to hear the testimonies of the various converts as to the keeping power of the One in whom they have put their trust.

On Saturday week the Nunhead Christian Band and the United Evangelistic Choir paid the town a visit to help the work in the tent, and very blessed results followed. On the Sunday morning at 6.30 the band marched through the town, previously holding a short meeting in the market square, and a prayer meeting for blessing on the work of the day was held. In the afternoon and evening the tent was crowded out, and at the latter meeting numbers of men, women, and children openly acknowledged Christ as their Saviour. The effective playing of the band, combined with the sweet singing of the choir, all tended to appeal to the hearts of the unsaved.

Never, perhaps, were such times known in Aylesbury. Mr. Penfold has earned the respect of all the townsfolk by reason of his hard work and earnestness in the cause. Many of the worst characters have been made "new creatures in Christ Jesus." Drunkards have been reclaimed and backsliders brought home again. One hard-working poor man handed the missioner a sum of £1 as a thank-offering for the good he had received during the mission.

God's name be praised for all his goodness! "It is the Lord's doing and marvellous in our eyes."

The Y.M.C.A. and Volunteer Camps.

During Bank Holiday week thousands of volunteers have gathered together in different camps throughout the country for training purposes. During the last two or three years advantage has been taken of this fact by the Y.M.C.A., and reading and recreation tents, manned by Association workers, have been established at all the large military centres. This year over twenty tents have been in the field, and during Bank Holiday week a large number of Association workers have been occupied in this splendid work for young men.

The Central Y.M.C.A. has provided three tents this August, one of them under the charge of Mr. J. H. Putterill at Seaford, Sussex, where the London Scottish and the "Artists" were encamped. Two other tents were placed at Aldershot—one on Farnborough Common and the other on West Hill. During the week 8,000 letters and post-cards were written in one of these tents, which will give some idea of the measure in which the advantages of the Association tent were appreciated by the men. In the evening short Gospel addresses were given by the workers, setting forth the Lord Jesus Christ as a living Saviour. Every night the tents were filled with attentive listeners to the Gospel message. Mr. W. R. Lane took effective part at Seaford.

There is no doubt that these tents meet a great need, and Association men realize the opportunity which they present of reaching a large number of the finest type of young men not usually affected by other agencies. The officers speak in high praise of the work. At Seaford the General has visited the tent every day, and by his request a temperance bar was added to the other attractions of the establishment. Speaking of the Aldershot work, Colonel Ricardo, commanding the City Brigade, wrote in the visitors' book, "I was astonished to find such numbers of volunteers making use of the Y.M.C.A. tent, and I consider this a sure sign that their tastes are carefully and wisely catered for. I consider the Association is doing a really good work in camp."

Tent Missions in Scotland.

At the Round Toll, in the north of Glasgow, Mr. James W. Moodie has been located with his tent since the beginning of July, and he purposes to continue for some time yet. Since the meetings began the names of over 160 persons have been taken of those who have been individually spoken to and prayed with. This does not mean that the workers are assured of 160 souls won for Christ, but if tears and prayers, and regrets on account of failure, and expressions of purpose to be done with sin and to follow Christ, are indicative of the working of God's Spirit, as they undoubtedly are, then there is room for abundant thanksgiving for what has been seen and heard in the tent at the Round Toll.

At Anniesland, in the extreme west of the city, Mr. Malcolm Ferguson, formerly of the Lanarkshire Christian Union, is hard at work under canvas along with other helpers, in seeking to bring sinners to repentance, and the word of salvation is being preached night by night with signs following.

At Kilsyth, some few miles outside the city boundary, where laboured the godly William Burns in days gone by, Mr. John Ferguson, with his pioneer tent has been holding forth the Word of Life for eight weeks, his intention being to continue his mission for several weeks yet. Some months ago Rev. John McNeill had an interesting week's mission in one of the churches; and in connection with the services in the tent a considerable measure of interest has been awakened. One night, recently, the evangelist asked all to stand who had been definitely helped, either through being restored to the Lord or through being converted, and something like eighty people stood to their feet. This, in a country place where everybody knows nearly every other body, is a much more valuable testimony than it would be in a large city where people may stand up without the fear of any of their neighbours being near at hand to see and criticise them.

A fruitful mission was recently held in one of the Evangelization Society's tents in Tain, the preacher being Mr. Harry Young, whose labours have oftentimes been signally blessed. The evangelist considers the Tain mission to have been one of the best he ever had. Mr. Young is now in Thurso, where he is finding things stiffer, but some are finding their way to Christ through the preaching of the Word. J. C.

The Open-Air Mission.

An enjoyable Bank Holiday was spent at the picturesque village of Coleshill, near Amersham, Bucks, by a large party, including the Open-Air Mission Male Choir, who proceeded there in order to hold services. During the day tracts and leaflets were distributed, and the choir delivered the Gospel message in song in different parts of the village. The cottages where the old industry of lace making with pillow and bobbins is still carried on, were visited, and a large meeting was subsequently held in a meadow. The gathering concluded a very happy day in the service of the King. D.

We are full of praise at Brighton for the visit of four evangelists of the Open-Air Mission, also for answered prayer on behalf of this special effort to reach the crowds that throng the sea front. Blessing is manifest. On each week night and three times on Sundays large assemblies came together, and stood for a considerable time drinking in the message delivered in speech and song. The racecourses of Brighton and Lewes were also visited, and there, though apparently not promising fields of labour, the Gospel testimony attracted the most depraved.

F. J. P.

In and around Oxford a band of workers connected with the Open-Air Mission have been labouring abundantly for ten days. Messrs. Rayner, Pullinger, and Christenson, were joined by Lieut.-Colonel Mackinlay, hon. secretary of the Mission. Undaunted by either showers of rain or the brawling opposition of well-to-do young ritualists, the evangelists conducted their services in the open air, gathering listeners from all classes. By the wayside; at the street corner; in the market-place—anywhere and everywhere these apostles of open-air preaching stood forth, and in simple language offered a present salvation through Christ. A portable harmonium, and sometimes other instruments, accompanied the sacred songs. A large quantity of leaflets and marked Testaments were distributed. At the close of every meeting there were those who, under the powerful influence of Gospel truth, testified to their desire for salvation. The places visited included Kidlington, Littlemore, Eynsham, Dorchester, Wolvercote, Islip, and Abingdon. Christian workers have been cheered and stimulated by the courage and enthusiasm of these open-air preachers. The meetings are being continued in the City of Oxford. P.

Mr. Alex. Y. McGregor is experiencing much blessing at Edinburgh, and souls are being brought into the fold of Christ. The mission is now in its fifth week.

A correspondent writes:—"Praise God for the good work done at Auchinleck in connection with the Gospel Tent Mission, under the auspices of the Christian Union."

Evangelistic services at Kilroot, near Newtownbutler, are being largely attended, and proving times of blessing. A considerable number of persons have professed conversion to Christ.

A helpful mission, held in the Eastville Workhouse, Bristol, was brought to a close on Sunday week. The meetings commenced were conducted by Captain A. Hanson, of the Church Army. The way had been prepared by earnest prayer, and the results of the mission are most encouraging. Two years ago Captain Hanson conducted a similar mission in this Workhouse which is bearing good fruit to-day.

For some years past Misses Agnes Moore and Jessie Keene have been engaged in Gospel work in various parts of the country. They have laboured to edification among Christians, and their appeals to outsiders have been with power. They are booking engagements from September next for missions of twelve days and longer. They may be addressed 10, Montague Place, Worthing.

The Churches.

 The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of spiritual progress and effort in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and not trivialities; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Durham has appointed Rev. Walter Andrews, late of the Church Missionary Society's staff in Japan, to the vicarage of Middleton St. George, near Darlington.

In the Daily News census of Willesden, N.W., the highest attendance in the district was recorded at All Souls', Harlesden, where Rev. W. P. Cromie is working successfully on Evangelical lines. Mr. Cromie succeeded a High Churchman rather less than three years ago, and the parishioners have rallied round him.

"All Chinese converts," says The Record, "are not 'rice Christians.' A worker of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society relates that last year in Foochow, in the cold wintry weather, when food was scarce and dear, at least one mother and daughter were so keen to attend the church services that they came at nine a.m. to Sunday-school, &c., week after week, without having had any food, and not getting home till one o'clock, and this while the rich were dispensing the great boon of free breakfasts to the poor."

An esteemed correspondent writes:—May I appeal to your readers on behalf of a church in the West of Ireland which has remained almost roofless since the disastrous storm of last February. During the rainy weather, so prevalent this season, the waters pour in so that it has to be mopped up and carried away in buckets before every service. It will cost at least £70 to make it waterproof, and if not done in time, the floor will burst open and the wood work be spoiled. The church was once the centre of such magnificent missionary work that in one year alone sixty converts from Rome emigrated from a parish which, on the arrival of the late rector, Rev. J. Cotton Walker, had only one resident Protestant. In later years, when Mr. Cotton Walker was called home, some of these emigrants, hearing his successor was carrying on the good work and having a service in the Mission Lodge, which is seven miles from the parish church, collected and sent home £10 to help the mission. The services are bright and evangelical, and the pure Word of God is preached in sincerity. Communications may be addressed —F. M. Cotton Walker, 1, De Vesci Terrace, Kingstown; or Rev. P. Tibbs, D.D., Dean of Clonfert, and present rector of Ballinasloe, Ireland.

Congregational.

Mr. R. Griffith John has accepted the pastorate of Bury Park Church, Luton. Mr. John is the son of Rev. David John, who for thirty-five years has been pastor of Booth Street Welsh Church, Manchester. He is related to Rev. Dr. Griffith John, the veteran Chinese minister.

The arrangements for the meetings of the Congregational Union at Bournemouth in October are in course of preparation. One session is to be devoted to papers on the spiritual life. There will be two official sermons this year instead of one. The preachers will be Revs. C. Silvester Horne, in Richmond Hill Chapel, and Ambrose Shepherd, in the Morley Punshon Memorial Chapel.

Sunday, September 20, has been fixed for the opening of the Whitefield Central Mission. On Tuesday, September 22, a public meeting will be held with Mr. George Spicer in the chair, when representatives of all the Free Churches will take part. Plans of the institute which is to be erected are now in a forward state, and building will soon begin. Meanwhile the church is being overhauled and adapted for the purposes of the mission. Rev. James Holmes, assistant minister, has entered on his work.

Rev. J. E. Flower has returned from his Canadian tour, in the course of which he represented the Congregationalists of the old country at the meetings of the Congregational Union of Ontario and Quebec, as subsequently at those of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Mr. Flower also visited, at the request of the Colonial Missionary Society, the rising town of Sydney, Cape Breton, and St. John's, the capital of Newfoundland, together with some of the mission stations in the beautiful bays of the island.

Baptist.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich, will begin his ministry at Salem Church, Cheltenham, on September 20.

Rev. A. T. Jones, of Maindee, Newport, Mon., though still very weak, is seeing much encouragement in his work.

The foundation-stones of the new tabernacle at Bedfont Middlesex, have been laid. Subsequently a public meeting was held in the Town Hall (Feltham), presided over by the pastor, when Dr. Clifford delivered a stirring address.

A friend who desires to commemorate Dr. McLaren's services has promised the pastor of the Chorlton-cum-Hardy Baptist Church the sum of £500 towards the erection of a new chapel as a memorial to Dr. McLaren's distinguished ministry.

Rev. W. C. Minifie, of Bradford, has accepted the pastorate of Commercial Street Church, Newport, Mon., and hopes to commence his ministry in September. He will continue to lecture for the Protestant Alliance during a portion of each week.

The historic Myrtle Street Church, Liverpool, is closed during this month for improvements, including the installation of the electric light. The pastor, Rev. John Thomas, is conducting Sunday evening services in the Philharmonic Hall during the alterations.

On Sunday week at Attercliffe Baptist Chapel, Sheffield, Pastor W. Walker gave the right hand of fellowship to twelve new members. During the first five months of the present pastorate thirty have been added to the church. This is a direct answer to the prayers of God's people for blessing on the Word preached.

Rev. W. J. Henderson, Principal of Bristol College, preached impressive sermons to large congregations on the occasion of the re-opening, after structural alterations and thorough renovation of Gosforth Street Church, Coventry. In further celebration of the re-opening, a public meeting was held, when the pastor gave a financial statement showing that towards £802, which the scheme of structural alterations, renovation, and new organ would cost, £575 had been raised.

Methodist.

The Primitive Methodist Soldiers' Home at Aldershot has been improved and renovated. Thirty soldiers have professed conversion during the quarter.

A site has been purchased at Plymouth by the Primitive Methodists for £2,500. A "Forward Movement" is projected for the town under the leadership of Rev. J. Best.

The place of the Wesleyan Temple at Stepney is to be taken by a new building. There will be seating accommodation in the central hall for more than 2,100 persons, and, in addition, schoolrooms and residences are to be erected. The total cost is estimated at £50,000.

The Connexional losses of the Free Methodists by removals, withdrawals, and deaths for last year total 5,912. The net increase was 1,311, so that 7,223 members were added to the home churches in the year. Removals accounted for 3,040 losses, and these will be reduced should a union of the minor Methodist bodies take place.

Mr. T. C. Taylor, M.P., for Farnworth, was present at a stone-laying ceremony in connection with the Cawdor Street Wesleyan Church, Moses Gate, on Saturday last. Speaking of religious work, he said that there is nothing in the world that men and women derive more happiness from than the thought that they have been the means of bringing good to others. He hoped that in the new church there would not be any "fine clothes respectability." He believed there had been more people driven away from the House of God by that means than they could tell.

At the Bible Christian Conference, Rev. John Luke, speaking on the spiritual state of the Connexion, told of a year of much blessing. One district reports conversions in every circuit, and some circuits tell of conversions in every society. But on the other hand it is feared that prayer, Bible study, family worship, and attendance on the means of grace are neglected by many. An interesting conversation followed. Mr. T. Buttle, evangelist, had seen 500 converted during the year. Rev. W. F. Ellis told of a good work at Barrow, where, after nine months, fifty persons who had been received on trial all remained in the church.

Presbyterian.

For the first time in the past forty years the membership of St. John's, Kendal, has reached 100, there having been an increase of eighteen since Rev. Marshall N. G. Gray's ordination on July 7 last. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was dispensed on Sunday evening last, when eighty-two communicated. This is a very encouraging beginning for Mr. Gray in his new sphere of labour.

At Ramsey, Isle of Man, anniversary services have been held, conducted by the Moderator, Rev. Dr. Macphail, of Liverpool. There were good congregations, and the services were much appreciated by a large number of visitors, as well as residents. In the evening the text was Hosea vii. 8, when the preacher dealt with onesidedness, showing by illustrations, both from Scripture and from nature, the weakness of the one-sided life. The Moderator, in the course of his address, dealt most skilfully with the necessity of conversion. In the afternoon, Dr. Macphail visited the schools and addressed teachers and scholars.

Society of Friends.

The members and workers of the Friends' Home Mission Committee met in conference a few days ago. The mornings and evenings were devoted to lectures, Bible readings, and devotional meetings, the afternoons being left free for rest and recreation.

John H. Williams hopes to accompany Joseph Taylor and other missionaries for India, sailing from Tilbury on the steamer Arabia on October 23. He purposes to re-visit the Friends' various mission stations in India, so as to come once more into close touch with the workers and their work. He expects to spend four or five months in India.

Though somewhat smaller than usual, the summer gathering at Bradford presented many features of interest. On the assembling of the meeting on Ministry and Oversight helpful remarks were made on the words of the Saviour, "Ye shall be My witnesses," as applied to those bearing office in the Church. Friends were reminded that the avowed followers of Christ could not escape the responsibility of witnesses; and that upon the witness borne by the actions and words of professing Christians depended, to a large extent, the estimate of the Master formed by the world around.

On Sunday, July 26, a new mission hall was opened in connection with the Ross Tent and Evangelistic Mission at Bromsash, a needy village in Herefordshire. The hall was crowded to its utmost capacity.

A petition to the Home Secretary for the release of the three Wickliffe preachers incarcerated in Lancaster Gaol sets forth that the preachers had been conducting a mission at Barrow-in-Furness, in connection with which various meetings were held in the open air. "For this they have each been committed by the Barrow justices to Lancaster Gaol for one month, with hard labour. We understand the summonses to appear were only served by the police on Monday, the 3rd inst., returnable for the following day, and that, although the defendants applied for a reasonable adjournment in order that they might be professionally represented, the justices only granted a twenty-four hours' adjournment, thus leaving insufficient time for their solicitor to see the witnesses and get up their defence, with the result that they were unrepresented at the trial, and sentences of imprisonment were passed."

Fallen Asleep.

Aged eighty-one, Mr. David Peitsmeyer, a prominent member of the Society of Friends, at Minden, Germany.—Aged eighty, Mr. W. J. Cook, senior deacon of Shrubland Road Congregational Church, Daiston.—Mr. J. G. Paige, for forty-three years a member of South Molton Congregational Church, for a long period deacon, and for seventeen years Sunday-school superintendent.—Aged fifty-nine, Mrs. Richard, the wife of Dr. Timothy Richard, of Shanghai. Mrs. Richard was born in Edinburgh, and was sent out to China by the United Presbyterian Mission Board in 1876, and two years later married Dr. Richard. Her influence over the wives of the officials and the sons of high mandarins was remarkable.—At Chiswick, Rev. R. J. C. Tillotson, Congregationalist. Mr. Tillotson was known among the churches of the denomination in London, although for some years he has not held a pastorate. He was for thirteen years minister at Marlborough.—Mr. John M'Farlane, of Edinburgh. He was for many years connected with the Scottish Congregational Church, and held office as treasurer.—Mr. Mark Whitwill, a prominent citizen of Bristol, whose name is widely known in religious, philanthropic, and commercial circles, died suddenly in London on Thursday. As the founder of the Bristol Hospital for Sick Children and Women, of which he was the president and treasurer, he was familiarly known as "the children's friend." At Belfast, Rev. Jas. Wherry, Methodist minister, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. Rev. Richard Æmilius Baillie, Dean of Raphoe, aged sixty-nine years. At Donoughmore, Co. Cork, Archdeacon Pope, aged eighty-five years. At Camlough, Co. Antrim, Mr. Jas. Wright, a devoted Methodist local preacher.

Personalia.

Many readers will learn with regret that Mrs. C. H. SPURGEON is in an exceedingly weak condition of health, although within the last few days the medical report is slightly more encouraging.

Miss ALBINA COX (North Africa Mission), of Sousse, Tunisia, has accepted the invitation of the Council to return home in the autumn to undertake deputation work. Until the end of August Miss Cox's address will be La Charmille, Chexbrus, Lausanne, Vaud, Switzerland.

Rev. JOSHUA GRAVETT, pastor for the past twelve years of Galilee Baptist Church, Denver, Col., is about to pay a visit to this country, and will be free to undertake services in London during September. Mr. Gravett, who was a student at Mount Hermon, has been singularly blessed in evangelistic efforts throughout the State of Colorado, and at various centres where he laboured with the late Mr. Moody. His address will be—care of Mrs. W. Mills, 13, Halden Road, Wandsworth, S.W.

On August 19 Mrs. JEMIMA LUKE, the authoress of the familiar hymn, "I think when I read that sweet story of old," attains her ninetieth birthday. It is interesting to note that this day was also the birthday of her father, Mr. Thomas Thompson, who, born in 1785, was one of the founders of the Sunday School Union. Mr. Thompson was assiduous in disseminating the Holy Scriptures; as far back as 1853 he was instrumental in sending two and a quarter million copies of the New Testament to China.

Mr. and Mrs. B. BROOMHALL, so long and intimately connected with the China Inland Mission and the work of God in China, are making another offering to that great work in the sending of their youngest son, B. C. Broomhall, a young surgeon of great promise, to take up work in Shansi, North China, where Mr. and Mrs. Piggott laid down their lives. Mr. Broomhall has been associated with the Medical Mission, under Dr. Maxwell, at Highbury, and has taken his Fellowship in surgery in the London College. He has been honorary surgeon at the London Hospital, Bethnal Green, and St. Marks, and taken a course at the Tropical School of Medicine. He is the fifth child that Mr. and Mrs. Broomhall have given to the mission field of China. He sails by the Oceana on September 4, and will labour in Tai-yuan and Shoyang, where the Piggott Memorial Hospital will be built.

"Drink and Crime."—The remarkable story told in our last week's issue by Rev. A. G. Townshend, vicar of Sileby, is being reprinted by Gowans Bros., 8 and 9, Clerkenwell Green, London, E.C., as a four-page tract, illustrated. Recalling the solemn messages of the murderers of Police-constable Wilkinson, it is entitled "TELL THEM ——!" From inquiries that have reached us, we judge that there will be a large demand for this striking tract. One correspondent says: "It should be circulated by thousands among working men who are tempted to take strong drink." (6d. per 100; 4s. per 1,000, post free.)

The Fire in the Balkans. The news from the Balkans becomes more grave every day. A fierce revolutionary fire is burning, and there is threatened a general devastation. It looks now as if it were too late for foreign Powers to check the spread of the insurrection and to re-establish order. For months the Powers have been playing with the matter, until at length a veritable conflagration has burst out. It is impossible to plead ignorance, since many months ago Special Correspondents and Commissioners brought to light the real facts of the case. As usual, the Powers have allowed themselves to be duped by the wily Turk, whose promises of reform, as might have been expected, have never been kept.

Turkey's Record. Lord Lansdowne's mild treatment of the Turk in the House of Lords last Thursday was certainly not warranted by the previous record of Turkey. What is the use of "advising" a Power that invariably "reforms" by massacre and oppression? The Special Correspondents both of The Times and of the Daily News have made it clear that "the worst government upon earth" is responsible for the Balkan trouble. We are only sorry that the Turcophiles in this country have any power to persuade a section of the community to the contrary.

The Lynching Evil. President Roosevelt has once more demonstrated his courage and force of character by writing a drastic public letter on the growing "lynching" madness which is sweeping like an epidemic through the Southern States of America. In this he points out the demoralizing effect on those who watch as well as those who take part in these brutal executions:—

> There are certain hideous sights which (he says) once seen can never be wholly erased from the mental retina. The mere fact of having seen them implies mental degradation.

These exhibitions of rude violence are simply a form of anarchy, and "anarchy has always been the handmaid and forerunner of tyranny." Other leaders are beginning to awaken the public mind to the serious danger of the situation. That such scenes should be possible in one of the foremost Christian nations is a strange proof of the fallen element in human nature, which civilization is powerless to eradicate. Nothing short of a widespread religious awakening can cope with a danger so great and unmanageable.

The Alien Report. The report of the Royal Commission on Alien Immigration has now been published, and the Commissioners have recommended a startling change in our attitude towards those Jews and others who flock in such increasing numbers to our hospitable shores. As a rule, the testimonies to the excellent character of the alien are almost enthusiastic, and it is stated that of the 54,000 in Stepney last year only about 500 received Poor Law relief. The number of criminal aliens, however, continues to increase, and it is in this direction that legislation is urgently needed both in regard to their exclusion and their expatriation. Beyond this it is not necessary to go, and it is by no means likely that public opinion will endorse the Commissioners' recommendations as to the establishment of "prohibited areas," which scheme a thoughtful contemporary has already denounced as a proposal to re-establish the Ghetto of the Middle Ages in our midst. So, too, the suggested application of the ticket-of-leave system to all immigrants. It is prevention that is required, not persecution.

Jesuit Invasion. The invasion of the Jesuits, and other Romish Orders, is a far more crying evil, and one more necessary to be dealt with than the worst form of alien immigration, undesirable as that may be.

Carelessness. The annual report of the Postmaster-General contains a remarkable indictment of the public on the ground of apparently incurable carelessness. During the past year more that 25½ millions of undelivered packets were dealt with, and as many as 324,403 of these were registered, or contained property, including £18,862 in coin and £714,200 in cheques, money orders, &c.; and there were 307,519 postal packets without any address at all. We fear that this curious revelation might be more than paralleled by another and still more damaging. If men are careless of the things pertaining to this life, how much more are they of those things that belong to eternal life. This was the sin of the "foolish virgins," of the "unwise builder," of the man who built a tower and was not able to finish it. It is a sad thing to lose money and opportunity through gross carelessness, but what shall we say of those who lose heaven for the same reason?

Honesty in Public Affairs. Another useful report just issued is that of the Joint Committee of the Lords and Commons appointed to consider the principles on which municipalities should be empowered to carry on industrial enterprises. Few things are of greater public interest than that all possible precautions should be taken against jobbery and dishonesty in the conduct of municipal affairs. In order to increase these precautions, the Committee has made drastic recommendations as to the best method of public audit, which insures a genuine oversight of public accounts, and complete publicity of the way in which all municipal moneys have been disposed. "The sight of means to do ill deeds makes ill deeds done," and a loose method of checking expenditure is a temptation which many officials find hard to resist. This country's public affairs are on the whole handled with conspicuous honour as compared with those of other nations, and if the provisions of this report are loyally carried out, this will be still better safeguarded in future.

Shallow Living. Our distinguished visitor, Dr. Lorimer, has been opening his mind to an interviewer upon the religious life of great cities. He finds within the Church itself one explanation of the decline of religious interest in the country at large, in the shallowness which undoubtedly is marked in many places:—

> There has come even into our churches the idea that our services ought to be made a means of diversion. The present tendency is to run off short, sharp, snappy, scintillating things, that will prevent people from thinking at all. The religious life, therefore, becomes more shallow, and, as it becomes shallower in the Church, it declines in the community. . . . The Church must take herself more seriously. . . . Not until she is willing to conform to the elementary principle of discipleship—to deny herself Sunday "rests" and week-end "parties," and the gathering of "friends" upon the Lord's Day—not until she really feels the supreme claims of religion upon herself, will there be any radical change in the community at large.

A New Ruling Passion. Dr. Lorimer undoubtedly touches a sore point here, and it will be a good thing if some professing Christians feel, to the point of pain, the force of the indictment. The multiplication of those who spend week ends away from home, and who turn the Lord's Day into an occasion of social festivity, is a revelation that too many do not take their religious life seriously. If the world were filled with saints, and no irreligion existed, the case would be different. But in the presence of increasing unbelief and degrading vices, and general forgetfulness of God, the selfishness of many who have been "called to be saints" is deplorable. Surely in such people there can be no sense of indebtedness to the Saviour, or of responsibility towards men. What is wanted is a new and Divine ruling passion for God and men, which shall so dominate the Christian heart as to obliterate all personal ambitions, however good in themselves they may be. To the Saviour the work of Redemption meant the agony of the cross; to His Church it must mean, in union with Him, an agony also.

Pulpit and Pew. Preaching at St. Paul's Cathedral the other Sunday, Canon Newbolt dealt with the Parable of the Sower (Matt. xiii. 4), and referring to the seed that "fell by the wayside," said that if the ministry of preaching is losing favour the cause is in the hearer rather than in the preacher.

> It is no new thing that we have to deplore. Our blessed Lord not only speaks of failure in the proclamation of the Word, He predicts it. . . . He goes on to show that in three cases out of four the seed will be wasted, only the fault once more is not in the sower but in the soil.

Day by day the path becomes harder, and the probability of penetrating it becomes less and less. The worldly traffic makes deep impressions more and more unlikely, and routine does the rest, and the preacher is blamed for the failure of the labour bestowed upon the stony ground. With more prayer from the Pew there would come more power in the pulpit. It must not be overlooked, however, that the condition of the Pew is largely produced by the Preachers, and that of the Preachers by the theological or untheological education given them in their Training Colleges.

Lunacy and Drink. The letter from Dr. Forbes Winslow, the well-known specialist on insanity, on the subject of the recent lunacy statistics, which has appeared in a daily contemporary, certainly is a most powerful indictment of "the trade." Commenting upon the painful fact that thirty-two per cent. of the lunacy in England and Wales is directly traceable to drink, the physician makes an appeal to those votaries of drink who at a recent meeting of the British Medical Association asserted that alcohol is harmless. He quotes the personal testimony of an official who has had charge of 47,000 cases, and who can only recollect three who were teetotallers. That official found that most of the females were young mothers, frequently with a baby in their arms, which accompanied the mother . . . that nine-tenths of these women had lost all self-respect, thus educating and bringing into the world drunkards.

And as it is the mother's influence which exerts the greatest power over the child, no wonder that Dr. Forbes Winslow insists that "alcohol in every form ought to be shunned and avoided."

Shutting Out the Publican. It is most satisfactory to learn that on the Latchmere Housing Estate, now laid out in tenements by the Battersea Borough Council with accommodation for 315 families, the land, as Mr. John Burns said at the opening ceremony, will not be tainted by an off-licence or degraded by a beershop or a public-house.

The multiplication of such colonies, whose residents are shielded from the danger and temptations of drink shops at their doors, is a most potent way of limiting the power of the brewer and the publican, and of helping to stop that decay of physique in regard to which some of our administrators profess to be so anxious. But it is more, for where the public-house is not, there the ground is clear for nobler things.

The French Government and Lourdes. Several of the French papers are asking why the Government hesitates to apply the Law of Congregations to the shrine at Lourdes. A number of lesser societies have been suppressed, and at least one great congregation, the Chartreux, has been dispersed, yet Lourdes is undisturbed. This gigantic fabric of superstition is founded upon a weak-headed girl's hallucination, and it is discreditable to everyone concerned, and chiefly so to the "Fathers" of the Grotto, who encourage the superstition. If the French Government applied the law to Lourdes, and closed the shrine, they would perform a real work of benevolence.

An Old Friend in a New Dress. We must not measure the results of Mission work by the census tables only. A recent writer on the attitude of educated Hindus towards Christianity has laid stress upon the fact that Christian influences are everywhere stirring at the roots of Indian national life, and those who have not studied the Bible in vain are reading Christianity into Hinduism. To-day, quotations from the Scriptures and from Christian hymnbooks are frequently made by Indians upon public platforms, and altogether the attitude of antagonism is slowly changing. In connection with such manifestations of the indirect influences of Christianity, it is singularly interesting to find that in a recent little volume of songs for the worship of the goddess Durga, a translation of the well-known hymn, by Miss Anna L. Walker, Work, for the night is coming, is given a prominent place. We can only trust that the familiar verses will be as influential in their new form as they have been for years in the English version.

The Residue of Years. Dealing with the subject of "The Value of Old Men to Society," Rev. Dr. Haitcox, decrying the modern tendency to discount the aged, has laid stress upon the fact that most of Jehovah's mighty prophets "wore the visage of age." He says:—

At seventy-five, Abraham was called of God to go into a strange land and begin a new dispensation of faith. At eighty, Moses was called to deliver a nation from bondage, and through him at eighty-one God gave the world the best law ever put upon record—the Ten Commandments. At seventy-eight, Joshua became the successor of Moses, and led Israel into the promised land. Isaiah prophesied until he was eighty-eight years old. Simeon and Anna worshipped regularly in the Temple after they were eighty, saw Christ there and sang songs that we yet sing; and John at more than ninety had visions of the King in His glory, and wrote for the learning of all nations.

And so Dr. Haitcox urges that to grow old gracefully in doing good and to be sweet in patient suffering even down to age's own waning, is the way for a Christian to fade out of earth into the life and glory of heaven.

The Cry of the Beasts. The Bishop of Hereford speaking at the recent meeting of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals had much to say in regard to some of the so-called "sports" which continue to disgrace our civilization and Christianity. Unhappily, however, pigeon shooting, the hunting of the carted stag, and rabbit coursing are aristocratic amusements, as the Bishop well knows from his failures to carry humane legislation through the House of Lords. The quiet newspaper account of one of these scenes in South Wales, which the Bishop quoted, reminds one of the callous brutality of ancient Rome:—

The rabbits were, as usual, taken from a hamper in which they had been penned for hours, were carried through the crowd, roughly shaken, and dropped about sixty yards from the dogs, which soon overtook them, and tore them limb from limb in the presence of a yelling mass of spectators. That was how thousands and thousands of our fellow-countrymen, with some women, and even children, got their amusement on a half-holiday in South Wales, and sometimes on a Sunday, and it was going on all over England.

Surely every Christian man and woman should support the Bishop in his efforts to bring about a better state of things.

Christ, "The Prince of Life."

"Of Him, and through Him, and to Him, are all things."

THOU liv'st, my life to be,
O, blessed Lord!
Live, then, Thy life in me,
Ever adored!
Thus may I have of Thee,
Through Thee and unto Thee,
Life more abundantly,
By Thine own Word.

"By Him all things consist."

Life's Principality,
Lord Jesus Christ,
Is Thine, because by Thee
All things consist.
All might and majesty,
In earth or sky or sea,
Must all ascribe to Thee
And none resist.

"And He is before all things."

And Thou precedest all
Eternally;
So all things great or small,
Concerning me,
Follow Thy gracious will,
Thy purpose to fulfil—
My purpose only still
To follow Thee.

H. E. L. P.

Therefore, Pray.

THE world, physically and politically, morally and religiously, is in a state of upheaval, and the near future seems pregnant with events of tremendous import. Specially untimely at such a crisis is the present political irritation at home. Domestic legislation is imperatively needed to alleviate crying evils such as indecent overcrowding, and to reform deeply-rooted abuses like the drink traffic. But these are passed over, and crude measures are pressed upon us for which half the people are not prepared or against which they are vehemently opposed.

It is an accepted axiom that in this country, with its constitutional liberties, legislation must wait on public opinion, national conviction, general agreement. In neglect of this sound principle we are precipitated into a state of domestic discord. Society is disintegrated by inharmonious elements; the Cabinet is divided against itself; and the Church of Christ, Established and Free, is in a like condition. The patience of a true patriotism would have prevented this. Mercy and truth would have met together; righteousness and peace would have kissed each other.

What can men of peace do but "pray for kings and all who are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godliness and honesty; for this is acceptable to God, our Saviour, who will have all men to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth"?

Prayer is the acknowledgment of law, the Law of Love. One chief sign of the last days is lawlessness. It is a cause of profound regret to wise and farseeing men that the leading man of the State should have set an example of lawlessness, though it be in so small a matter as running a motor at a speed dangerous to his fellow-subjects. It is still more deplorable that some of the most spiritual men in the churches, and others, should have been provoked by the high-handed action of the powers that be to take the lead in resisting the law. Whether they are justified or otherwise in their revolt is not our question now; but that it has been provoked by a law manifestly opposed to the convictions of at least half the nation whom they were elected to represent.

Our remedy is prayer. Our appeal must be to the Most High, who ruleth among the children of men; for now, as when the Times of the Gentiles began with Nebuchadnezzar, "the heavens do rule," and the cry of His people enters into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth.

God in Me.—What folly it is to imagine that I cannot expect God to be with me every moment! Look at the sunshine! Have you ever said, "Oh, how can I keep that sunlight, and be sure that I shall have it to use while working?" Is not God, who made the sun to shine, also willing and able to let His light and His presence so shine through me that I can walk all the day with God nearer to me than anything in nature? Praise God, He can do it. Why, then, does He do it so seldom, and in such feeble measure? There is but one answer: you do not permit it. You are so occupied and filled with other things.—Andrew Murray.

Communion with God.—There is no joy like the joy of communion. Living apart from God is misery. Look at Gethsemane. See the Saviour's face—how sad with sorrow because of the Father's wrath! But on the Mount of Transfiguration, when the Father said, "This is My well-beloved Son," the person of Christ glistened with glory. Communion with God has the effect of making us joyous. The Lord does not like to see any of His disciples looking sad. . . When men seek to entice you to forego communion with God, and to follow the world with them, let your face shine with the brightness that comes from your communion with the Master, and they will cease to trouble you.—Andrew A. Bonar.

"His Son."

VERY familiar passages of Scripture suffer from misquotation; one of them is 1 John i. 7, the last clause. Great preachers and ordinary folk constantly leave out an all-important description of our Saviour which it contains—"His Son." They misquote thus: "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." But take the whole verse, and it will at once be seen how important, even vital, are the words "His Son." "If we walk in the light, as He (God) is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus His Son cleanseth us from all sin" (R.V.). There is in the words which we cannot do without. All through the Gospel of redeeming love prominence is given to the relation of Jesus to the Father, because it becomes a link of union between Him and sinful men. The true conception of God's love to man can only be apprehended in the light of His love to the Son. "As the Father hath loved Me, so have I loved you; continue ye in My love." "Therefore doth My Father love Me, because I lay down My life for the sheep." This being so, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us!" Even the eternal Son is dearer to His Father because of His sacrifice of Himself for the sins of the whole world. We never see God rightly until we see Him in the tender radiance of this unspeakable love. We may not separate Him from the work of Jesus as if He were not the God of our salvation. He "commends His own love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us."

And shall we, even by a careless misquotation of precious words, speak as if He had nothing to do with the blood that cleanseth us from all sin? Neither from a practical nor from a theological point of view is the omission of trifling import. For we know that sin has always led men to misjudge God, to think hardly of Him, to mistrust Him, to hang back from Him; but these words of love draw them, banish their fears, and fill them with adoring wonder. "God loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins." This is the touch of tenderness which breaks hard hearts; and we shall do well, in quoting the old familiar words, to lay emphasis upon it by a slight pause and a gentler tone.

A STANDARD OF VALUE.

Do we reflect that, in omitting the words "His Son," we are removing from the whole passage the standard of value by which the sacrifice of Jesus is to be tested? It is not the blood of a man, of a hero, of a patriot, of a philanthropist; it is the blood of God's own Son. Who can measure the virtue, the efficacy, of that? He was man, for it is the "blood of Jesus." He was made flesh, and was in all points tempted like as we are, and suffered in that He was tempted; but He was without sin. The infinite value of absolute purity attached to His offering; a spot would have tarnished it, a flaw would have ruined it, but it was perfect. And it also had beyond perfection the worth of Divinity. The value of the Cross can be expressed in no terms of human equivalents. The kind is unique. It is "the Cross of our LORD Jesus Christ."

This Divine personal element seemed to be always present to the minds of the Apostles and early Christians. They rightly attribute to the work of our Lord the virtue of His Person, and identify it with Him. "HE is the propitiation for our sins." He gathers up into Himself all that He has achieved, just as He put Himself into it all in the first instance. We see the Son of God in all His attributes of purity, truth, righteousness, pity, compassion, love, in His cross. And hence its perfect suitability for sinners. "He suffered once for sins, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God." He brings us to God by bringing God to us; for "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." It is this vision of God in Christ that brings sinners nigh with repentant yet joyful hearts; it conquers us; "the weakness of God is stronger than men."

To omit mention of the fact that it is the blood of GOD'S SON that cleanseth from all sin, is to omit saying the very thing that a troubled heart, a sin-convinced soul, must know, if it is to be relieved in a way that affords true and abiding peace.

THERE IS A NOTE OF CERTAINTY

in the passage, as it actually stands, which is wanting if the words "His Son" are left out. The question must and will recur when any way of forgiveness and cleansing is pointed out.—"What does God think of this? Is He satisfied with it? Vain will be my satisfaction if He does not approve." And there is a Godward side of the atonement which no thought of man can ever explore; nor is it necessary that we should do so. But it is absolutely necessary that we should know it is satisfactory to God. We could not know this by any investigation of our own, but only by God's own assurance. And He has left us in no doubt. He identifies Himself with His Son n the whole work of mediation. "God was in Christ"—"Christ Jesus, whom God set forth to be a propitiation, through faith, by His blood, to show His righteousness, because of the passing over of the sins done aforetime, in the forbearance of God; for the showing, I say, of HIS righteousness at this present season; that HE might Himself be just, and the Justifier of him that hath faith in Jesus."

Thus the work is all of God, and upon Him who has undertaken the responsibility of our redemption, because He alone knows what He requires and we need, upon Him our faith rests in calm assurance. No one can insinuate a doubt as to whether we are right in trusting. Is He right? Does He know His own mind? To ask the question is to answer it. No one can go behind the Divine act and deed. Here was the secret of the Apostle Paul's victory when he exclaimed, "If God is for us, who is against us?" "It is Christ Jesus that died, yea rather, that was raised from the dead, who is at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us."

The Apostle John spoke with a sense of full assurance when he said that the blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin, because it was the blood of God's Son. Here is the hope of sinners and the confidence of believers. J. P. G.

"The Gospel . . . Concerning His Son."

(Rom. i. 1-3.)

JESUS came from heaven's high place,
Full of truth and full of grace,
To redeem our fallen race—
Jesus came!

Jesus lived our life below,
Drained its deepest cup of woe,
Met and overcame our foe—
Jesus lived!

Jesus died! Our debt He paid,
All our sins on Him were laid,
He our righteousness was made—
Jesus died!

Jesus rose—no more to die,
But His own to justify,
And to take His power on high—
Jesus rose!

Jesus lives! For us He prays,
Whom the Father hears always;
He is with us all the days—
Jesus lives!

Jesus comes! O day most sweet,
When the saved their Lord shall greet,
And be found in Him complete—
Jesus comes!

The Soul's Breathing-Time.

AS I sat in one of our great London parks the other day, under the shade of a noble elm, the priceless value of these "lungs" of our congested city was brought home to me with more than ordinary force. How many tired mechanics, weary mothers, and sickly children turn into these beautiful recreation grounds to inhale a purer air than that found in and around their own dwellings! But the open spaces are not for such only. Strong men, healthy maidens, and sturdy youngsters throng our parks and public gardens literally for the purpose of snatching a few brief hours of breathing-time! Recognising, as the people are surely doing more and more, the value of pure air in promoting physical health, the needs of the body are thus satisfied by setting apart a definite fraction of the week for what is really a combination of legitimate recreation and a physiological exercise.

It is a common expression with us all, in the hurry of modern life, that sometimes we "have scarcely breathing-time." Such, indeed, is truly the case with almost the majority of those who have to toil for their daily bread. In office, warehouse, and factory alike, the same pathetic cry resounds: "No time! No time!"

And yet time is made for pleasure; the demands of the body must be satisfied, the mind clamours for something to amuse it and to gratify its longings.

There is another voice which speaks from within. Its soft whispers fall like the evening zephyrs; it is pleading earnestly, though oft it goes unheeded; it is the voice of the soul.

Can we not pause, yea, even the busiest among us, to consider the claims of our own soul? Does it not require its "breathing-time" as much as its mortal tenement does? Alas! too often it is cramped and confined in the darkness, or let out, it may be, periodically, to enjoy the light while its possessor is nominally engaged in what he is pleased to call worship. It is then shut up again: its aspirations are stifled; it becomes dwarfed.

The normal atmosphere of the soul is the atmosphere of heaven; only in that can it thrive and flourish. Just as "the body without breath is dead," even so will the soul, if it be deprived of its natural respiratory medium, inevitably droop and wither. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

A good breathing capacity is generally regarded as a sign of sound health; but before this can be obtained many hours of practice must have been spent in physical drill and culture. Similarly the degree of the soul's breathing-power is a measure of its health, and a "healthy" soul is one which has been made "whole" by actual contact with its Divine source. How many hours, or even minutes, do we devote to this most important and holy of all duties, the culture of the soul?

Let us, therefore, seize every opportunity of allowing our soul as much "breathing-time" as possible, not by fits and starts, nor on one day of the week only, but at all times and in all places let it constantly breathe itself out in love and adoration, and, at the same time, breathe in deeply its warm, native atmosphere of heaven. NORMAN MEACHEN.

The Fragrance of Prayer.—In St. John's vision of heaven the redeemed are represented as having in their hands "golden vials, full of odours, which are the prayers of saints." The meaning is not that the saints in glory offer up prayers to God; rather the thought seems to be that earth's supplications rise up to heaven as sweet incense—that while humble believers in this world are engaged in offering up prayers and supplications, holy odours are wafted up before God. There is an exquisite beauty in this thought that true prayer is fragrance to God. The pleadings and supplications of His people on the earth rise from lowly homes, from sick rooms, from darkened chambers of grief where loved ones kneel beside their dead, from humble sanctuaries, from stately cathedrals, and are wafted up before God, as the breath of flowers is wafted to us in summer days from sweet fields and fragrant gardens. And God "smells a sweet savour." Prayer is perfume to Him.—J. R. Miller.

Directory of the Devout Life.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Christ, the completement of Human Life.

THE first question that an age asks of a new teacher is, "What is your relation to the past? What have you to say of the great prophets and teachers, at whose feet for generations our forefathers have sat?" To that question the reply has often been, "My mission is to destroy; you have been misled; the path by which former generations have travelled is by no means the easiest or best. I have come to suggest that we wipe the slate, that we obliterate the past, that we begin by laying new foundations on which to construct a larger and more commodious erection."

This is the creed of the revolutionary. In the French Revolution, Robespierre and his confederates went so far as to obliterate the septennial division of time, insisting that the week should consist of ten rather than seven days. New names were affixed to the days, to the streets, and to the officials of the State.

But it was not thus that Christ inaugurated His work. He answered the thoughts of His age, saying, "Think not that I am come to destroy." Every "jot and tittle" of the ancient code was dear to Him. Jesus was no iconoclast. Radical though He was in going to the very roots of things, He was not a revolutionary.

As the noon fulfils the dawn, as summer fulfils the spring, as manhood fulfils childhood, as the great artist fulfils the struggling ideal of the generality of men, in the poem, the statue, or the sonata, so does Jesus Christ gather up the highest ideals inspired by God's Spirit in men's hearts or engraven by His hand on tablets of stone. Wherever there is suggestion of eternal truth He realizes it, and shows men the steps by which they may climb to its sublime height.

. . . . . .

Of course, there was a measure of destruction. When the Epistle to the Hebrews was written, the institutions of the old covenant were becoming old, waxing aged, and were nigh unto vanishing away (Heb. viii. 13). But the destruction was only part of the natural process through which the ideal of the ancient Scriptures was being fulfilled. It was not a destruction which left no trace, as when the fire destroys the artist's studio, burning sketch and picture, the plaster cast and the finished statue; but the destruction of the less perfect form in face of the finished and completed design. Thus the rough sketch is superseded by the finished painting, the bud by the flower, the toys and the lesson-books of childhood by the interests of the mature man. The emblems of the kindergarten fulfil their work in the child's mind by giving it conceptions of shape and form, and its first rudimentary knowledge. They are then cast aside, but the conceptions that they helped to form are a permanent possession.

The Aaronic Priesthood was destroyed, that it might be fulfilled in the one unchangeable priesthood of the Son of God. The altars, on which ten thousand victims had been consumed, were destroyed, and their ashes poured out upon the ground, because they were fulfilled in that one Altar on which the supreme Propitiation was made. The Temple was destroyed, because the Shekinah of God's Presence had gone forth to fulfil that temple which is composed of saved souls, and of which the Apostle says, "the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple of the Lord." The whole system of ceremonial observance, with which Leviticus is full, has been destroyed, because love has come to be the inner principle of the Christian heart, and "Love is the fulfilling of the Law."

Under the term "Law and Prophets," our Lord includes, by familiar Jewish abbreviation, the entire range of the Old Testament (Matt. vii. 12; xxii. 40; Luke xvi. 16; xxiv. 44; Acts xiii. 15). It is probable that He never possessed a copy of the Old Testament Scriptures for His own private use. The only Bible that was within His reach was that which was kept in the synagogue; but on His retentive memory and heart as a child, Mary in the home, and the old Rabbi in the school of the synagogue, and, above all, the Spirit of Inspiration Himself, had deeply written the whole text of Sacred Writ. It was thus that He knew the Scriptures, though He had never learned in the schools of the metropolis.

Nothing could exceed our Lord's reverence for the Scriptures. He quotes or refers to them 400 times. With these He parried the temptations of the wilderness; met and foiled the criticisms of Pharisee and Scribe; and consoled His own heart when it was fainting amid the shadows of Calvary. Everything that the Psalmist had said of the law and testimonies of God was literally appropriated by Jesus. They were sweet as honey to His taste, "yea, sweeter than honey and the honeycomb." In them He found the germ of the Messianic ideal, which He realized in altogether unexpected ways, and to fulfil which was His one eager purpose. It is not without profound significance that we are told that on the cross He knew that all things had been finished with the exception of the one Scripture, which told how the rejected "hind of the morning" should be parched with thirst, and receive at the hand of its foes not water, but vinegar; then "that the Scripture might be accomplished, He said, 'I thirst'" (John xix. 28).

From first to last, the life of our Lord was the fulfilment in spirit and letter of the ancient ritual. As the Son of the Law, He obeyed the initial rite of Judaism on the eighth day after birth, and there was no item of the law, even to the dots of the i's or the crossing of the t's which He omitted or slurred. "He died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." What could only be partially true of His apostle, was literally true of the Lord, as "touching the righteousness which is of the law, He was found blameless."

Our Lord fulfilled the ceremonial law (Luke ii. 21, 22, 27; Gal. iv. 4) and fulfilled the moral law, since He was Jesus Christ "the righteous" (1 John ii. 1). He honoured the law by His obedience "even to death," atoning for its breach and violation by mankind, and giving through His unknown sufferings an answer to its just dues and demands, such as could not have been afforded, though the whole race had been mulcted to the uttermost farthing of penal consequences. His fulfilment, therefore, was not for Himself alone, but as the second Adam, the representative man, and for us all (Is. xlii. 21).

. . . . . .

"The law could make nothing perfect" (Heb. vii. 19), because it dealt so largely with particular instances and external observances, and men sought to satisfy it by an obedience which consisted almost wholly in "meats and drinks and carnal ordinances, imposed until the time of reformation." A servant in your home who has been carefully trained may fulfil all the outward demands of household work; but how different is the service which is compelled by an outward rule, and compensated for by the specified wage, from the service which the wife and mother gives, inspired by a love which feeds upon the sacrifices it makes! The law could not produce perfect characters, because it did not as yet deal with the principle of the self-life which vitiates our best obedience. Indeed, the ancient ritual, in most cases, even developed the self-principle, as in the case of the Pharisees, because the accumulation of outward obedience was deemed to produce a larger amount of merit, and therefore to procure a higher place in the sight of God.

Our Lord, on the other hand, came to teach that love would fulfil all demands of the law and the prophets, and more. He taught that to love one's neighbour would be the fulfilment of the law, and that obedience to every commandment was summed up in one word, "Thou shalt love" (Rom. xiii. 8-10; Gal. v. 14).

Do we, then, "make void the law through faith"? No, since faith is capacity for God, it receives out of His fulness the baptism of perfect love. More and more as we love, we establish the law (Rom. iii. 31). In proportion as we walk after the Spirit of Love, the requirement of the law is fulfilled in us (Rom. viii. 4). Thus Christ, in "shedding His love abroad in our heart," becomes the "end of the law for righteousness to all who believe," and we present before God a reverence for the ancient Scriptures, and a fulfilment of their precepts, which are produced in our deepest nature by the Spirit of Love.

. . . . . .

Is your soul enamoured with the love of some great ideal? And is it the complaint of your life that it has been too high for you to attain? Are you lying at the foot of the cliff, bruised and mangled by repeated failure? Are you almost in despair? Be of good cheer, Christ has come "not to destroy, but to fulfil"; to take each yearning purpose and conduct it to maturity; to show how every desire for goodness may be realized, how the crescent of promise may become the full orb of fulfilment, and to accomplish in you and for you, here and hereafter, every "jot and tittle" of the Divine demands.

"The Christian" and the Hippopotamus.

MR. A. H. SMITH, who since 1897 has been engaged in the Mission to the Gonds, Balaghat (C.P., I.), tells an interesting story in connection with his experiences when he was leaving Central Africa for India. After walking for thirty-two miles to reach the steamer, which he hoped would take him to the mouth of the Zambesi River, he found to his dismay that, owing to the state of the river, he would have to go a considerable distance by a small boat, paddled by a crew of eight natives.

As the full moon seemed to guarantee a fair light, Mr. Smith, who had but scanty provisions with him, decided to undertake the journey at night, in the hope of reaching his destination on the following morning about breakfast-time. Moon, elements, and men, however, combined to frustrate his plan, and to lengthen out his trip until the night following. Not many hours after they had started, the wind rose, chasing black clouds together, which obscured and hid the sky-lamp. More than once the men refused to go on; yet the stronger will of the white man made them yield. After many vicissitudes they were at last reaching the station. Faint lights in the distance gave the crew new courage, and while they were paddling along and droning out a native melody, Mr. Smith fell into a light sleep, from which he was suddenly aroused by cries of terror. His men, evidently in a panic, were throwing down their paddles, and preparing to abandon the boat.

He sprang to his feet and asked whatever was the matter. "Look, look!" they cried, pointing to a huge brute, with a bellow loud enough to be felt, which was sliding from a sand-bank into the river and giving chase.

All of them were alarmed, not excepting the missionary, who, while prevailing upon the frightened natives to resume their work, prayed, as never before, for deliverance. The hippopotamus seemed to be coming nearer and nearer. The bellowing increased; for his chums on the sandbank seemed to be encouraging him with their voices as he was gaining on the boat. "Lord help us!"

Mr. Smith prayed, and then it dawned on his mind to set fire to some papers which he had been reading in the earlier part of the day. They were numbers of The Christian. The brute, kept in obeyance by the flare, would quicken his pace as soon as the flame subsided. By the time the last copy had been ignited, they were drawing near Chiromo. Probably afraid of the proximity of human habitations, the hippopotamus dived under water, and was seen no more. "How imminent the danger may have been," says Mr. Smith, "I am unable to suggest, but I know that the crew, and many natives ashore when they heard the story, appeared devoutly grateful as for a great deliverance."

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, August 23. Psalm xcvii.

A Psalm of Homage to the Divine King.

THE previous Psalm begins with the summons for a new song, and this Psalm supplies it.

1-3. The Royal State of the King. To the singer's eye the Divine Kingdom sweeps away over the upturned faces of many lands, and to the far-distant isles washed by the western sea. He little knew what islands lay beyond his ken, which were to be made glad by Gospel light—amongst them our own. Of this at least he was sure, that God's Kingdom always and everywhere must mean joy. There may be awe and reverence, because of the mystery of the Divine Nature, which surrounds it with clouds and darkness; but there must be joy, since Righteousness and Judgment are the basis of the Divine Throne; and these are more solid than the obscuring clouds. A fire may go before Him, but this is only to be dreaded by His adversaries.

4-6. The Advent of the King. A grand piece of word-painting. The world is densely wrapped with thick darkness, which is suddenly lit up by a flash of lightning. So vivid and awe-inspiring is that flash that the earth trembles, and the very hills melt as wax under the touch of fire. The heavens are radiant with the goings-forth of the chariots of His salvation, and all the world sees His glory.

7-9. The Double Effect of Jehovah's Advent. The worshippers of idols (mere nothings) are abashed, and the very gods fall down in worship, as Dagon did before the Ark; whilst Zion is glad—all the more so, because God has vindicated His supremacy.

10-12. Exhortations and Encouragements to God's People. The more we love God, the more we shall be drawn from all that is alien to His nature; but all lovers of God, His saints, shall be Divinely succoured, and shall reap harvests of light and gladness. All through the dark winter of our sorrow, God is sowing the seeds of abundant joy. In the dark night of Calvary, Jesus sowed seeds which shall fructify in heaven.

MONDAY, August 24. Psalm xcviii.

A New Song.

This Psalm celebrates the return from Babylon with outbursting gladness. When God shall revive His Church, and when He brings back His children from the captivity of their sins, what can we give Him but new songs for the wonders He has done?

1-3. The theme for thanksgiving is first stated. Jehovah had made known His salvation—i.e., He had given effect to it, in inclining Cyrus to let His people go. We should read these words with the books of Nehemiah and Ezra. The exiles were few in number, and had cause for sadness as they beheld the blackened walls of their temple and homes; but their hearts were overflowing with gratitude. God had remembered His lovingkindness and faithfulness, and their foes had been compelled to admit and wonder at His glory. Let not the troubled and oppressed who read these words suppose that God has forgotten them. Before long He will give proof that He remembers His love and troth.

4-6. The redeeming love of God makes the world glad. It seems as though the Gentile nations fill the courts of some vast temple with the tumult of voice and harp, of trumpet and horn. From the assembled crowds, the loud sounds of melody arise. It seems an anticipation of the millennial era, which shall yet break on our world. O lagging years, speed your steps!

7-9. This is almost identical with xcvi. But instead of the trees of the forest, verse 8 substitutes the streams, as clapping their hands. "The meeting waves are conceived of as striking against each other, with a sound resembling that of applauding palms." When the heart is right with God, all creation seems vocal.

TUESDAY, August 25. Psalm xcix.

"An Earthly Echo of the Seraphic Trisagion."

(Compare 3, 5, 9, with Isa. vi. 3.)

1-3. This opening strophe dwells on Jehovah's holiness in general terms. The veil is withdrawn, and He is seen throned on the cherubim, and when that vision of His royal state is given, all the peoples of the earth are touched with reverence, and the stable earth staggers. The greatness of God had been specially revealed in Zion, but how much more in the death of Calvary! As we think of the exaltation of our Saviour to the right hand of God, we may well ask that His dear name may be honoured, loved, and exalted.

4, 5. Note the union between the King's strength and judgment. We are glad not only that our King is strong, but that He is the Righteous and Holy Saviour. He is the just God, as well as the Redeemer—"Just and the Justifier." To Eastern nations, worn out with the exactions of their rulers, there was special fascination in a just and righteous King, and the vast audience whom the singer addressed is asked to become prostrate in reverent silence.

6-9. Venerable examples of saints of other days are introduced to quicken the languid pace of our worship. Moses is classed among the priests, because he sometimes exercised priestly functions (Ex. xxiv.; Lev. viii.); see also Ex. xvii. 12, and xxxii. 30-32). Samuel interceded for Israel and offered sacrifices (1 Sam. vii. 9; xii. 19). Jeremiah also couples them together (xv. 1). The conclusion of the Psalmist from such instances is that God is a forgiving God, willing to answer men's cry for help, but awarding chastisement for their sins. Note that tender pronoun—He is Jehovah, our God. We may lay claim to all He has and is in Jesus Christ.

WEDNESDAY, August 26. Psalm c.

The Old Hundredth.

This is the last of these Psalms of the King.

1. Delitzsch describes this verse as the signal-blast of the trumpet, which summons all the earth to worship in the courts of the Lord's House (see v. 4).

2. Gladness becomes God's service. There are many Psalms in which the minor chords overpower the major ones, where the weeping prevails above the rejoicing. But this Psalm is full of unalloyed and unclouded sunlight. There are days in most lives when no cloud flecks the blue—halcyon days, days of heaven.

3. The reason for this gladness is given here. "We are His." His by creation, by providence, and by grace; and His by the glad consecration of our hearts to His glorious service. You are His by right, whether you are His by choice or not. Will you not acknowledge His claims, looking up into His face with gratitude, and saying, "I am Thine, save me"? And His possession involves His shepherd care. We are His sheep, it is for Him to lead us into green pastures, and beside waters of quiet rest.

4. To the Psalmist's eye, through the wide open portals, the crowds pour into the Temple, praising and blessing God. In a later book we are again assured that all nations which God has made shall come and worship before Him.

5. And here we have the great attraction, that Jehovah is good, and that His love and faithfulness are for ever. What a theme is here! Amid all the apparent contradictions of the world and human life, never abandon your faith that behind, and working through all, God is love and truth.

THURSDAY, August 27. Psalm ci.

The Psalm of a well-ordered Home.

This is one of David's Psalms. The question of verse 2, "When wilt Thou come unto me?" probably utters his intense desire to see the Ark removed to Jerusalem. It was, therefore, in the early part of his reign that he composed this song, and declares in it his fixed purpose to make his kingdom as much as possible like that of God.

1-4. The king lays down the rule for his own character and conduct. His life shall be one long song of praise. He will not give rein to his passions, but will walk in his house with that perfect self-command which proves that a man is fit to rule others, since he can rule himself. It is much easier to live in public than private, and some of us who can speak and preach with tolerable acceptance, find it far harder to live at home on the high level we insist upon for others. Note verse 3. "Things of Belial" (marg.) are found in many homes to turn us aside from our purpose, and each of us has to make resolute choice between a perfect heart of undiluted loyalty to God and a perverse heart. We cannot drift into goodness. We must make up our mind not to know evil.

5-8. From his private the king turns to his public life. He will root out of his palace the proud and all liars, whilst he chooses for places of honour all who sympathize with his desire for holiness. Alas! as we think of the incidents that followed, we see how David's good resolutions miscarried. The best of men are but men at the best. Only God can make us really good and keep us true to our ideals!

FRIDAY, August 28. Psalm cii.

The Prayer of the Destitute.

This Psalm clearly was written when Zion was in ruins, and the time of her restoration was at hand. The date of its composition must have been, therefore, towards the close of the exile, when the sorrows of the patriot Jews were being irradiated by the hope of speedy return to the land and city of their fathers.

1, 2. In the opening invocation, the Psalmist makes use of former Psalms, such as xviii. 6; xxvii. 9; lxix. 17; lxxi. 2. How good it is to be able to interweave with our prayers the intercessions of holy souls that have preceded us!

3-11. The Psalmist bitterly bemoans his pitiful condition. His days melt away into the air, as smoke escaping from a chimney; his heart withers like grass in the desert; he compares himself, in his lonely grief, to solitude-loving birds; he is beset by the mockery of his enemies; he seems caught up and cast away by the Divine wrath.

12-22. Now a break comes in the clouds. The singer sees Jehovah sitting enthroned in glory and restoring Jerusalem. The hour fixed in the eternal counsels has come round for the rebuilding of the ruined city, and the indication of this is in the loving interest which her children are taking in her desolations. When God's people are burdened with the condition of His Church, it is on the eve of a great revival.

23-28. Man's life is brief, his activities limited to a few fleeting years—what a comfort it is to look away from his poor endeavours to God's eternal years. He will not fail nor be discouraged till He has set judgment on the earth. Remember that these magnificent words are applied to our Lord (Heb. i.).

SATURDAY, August 29. Psalm ciii.

A Psalm of Blessing and Praise.

This is one of the noblest Psalms in the entire collection. It begins with the personal, but the tiny rill of personal thanksgiving opens out into the broad stream of universal praise and adoration, ending with thunderous acclaim in which angels and worlds blend.

1-5. The personal circle. Note the present tenses of God's lovingkindness. His benefits of forgiveness, healing, redemption, and satisfaction are new every morning. Let our songs be new. Let us dwell on His mercies till the lark rises from the ground of our souls, her wings besprinkled with the fresh dew.

6-18. The circle of human experience. God's dealings with Israel are primarily in the Psalmist's thought, but he soon enlarges the scope of his song to include God's forgiveness and compassions, which embrace all mankind. Even man's frailty does but bring out more conspicuously the Divine lovingkindness.

19-22. The circle of the universe. "The choir invisible" is called upon to swell the chorus. But it should be noticed that the Psalmist does not dwell here upon forgiveness and lovingkindness, but on the regal glory of the Creator and Governor of all. Only men know what His forgiveness means!

British Syrian Mission.

A WARM friend of this Mission writes to us:—

"Will you allow me to call attention to the pressing needs of the British Syrian Mission? Though the special appeal for raising £2,000 has received an 'encouraging response,' the terrible order for retrenchment has had to go forth. Are we realizing what this means, as it reaches the eye or ear of those who receive it, and how their summer rest time must be clouded, while the plans and hopes for the coming winter's work are harassed by such questions as 'Which schools can we close? Can the expenses of Shemlan, for instance, be reduced, and can the institution at Beyrout bear "cutting down"?'

"Will not Christians at home, enjoying their great 'Mildmay,' 'Keswick,' and other privileges, help to secure a like summer of rest for the members of Committee and the workers in the Holy Land, by relieving them of the anxiety which presses so heavily? If some who have not yet subscribed to this object would begin to do so, and those who do would each give a little more in amount, or a little more often, the thing would and could be done. It is touching to hear of the native teachers in the various schools already taking up the burden voluntarily and heartily, and giving large proportions of their small salaries to help us in the present crisis. May the Church at home come behind in no gift."

The special appeal referred to, besides being circulated through the post, appeared in The Christian, and met with an encouraging response, £1,894 being received, as well as £500 for investment. Accordingly, as we learn from the secretary, Rev. A. J. Stevens, the financial year closed without an adverse balance. Mr. Stevens writes:—

"Foreseeing another deficit at the end of 1903-4, unless special action was taken, the Committee regretfully felt it necessary to take the only course open to them—'retrenchment!' That such a course (though, we trust, only to be temporarily followed) should be deemed necessary is a great sorrow to the home-friends of the Mission, and how much more to the workers in Syria who are just now needing to be reinforced by, at least, six more lady workers? The secretaries will be glad to correspond with any ladies who may be able to respond to the call for workers; or assist in the holding of meetings in aid."

French Squadron at Dunkerque.

ON Saturday, August 8, the French Channel Squadron visited Dunkerque. We filled two large bags with Marked New Testaments, Scripture portions, and Gospel booklets, and proceeded on board the ships. Having explained our object, we were kindly received, and full liberty given to distribute to officers and men. Eager hands were stretched out on all sides, our bags were soon emptied, and we had to return for more.

In presenting a Marked New Testament to the commander of one of the vessels, we explained the meaning of the marked passages. He listened with deep interest, and cordially thanked us. We gave away over one hundred copies of these books, besides several hundreds of Scripture portions and Gospel booklets.

Before leaving, we saw many of the sailors busily engaged in reading the books. After a brief stay of three days, the squadron left, bearing with them the precious seed of the Word, "cast upon the waters." The kind donors of the books, and others, will join us in prayer that God will bless this effort to the salvation of many precious souls. The opportunities of Gospel efforts are many and various, but we are hindered through lack of funds. D. and A. Stewart Mackenzie.

Racing Stables Mission.

IN a letter to us, Sir Matthew Dodsworth, Bart., says:—"Some of your readers may have heard of this mission, which has been started for the purpose of carrying the Gospel to lads employed in racing stables, where, except by special and suitable effort, they are practically unreached.

"The scope of the mission is to save the lads and not attempt the impossible task of improving the 'Turf.' Already a well-established work is going on at Chantilly, the large racing centre near Paris, where many hundreds of English lads are employed, and a beginning has been made at Newmarket, under the superintendence of Mr. Eliot Walton, who for long led the work at Chantilly. He has begun with a Bible-class under very encouraging conditions as to numbers, and asks me to state that books for a lending library would be of great value to him. 'Yesterday,' writes Mr. Walton, 'I saw one of the lads reading "Dick Turpin," a story suggestive of the ideals that are most freely presented to their minds.'

"There is need for boys' books of biography and healthy fiction that will attract the interest of these lads, and, at the same time, put good types of manhood and boyhood before them, or such books as will awaken their interest in history and the things of nature. Among the multitude of works of healthy adventure that are in the market, it is not difficult to make a choice; but if any friends wish to purchase new copies for a present to the mission it might be well to first consult Mr. Walton, either by submitting a list to him or by asking his advice, so as to avoid duplicating the gifts of others. Old books will also be acceptable. Communications can be addressed to the hon. sec., 26, Paternoster Square, London, E.C."

Anti-Infidel Campaign in France.

FRANCE is passing through a strange experience. The people are waking up from their lethargy and indifference about religion, which is becoming now the important and exciting question of the day.

A remarkably talented infidel, Sebastien Faure, is taking advantage of the awakening interest of the people, and in all the large towns is holding gatherings to prove the absurdity of the God of the Bible. Thousands flock to his meetings; and though perhaps not at once won over to pure atheism, they are yet keenly interested in the subject.

Such a painful spectacle has aroused many of the more thoughtful Christians in France; and Pastor Houter, the zealous and godly president of "Home Mission work," has come forward with a scheme for combating this infidel campaign.

He proposes to imitate the tactics of the enemy, and to send forth a missioner, as gifted and attractive as M. Faure, but full of spiritual power and love for souls, who, during the next two years, will visit all the large towns, and in public halls and theatres will give popular lectures, setting forth the Gospel and the claims of the Lord Jesus in all their beauty and simplicity.

M. Houter believes that the country is ripe for such an effort, giving his own personal experience as to the wonderful charm that the Gospel, in all its novelty, has for the people at large; and he says that he knows the man who in every way would be suited for the work. He calculates that for this two years' "Anti-Faure" campaign there would be needed, in addition to what could be raised locally, the sum of £400, to cover salary of missioner, travelling expenses, hire of halls, posting bills, &c.

A full account of the scheme can be seen in M. Houter's magazine, La Mission Intérieure, for June and July. Help can be sent by cheque or foreign P.O.O. either direct to Mr. Houter (27, Rue Pierre-Dupré, Marseille), or to Mr. W. F. Hathaway, 1, Gerald Road, Bournemouth, who is acting as English correspondent of the enterprise.

The Spezia Mission.

IN a recent letter Rev. H. H. Pullen gives some idea of a typical day's work at the Mission's headquarters:—

"First thing in the morning communications from our stations in Tuscany and Reggio Emilia claimed attention. At the former our chief worker is John Baptist Malapelle, who was once a monk of the order of St. Francis of Assisi. We are contemplating changes in the large district over which he has control, for the strengthening of the work. At Reggio Emilia (the central province of Italy) we have a work among Socialists, Anarchists and Republicans, under Father Casini, who was once a powerful Roman Catholic priest. The work goes well, in spite of opposition and persecution.

"Then there were interviews with leading workers about our contemplated new crusade in the Lunigiana district, where, in a land which has been closed to the Gospel for many centuries, there is, in answer to prayer, an open door. We had also to consider details about our proposed forward movement in the eastern province of Venezia, which, God willing, we shall make in the autumn. After that, orphanage affairs claimed prayerful attention. The enemies of the Gospel have, during the last two years, made a persistent assault on this branch of the work, but after sore trial the worst is passed.

"A welcome communication later in the day from our lawyers informed us of the final decision in the lawsuit into which we had been most unwillingly dragged by Jesuitical opponents of our school work. The case has painfully pursued its weary length for two and a half years. Great wealth and the power of the Vatican were opposed to us; but God has intervened, and, in spite of much intrigue, the case has been decided in our favour. Nevertheless, it will cost us much; but the expenses will not be a tithe of what they would have been if the decision had gone against us.

"The day finishes by the first of our school breaking-up gatherings. Our largest hall was packed with people, and many could not gain admission. To-morrow night we shall have a similar gathering composed of totally different people. Our schools are so large that we have thus to have two gatherings, and it almost seems as if next year we should need three to accommodate the greater part of even those who will want to come." Mr. F. A. Bevan, D.L., J.P., is the treasurer, and Mr. Eliot Howard, J.P., is the hon. secretary.

Salvationists on the Continent.

AFTER completing a tour in Italy, Commissioner Cosandey, who is in charge of the Salvation Army work in France, Italy, and Belgium, writes:—"At Milan we had seven cases of conversion, some Socialists being among the number. At Florence an intelligent gentleman—a Roman Catholic and a captain in the Italian Army—said to me: 'I have come to the conclusion that the Gospel, as you preach it, is the only means of regenerating my people! The Catholic Church has signally failed, and our only hope is in the Gospel.'

"At Spezia the Mayor, who is a nominal Catholic, lent us the Town Hall free of charge; it was packed with an intelligent audience. The people listened with the greatest attention, and some of them inquired the way of salvation. The next day, in the beautiful Baptist Church, which was kindly placed at our disposal, we had a powerful meeting; while in Genoa the church was also packed, and two volunteers for salvation came to the pulpit rails."

Referring to rescue work in France, Mr. Cosandey adds: "Each one of our Homes is now full. In fact we have had to take larger premises in Nimes, where we have secured a house to accommodate thirty women. Our Neuilly Rescue Home being also too small, we contemplate buying a house at Nanterre, about twenty minutes by rail from Paris. We shall then be able to accommodate thirty girls in our Paris Rescue Home. The cost of this building, with fittings, will be about £2,400. The Hôtellerie for women, which can accommodate 250 girls, is full every night, and very touching indeed are the stories of wandering ones, who have not only found a refuge in time of need, but have been led to Jesus."

From Dr. Baedeker.

HITHERTO the Lord has shown His loving care over His servant in a marked way. Leaving England on July 16, I have been kept and guarded to Karlsruhe, Gernsbach, Stuttgart, Kornthal, Königsfeld, Zurich, Adelbodan, Bern, and having come to Vienna, I hope to visit Schloss Treffen, near Villach, Budapest, and O'Tura, sowing the precious seed in every place. In every place I find receptive hearts and open doors for sowing seed, and the Word of utterance being given in the various places in the confidence that God will give the increase.

At Treffen, near Villach, I hope to attend the annual conference of Christians on August 15, at O'Tura amongst Slovaks on August 20, then on the 22nd I hope to arrive in good time for the Blankenburg Conference, which this year is of a special importance as maintaining its real alliance character on the one foundation of the Church of God, which is His body, embracing all who in every land and in every denomination are joined to the Lord and born of God. Many friends from Russia are expected to be with us, also from Great Britain and other nations, the only line of separation being the blood of Christ—"When I see the blood I will pass over you."

Pray for us, and for the various nations and denominations, that all be gathered and be closely drawn together around the One Centre, Jesus Christ and Him crucified.

In an Indian Jungle.

IN connection with the Balaghat Mission to the Gonds a new brick church, which was so greatly needed at our oldest Mission station, has just been opened.

The time fixed for the opening was a Sabbath morning. From other stations of the mission and from neighbouring villages, a congregation had assembled which filled to overflowing the little edifice, and made us to feel that the faith of our brother the builder had not been equal to the need in the matter of dimensions. A bright, happy service was held, the dominant note of which was thankfulness to God for all His mercies, and the new building was dedicated to the service of the Lord Jesus; we have good hope too that some hearts were freshly dedicated to the same Saviour. In the afternoon, fifty-seven of our village Christians met at the Lord's Table, and we enjoyed a blessed season of fellowship with Him and with one another.

The following day the new church was the scene of four weddings, a happening full of interest in India, as well as in other parts of the world. Before the service, however, the writer had the joy of proceeding to the bank of a neighbouring river and receiving by baptism two men into the Christian Church and community. We then adjourned to the new church, which we found so crowded that there was some difficulty in finding room for the chief participators in the service. After our entrance the crowd of deeply-interested spectators overflowed all the available space inside and crowded about the windows and open door. A wedding gives a valuable opportunity of instructing our jungle friends in the principles of Christian marriage, and the crowded audience listened with rapt attention to the address given on this subject; but the profoundest attention was of course reserved for the responses of the brides and bridegrooms, in which again our jungle friends show strong likeness to those dwelling in more favoured lands.

These opening services brought to decision an intelligent and fairly educated young Gond who had been halting between two opinions for a long time, and he was baptised at Baihir the following Sunday.

The most recent development of the Mission is the opening of a fourth station in the town of Balaghat, where an encouraging beginning has been made. J. Lampard.

Abbe Bourrier's Teaching.

IN our issue of May 14, we felt constrained to advise our readers of the sadly unsatisfactory nature of the teaching and influence of Le Chrétien Français, edited by ex-Abbé Bourrier. To make our meaning plain, we quoted some sentiments on Death, from the pen of ex-Abbé Vidalot, co-editor of the paper named, adding the words: "These views have no affinity with Christian doctrine. They belong to Buddhism."

During recent weeks M. Bourrier has made several references to the matter in his paper; he withdraws nothing, but rather announces his disposition to stand by the objectionable views to which we called attention. In these circumstances, we think it right to publish the following letter from a correspondent:—

In his protestation and letter to the Editor of The Christian, M. le Pasteur André Bourrier, at Sèvres near Paris, claims to be considered orthodox. Decidedly he confessed orthodox principles in his discourses held in aid of his œuvre in England, Germany, and Switzerland; neither can it be denied that he has actually done a great deal of good to his brother évadés, who are less fortunate than himself with regard to worldly means. However, he certainly must own himself that for the past twelvemonth the paper of which he is the editor, and for the articles of which he is consequently responsible, Le Chrétien Français (The French Christian), speaks boldly the language of freethinking and unbelief.

How will M. Bourrier reconcile the following articles and extracts with orthodox views? In Nos. 162 and 163, November 20 and 27, 1902, the Chrétien Français reproduced Réville's discourses on "Liberal Protestantism" without reserving to himself orthodox views. The number for January 1, 1903, brings a discourse of the French freethinker, Gabriel Séailles, containing an unmistakable commendation of Buddha and the Buddhist religion. "The Biblical Peril," "Critical Notes," "The Biblical Question," in No. 170, January 15, 1903, are all decidedly in favour of freethought overthrowing the teaching of the Bible. In "L'Aveu" ("The Avowal"), January 22, 1903, M. Bourrier, writing himself, says: ". . . This Bible . . . has authorized too many crimes and covered too many lies; it certainly has not made poor humanity any better."

And how does M. Bourrier maintain orthodox principles when, on February 5, 1903, in an article taken from the Raison on "Libre-pensée," in favour of freethinking, he literally reproduces ". . . the orthodox hypocrisy . . ." without disapproving of it, only calling it a hard expression? The number for April 23, 1903, brings a truly sad article from M. Bourrier's pen again, in which he speaks of the "adorable" trinity, "truth, justice, solidarity," comparing, tacitly, Christianity to "respectable and vain illusions"; and then he literally continues, ". . . These clergies—of whichever Church they may be—who live of symbols and interpretations, and whose religion is, in fact, but a vile egotism or a hypocritic esoterism . . . the Bible itself, of which criticism has shaken the literal authority, has no longer the same pretensions, but He whom M. l'Abbé Marcel Hébert defines admirably the 'incarnation of human conscience' stands fast for ever and ever . . . we hail . . . this modern criticism which takes care to reject—of Jesus Christ—even as it proceeds by evolution, all that is repugnant—to conscience—to reason. . . ." And the number for May 28 this year publishes a letter from an évadé, in which is literally mentioned: . . . "The narrow-minded rivalry of Christian sects, their reciprocal anathemas, did not appear to me less absurd than the scissions in the Buddhist sects, and the God of which they (i.e. the Christians) avail themselves, not less ridiculous than the Amida (? Sakya-muni?) of Buddhism. . . ."

Does M. Bourrier labour under a delusion with regard to calling himself "orthodox?"

It is to be sincerely hoped and wished that, recognising his fatal mistake, he will relinquish his freethinking ideas, and come back to, and then hold fast, his former belief in the Divine truth of the Bible, the same Bible which, as it has survived all attacks till our own days, will continue and stand fast for ever and ever.

It is with deep sorrow that we add the remark that the above excerpts from and references to the teaching of Le Chrétien Français fully substantiate our statement of May 14. Most sincerely do we regret that there should have been any need to bring this matter before our readers; but knowing how keenly many of them are interested in work among the "escaped" priests of France, we deemed it only right to distinguish between efforts which are in harmony with Evangelical principles and such as cannot with truth be so described. And in view of the fact that Abbé Bourrier has more than once reflected upon our commending to notice the well-known Œuvres des Prêtres, we think it well to add that this was done entirely without solicitation on the part of that agency. For many years our readers have shown practical sympathy with the work which was so long and honourably associated with the name of Professor Bertrand, and, therefore, we had, and have, great pleasure in assuring them that, in our judgment, that work is still worthy of Evangelical confidence and support.

Llandrindod Convention.

BY A WELSH MINISTER.

THOUGH distance and expense are considerable from most parts of Wales to Keswick, yet a few Christians have each year been able to wend their way thither to the Convention, to hear from men of God what Scriptural holiness means. Seven years ago, during Convention week, there came together one afternoon thirteen persons connected with Wales, for prayer and fellowship. Two or three of that little company are now on the mission field in India. It was felt that Wales, with its great love for religion, and its memories of great revivals, would enter upon better days, and do greater work than ever, if it had a Convention of its own. The idea took form that afternoon in one or two minds, and there God allowed it to remain for six whole years.

Last year three friends had a talk over this again, during Convention week at Keswick, when it was felt that the time was opportune for Wales to have a Convention of its own. That is how the Llandrindod Convention came about. It was held on new soil; the speakers were those who have been heard from time to time at Keswick. They were complete strangers, only one of them, Mrs. Penn-Lewis, having any connection with Wales. But the Lord was mightily present to own His Word, and make it triumph in the hearts of His people.

Many of the leading ministers of Wales were present throughout. Some of them attended every meeting, and, though critical in their mental attitude at first, yet it was a great advantage to have these honest thinkers there; for, after they were assured of the helpfulness of the teaching, there was no other difficulty in the way. When it was made clear to them that it was not a question of position only, but also of moral attitude, they were prepared to take that attitude at once of full surrender to Christ, and the acceptance of the Holy Spirit, for abundant life and effective service.

Concerning the Convention this year, held on August 3 to 7, it is not needful to write in detail. Mr Albert Head presided, and the first meeting was taken by Rev. E. Hopkins, who spoke of "the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ." It was felt to be a very appropriate message, in which the normal Christian life was clearly set forth. On the following day, the wrongs, the crooked things in the lives of religious people, were dealt with. The words of Revs. C. Inwood and Stuart Holden were felt to be burning messages, and some had probably a sleepless night afterwards. Mrs. Penn Lewis conducted meetings for Christian workers. The gatherings grew in attendance and power every day, every speaker being evidently anointed of the Spirit. The closing meeting, which was taken by Rev. F. B. Meyer, was indeed a crowning one, and doubtless many crowned Jesus that night Lord of all for the first time.

"In School and Playground: Five-minute Talks with Young People." By G. E. Morgan, M.A. Concerning these "talks," Rev. R. W. Atkinson (rector of St. John's, S.E.) writes:—"They are true to life, and cannot fail to teach the duty of observation. I shall do with this book as I did with a copy of Dreams and Realities, send it to a friend working among young lads, and who pronounced it just the book she wanted, saying the author seemed to have anticipated her difficulties and needs. It is bright, straight, and strong." (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

What the Church exists for.

FROM time to time during a long course of years we have presented these words as a question fitting to search the depths of every Christian heart. At other times we have employed them as a solemn proposition designed to recall the Great Commission of the ascending Lord :—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature . . . All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age."

Organizers at home and workers abroad have pondered over the words, and prayed about them, until their hearts are saddened by the growing conviction that the Church is largely in the dark, even now, in the beginning of the Twentieth Century, as to the essential object of its existence, and the great purpose of God in planting it among the nations of the earth. In a remarkable volume just published, entitled Dawn in the Dark Continent: or Africa and its Missions, containing the Duff Missionary Lectures for 1892, Dr. James Stewart, of Lovedale, propounds the familiar question in few words. (6s. net. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) He has dealt with his subject in its engrossing and fascinating aspects, and has discussed "The Future of Africa and the African;" but he finds it impossible to lay aside his pen without adding the following short chapter :—

What the Church Exists for.

This chapter contains no argument, appeal, or peroration on the benefits of missions, such as is frequently used at the close of a missionary address. It contains only the simple statement of the question—What does the Church exist for?

Its own conservation, or a self-regarding religious culture, can hardly be the complete answer, or the chief object of its existence.

Jesus Christ, the Founder of Christianity and of the Church, when He was on earth, said little about such conservation. Yet His public life was hardly begun when He sent out twelve men, and later on seventy, with a certain message; and His last act consisted of directions to His Church to carry that message all over the world, and "make Christians of all nations."

Twenty centuries have passed away, and the work is still undone—in reality is now being begun.

This question is not in the first instance for Church courts or Missionary boards. It can only be fitly and rightly answered by each individual Christian and each body of Christians formed into a church or congregation—the minister being the leader in the inquiry. When that is done, and the answer is rightly given, there will be an expansion of Missionary effort, unknown before, in influence, extent, and power.

Here we have a plain and dispassionate statement of fact. Notwithstanding that, in the course of centuries, devoted men and women have gone forth at the Lord's command, taking the Gospel to nations and races who have long dwelt in darkness and the shadow of death, the Church, as a Church, has not realized its calling and duty; "the work is still undone—in reality is now being begun"! May God lead his people out in confession of sin and humiliation of heart, that they have not with readiness of mind and swiftness of foot "left all things," and followed their Lord in His great Missionary example.

May not another question arise—What does the Christian exist for? Surely it is to testify for his Saviour and Lord. It is of the flesh that we divest the commands of our Master of their personal application. It is time, in this matter, to cease from man; and, in view of Christ's word to us, and the world's deep need, to propose the inquiry to ourselves individually rather than to our neighbours—"How much owest thou unto my Lord?" Assuredly the Spirit of sacrifice and service will lead many to answer in the words of the well-known hymn :—

Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were an offering far too small,
Love so amazing, so Divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all.

Rome's Gospel.

IN these days much is being said and written about the Romish Church, and among the items of special interest that have attracted the attention of God's children is an Italian edition of the four Gospels and Acts, published last year by a Roman Catholic society in Rome.

Some well-known Christians have considered this edition of the Gospels as a hopeful sign of better things to come for and through Rome; others, more dubious about her reform, content themselves with the present, and feel thankful for the circulation of this portion of God's Word.

Having laboured in the Gospel in Italy for many years, and having observed and studied the ways of the Papacy, may I say that my belief in her Evangelical reform or Scriptural testimony grows weaker every day; and, with many esteemed brethren in Italy and England, I view this recent Romish publication as one of her subtle efforts to cover her vile nakedness.

Having carefully perused the volume in question, preface, text notes, &c., I am convinced that Rome will gain more than the Gospel in Italy by this publication. She knows this, but many in England do not believe it, arguing: "Never mind the preface and notes, let John iii. 16 get among the people." The preface or the notes do not trouble us; but what about the poor deluded souls that will never get to John iii. 16, or if they do it will be in the confirmed belief that the gift of God is sacrificed on Rome's altars every day?

The reader of this Romish Gospel is first of all treated to a characteristic preface, in which he is warned against the errors of Protestants, who, receiving their doctrines directly and exclusively from the Scriptures, ignore the authority of the Church, which "continues to teach the Word of Christ, divinely adapting it to the ever-varying needs of successive ages." The dogma of the Church is said to be more "developed" than that of the Gospels. To prove this, the reader is helped with an "example." The dogma of the Intercession of Mary is said to be a "development" of the part she took at the marriage in Cana; and so the power of the Pope in the Church is stated to be a "development" of Christ's words, "Thou art Peter."

This is not the place to enlarge upon Rome's "adaptation" and "development" of the Gospel. We must proceed, and in doing so we next come to "some hints for the pious reading of the Sacred Gospel."

First of all the rev. parish priests are to make the first distribution at a special service at which they are to "bless" the volume. Then the reading of this Gospel is especially recommended on the ground of the late Pope's offer of 300 days of indulgence to those who read it a quarter-of-an-hour daily, and plenary indulgence once a month to those who daily practise it, fulfilling the usual conditions of confession, communion, and prayer "according to the mind of the Holy Pope."

Then the reader is reminded that "excellent books" which will help the meditation may be chosen by the rev. parish priest or confessor.

The "faithful" are then exhorted to follow attentively the reading of the Gospel by the priest at the Mass.

Finally, for doubts and difficulties, the reader is exhorted to consult the priests according to Mal. ii. 7. So that, before he gets to the Gospel, the "faithful" are well instructed by Rome as to what Gospel it is!

But, let us begin reading Matthew. Soon come the "notes." We get to verse 25 of chapter i., and we are told in the note that Mary's perpetual virginity is taught by tradition and the Church! At chapter ix. 15, we hear of fasting and penance. The brethren of Jesus were cousins (xii. 46, xiii. 55). Jesus promised to make Peter the foundation, head, and supreme judge of His infallible Church (xviii. 18). In the Eucharist Jesus gives us His body and blood (xxvi. 26).

This is the Gospel Rome is offering for 2d. in Italy; and not content with thus explaining away the Word of God, ten pages are added to the text, giving the "lessons" taken from the four Gospels and Acts for the masses of Sundays and of the principal festivals of the year. In these "lessons" Rome displays her whole stock of idolatry and popery. The sacred family, the sacred lance, the sacred nails, the five wounds, the seven sorrows of Mary, the patronage of St. Joseph, corpus Domini, the immaculate conception of the blessed Virgin, the translation of the sacred house of Loreto, Peter's chair at Rome, and as many other similar festivals of Rome are indicated with their respective Gospel lessons! e.g., the exaltation of the sacred cross has its lesson in John iii. 1-15. So John iii. 16 has a bad chance in Rome's Gospel!

May I humbly ask my brethren in England to face these solemn questions?—1. What is Rome's object in publishing her gospel? 2. What gospel testimony and work can result from such a publication, in which the text is hidden amidst the most dangerous errors of Popery?

The Bible societies in Britain have gone on patiently giving God's pure word to the people. Let us help in this godly service, and keep ourselves pure and free from the corruptions of Rome.

"Murderers' Messages."

DEAR SIR,—How long shall we talk about the drink traffic, with the crime and sorrows for which it is responsible? Shall we take to heart the solemn message, given so faithfully by Mr. Townshend? He says: "Preston and Porter have suffered the extreme penalty of the law, for a deed committed when drink had robbed them of their senses."

Here we have cause and effect. The mad men have satisfied the law; what about the publicans who robbed those lads of their senses? Let us fight the traffic; but how? I quote Mr. Townshend again—"They entered a public-house at eleven in the morning, and remained there drinking till 8.30 (selling their clothing to pay). Then they went to another public-house, and remained till closing time."

Now I assert that it is a crime to let those publicans off, and I earnestly appeal to every reader of The Christian to act in this case. We, who feel for the relatives of those three young men, and the Vicar of Sileby, whose heart must have been nearly broken with the persecution of brewers and publicans—then think about the visits to the cells—are we only to sigh and protest? We have had too much of that fighting. Our legislators and their rich friends care little for temperance talk, so little that they promise the trade more power. I ask every mother and sister to consecrate their all, and say—We now dare to rise and act; we will fight, "but not as beating the air" as in the past, but effectually, to the pulling down of strongholds, and the powers which thrive on this gruesome work.

To shift the blame on to legislators will not do.* Those who send them to their work are responsible for the terrible state of the nation. How did Christian men fight the two rich papers which started a Sunday edition? That battle lasted two weeks, and the Christians won. How do we fight the slayers of our young men? Do we win or fall? Let all take to heart the message sent, and answer calls to the help of God against the mighty. I think we need more of the power of the Holy Ghost which would deal with the causes of the awful wreckage on every hand. The cry goes up continually, "Carest thou not that we perish?"—I am, dear sir, faithfully yours,

Catherine B.

* We deeply regret to be driven to the conviction that our legislators are blamably responsible, in so far as they present the maximum of aid and the minimum of obstruction to this wicked and cruel trade.—Ed.

Saving the Children.

MR. BRISTOW WALLEN AND HIS WORK.

DURING a journey to the west of England, more than fifty years ago, that esteemed philanthropist, the late Mr. William Williams, heard in the next compartment of the train in which he was travelling the grating sound of prisoners' manacles, accompanied by coarse and vile conversation, as the prisoners were on their way to penal servitude. He resolved there and then, by the help of God, that as far as he was able he would at any rate "save the children" from such a terrible fate.

His own enthusiasm inspired others. He talked the matter over with godly men, and a few working-people, "whose hearts God had touched," became anxious to undertake some Christian effort of the kind. These worthy folk co-operated with Mr. Williams, and it was resolved to take action.

THE NATIONAL REFUGES.

The well-known London rookery of St. Giles' was chosen as the place of commencement. Here, a hayloft over a cowshed was secured, and fitted up as a school. This was in 1843. In 1852 the first permanent Home for boys and girls was opened in Bloomsbury, and, later, headquarters were established in Great Queen Street, which became widely known as the days went by, particularly by reason of the essentially religious nature of the work, and its consequent effectiveness as an enduring philanthropic agency. Under the title of "The National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children," one institution after another was opened as opportunities for extension presented themselves. Mr. Williams and his friends gained the earnest support of the whole-hearted Lord Shaftesbury, after whom are named the commanding premises at 164, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C., which are now the Society's head offices.

When the revered Mr. Williams passed to his rest, after conducting the operations for forty-six years, anxiety was naturally felt as to securing a like-minded successor in the secretaryship. However, out of no fewer than 300 candidates for the post, attention was drawn to the suitability of Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, and that gentleman was chosen. Although young in years for so onerous a position, Mr. Wallen possessed a ripe experience. When only a youth of sixteen, he engaged in mission work among boys under the wise direction of his vicar, the late well-known Canon Miller, of Greenwich. At the age of twenty-three, Mr. Wallen abandoned the mercantile employment in which he was engaged, and was appointed secretary of the Homes for Working Boys in London. It was in 1890 that Mr. Wallen was chosen for the secretaryship of the National Refuges, followed by the prayers and good wishes of his old committee, which included the Hon. T. H. W. Pelham and Lord Kinnaird. Mr. Wallen's sympathies with Evangelical work and the temperance movement have been effectively manifested throughout his career; he has sought the highest interests of the boys and girls for whose welfare the Refuges exist. As treasurer of the Secretaries' Prayer Union since its foundation Mr. Wallen has laboured to preserve the spiritual tone of philanthropic work. He was chosen president for the year 1901-2.

ON LAND AND SEA.

Of late years the Society has made good progress. The Shaftesbury Avenue premises are a hive of industry. Besides the offices and committee-rooms and Receiving Home, there is the Technical School, which accommodates thirty of the elder boys, who, having passed through one of the other institutions, are perfecting themselves in tailoring and shoemaking.

For training in farm work, hundreds of thriving young fellows are indebted to the Society's Schools at Bisley, which are situated in a delightful rural district, and quite an ideal spot for the up-bringing of boys who have been reared in the slums of London. Equally interesting, although of a widely different character, is the training afforded "on board o' the Arethusa," a frigate moored in the Thames off Greenhithe. The statistics relating to the Arethusa, with her sailing tender, the Chichester (which makes three cruises to sea every week), show that accommodation is provided for 200 boys. The physical development of these lads, recorded in the ship's books, demonstrates the excellent results which are the outcome of fresh air, a good dietary, and regular habits of life.

FRUITFULNESS IN SOUL-WINNING.

Abundant are the proofs that the labours of God's servants in the various institutions are not in vain. Letters received from near and far go to show that the earnest "heart to heart" talks with the lads remain fresh after many days. One old boy wrote recently to the head of the Technical School:—

Many, many times since I left (which is four years) have I thought of the happy days I spent under your guidance and tuition. Truly, they were the most happy hours of my life, though I must admit sometimes I thought differently. (But I was only a boy then, and hardly knew my own mind.) It is when we go out into the world and have to wield our own axe, that we look back with a heart full of gratitude and thankfulness for the benefit we derive from being under your kind care. There is one half-hour of the day which I regret to say I miss very much, that is after breakfast, when you used to advise and teach us in spiritual things.

Again, a young fellow who writes from Ontario, says:—

I always bless the day I went to Shaftesbury House, and God has been very good to me in placing me in this country. I know you will be glad to hear that one of the boys from the London home is now serving God. We were all taught to love Him, and I am thankful that He has drawn me nearer to Him. I mean to strive to serve Him all the days of my life. I am surrounded by Christian people, and that is quite a help to me. I like living out here first-rate. For four years I have been here without being sick a day. I am getting seventy-five dollars a year now, and this spring I put twenty dollars into the bank."

FOR LITTLE GIRLS.

Nor are the girls forgotten. In two capital Homes, one at Sudbury and the other at Ealing, there is accommodation for 150 little maidens, who are trained for domestic service. To the thoroughness of their education sheaves of letters from mistresses bear eloquent testimony; but more striking still are the words of gratitude from widowed mothers whose children have been received. One of these recently wrote:—

I feel I must write you a line to thank you for your kindness to my daughter Nellie. She is a credit to Sudbury Hall, in looking so well and bonny, and likewise in her manners. I am sure when the time comes for her to leave your nice Home I shall be proud of her, and I can see you rule your great family with love, rather than fear. What a blessing to us poor mothers that there is such a place as Sudbury Hall; what a lot of sin and wickedness those dear children are taken from; had they been left to have the run of the streets of London their training would have been terrible. My friends are more than pleased to find her in such a place.

All the children are regularly instructed in the Holy Scripture, and once a year are examined in the same. In his latest report the examiner, Mr. Frank Roscoe, of Birmingham, says:—

I visited five of your Schools for the purpose of holding the annual examinations in Scripture knowledge. Having conducted these examinations for five successive years, I am able to estimate in some manner the progress that has been made. It gives me much pleasure to report that the teaching in this important subject is receiving thoughtful attention from your teachers. In every School I found the children keenly interested in the Scripture, and the answers, both written and oral, are ample evidence of sound and intelligent instruction.

SOME PITIFUL APPEALS.

While much is so happily accomplished for the welfare of the destitute little ones of the land, much remains to be done. Here are typical applications of recent date:—

A widow, whose husband was a respectable mechanic. Laid up previously to his death by a long and expensive illness, he has been quite unable to make any provision for the widow and six children. There is nothing but the workhouse staring the poor widow in the face, and so in order to prevent the home being broken up, the Society, after due enquiry, receives one or two of the children; admission is obtained for a third child into another institution, and the widow is then able to struggle on with the remainder.

A respectable wife seeks help on the ground that although her husband is alive, he is in a lunatic asylum, and the doctors give no hope that he will ever regain his reason; the poor wife has struggled on, hoping against hope, but she is weighed down with the care of a large family. In such circumstances the Committee delight to help by receiving one or two children and placing them in the Homes; no votes are required.

In the Homes and Ships of the Society there are now nearly 900 boys and girls. Since the commencement of the work upwards of 13,000 boys and girls have been admitted, and 12,000 placed out in the world to earn their own living; and since the Training Ships have been established no fewer than 5,000 boys have been sent as sailors into the Navy or the Mercantile Marine. The chief satisfaction is found, not so much in the material prosperity of the children in after life, as in the fact that many are to-day "epistles of Christ, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshy tables of the heart." The Committee, to quote some recent words, realize that, standing in the place of a parent to the children, they are responsible for the future of their charges. "Nothing can be more important, more sacred than that. None of us can shirk the responsibility; we must all do what we can in this true, Godlike work of training the children, not only for this world, and for their educational and physical culture, but that their immortal souls shall not be lost."

The Homes of Hope.

THE Homes of Hope have now been established for forty-two years, and by the goodness of God have been greatly blessed in affording timely aid and succour in the hour of need to those who, through youth, inexperience, or misplaced affection, have strayed from the right way.

For many years the committee have made the rescue of young mothers a special feature of their work, and out of 6,055 young women and girls of tender years, in every variety of circumstances entailing suffering and sorrow, 3,218 belonged to the class of young mothers who were thus saved from falling into deeper and continued sin.

Many pathetic appeals for admission are received. One of these reads:—

My sister left home a few weeks ago, and I have just received a letter from her. Would you arrange for her to come into your Home? If so I will pay a little for her maintenance each week or month, as I am afraid if she is left to herself alone in London she will do something desperate. She is such a splendid business-girl that she would easily get a situation if she were once over her trouble. She has always borne an excellent character.

The girl herself was full of remorse, and wrote to her sister:—

I have sold nearly everything I had to buy food, and have had nothing but some gooseberries and dry bread for three days. I know it serves me right, and I can't ask my father for help. I've disgraced myself for life. Oh, what a lesson I've learned. I feel I can never come home again, yet I would give anything just to see you all again. Tell father I'm awfully sorry. I hope the rest of you will be a credit to him, for he deserves it.

Even here there is a silver lining to the black cloud, for this same girl was admitted into the Homes, rescued from her piteous surroundings, nursed through her trouble, placed in a situation, and is doing very well indeed.

The annual report gives striking evidence of the far-reaching blessing which attends the enterprise. Mr. William Hornibrook, secretary, 4, Regent Square, W.C., writes:—"Our especial work is to rescue those who have lately wandered into evil paths, and saving them from sinking into a life of sin. Owing to lack of support we fear that we shall have to pass over some sad and distressing applications."

A Quiet But Fruitful Service.

GOD has many means of carrying on His work—small as well as great. Among the former may be classed the "Letter Mission," but its influence has extended to many parts of the world.

Lonely hearts have been cheered, desponding ones encouraged, those in doubt have entered into light, by means of the letters, born of prayer, which have been written to them. This is truly a blessed ministry, of which the following extracts from replies will indicate the fruitfulness:—

The past year has been to me the most trying one of my life, but I am thankful to say its severest trials, instead of affecting adversely my faith, have only tended to deepen it. Again I must repeat my thanks for your kind help in clearing away many doubts and difficulties that beset my path. I feel prayer to be the safest rock during storm and stress, and I do not at all feel worried by doubts and scepticism as formerly.

I have found out God's way is the best. I came to Sheffield against my will, but it has proved a great blessing. It has been the means of my conversion. My life now is all to bring the glad tidings of peace to others, and to tell them of the wonderful love, and that "God so loved the world, that whosoever believeth in Him shall have eternal life." I do thank you so much for your help, your letters revealed my sin to me, and my need of a Saviour.

Lighthouse Literature Fund.

KEEPERS of lighthouses and lightships, around the British Isles and elsewhere, bring to their arduous tasks a devotion which tends to ensure the safety of many a vessel which might otherwise meet with disaster. The monotonous life of these men entitles them to some consideration; and the numbers of letters received from them show how much they appreciate what is done for them. It is necessary to send them reading of the best kind. Much of this may have to be purchased, though the main part of the outlay is for postage. Friends wishing to aid the work have frequently sent large parcels of old newspapers and periodicals which cannot be used in such a distribution.

It is believed that the late Rev. John Green was the first to engage in this work, over twenty years ago. In the beautiful West Somerset village of Stogumber, he rebuilt the historical Puritan chapel; but on becoming invalided, he returned to London. Being unable to undertake any other service, the idea occurred that he might distribute Spurgeon's sermons through the post among lightkeepers at home and abroad.

In course of time, failure of strength rendered Mr. Green incapable even of the service which he had been enabled to carry on in his own house. He saw that the end of his earthly course was near, and was hopeful that at some future day a sympathetic volunteer might be found to take up the work. The funds he had in hand amounted to £4 4s. 5d., and making a packet of this money, he asked that it should be given to whoever volunteered to continue the distribution of Christian literature among the lightkeepers. For some years this service has been carried on by Miss L. Holden Pike (Winchmore Hill, N.), and the lightkeepers still acknowledge what is done for them in a very cordial and appreciative way. Under the supervision of the Council of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, Miss Pike has collected the funds necessary for the purpose. Even the British Isles offer a wide field for enterprise; but if the British colonies of Canada and Australasia are included, it becomes a very extensive field. Having so far been successful, it is felt that the distribution should be more widely extended, but that will involve much arduous and persevering labour.

Peace through the Blood.

AS one of the evangelists accompanying Mr. John Jones and Mr. William Luff in their yearly visit to the hop-pickers of Herefordshire and Worcestershire, perhaps I may be permitted to record one especially touching incident which occurred two years ago. Considering that on the average we walked seventeen miles on each weekday, laden with Gospel tracts, and preaching and singing in every hopyard, it would have been permissible to have rested on the Lord's Day. But this was sometimes our heaviest time in the way of preaching. The hop-pickers being then at leisure, large open-air meetings were held.

At one place there was an immense gathering in the moonlight, with blazing fires around, to hear the Gospel message, which was particularly that evening on "The precious blood of Christ." On the following day a brother was asked, "Will you go and see a dying woman?" She was lying on some straw in a shed. To all appearances she was quite unconscious; but when a brother dropped on his knees, appealing for her in words, earnest and pathetic, and quoted, "The blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son," the hitherto unconscious form rose on the straw and finished the text of the previous night—"cleanseth from all sin."

Shortly after she died in peace. Then it transpired that the last Gospel message for her was the open-air preaching on the previous night. May the prayers of your readers go with Mr. Jones, Mr. Luff, and their fellow workers in this year's mission, which will open early next month. A. D.

A Forest Home.

FEW sea breezes find their way into a girls' dining-room kitchen, which we sometimes visit, and which is only a specimen of many a London factory. The workrooms, though perhaps more airy, are close and confined, while the homes of these young workers are even more confined. To such, Miss Reynolds' Home at Woodford Wells is a paradise. It was started in a very small way twenty years ago as a resting-place for some of the many women and girls who work in the London warehouses.

A great variety of trades is represented by the visitors, the most common being makers of shirts, blouses, mantles, neckties, underlinen, umbrellas, matches, fancy boxes and firescreens, photo frames, stationery, relief stamping, bookbinding, portmanteau work, vellum sewing, fur work, boot sewing, flowers, &c. Though the home is within easy reach of London, it stands in open country facing the Forest, with a long stretch of common at the back. One girl remarked last year: "A lady offered to send me here before, but I thought being so near London it would be all houses, but now I wish I had come, for I never enjoyed myself so much."

Having only eight beds, the "homeliness" of the Home is maintained, and under direct Christian influence, the spiritual benefit of the girls is made the first aim. The charge is 8s. per week, or 10s. 6d. for a private bedroom. This is not a large sum for a week's holiday, and yet to many it is unattainable unless a part or the whole is given to them. All communications to Miss Mary Reynolds, Invercloy, Woodford Wells, Essex. William Luff.

The Gospel Under Canvas.

THE Evangelization Society, as usual, is busy through the summer with tents. At the present time missions are being held in the following counties:—Ayr, Caithness, Chester, Cumberland (2), Devon (2), Dumbarton, Dumfries, Durham, Essex (5), Forfar, Glamorgan, Gloucester (2), Hampshire, Hereford, Hertford, Lanark, Lancaster (4), Leicester, Linlithgow, Middlesex, Norfolk, Northampton, Oxford, Perth, Shropshire, Somerset, Suffolk (2), Sussex (2), Warwick, and Wilts.

To place so many tents in the field, to move them, repair them, and to supply the evangelists is proving a heavy strain upon the resources of the society. There are many lovers of tents who, if they knew of the need, would be glad to share the joy of meeting it. Letters are daily reaching the offices of the society speaking of exceedingly good missions in some places with much blessing, in others, of course, the work is more uphill. The need for such missions is always increasing, and every effort is made to secure that each preacher sent forth shall be faithful to the Gospel and raised up of God to declare it. A short report of the tent work will be duly issued, and would be sent on application to those interested. The offices of the society are at 21, Surrey Street, Strand, W.C.

A Village Opening.—A friend calls attention to an opening for Christian service in a picturesque Devonshire village. The children would be entirely without instruction in the unadulterated Gospel of Christ had not God sent there, not very long ago, one who had waited upon Him for guidance, and who, realizing the great need, started a Sunday-school in the village. The school has, under God's blessing, gradually increased, in the face of much opposition, to an attendance of over fifty. But this earnest worker is of very weak health, quite unequal to the strain, and there is scarcely any local help to be obtained. Someone qualified to interest and manage children, and of an unsectarian spirit, may be led to consider prayerfully whether there is a call for her in this direction. There is much to be done in the way of cottage visiting. Address for particulars, H. Alvington, Lustleigh, Devon.

KESWICK ADDRESSES.

The Beauties of Holiness.*

By Prebendary H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

I am endeavouring to set forth the Beauty of Holiness as provided in God, and the Beauties of Holiness as they are to be exhibited in man. Already I have presented—(1) The subject as set forth in Scripture as a whole, the terms employed, and so forth; (2) the source from which all that is possible to us must come—from God; (3) the shortcomings of man in respect of holiness, provided for by God; and (4) the supply of the Spirit which is given to us in Jesus Christ our Lord. We have spoken of the abstract holiness of God (hagiotês), the process of sanctification in the believer (hagiasmos), and that completed holiness to which we look forward when perfected in Christ Jesus (hagiôsunê). The human side of this work is carried out in the human vessel by the power of God the Holy Ghost.

Two thoughts will engage our attention now—First, the desires or intentions of man as kindled by the Holy Ghost with regard to walking in holiness in the sight of God; secondly, the standard by which God will judge us hereafter. Let us turn to two texts of Scripture: the first is Heb. xii. 14, "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." The word here is hagiasmos, the process of sanctification or making holy; we must not think here of the final attainment which we shall enjoy in the presence of God. The passage solemnly declares that unless the process of sanctification is carried out, we shall never see the Lord. The second passage is 1 Pet. i. 14-16: "As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance; but as He which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation; because it is written, be ye holy; for I am holy"—or, as in the Revised Version, let us find here a promise or declaration on the part of God, "Ye shall be holy." In Matt. v. 48, we read, R.V., "Ye shall be perfect." Thus we have a promise of God, the declaration of a purpose against which there is to be no resistance or opposition on the part of man.

man's strivings—god's provision.

In Heb. xii. 14 we are face to face with the surgings and strivings of man, as the counterpart of the provision of God with regard to progressive or practical sanctification—the making holy of the vessel which God would use for His glory. This is one of the most solemn subjects that can be studied by man—what part have I to play in this noblest and best ambition that can be found in a human being; that we may be one with God, not merely by the provision of Jesus Christ our substitute, but by the life of Christ becoming the very life of the human being, that we may hereafter be like Him in every possible way?

First notice that Christ is our hagiasmos. He "is made unto us . . . sanctification" (1 Cor. i. 30). He makes us to be holy. God has provided all this for us in Christ Jesus His Son. Of Christians whom he describes as carnal, babes in Christ, the Apostle says: "Ye are sanctified in Christ Jesus" (1 Cor. i. 2). What a blessed truth! The babe in Christ, the carnal in heart and mind, is "sanctified in Christ Jesus." "Ye are washed, ye are sanctified, ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God" (1 Cor. vi. 11). "By which will (of God) we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all"—"by one offering He (God) hath perfected for ever them that are being sanctified" (Heb. x. 10, 14). That is to say, while the process of sanctification is being carried on, we are regarded in the sight of God as perfected in Him through whom the will of God was so completely carried out—who not only provided pardon but also peace with the offended Judge; not merely position that we could stand in God's sight without error, but a provision whereby all His people might, in some measure, be holy. "Jesus also, that He might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate" (Heb. xiii. 12). Therefore, holiness becomes the natural element, the natural aim and ambition, in some degree, of every child of God.

the pursuit of holiness.

What are we to understand by following after holiness? I put in "after," because diôkô is generally rendered so. The verb means to pursue, and implies earnest, eager, definite, conscious, intelligent pursuit. The hand of God the Holy Ghost is upon us that we may pursue, intelligently and with determination, this glorious privilege of being made holy, that we may see the Lord and be like Him when we see Him. Are we set upon it in heart; are our minds determined upon it? Are we prepared to say with St. Paul, "This one thing I do" . . but one thing I do . . "forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those which are before, I press toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. iii. 14).

Have we realised our calling? We have not only a high calling, but a holy one (2 Tim. i. 9), and heavenly (Heb. iii. 1). Let us remember "Faithful is He that calleth you, who also will do it." The Apostle is speaking of entire sanctification, "The very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. v. 22-24). Are we prepared to go along with the mind of God that He may sanctify us wholly?

Reverting to the idea of intelligent pursuit, when a man enters upon a study or goes in for training, we say he takes up his pursuit, in life. In like manner, for Christians here on earth there is to be one aim, one pursuit—Be ye holy, as God is holy, in all manner of conversation—in every walk of life. For an intelligent pursuit of any kind, there must be, first, an apprehension of what it involves. Have we all taken in the blessed thought that we aim at the perfection of human nature to be exhibited in ourselves and the personal enjoyment of God through all eternity? Have we considered that we are to bring the world into touch with God, which can be done only as we are holy men and women?

If this be the intellgent aim with which we step out in our pursuit, let us realize, secondly, that God would never tantalize the creature—it would be undivine to do that. If God has set before us the attainment of holiness, He must be prepared to see it carried out. He says, "Ye shall be perfect." He means it. And though I know my weakness and failings as a man, I have this prospect before me. I am to be like Christ because I shall see Him as He is. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," and be like Jesus.

sanctification through the truth.

Again and again, the thought comes up in Holy Scripture that the Holy Ghost is the provided power of God, the supply in order that we may be sanctified, and vessels made meet for the Master's use (Rom. xv. 17; 1 Cor. vi. 11; 1 Pet. i. 2). If that be the first provision, then I ask myself what is the next—the process or activity by which the work of sanctification can be carried out? I find answer in John xvii. 17: "Sanctify them through Thy truth; Thy Word is truth." That is, the Book and the Beam; the Bible and Christ; as I accept the Word—the Living and the Written Word—I am made meet for the Master's holy use. What more is required? Paul says (1 Tim. iv. 5)—"Sanctified by the Word of God and prayer." Thus the process is carried out by (1) the Holy Ghost; (2) the Bible; (3) Christ Jesus; (4) and prayer. Every day, every moment, as we follow after holiness, or pursue it intelligently, with our entire being, God will fulfil his purpose in us by the Holy Ghost.

We must guard, however, against thinking that we have attained, that as yet in any case we have come to experience hagiôsunê, the condition of being perfected in holiness. For the present it is hagiasmos, a process of being made holy; we shall not reach perfection in the life of earth. We are ever to be "obedient children; as He that hath called us is holy, so we must be holy in all manner of conversation"—anastrophê, our manner of life—not merely our "conversation" as now understood, but our whole course of intelligent existence—every purpose and aim and design of life. Do we take it in? In all this we ought to be holy. By nature the prospect is inconceivable; but the Divine declaration is that the thing must be, and in every department of our being.

spirit and soul and body.

St. Paul says (1 Thess. v. 23):—"I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." Here we find what God is prepared to do—to sanctify us in spirit, the individual as separate from the Spirit of God, by which "a right spirit is renewed" within us. The spirit is that department of a human being which, by creation, is allied to the Spirit of God, that department by which man is able to enjoy God. Being by sin drawn away from God, it is possible for the creature to become so debased as to be spoken of as "sensual, not having spirit" (Jude 19). Accordingly, in 2 Cor. vii. 1, we are called on to "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." It is awful to contemplate that the department of man's being which is meant to be inhabited by God the Holy Ghost can be a foul den of unclean spirits. The Spirit of God addresses my spirit, shows me my ruined condition, and regenerates my being. The unclean spirit is cast out, and the Holy Spirit takes possession.

From that point of vantage the Blessed Spirit proceeds to act upon the other departments of the man—He turns to the soul, which I believe to mean the brain, which represents the reason; the heart, which is the emotional centre of pleasure and taste; and the will, which is the deciding faculty of man at all times. On these three the Holy Ghost now works to produce practical sanctification. He demands the reason—that it shall be brought into subjection to God's will, and acquiesce in Divine truth. He proceeds to deal with the heart and the will, bringing them into line with God's demands.

Then He comes to the body, which obeys the will. Yet, to begin with, "the body is dead because of sin, but the spirit is life because of righteousness" (Rom. viii. 10).

entire sanctification.

I differ from some who believe that the body can be utterly and completely sanctified—that we can enjoy entire sanctification here on earth. I do not believe anything of the kind. It is false in definition, false in revelation, false to experience, false to all theory, that we should speak of the body as being sanctified completely while we are upon the earth. The dispensation in which we live is not one of eradication but of cleansing, not of completion but of progression, not one in which the material creation appears to have benefited greatly by the work of Christ; we are "waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body." I am compelled to give what God gives me, and I challenge any man to show me where the Bible says that the body has been made fit for God's service in itself, irrespective of the spirit and the soul that rule it.

Note Rom. vi. 13-19, "Yield yourselves [present yourselves] and your members as instruments" dead things "of righteousness unto God." That is all you can do. The soul can present, or hand over, the body, which is a poor thing, all covered with corruption, and will remain so until we realize the glorious transformation for which we wait. Oh for the moment when I shall see my Lord coming through the clouds to take His own! "The trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."

Meantime, I say, Master, give power through the Spirit of God in my spirit, through the soul taking my reason, heart, and will; and take this poor body and use it till it has finished its work. This is "sanctification through the spirit"—reaching to the soul, taking the body, and saying to it—you must obey! The poor sufferers from physical paralysis are a picture of such as are not instinct with the life and power of the Spirit of God.

"HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD."

What will be the issue of the process of sanctification in cases of yielding and submitting with joy to the work of God the Holy Ghost? This, "God will sanctify wholly; spirit and soul and body shall be preserved blameless," unto the coming of the Lord.

Take three texts—(1) Ex. xxviii. 36. The High Priest, Christ our Lord, is before us, and "Holiness to the Lord" is across His brow. He says to us, "Be ye holy—ye shall be holy; for I am holy." (2) Isa. xxiii. 18. Regarding Tyre, the city of earthly merchandise, we read: "Her merchandise and her hire shall be holiness to the Lord." Let all our work and business, our service and ministry, be holiness to the Lord. (3) Zech. xiv. 20, 21. "In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses (the motor cars and the bicycles), holiness unto the Lord." Housekeeping sisters may note the words that follow: "And the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls before the altar . . . yea, upon every pot . . . shall be Holiness to the Lord of hosts."

Christ and the Leper.[*]

Matt. viii. 2.

By Rev. BARCLAY BUXTON.

Again and again students have come to me in Japan, asking, "Is there any power to deliver from the lusts within?" I was able to answer that there is One who can give holiness and purity. It would have been a wonderful thing if the Son of Man had gone to this cave where the leper dwelt and given him a word of tenderness, or caused some light to shine into this poor miserable life. But He wants to do a far more radical work than that, so He reveals the mighty power of God, imparts Himself to the man, and out of His holiness gives purity and all that was needed. There are hearts here longing for something like that this morning.

Just before this incident the Lord had been preaching to His disciples giving food for babes—holiness. It is the first longing desire of a newly-born soul to be clean. He has been speaking of purity within. He wants a purity that makes us really humble, delivers us from pride, a holiness that makes us patient and ready to bear the cross, that takes away the spirit of anger, a holiness that will deliver from the last remnant of carnality in the Christian's heart—the love of some spiritual position. Christ puts before us an ideal which we cannot realize of ourselves.

This miracle in Matt. viii. shows us that Christ is able to do all that He had been preaching. The leper is cleansed, and Jesus is able to meet the heart corruption and cleanse that. There is a leprosy of pride, of impurity, of seeking the world. O that we might know and see the awful loathsomeness of all the leprosy within, its darkness, and depravity! Because of this leprosy the man had a barrier between him and his God, and a barrier between him and others. Now that barrier is removed there is peace and joy. It can be so with you. Cleansing means a complete change, something like a second conversion, a repetition of its peace and joy. You have come to Keswick with the hope perhaps of experiencing what this means. Cast yourselves at His feet, pleading, "Lord, if Thou wilt Thou canst make me clean." Jesus will stretch forth His hand, saying, "I will; be thou clean."

Concerning Spiritual Gifts.[*]

By Rev. HUBERT BROOKE.

The work of God's Holy Spirit is put before us in the New Testament chiefly in three ways. He is seen regenerating the soul, according to the familiar words of John iii., wherein He gives us a change of nature; He is seen transforming human character (2 Cor. iii. 18); and also in His work of empowering: "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you"—a change of strength. These three things, regenerating, transforming, and empowering, correspond to three great central thoughts. The first is bound up with pardon (which we considered on Tuesday), the second with purity (our subject of yesterday), and the third with power, which we are now to study—three great things, all wrought by the Spirit of God. It is the Spirit that transforms us, creates in us a Christlike character, and it is the Spirit of God that empowers us for the work He intends us to do. We find a striking example of this in Titus ii. 14, where the Apostle says, "He gave Himself for us that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works"—pardon, purity, and power.

POWER FOR SERVICE.

As we look at this great topic I would impress upon you that this is the true Scriptural order. You cannot slip over the wall half-way along the road. People will always go lingering about thoughts of past iniquity. Is it not time for the child to believe the Father when He has spoken? What are you waiting for in pardon, purity, or power, or anything else promised, when you have God's Word that these things are yours? Is it not a waste of our time to go over again and again what God has settled once for all? So having considered what pardon is, we have been set on the way of God's purity, we come to the great subject of power for God's service. It is the same mighty Worker, but the operations are different from those of pardon and purity, and we shall do well to follow the counsel of the Apostle and "prove the things that differ." We want to see and understand how God meets the need of His people. First, pardon, then purity and power. We see this in the divinely-given illustration of Israel. At the foot of Sinai they were taught what God intended them to be in purity and likeness to Himself. Not till they had learnt that lesson were they entrusted with the power to go in and conquer the land.

GRACES AND GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT.

Notice the distinction between the graces of the Holy Ghost and the gifts of the Holy Ghost. Look at Gal. v. 22, 23, in which we find the fruits of the Spirit defined. Sometimes these are styled as the three Godward graces, three manward graces, and three inward graces. They are put before us there as one complete whole. If you turn to 2 Pet. i. 5, 6, 7, you will find there are nine again. These you notice are to be added one after another, representing progressive growth in purity, just as the others represent the full-grown fruit. As you look at these things you find they are internally graces of character. I remember once sitting at the bedside of one who was never going to get up again, and who complained to me: "The worst of it is, I am no use to God." I opened at this chapter in Galatians and asked the sufferer, "Can you have love, joy, peace, gentleness, goodness, faith, &c.?" "Yes, I can," she replied. Then, I answered, "the fruit of the Spirit may spring from the sick bed as well as from the most active Christian life. These graces have nothing to do with active service, but they are intended to be in every believing soul. There is not one of them of which any Christian can say, "That is beyond my reach." These two sets ought to be recognised as things which God intends His people to know and have, and as we look at them we learn what God requires us to be. One set is a matter of character, and the other a matter of service.

GOD'S FULL PROVISION.

If we turn to 1 Cor. xii. 8, 9, 10, we get nine forms of the gift of the Spirit, just as we found nine graces. Here is a remarkable fact; not one in the second list is the same as in Gal. v. One seems to be the same, viz., "faith"; but in the one case it is "faith," and the other "faithfulness." The graces of the Spirit are for purity, and the gifts of the Spirit for service. The one has to do with sanctification, the other with service; the one defines what we are to be, and the other what we have to do. A wonderful supply of gifts for service is set forth in this chapter, divided in different ways. The first three have to do with teaching, the next two with miracles, the next two with organization, and the last two with testimony. Every one is a matter of service, and not one a matter of character. They are God's full provision to make His people servants for Himself, and are the work of the whole Trinity, for the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are all concerned in fitting up a true Christian for the service of God. How seriously it seems to be thought of in the courts of heaven!

SAVED TO SERVE.

If you ask, What is it all for? You find in verse 7 that the manifestation of the Spirit is given to everyone for the common good. Not a single one is given for you to keep for yourselves; but everyone is given to be used for others—the common profit. They are given to every man and woman in the Church of Christ. What a wonderful heritage is this! There is a share of power for every individual.

Turning to Rom. xii., we find the operation of God's Holy Spirit in imparting power is to be in a sevenfold form. It brings us into closer details of life and service. "Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith." If you look in the list that follows, and then look round in the church to which you belong, you will see that they are all there. (1) "Whether prophecy," which is the forthtelling of God's Word and ways; (2) "ministry," which comprises the humblest form of service—the verger who opens the doors of the church, the choir, the organist, and churchwardens; (3) "he that teacheth"—Sunday-school teachers; (4) "he that exhorteth" more than likely the open-air preacher who calls upon the people to flee from the wrath to come; (5) "he that giveth"—those who contribute; (6) "he that ruleth"—the church committee or council; (7) "he that showeth mercy"—the one who is called to be the sympathizer with those who need him.

THE HOLY GHOST AND GIVING.

So from this list you see that there is nothing in Christian service, from the highest to the lowest, that does not require the power of God's Holy Spirit. We say that the man who is going to preach and the Sunday-school teacher require the power of the Holy Spirit, but forget that the man who gathers in the money or sweeps out the hall has a similar need. The gift of the Holy Spirit is needed for each and for all. After looking at these things one by one, suppose you take that one, "He that giveth, let him do it with liberality" (marg.). It is because the power of the Holy Ghost has not been sought in the matter of giving that ministers and missionaries are left half-starved, and societies are saying: "Do not send us more men, for we have no money to keep them." When we come to give, we forget to ask for the gift of the Holy Spirit to show us what we should give.

You remember in Acts vi., men full of the Holy Ghost were put to look after the money and keep accounts. You say of so-and-so, "He is not a spiritual man, give him the money to look after." If you would serve God completely in the power of the Holy Ghost remember that one of the realms of that service is the matter of giving. It is fearful to think of the luxury that prevails throughout the whole church, and yet so much of the great heathen world remains untouched. Perhaps you would rather that I spoke of power for service and testimony; but I think you know this. We have got into the habit of making these divisions and saying, "We can do without the Spirit of God here."

[*] Notes of a Bible-Reading in Skiddaw Street Tent, July 23.

A PRACTICAL QUESTION.

As we consider the infinite abundance of His pardon, the glorious provision for purity, and inquire of Him what we are to do in His service, we have this wonderful fact, that the same power that gives cleansing for the heart and imparts purity to the life, is there to empower the soul. But look a little closer. While this power is universally provided, it is all to serve others. It is not a thing for which you are to look that you may be exalted, but that you may be able to serve. And this power is waiting to be claimed and used. I ask you to remember that it is the inheritance of the Church and the promise of the Father. This is according to the Word of God which has stood every test. Suppose I have to go through an unknown country and am given a map for my guidance. Two people have written upon it, one of whom says, "I have not tried this map, but I know it is untrustworthy." The other testifies, "I have tried this map, and found it to be trustworthy." Which writer do you think I trust? Of course, you say, the one who had tested the map. So I commend to you the Word of God; its promises can be tested to the full. We can tell you on the ground of scores of testings that His Word standeth sure, and as you give obedience to its demands, lay hold on its promises, and claim their fulfilment you shall know that for the highest and lowest, the greatest and smallest, the power of God's Holy Spirit is yours to make you "a vessel meet for the Master's use."

*The Daily Round.

By REV. JAMES MURSELL.

The poet of the "Christian year" speaks to us of the daily round. I am afraid that for many Christians the daily round is one of sinning and repenting, and after pardon has been bestowed there is a little while of watchfulness and prayer, followed by another fall into wrong-doing. It has been rather a dreary round; and I want to point you to a much better one, which we find in Psa. lxiii. 1, 5, 8: "My soul thirsteth for Thee . . . My soul shall be satisfied . . . My soul followeth hard after Thee." This daily round is one we can all live. I wonder where you young men are spiritually? I hope you have got this far at any rate:—"My soul thirsteth for Thee."

I expect the daily round of sinning and repenting has been repeated so long that you have come to Keswick almost desperate, wishing for something better. Some of you who have come here are now drinking deeply of the river of God, and are being satisfied. Are you really in dead earnest, longing to be the noblest men that God can make you? I say to the praise of Jesus' name that I cannot remember the day when I did not long to be holy. I want you to pray God to keep burning in your heart the aim and desire to be His man, possessed truly by His spirit, till you have passed from beginning to thirst for God to the second stage of being satisfied with God. There are two sorts of satisfaction; self-satisfaction and God-satisfaction. You know that "satisfy" means to "become enough." God is willing to become enough for you. He is able to save to the uttermost and from the utmost. There are points where you need Him intensely. God in Christ by the Holy Ghost is enough to give us a glorious victory, and make us to *over*come through Him who loves us.

God will become enough light and strength for you to deal not only with the sinful things, but also with the doubtful ones. And if God satisfies your soul, He gives you a heart to confess Him. "My soul followeth hard after Thee." The following hard after God is following along the path on which the tree of life grows all the way. Always be doing something that has got the hardness of a good soldier's life in it, and when that task has become easier, start on a new thing that is hard. If you will learn the message of these words of the Psalmist, the daily round will bear you higher and higher, till you come to be where your Master is, and see Him face to face.

"One of these Little Ones."

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

Do you hear the children weeping, O my brothers,
Ere the sorrow comes with years?
They are leaning their young heads against their mothers,
And that cannot stop their tears.

E. B. Browning.

It was a small room, bare and cold, wherein a delicate woman lay upon a comfortless bed. Upon her brow could be seen the pallor of approaching death. By the narrow window stood a sad-faced girl of twelve, gazing up into the clear blue sky, thinking on in strange perplexity. She had heard the children laughing as they passed along, and seen them cared for and amused. "What made the difference for her?" she wondered. A movement of the coverlet, and she turned quickly to her mother.

"There is just a little milk left. Will you try to drink it, mother dear?"

"No, darling. You need it more than I do. I have been watching you. Oh Maggie, child, when I think of our lost home, so full of comforts and love, and of your father! Do you remember him? He was handsome and clever; but his gambling companions brought him to ruin!"

"Don't cry, there's a dear, dear mother. When I can work I will make it up, and we will be so happy."

"Do you wonder why I weep? It is for you, my gentle, innocent girl, to see your young life darkened by want and poverty, when you are unfit for a rough, hard life. I could die without a pang, for I long for heaven and rest, but to leave you amid these shadows and sorrows, which never need have been, is more than I can bear."

The woman closed her eyes, while visions of the home of other days passed before her, and then the dark picture of trouble and distress. Maggie had heard the freely spoken opinion of the neighbours in that close environment, and a dreadful fear deepened on the poor child's heart as she stood beside her mother.

"What shall I do? The doctor said you must have something good to eat; where can I get it? O mother dearie, are you worse? Speak, mother, tell me; I will do anything for you; are you too tired?"

She thought to listen for the words that trembled on the dry lips; and, bending near, Maggie heard: "Until the day break—and the shadows—flee away." A pitiful smile, a look as of committal, and the faint voice said again: "The Lord will take you up, my own precious child."

"Mother, mother, what is it?" cried the frightened girl—but no answer came. Stone-cold, sad and comfortless, she knew this was death.

Time moves on over the lot of the glad and happy, and over the misery untold, and Maggie saw the gruesome sight, and heard the coarse speeches of those who came to help. Her heart quailed as they spoke of the "work'us'," and grim dreams of lonely horror terrified her fragile being. In the room where she was taken till after the funeral, there dwelt sin-hardened women, and Maggie cried in vain.

One afternoon—the first after they laid her gentle mother in the grave—she crept away and found the spot again. Crouching beside the newly-made mound the orphan shivered and suffered as only such can suffer; and wept hot, bitter tears, as only such can weep; and God in heaven saw and heard.

. . . . . .

A bright and happy home, where love and peace dwelt in every heart. Such was the house from which a Christian woman and her daughter had gone to carry flowers to a father's grave.

When Alexander Naunton went through the gates into the city of light beyond, many grieved over the loss. He was great in his position in the church and in the Sunday school; he was important in the town and as one of the aldermen; but his truest greatness was in that he possessed the Christ-like dignity that stooped to uplift the fallen, and give a brother's grasp to the hand of the poorest and coldest ones.

Among his parting words, he said to his wife and children, "Live Christ, and all else will shape itself."

Sometimes the widow longed to join him, and that morning, at family worship, she asked them to sing the hymn that seemed to correct these longings, and nerve for duty, and one verse lingered in her thought.

Not now; for wounded hearts are sorely bleeding,
And thou must teach those wounded hearts to sing.
Not now; for orphans' tears are quickly falling,
They must be gathered 'neath some sheltering wing.

The quick eye of the sympathetic Gladys detected the desolate-looking child, for Maggie was slowly walking away.

"Speak to her, mother; how terribly sad she looks."

"Indeed I will, dear," and the loving manner of Mrs. Naunton banished all thought of fear from Maggie's mind, and with her cold hand in the stranger's, she was telling her melancholy story and answering questions.

"I haven't any one to love me now," she said.

"Yes, my child, as long as any of Christ's true followers live, no one can say that, and perhaps you are the one He has sent me to care for."

"Oh mother!" whispered Gladys, with swelling heart, for she had always seen the beauty of true religion which speaks in actions, rather than words, "is this the orphan we sang about to-day?"

"I think so, my daughter. Let us go to the people she is with and see."

It was only the work of two hours before Maggie, the homeless one, was surrounded with love and warmth in the happy home. So little she had, but each thing spoke of refinement and care.

"Poor soul, she'd known better days," said one, in speaking of the mother who had so lately been carried out; and from Maggie's lips they guessed the cause of all the misery.

When Gladys led the orphan into the nursery after she had been washed and dressed afresh, little May, a younger sister, came to her, and beaming with interest, took the thin hand and said:—

"You shall have half my toys and books, and we'll make you ever so happy, 'cos Jesus sent you, Mo'ver says."

That night the glistening stars shone over one Christlike home, and, sheltered in a warm bed, Maggie began a new and beautiful life.

The hand Divine that wiped away all tears from the suffering mother's face, and led the orphan to that Christian home, accepted the loving attentions bestowed on that little one as done unto Himself, and their hearts were filled with unspeakable joy.

There are lonely hearts to cherish
While the days are going by;
There are weary souls who perish
While the days are passing by.
Oh! the world is full of sighs,
Full of sad and weeping eyes;
Help the fallen ones to rise
While the days are going by.

Consolation.

"Let not your heart be troubled" (John xiv. 1).

"Let not your heart be troubled," God is God,
And Christ is still the same;
Despair not; bravely stem the flood,
Nor count thy trust as vain.

"Let not your heart be troubled," roll thy care,
Where untold burdens be:
Christ bore the Cross, and He can bear
What seems so hard for thee.

"Let not your heart be troubled," stay the tear,
Nor yield to sorrow's gloom;
The journey ends in mansions fair—
The Father's restful home.

"Let not your heart be troubled," fight the fight,
Faith's weapons near thee lie,
The crown of victory heaves in sight,
And shouts of victory!

"Let not your heart be troubled," time is short,
A moment—all is o'er!
O bind each promise to thy heart,
And sight the nearing shore!

The Ministry of "Good Cheer."

THERE are two kinds of benefaction—one takes the form of money, the other consists in sympathy. Doubtless, money is an invaluable help betimes; but what frail, tempted men and women most need and most appreciate, as they toil on day after day under grey and leaden skies, is encouragement. Words of advice and criticism are ever plentiful enough; but too often they are like the stars, very beautiful, but very cold. Even the idol-makers of the prophet Isaiah's day knew the value of heartening words, for every one bade his brother workman, "Keep a good heart."

Much, very much indeed, depends on leadership. And to come within measurable distance of success or distinction in leadership, a man must have a winsome personality; he must be able to speak with authority, and he must have a sanguine temperament based on the deep-rooted conviction that the principles or cause he espouses must and will prevail; for if fear or despondency once steals in and takes possession of the leaders of a State, or an army, or a Church, it soon filters down among the rank and file, unsettling and enervating all. Pessimism spells weakness, inactivity, defeat; optimism, strength, ardour, victory.

Of course, the world's Great Heart is the Lord Jesus Christ, He speaks with an accent and emphasis special to Himself. God hath given Him the tongue of the learned to speak a word in season to all weary and faltering ones. Grace is poured into His lips; He speaks as no other can.

THE PENITENT.

(1.) Here is a man who is suffering from paralysis, perhaps the result of evil doing, borne on a mat by four friends to Jesus for healing. It is the appeal of helplessness; it is the venture of faith. Now, Jesus knows the man's past career; yet, knowing all, He uses no words of cold, sharp, biting rebuke, but compassionates the man, and speaks in tender and caressing terms, "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee."

The Pharisaic way was to treat those who had sinned with scant consideration. The elder brother, who would not enter and share in the rejoicing of the household, over the return of the penitent one, was a typical Pharisee. They had no open door or heaven to set before the fallen; they had neither the desire nor the power to redeem men from the tyranny of self-reproach, or rescue them from the gnawing worm of defeat. How very different was Christ's method and treatment! No man ever uttered such hot and incandescent words about sin; no man ever laid such emphasis on the appalling and unerring issues of wrong doing as did Jesus Christ; yet His lips dropped words of grace as well as those of reproof. He brought hope into maimed and despairing lives; He taught that all sin, with the exception of the sin against the Holy Ghost, lay within the limits of Divine forgiveness; He showed mercy; He did not demand sacrifice. He always knew what men resisted before they fell, and nothing gladdened Him more than the tear-drop of penitence, or the cry of a broken heart.

"Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." These words are charged with hope and good cheer for all time. The music of the Gospel pulses through them; they are instinct with the passion and pity of our Father God. Pardon of sin is still imperative for all who would reach the shining table-lands where God is Sun and Star, and it is still obtainable. Christ still lives and speaks with the accent of authority and tenderness—"Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee."

THE TEMPTED AND THE TRIED.

(2.) "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." These were Christ's words to His disciples, who were greatly perturbed in mind, because their Master, who had been with them for three years, who had taught them much about God and man, and who had helped them to be better men, had just told them that He was about to leave them—He, the Shepherd, was to be smitten, and they the sheep were to be scattered. The prospect filled them with dismay. Already life had lost half of its radiant brightness and possibility. Not only did Christ tell them of His impending departure, He also spoke of sore and grievous trials that were destined to overtake them on His decease at Jerusalem.

"In the world ye shall have tribulation." That was enough, surely, to drive hope clean off the field! But Christ's messages were never wholly those of doom. And on this occasion the intimation of suffering was accompanied with the heartening words, "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

Needless to say, we stand at a great many removes from the disciples, yet remotely though we stand, tribulation is still with us. Our tribulation is different, certainly; not so open or cruel; but nevertheless, intensely real and very wearying to nerve and heart. There is no heart the world over without its sorrow; no back without its burden; and hardly any home without its emptied cot. The cross which Christ made the badge of Christian discipleship is still the symbol of all high and noble life on earth. In fact, he who has not yet seen or felt the cross has certainly mistaken the way to heaven. Straight is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life. If our eye offends we are to pluck it out; if our foot causes us to stumble we are to cut it off. The true follower of Jesus Christ dies daily to self and the world.

There is, for example, the frail health of our children, or, what is perhaps even worse to bear, their waywardness, their callousness to good example, their indifference to the claims of Jesus Christ as Saviour, Master, Lord; there is the desire and effort, the strenuous effort to succeed, and the constant rebuff; the shattering of our hopes in business by almost every turn of the potter's wheel; the measurement of a man solely by his genealogy or social status, the taunt of humble origin which was levelled against Christ Himself; the fickleness of human friendship, the removal of our dear ones. These are some of the things which conspire to make our life a conflict, a wrestling, a weary war.

Even in trial and tribulation let us remember that Christ, our Leader and Comrade, is with us. He Himself passed through the ranks. Though He were a Son, yet He learned obedience through the things which He suffered; therefore He is able to succour those who are tried. "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

It is easier, much easier, to destroy than construct; to tempt and besmirch the souls of men than save them and help make them rich in thought, in love, and in goodness. No jaunty or holiday task is that of turning men from darkness to light; of leading them in the way of righteousness. In fact, the chief leaders and reformers and teachers of all lands and ages have had experience of its hardness. Moses was driven to the brink of despair by the perverseness of the people under his charge; Isaiah found the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem so sodden with worldliness that they had no aptitude for spiritual vision. Jeremiah longed for a lodging-place in the wilderness that he might leave his people, so callous were they to the visitations of God; Paul had to lament the readiness with which some slipped away from the principles of the Gospel; Mazzini found the youth of Italy respond to his appeal with alacrity at first, but by-and-by, when difficulties presented themselves, they drifted away one by one till he was left severely alone. Even Christ Himself in spite of His winsome personality and gracious words experienced difficulty in extending the Kingdom of God among men; His own countrymen would not have Him to reign over them; His own brethren did not believe in Him; while His tears over Jerusalem were an indication of disappointed hope and rejected love.

To-day, Christian workers were never so numerous or so well-equipped, educationally, yet they still find it hard to get a foothold for the Gospel in certain lands and homes. The Lord's Day is being turned increasingly into a holiday instead of a holy day, the House of God is failing in many places to capture and retain the people; and what is perhaps the worst feature of all, there is a marked weakening of moral and spiritual fibre on the part of many Christians themselves, for if this is to be found in the green tree what may we not look for in the dry?

I am no pessimist, God forbid. While God reigns and Christ carries on His ministry of salvation there and here, there is no need or justification for despair. That Christ shall yet bind the whole round earth about the feet of God with the golden chains of love is the strong and sure note of the Gospel, "He must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet."

Still there are many things which conspire to induce the Christian worker to desist from his service. Be it so. We are not, however, to turn back cravenly in the day of battle—like the children of Ephraim. When hope burns low and dimly, when weariness steals in and paralyses the spirit, nothing can deliver us from its thrall like the recollection of Christ's real and abiding presence: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature, and lo! I am with you all the days even unto the end of the age."

THE DISCOURAGED WORKER.

(3.) That Christ is mindful of His own as they toil on, not commanding success, perhaps, but deserving it, at least, is proven by His treatment of the Apostle Paul. When he went to Jerusalem, he was arrested for preaching the doctrine of the Cross, and conveyed to the castle. From the castle stairs he was allowed to make his defence. In that defence he paid a magnificent tribute to the Saviourhood of Jesus Christ. He outlined his own life and views of truth, and showed how they had been radically transformed by Christ's apprehension of him and by his apprehension of Christ. What happened the succeeding night? Well, the Lord Himself stood by him. The Apostle was not alone on the castle stairs; the Risen Christ was there beside him. He heard the tribute which His servant paid to His grace and Saviourhood; and in recognition of such strong, brave, tender testimony, He promised him a further opportunity for such-like testimony. The night following, the Lord stood by him and said, "Be of good cheer, Paul; for as thou hast testified of Me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome."

It is proven, too, by His treatment of the Apostle John, who in his old age was banished to Patmos from Ephesus and from the company of believers there, to whom he was endeared by the saintliness of his character, to dwell among a class of people who were notorious for their evil living. The gravamen of his banishment was two-fold—"the Word of God and the testimony of Jesus." It must have meant much to the tender, sensitive soul of a man who, though a mystic of the highest type, believed deeply and firmly in the communion of saints on earth.

His epistles throughout are reminiscent of his faith: "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us"—but, though John was alone, he was not alone. One Lord's Day, as he sat conning in his mind the leading features of the first resurrection morn, a hand was laid upon him, and a voice addressed him: "Fear not; I am the First and the Last. I am He that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore." The unexpected Visitor who appeared and spoke in such tender and assuring words was Jesus, who had not forgotten His servant, as He forgets none who name His name. We are called to make the bounds of Christ's Kingdom wider yet; we are summoned to greater diligence; the cry from the city slum and the idol-ridden land is, "Come to our help!" The work is great and arduous; who is sufficient for it? None of us single-handed, but Jesus lives, and from His throne in the skies He says, "Be of good cheer! Lo, I am with you alway."

The Story of the Bass Rock.

ABOUT twenty-two miles east of Edinburgh lies the beautiful watering-place of North Berwick, at the mouth of the Firth of Forth; and, more easterly, the rugged Bass Rock lifts its head above the ocean, some two miles from the shore, opposite the romantically situated Tantallon Castle, described by Scott in "Marmion." The Bass is celebrated as the place where many of the noblest Covenanters were imprisoned because of their fidelity to the principles of the Reformation.

The Rock is of volcanic formation, about a mile round, 313 feet high, the cliffs on the west, north, and east, rising sheer out of the sea. Landing is only possible on the south side in calm weather. To the naturalist it is attractive, because it is the abode of countless numbers of Solan geese and various seabirds, perched on ledges and in clefts all down the face of the cliff. Year by year, in the springtime, they return from wandering over the ocean to build their nests and rear their young; and around their sea-island home they fish and wheel and perch and cry, all day long. Wonderful stories are told of the wild Solan geese of the Bass Rock.

Deeply interesting, too, is the chapter of civil and religious history connected with the Bass. Within its strong prison, reformers and martyrs were confined during the reign of James II. Terrible punishments were inflicted on these persecuted victims (chiefly ministers of the Gospel), who dwelt "in dungeons sometimes unlighted, sometimes lighted by windows that afforded no view, harshly treated as regards food, and only now and then allowed the liberty of the Rock." Here the unfortunate prisoners lay for periods of from two months to six years.

Two of the most notable of these heroic prisoners for Christ's sake were John Blackadder and Alexander Peden. Blackadder was an eminent preacher, whose prison on the Bass became his grave. The writer visited his quiet resting-place in the God's acre of the old North Berwick rustic churchyard, and heard the sweet-voiced birds singing his requiem instead of the shrill crying gannets on the lonely island. In a remarkable poetic epitaph, Blackadder has been compared to John of Patmos. Very thrilling is the story of Peden, the fiery prophet of the Covenanters, who suffered the loss of all things for the joy of holding forth the Word of Life.

In 1701 the fortress on the Rock was razed after a gallant resistance by a body of soldiers in the name of the Stuart dynasty, and, until the recent erection of the Bass Rock Light, the Bass has simply been a striking piece of sea-coast scenery, and a famous historic mark in the struggle for religious freedom.

So the Bass Rock is a witness to the brave men of bygone days who kept the faith. They teach us to confess Christ at all costs. These belong to the goodly company of the early Christians, the Waldensians, Huguenots, and such as have made Christ their highest joy.

The Covenanters "endured, as seeing Him who is invisible." They delighted "to soar on the wings of their faith beyond the trials and vexations of life." They looked for a city which hath foundations, and therefore they were willing to suffer not for their own faith alone, but "in the cause of all who refuse to palter with realities." These stalwarts loved the summit of the Rock which offered a fair prospect of land and sea, yet more, because it was good for solitude and meditation, "so near heaven for a prisoner's prayer."

It is said that occasionally friends were accustomed, two centuries ago, to visit the Governor of the State prison on the Rock, upon whom he would enact the quaint ceremony of conferring the freedom of the Bass, consisting of a drink from the well and a flower from the garden, a pretty little custom which made the visitor free of the Rock. But how much greater was the freedom which the solitary prisoner enjoyed who inherited the glorious liberty of the sons of God, wherewith Christ had made them free.

And the present aspect of the Rock to-day teaches the same lesson in another form—to "let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

A Child's Holiday Hymn.

Through all these gladsome holidays
Lord, keep me close to Thee;
Whene'er on pleasant scenes I gaze
Thy beauty may I see,
And love Thee for Thy works and ways,
By woodland, shore, and sea.

Thou, who hast made the world so fair,
Make me all fair within;
Grant me no joy Thou canst not share,
No gains love may not win.
At home, in travel, everywhere
Defend my heart from sin.

Keep me sweet-natured, kind to all
In merry play and fun;
My face still bright when duties call,
Clear shining as the sun;
Content when disappointments fall,
If but Thy will be done.

So shall my holidays be blest
With joys unreached before;
So shall I please Thee, first and best,
By mountain, field, and shore;
And learn, in happy change and rest,
To love and serve Thee more!

PAUL'S IDEAL (Phil. iii. 7-21).

THE mention of Paul's Ideal reminds one of Lord Salisbury's eulogium of Mr. Gladstone, in the course of which he said that in all the steps the great statesman took, and in all the efforts he made, he was guided by a high moral ideal. He sought the attainment of great ideals.

An ideal is a mental conception of character, after which we desire to shape our lives. It is the fresco which we paint on the walls of our soul, and perpetually look at in our lonely hours; and since the heart is educated through the eye, we become more and more assimilated to that which we admire.

Our ideal should be distinctly beyond us. We should not be content to climb the low hills immediately near our home, but resolve to scale the lofty peaks of the distant mountain range. To realize our ideal, we must be prepared to strain our muscles and task our strength; attempting something which those who know us best never thought us capable of. Thus, like the great Apostle, we must count the ordinary ambitions of men as dung, must forget the things which are behind and press forward to those before.

Our ideal should give unity to life. The fitful following of an ideal is not the best policy of life for any of us, as when the life-ideal is that of a naturalist, or soldier, and the actual is the plodding career of a lawyer's clerk. Happy is the man who is able to prosecute his ideal through each hour of consciousness, and who can say with the Apostle, "This one thing I do." The people who say this are the irresistible ones. Those who know one subject thoroughly, or who bend all their energies in the prosecution of one purpose, carry all before them. What a comfort it is that the quest for a holy character may be prosecuted always and everywhere. In every act and thought of our lives we may become more like Christ.

Our ideal should be ensphered in Christ. The Christian ideal is the highest ideal. Biographies may greatly help us. Let a young man or woman read Stanley's life of Dr. Arnold, the memoirs of Augustus and Julius Hare, the biographies of R. M. McCheyne and W. C. Burns, the diary of Henry Martyn, and the soul's ardour cannot fail to be greatly inspired. But none of these will compare with the Ideal presented in Jesus Christ. These were fragments of men, He is the Son of Man. "Broken lights of Thee, but Thou, O Lord, art more than they." Therefore we may cry with the Apostle, "that I may gain Christ," "that I may know Him," "I press towards the goal."

Our ideal should be within our reach. It is a mistake to set before our minds an ideal which is out of harmony with the make-up of our nature; as when, for instance, a man deliberately acts in despite of some harmless taste or faculty with which God has endowed him. We should choose as an objective some ideal which is manifestly, whether in our own judgment or that of others, within our scope. Therefore we should learn to say with the Apostle, "I follow on to apprehend that for which I was apprehended." Be sure that God created and redeemed you for a purpose. Discover that purpose, and set yourself to make it good.

Such an ideal will be realized only at the cost of self-denial. You must put aside your own righteousness to get His; you must be willing to count all things loss; you must forget the things behind; you must ignore the imperious demands of passion (19). So shall you be prepared for the hour when even "the body of your humiliation" shall be transformed to the likeness of the glorious body of Christ. His working is on your side; in you and for you He will subdue all things to Himself. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTE.

The Witwatersrand C.E. Union was formed just prior to the outbreak of the war in South Africa, and during the ensuing three years was more or less dormant. A few months ago the Union was resuscitated and reorganised, and is now at work in full vigour.

A Sydenham Mission. — The evangelistic work at the Gospel Hall, Wells Road, Sydenham, has entered upon its thirty-seventh year with a promising outlook. Each of the numerous agencies has been maintained with considerable zeal on the part of helpers who have given themselves unreservedly to their tasks. Many have been the cases in which the patient sowing of the good seed has been followed by a time of reaping. The Sunday School has extended its borders so much that the old Coffee Tavern and Soup Kitchen have now to be utilized for the classes. Mr. D. Burton, superintendent, may be addressed at the hall.

DAVID SPARES SAUL (1 Sam. xxvi. 5-12, 21-25.)

GOLDEN TEXT (Luke vi. 27).

DAVID never returned to the Court of King Saul after the scene depicted in 1 Sam. xx. 41, 42. For nearly seven years he was an exile and a fugitive, serving, so to speak, an apprenticeship for the office of king among the poorest people, over whom he was destined to rule:—(1) Gibeah to Nob, where he ate the sacred bread and took up the sword of Goliath (xxi. 6-9; Matt. xii. 3, 4); (2) Gath, where in terror he feigned madness as a means of escape; (3) cave of Adullam, near Bethlehem, probably known to him in his boyhood's days, where he was joined by his own family and a motley army (1 Sam. xxii. 1, 2); (4) Moab, the homeland of his great grandmother, Ruth, and there he left his father and mother for safety with King Achish; (5) Forest of Hareth, where the listener, Doeg, betrayed him to the king with disastrous results (xxii. 9, 18, 22; Psa. lii., title); (6) Keilah, where David received Divine guidance and help; (7) Ziph, where he had his last interview with Jonathan (xxiii. 16-18), and where Saul's ill-advised and carefully-laid plans were frustrated by the Lord (xxiii. 19, 23, 27); (8) Engedi, where Saul unwittingly placed himself in the power of David, but was generously spared (xxiv. 3-15).

At this time Samuel died, and David married Abigail. Saul had recalled his daughter Michal and given her in marriage to another man (xxv. 44).

DAVID'S INTERVIEW WITH KING SAUL.

David with his brave little company was in hiding in the wilderness of Hachilah. Saul with his host had pitched on the hillside (xiii. 2). Entrenchment, the baggage-waggons. Bodyguard, Abner and 3,000 picked men (xiv. 50-52). Signal of the king's locale, the planted spear, probably the same which had been hurled more than once at his valiant champion and devoted general, David. "A deep sleep from the Lord was upon them" (xxvi. 12). David and his nephew, Abishai, engaged in a midnight exploit, passed the three-fold barrier, and seized spear and cruise from the side of the king (power and strength): then climbing up to a shelving rock on the mountain-side, David aroused the sleeping army with a cutting piece of satire addressed to the king's cousin, Abner (xxvi. 15, 16).

David answered Saul with respect due from subject to king, faithfulness as man to man and loyalty to God (18-20).

David showed remarkable strategic power, forbearance, self-control, magnanimity, and loyalty to God. Both showed fearless courage.

KING SAUL'S REPLY

was a confession of sin, made for the third time, and fair promises for the future (xv. 24, xxiv. 17), but David's confidence in Saul had been already destroyed. He allowed the spear to be returned, and acknowledged with humble confidence before Saul that the Lord had been the author of the circumstances, as He would be the faithful and righteous Judge and Rewarder of all men. Saul's last words to David were strangely prophetic of his coming triumph, but they never met again.

SPECIAL POINTS.

1. When Saul ceased looking to the Lord for guidance he began to go wrong. David prayed (Psa. cxix. 117, 35), and even cried, "Make me to go in the way of Thy commandments."

2. Saul had the same opportunity of becoming a hero as David. The same prophet's teaching, early experience, and the same God to serve (Psa. cxliii. 8-12).

3. Saul listened to wicked advisers, to "men's words" (xxiv. 9), and allowed envy to drive all love out of his heart, and let in all manner of evil. David listened to the voice of God speaking to him by his conscience, let no thoughts of revenge lodge in his heart, was always ready to speak kindly to his foe, and was willing to leave the wrongs in His life for God to set right in His own time (Luke xviii. 7; Psa. lviii. 11).

4. When did David stand the greatest conqueror? 1 Sam. xxvi. 8-11. More than xvii. 50, 51. Because Prov. xvi. 32. Faith in "the living God" upheld him both times. He scorned to take a mean advantage of Saul, and feared to disobey God.

5. A short, quick way to the throne; dare he take it? Rather wait God's time and way (Prov. xxviii. 20; Prov. x. 22).

6. The opportunity to do wrong is never of the Lord's providence. It may be a test for character or trial of faith; but He always makes a way out of temptation for those who trust Him.

A FORGIVING SPIRIT.

Many years ago, during a time of persecution in Holland, a man was burnt at the stake for his fidelity to God. Several years afterwards, when the men of Holland were making a stand for freedom, the widow of the martyr discovered a fugitive at her door craving for shelter from his pursuers. On looking at the man the woman recognised the burgomaster who had condemned her husband to death. Nevertheless she answered, "In the name of Jesus Christ, come in!" and the poor fellow was hidden in safety till his enemies, in despair, had abandoned the search. "Love your enemies; do good to them which hate you" (Golden Text).

TAUGHT BY GOD.

A doctor at Bournemouth has recently made an interesting discovery with regard to bees. Placing some Demarara sugar in a beehive, he was astonished to find that the bees turned it out. The doctor then analysed some of the crystals, and was surprised to learn that they were not cane sugar at all. The sugar was only an imitation, and the bees, wiser than many human beings, refused to be deceived by the clever sham. So we, if led by His Spirit, will be prevented from taking false steps and falling into error. Though David was tempted by Abishai to destroy King Saul, he felt that God would not be pleased, and answered: "Destroy him not; for who can stretch forth his hand against the Lord's anointed, and be guiltless?" (v. 9.)

THE MIND OF THE MASTER.

In the days of Queen Mary, a man of the name of George Marsh, of Lancaster, gave offence because he would not submit to the Church of Rome. He was tried and condemned to death because of his refusal to recant. Asked if he would not have the Queen's mercy, he replied that he gladly desired the same, but dare not deny his Saviour, lest he should lose His mercy everlasting. The bishop then read the sentence unto the end, and afterwards said to him, "Now I will no more pray for thee than I will for a dog." George Marsh replied that notwithstanding all, he would continue to pray for his lordship the bishop, whenever he approached the mercy-seat of God. Such a noble spirit was akin to that shown by David when he refused to do ill to the king. "The Lord forbid that I should put forth mine hand against the Lord's anointed" (v. 11).

PLAYING THE FOOL.

Some time ago, a young man of good family was compelled to leave the army because of his gambling propensities. He then drifted lower and lower in society, until at length he was reduced to a wretched garret in a mean London street. Then, through the death of a relative, a fortune was offered him, on the condition that the money was at once to pass to another if he, the legatee, ever gambled. The ex-captain was watched and traced to a West-End gambling haunt. There he forfeited the fortune, and in breaking the stipulation relinquished his wealth directly it came into his hands. Saul had gambled away his privileges as the chosen of God, and by his behaviour had forfeited all claim to God's protection. Nevertheless, there is forgiveness with the Lord to all who repent (v. 21).

Personalia.

After the Convention at Llandrindod Wells, Rev. F. B. MEYER went to the Isle of Man, where he has been holding meetings at Ramsay and Douglas. The gatherings have been crowded, and much blessing has resulted.

M. LE PASTEUR GORY, of Blidah, Algeria, who has been staying in England for a short time seeking opportunities to make known the needs of his work, is shortly leaving for home. Friends able to encourage our esteemed brother in his enterprise described in last week's issue, may send their gifts to our care, and we need not add that it will give us great pleasure to be the medium of assisting M. Gory in any way.

Lingfield Colony of Mercy.—By the kindness of Mr. John Cory, of Cardiff, an institute is in course of erection on the Christian Union's Colony of Mercy, Lingfield, Surrey, where young men with a desire for Christian social service will be trained to do social work for the benefit of the afflicted and the poor. It is intended to give men thus devoting themselves to Christian service some training in pastoral theology, sociology, ambulance work, the handling of men, &c., in order to fit them for useful service on colonies of mercy, or in prisons, workhouses, asylums, and other institutions. Men desiring such work should have some gift of management, and be accustomed to work with their hands. Full particulars may be had of the manager, Training Colony, Lingfield Surrey.

About Books.

Rev. John Robson, D.D., has edited Jeremiah, the Prophet, for the very useful series of "Bible Class Primers." (6d. T. & T. Clark.) A handbook that should prove of great service to Bible students.

The Genius of God. By Rev. John Clayton. (2s. A. H. Stockwell.) The author's method of sermonizing is original, and calculated to arrest attention. The style is colloquial and direct, and possesses considerable vigour.

In The Soul Winner's Secret, Lieut.-Col. S. L. Brengle gives a series of papers primarily for Salvation Army officers and soldiers, which touch helpfully on many topics affecting work and conduct, (6d. and 1s. Salvation Army Trade Department, 79-81, Fortess Road, N.W.)

Christ's Foreview of this Age. By Rev W. Y. Fullerton. (1s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell.) An excellent book, containing in small compass a considerable amount of valuable teaching. As an exposition of the Parables in Matt. xiii., we commend it warmly. The thought is clear and robust, and expressed in brief pregnant sentences.

The Tree of Life, and Other Sermons. By Rev. J. M'Kinney, M.A. (2s. 6d. Chas. J. Thynne.) Good sermons, containing much that is helpful. They excel, not so much in the depth of their expositions as in the application of Scripture to the life of to-day. They are practical in aim, earnest in spirit, and clear in expression.

Fettered Lives, and Other Addresses to Men. By Rev. G. E. Weekes, M.A., B.D. (2s. A. H. Stockwell.) Those who desire suggestions for straight talks to men cannot fail to find help in this volume. Such subjects as "Heredity," "Gambling," "Can we trust the Gospels," "Conscience," "The Bible." and others are treated in a thoughtful and vigorous style.

Rev. John Bell, Baptist missionary, has told the story of Matula, a Congo convert, in A Miracle of Modern Missions. It is a story of deep interest, and fully illustrated. Mr. A. H. Baynes, secretary of the B.M.S., writes an introduction, giving welcome details of the growth of the Congo Mission. The book is a valuable addition to the literature of African mission work. (2s. Religious Tract Society.)

Priest or Prophet? A Question for the Day. By Rev. W, H. Griffith Thomas, B.D. (1d. Shaw.) This sterling booklet is in its second edition, enlarged. It examines the question of Ministry, showing that the present dispensation has no place for a priestly caste; all believers are called to be priests, and ministers are called to preach the Word, for evangelization and edification. There is much teaching, both timely and valuable, in this booklet.

In Jack Cooke, the Boy Preacher, Pastor Cuff, of Shoreditch Tabernacle, gives us an earnest and sympathetic sketch of the life of the young evangelist whose work has lately attracted so much attention both in England and America. Mr. Cuff's is a lucid statement; it does not disguise seeming failure here and there, and for the remarkable blessing which attended the services, on the whole, the glory is ascribed to God. In a full appendix press accounts of the various missions are given. (1s. net. R. L. Allan & Son.)

Norwegian Self-Taught. For students, tourists, &c. By C. A. Thimm, F.R.G.S. (2s. Marlborough.) In these days of holidays in Norway, and excursions from fjord to fjord, such a manual as this cannot but prove of practical service, as well as peculiarly interesting to persons having a philological side of their being. There are vocabularies and conversations, grammar and reading lessons, travel, cycling, photographic, fishing, and shooting talk, also tables of money, weights, and measures. Both in scope and contents, this is a very useful manual.

The Martyr Graves of Scotland. By the late J. H. Thomson, of Hightae. Revised and edited by Rev. Matthew Hutchison, with an introduction by D. Hay Fleming, LL.D., entitled "The Story of the Scottish Covenants in Outline." With an Appendix containing a complete list of the Dunnottar prisoners, never before printed. (7s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) To say that the promises of the title-page are performed in the body of the book, with over fifty illustrations thrown in, is to furnish a formal account of a volume of marvellous interest. Those who know the earlier editions of this standard book on the Covenanters, will want to read the large amount of new matter; while those who know nothing of the grand story of Christian devotion and consistency to principle may well make a beginning with a classic such as this. The pages unfold a glorious chapter in Scottish history; and a course of Church history should not be reckoned complete until the martyr graves of Scotland are visited, or their story read in this handsome volume.

George Fox's Journal. Abridged by Percy Livingstone Parker. (3s. 6d. net. Isbister.) A great book is here presented in a handy form. The pages give some idea of the desperate struggle for religious liberty in the seventeenth century, and are a memorial of the consistency and devotion of the early Quakers. Dr. Robertson Nicoll writes an introduction, and there are several brief appreciations—by Fox's wife, William Penn, Thomas Ellwood, and Thomas Carlyle. The subject headings and index bear witness to the care and good judgment with which Mr. Parker has done his editorial work.

Letters of Andrew Jukes. Edited with a short biography by Herbert H. Jeaffreson. (3s. 6d. net. Longmans.) Mental peculiarities and spiritual experiences combined to invest the character of Andrew Jukes with an interest all its own. His story is here outlined in brief; and extracts from his letters on a large variety of subjects, and extending over a period of nearly forty-five years, are given under topical headings. Views that are doubtful and at times objectionable, are alternated with such as are attractive and helpful; so the book will best fulfil its purpose in the hands of persons of discriminating mind.

Mr. Ferrar Fenton has finished his work—The Bible in Modern English. Vol. IV. contains the books known as Hagiographa—Psalms, Proverbs, Job, Song of Songs, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, Esther, Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Chronicles. (2s. 6d. net. Partridge.) The method pursued in the earlier sections has been followed to the end. Hence we are compelled once more to complain of the excessive liberties taken by the translator. While giving Mr. Fenton every credit for good intentions, we cannot find in his work any evidence of the sense of responsibility that should guide and restrain one who would render the Sacred Scriptures into the language of the people.

We welcome with peculiar satisfaction a new edition of one of the many valuable works given to the Church of Christ by the late Dr. Saphir—The Epistle to the Hebrews: An Exposition. (7s. 6d. Shaw.) A volume of 890 pages, it is not only a very important work of exegesis, but a fitting memorial of a great theologian. The chapters are forty-one in number and singularly readable. The majestic character of the Epistle was fully realised by the expositor, whose style is harmonious as well as expressive. Here is not only learning and insight, but deep spirituality. While abreast of the most erudite and profound, Dr. Saphir had an eye for the grace and beauty that shine in the inspired Scriptures, and he was careful never to pass them over. Such is our esteem for this luminous piece of work, that we could wish the new edition soon put into circulation and followed by others in rapid succession.

The Journal of John Wesley: Popular Edition Condensed. Introduction by Rev. W. L. Watkinson. Vol. II. (3s. 6d.) We welcome the concluding volume of this excellent edition of a work of enduring interest. The religious history of the eighteenth century cannot be properly estimated without a careful study of this classic; and those who would understand the condition of society in the United Kingdom during the same period must give due attention to these entertaining records. If the lively interest of this marvellous work could but be impressed upon the popular mind, many a modern book would have to wait for a more convenient season with readers who desire to put their time and energy to good and profitable account. Determined to leave such as neglect these records absolutely without excuse, the Methodist Book Room has also published a one-volume edition, with the title: Journal of John Wesley: Abridged Edition. (2s.) We could imagine nothing more judicious in execution and compact in form than this handsome little volume, the introduction to which is by Rev. N. Curnock. As sure as it finds its way into the hands of intelligent people, this abridgement will excite a desire to read all that can be had of the vivacious and instructive journal of the distinguished founder of Methodism. (C. H. Kelly.)

Rescue Work in Poplar.—Many will learn with pleasure and thankfulness that the venerable worker in the interests of the fallen, Mrs. Wilkes, is able to continue her ministry in spite of advanced years. A source of great encouragement to her and the helpers at Louise Home is the number of erring young women and girls, who having passed through the institution and saved from making further shipwreck of their young lives, are now respectable wives and mothers, useful servants, or dutiful daughters. Mrs. Wilkes writes that the present is a time of exceptional financial stress. "We have an over-full house, and many waiting to come in. Times are harder than usual just now, and it is with a heart full of anxiety that I ask help, for Christ's sake, with my over-heavy burden. I must not say 'over-heavy,' for He will not let it be more than I can bear." The address of Louise Home is Manor Cottage, 31, Sturry Street, Poplar, E.

Missions to Hop-Pickers.

In Hampshire, last season was a time of refreshing. Much good seed was sown, and we believe cannot return void. Five tents were again erected, and from these centres about twelve other places were visited, and meetings and lantern services held. The work covers an area of some twenty miles of the hop country here. The children have constant attention, and special meetings and teas were held for them. Temperance work was to the fore, and many pledges were taken. We were also gladdened by finding many who had pledged in former years still staunch and true. At the tea-meetings held at the close, and for which the hoppers themselves partly pay, there was an aggregate attendance of something like 1,300 people. A man was found in one field to whose father the late Mr. Chinn had given a Bible thirty-five years ago, when visiting him as he lay ill in his tent. The son still preserved the book, covered in cloth, and there was evidence in the whole family of an elevation of character and social position through the love of that one Book. A good amount of ambulance work was done by several who are skilled in the matter. We go forth in faith for the coming season, and we are anxious to send tea into the garden at midday, where possible at a smal' charge, but it will involve extra expense. Books, tracts, cards, and old calendars will be gratefully accepted. Aurelia Chinn.

Lenten House, Alton, Hants.

Mr. E. Abel, City Missionary, Canterbury, writing on behalf of "the Kent Hop-Pickers' Mission, carried on by Mr. George Heath, 31, Norman Road, Canterbury, for the past twenty-seven years," says:—"Last year there was less drunkenness and riot; this was attributable to the influence brought to bear upon the pickers by Mr. Heath and his workers. The Gospel is clearly presented at open-air lantern services, and endeavours are made to clothe the naked, feed the poor, and minister to the sick. The mission is unsectarian, and its teaching decidedly Protestant. The friends desire to continue the work, and to cover a larger area."

The Y.M.C.A.

In the latest news letter from Calcutta, Mr. T. D. Patton (secretary of the Central Branch) writes that with the opening of the new building for the European work there has been a marked improvement in all departments. "Some of the noticeable encouragements are—our Sunday night Gospel meetings have an average attendance of over seventy-five; we have now two Bible classes, and are planning to start a third; lectures of an educational character have a better attendance; the reading-room is more largely patronized by men during their leisure hours; the residential portion providing a home is proving a success; we believe that the prayers offered up by those in the homeland have had much to do with the success thus far obtained, and we ask that you will further remember us."

The Marquis of Northampton has entertained the members of the Northampton and Wellingborough branches of the Y.M.C.A. at Castle Ashby. His lordship, who was accompanied by Lady Margaret Compton, Lord Compton, and Lord Spencer Compton, received his guests at the entrance to the Castle, and showed to them the chief attractions of his seat. In an address which he subsequently delivered, his lordship said that while he valued the Y.M.C.A. for its varied undertakings, he appreciated it most for the Christian character of its work.

Further reports are to hand of the work of the Y.M.C.A. tents at the various volunteer encampments. In the tent of the North-East Metropolitan District at Seaford, which operated amongst the 2nd and 5th London Brigades, no fewer than 9,254 letters were written and posted during the week. Three commanding officers sent donations for the work. Many paid personal visits to the tents and expressed the highest appreciation of the work carried on. Gospel meetings were held each night, and the marquee, 100ft. by 40ft., was packed on several occasions.

In recognition of the remarkable success attained by the St. Petersburg Association, known there as the Society for the Moral Improvement of Young Men, and founded by Mr. James Stokes three years ago, the Czar has conferred upon Mr. Stokes the order of St. Stanislas (of the first class). Count Cassini, in delivering them to Mr. Stokes, stated that the St. Petersburg Association had become the most efficient and popular organization in the city. The Association now numbers over 1,000 members, and cannot receive more, as its rooms are constantly crowded beyond their capacity. Prince Oldenburg, Prince Hilkoff, and H.E. I. N. Tourchianinoff, and a group of prominent officials of the Russian Government, have been leaders and sponsors for the organization, and have served as officers from the beginning.

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Among Fisher-Folks in the North.

WORK of a most interesting character has been and still is being carried on in the North of Scotland, amongst the fisher-folks. In the earlier part of the fishing season the work at Stornoway, Lerwick, and Wick was of an inspiring nature. At the first of these places Mr. H. W. Paterson, of Glasgow, in company with Miss Imrie, as deputies of the U.F. Church, laboured amongst the fisher-folks in the Gospel; elsewhere, the work was carried on by Rev. A. A. Milne (Baptist), of Cambuslang, and others.

The work at Fraserburgh and Peterhead during the past six weeks has been of an encouraging character. At Fraserburgh Mr. Josiah Nix, Rev. E. B. Frame, of Dumfries (Baptist), and others, have been in the forefront, the local ministers also helping. Hundreds of men and women listened with manifest interest to the Gospel, while some have professed to receive Christ. At Peterhead the Gospel was presented by quite a number of deputies, representing various denominations. Rev. R. Logan, Cambuslang (Established), Rev. George Harper, Bellshill (Baptist), Rev. Thomas Riley (Wesleyan) have stood shoulder to shoulder in Gospel testimony. On Sunday afternoons, on the Links, fully 2,000 listened to the story of the Cross; on other evenings, at various places in the town, crowds gathered and the Word was spoken and sung. Mr. Logan and Mr. Harper presented the Gospel in song in a pleasing manner. The lady deputies at this place, Miss Sutherland (Established), Miss Imrie, Miss Tait (U.F. Church), and Miss McQueen (Y.W.C.A.), have been in "labours abundant" amongst the fisherwomen. On Monday evenings in Thistle Street Hall, large gatherings of women have been held. A number of the women have confessed Christ. In visitation work also a number of men have been led to decision, some at the close of the open-air meetings. Gatherings for children were held on the Smith Embankment, when earnest words were spoken and bright choruses sung.

One of the chief features of interest at Peterhead has been the daily prayer meeting at 9 a.m. This time of fellowship at the Throne of Grace has been felt by the various friends to be a refreshing season. The motto and spirit of this meeting, and of the united Gospel testimony all through has been truly "All one in Christ Jesus." As the various deputies left the railway station, those remaining sang the chorus—

"When we all get to heaven,
What a day of rejoicing that will be:
When we all see Jesus,
We'll sing and shout the victory."

Some of the deputies have now returned to their own spheres of labour, greatly blessed by this season of fellowship in Christian service in the North. Rev. T. Riley has gone to Fraserburgh to continue the work there, while at Peterhead the efforts are being ably sustained this month by Rev. D. Barnetson, of Roslin (U.F. Church), and others. Some of the local ministers, and Mr. Jack, missionary, have willingly helped; while the "Mizpah" Choir and Band, under Mr. Napier, have rendered valuable assistance.

Essex Christian Endeavourers.

Under the auspices of the South-East Essex Christian Endeavour Union, and with the kindly co-operation of the Evangelization Society (who sent down one of their evangelists, Mr. Albert E. Sims, and provided a large tent), a three months' mission has been organized, and already the following places have been visited in turn—Rochford, Vange, Pitsea, Leigh, and Shoeburyness, and now Westcliff-on-Sea. The effort has been much blessed of God, and the untiring work of the evangelist owned in the blessing of many. At Westcliff, on Bank Holiday, the Endeavourers rallied at the tent at three o'clock, and marched down to the beach, headed by a C.E. flag. A splendid meeting was held—large numbers of people had the good tidings preached unto them in speech and song. Gospels and tracts were distributed, accompanied by kind words and invitations to the meetings by a number of earnest ladies, whose efforts were crowned by the joyful knowledge that two young girls definitely decided for Christ.

After tea two effective meetings were held, the first a talk to the Christians, and the second a Gospel meeting, at which the tent was fairly well filled and there were five seekers after Christ. The mission is to conclude at Southend. C. R. Downton Davis.

Blackpool Hippodrome.

The services in the Hippodrome at Blackpool continue to attract large attendances. It is estimated that there is an average of 200,000 visitors in the town during August in this busy and popular health resort. The speaker at the Hippodrome on Lord's Day morning, August 9, was Rev. John Holden, late of Norwich and now of Bowdon. In the evening Mr. John Duxbury (who has given "The Book of Job" as a recital) now gave, in an abridged form, "The Pilgrim's Progress." On Sabbath last Rev. J. Tolefree Parr was the preacher. Some 2,000 people listened in the evening to an address on "Wanted, a Man." L. J.

Rev. Jesse Mayo at Castleacre.

We have been having here some special services during the past week, during which much spiritual good has been effected. The members of the different churches have been drawn together in unity, and a good feeling has been manifested. Several have come out and declared themselves on the Lord's side. We have had the missioner from the National Council of Free Churches (Rev. Jesse Mayo), who has delivered stirring addresses in the Wesleyan, Baptist, and Primitive Methodist Chapels. Short prayer meetings were held after each service, and verily the Master's presence was among us. Henry Taylor.

At Newton Abbot Races.

By the blessing of God the work of the Racecourse Mission at Newton Abbot Races was of a most encouraging character, the presence of the Holy Spirit being manifested at all the meetings. This was particularly noticeable at the evening gatherings at the Clock Tower in the town, when from four to five hundred Devonshire folk gathered to hear the Gospel message, for the most part remaining from start to finish. Many hearers were loth to leave; one evening between thirty and forty men lingered for nearly an hour after the meeting had closed, the workers using the opportunity thus afforded them to personally plead with many concerning their souls' salvation. Mr. Collard, the sailor evangelist, was present. If the churches of the town continue the work thus begun there will probably be a revival such as has never before been seen in the locality.

Mr. W. H. Stanes in Bengal.

Missionaries labouring in the Gospel among the aboriginal tribes, the Santals of Bengal, have recently been cheered by the visit of Mr. W. H. Stanes, hon. missioner of the I.S.S.U., and author of "Topical Teaching." He held a series of meetings at four different mission stations in Santalia, which resulted in much blessing to many souls. The spirit of grace and of supplication was poured out, and crowds of heathens gathered in the villages to hear the Word of Life. The missioner's object-lessons created much interest, and set forth in a plain and effective manner the fundamental truths of the Gospel. The preaching hall at Mihijam proved too small for the eager crowds of Hindus, Mohammedans, and Santals that came nightly, and we believe many left under conviction of sin. The addresses on the "Pilgrim's Progress," "The Holy War," and the "Tabernacle" were greatly appreciated by the native Christians and rescued famine orphans. At the close of the meetings a number testified of having passed from death unto life. These unmistakable signs of a work of God in our midst cause us to abound with thanksgivings. We shall continue to pray for this servant of Christ that God may abundantly bless him in his work among the young in India and the East. Fred. Rowat.

Aylesbury Tent Mission.

God has graciously blessed the work of Mr. F. Penfold in this district. It was a pleasure to take part in the closing services. A good number gathered in the tent on the Saturday night, and again at 7 a.m. next day a large number gathered for prayer.

The Congregational Chapel (Rev. J. Hilton Stowell's) was well filled for the morning service. The congregation was deeply interested by addresses from Mr. Penfold and Mr. Garstin. In the afternoon the rain, although coming down in torrents, did not deter the people from almost filling the tent. Some new converts spoke, one young man, formerly a Roman Catholic, testified clearly to having found salvation. Another speaker had been a confirmed drunkard.

In the evening, although it was wet, the tent was crowded in every part, and many remained behind to seek the pardon of their sins. Quite a number of young people who have been brought up under ritualistic practices have found the reality of salvation through Christ alone. I met several people in the town who told me that they had been converted in the tent. The ministers have helped in dealing with the anxious during the after meetings. Brother Penfold carried on this good work nightly for a month, and many have been led to the Saviour. Each convert was handed a card, on which was to be entered the name of the church which he or she elected to join. Sixty joined the Congregational Church alone. G.

Mr. W. D. Dunn continues to experience wonderful blessing at Govan. Many are coming to Christ.

Mrs. E. S. Barker and her co-workers, Miss A. L. McNaughton and Mr. Emmanuel Jones, the Welsh singer, have been with us at Camden, S.C., nearly four weeks, and through God have done a most blessed work. Many here will rejoice throughout eternity that these friends came to South Carolina.

(Rev.) J. F. Kelley.

During the past few months open-air meetings have been held outside the gates of the Millwall Dock, E., and hundreds of men have heard the glad tidings of salvation. Great help has been rendered by Mr. Cockrem, secretary of the Open-Air Mission, in sending such well-known brethren as Messrs. Gerald Coultas, J. Newcombe Goad, Goodchild, and S. Levermore, to help forward this good work. Many men whose lives are cast in the mould of poverty have been spoken with and shown that He careth for them. Geo. Page.

Mr. R. McLean has just concluded a mission at Cleator Moor, Cumberland. It was his third visit, and has been the most blessed of all. From the first meeting the tent was filled, and truly the Lord has been in our midst. Christian workers speak of the blessing received, as well as of cases of conversion. Some who have been won were well known in the service of Satan; may their earnestness be conspicuous in the service of Christ! Two very interesting cases were visited by the evangelist on their death-beds; both were the fruit of former missions, and were rejoicing in God their Saviour. Besides preaching in the tent nightly, Mr. McLean preached at several churches, as well as visiting and speaking at Frisington and Keekel, both the scenes of former missions, and at each place met those who had decided for Christ in past years. The tent is now pitched at Sandwith, in connection with the Christian Endeavour work of Whitehaven.

Members of the Open-air Mission have been holding services on the sands at Weymouth twice a day under the leadership of Mr. W. T. Parker. The other brethren, assisting Mr. Parker, were Messrs. W. Walls, C. Christensen, and R. H. Richardson. These evangelists held the attention of their hearers with brief, pointed Gospel addresses, and had the joy of seeing some direct fruit of their labour. Four dear children belonging to one family decided for the Lord Jesus, and one young woman came out openly and gave herself to Christ. The secretary of the mission has already heard from many who have been moved by God's spirit, and as the meetings were growing in interest and power, it seemed a matter for regret that, owing to other engagements, these earnest evangelists had to leave Weymouth. The services were supported by fellow labourers from Weymouth and elsewhere, some young ladies assisting by solos, and other Christians, including ministers of the Established and Free Churches, either giving short addresses or adding their testimony. The Gospel solos of Mr. W. Walls were greatly appreciated. A. S.

Irish Notes.

THE generous donation of £500 has been promised by Mrs. Winstanley to the Superannuation Fund of Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin.

A very successful tent mission has been held by Rev. John Good, Methodist Conference evangelist, at Lurgan. The attendance has been so large that the tent has had to be enlarged so as to accommodate 400 additional hearers.

Much indignation is felt by the Protestants of Cork and the neighbourhood at the opening of the grounds of the Exhibitions for hurling matches and other sports on the Lord's Day. The action of the managers, which was carried by fifteen to eight votes, is looked on as a breach of trust by the Protestant subscribers to the undertaking, who gave the Exhibition their support on the understanding that the place would not be opened on Sundays.

The Board of Missions of the Irish Presbyterian Church has received a bequest of over £300 for home mission work from Mr. McKinlay, of Ballymena; and Messrs. Browne & Co., of Donoughmore, have promised to pay the cost of passage and salary of a trained nurse to assist Dr. Gray in his hospital work in China. The Board has also appointed Mr. Isaac Doan, of Dungannon, as a missionary to the Jungle Tribes.

The annual reunion of the deaf in the South of Ireland has just been held in Cork. The majority of the country visitors arrived by train, and were met at the station by the missionary and some of the city deaf. On the following morning, from their various stopping-places, all gathered together at St. Mary's, Shandon, School-house, for breakfast. In the adjoining church a special service was held at 11.30 a.m., the officiating clergymen including the Archdeacon of Cork, D.D.; Rev. R. J. Hodges, M.A., and Rev. F. A. Elliott, B.A. The Communion Service was interpreted by Mr. S. Bright-Lucas; the sermon was preached viva voce, and also interpreted for the deaf by Rev. F. A. Elliott. After service all returned to the school-house, where a dinner was provided by the Misses Warren, the Misses Hungerford, and Miss Hornibrook. Dinner over, the whole party marched to the Exhibition, admission to which had been kindly granted by the Committee. At seven o'clock all sat down to tea, and soon after speeches were delivered by the Archdeacon, Mr. Bright-Lucas, and Mr. Elliott. The gathering lasted until 9.30 p.m., when the happy company broke up. On the following morning breakfast was again provided in the school-house, and in the afternoon several of the deaf left by rail for their homes. It was admitted on all hands that this year's gathering was the happiest and most successful of the Mission to the Adult Deaf and Dumb of Ireland (Southern District).

The Churches.

* The Editor will be glad to receive "post-card" notes for this page, of SPIRITUAL PROGRESS AND EFFORT in the Churches. They must be prompt, reliable, and NOT TRIVIALITIES; and be accompanied by sender's name and address.

Church of England.

Rev. G. A Jones retires from the vicarage of St. Mary's, Cardiff, at the end of the month, after more than thirty years' devoted service. Rev. Gilbert Heaton, of St. Mark's, Wrexham, has been appointed to succeed Mr. Jones in this important sphere of labour.

Rev. J. Vezey-Mason, vicar of Emmanuel, Maida Hill, in his annual letter to his parishioners states that the past year has been one full of encouragement to all who feel interest in the temporal and spiritual progress of their church and parish; for progress has been very marked in both particulars.

The Dean of Peterborough (formerly Vicar of Islington), in a recent sermon in Westminster Abbey, urged the importance of house-to-house visiting. Dr. Barlow said:—"If London is to be won for Christ, those who are in charge as Christian ministers, whether in our own Church or elsewhere, must pay much more earnest heed to the question of the visiting from house to house of those who are ignorant about Divine matters."

The Sierra Leone Messenger says that Rev. Canon Wilson, now in England, is pastor of the largest ecclesiastical district in Sierra Leone. His communicants number over 1,000, and he has two chapels-of-ease to the mother Church of Holy Trinity. He is known in Sierra Leone as an earnest, humble man of God, a fearless speaker, and a true Christian. He has come to England in order to gain some practical insight into parochial work, and also to preach on behalf of the Diocesan Fund.

Writing at the close of his first year's work as vicar of St. Paul's, Canonbury, N., Rev. W. A. Smith, writing in the annual report, says there is much to thank God for. "Our simple Evangelical services," he says, "are attended by large, though not crowded, congregations. The work of the church, and all that appertains to it, is seriously and earnestly carried on; and the spiritual aims of our work are, I trust, still foremost in our parochial machinery."

Congregational.

Rev. Henry J. Shirley has resigned the chairmanship of the Congregational Union of British Guiana and the pastorate of the church at New Amsterdam, and is returning to London as minister of Markham Square Church, Chelsea, S.W.

Rev. J. G. Stevenson, who, it will be remembered, was recently called to Union Church, Brighton, is finding it exceptionally difficult to meet the pressure on the seating accommodation of his church at Newquay. A somewhat novel arrangement had been adopted. On Sundays Mr. Stevenson is holding two consecutive services, one immediately after the other, so as to allow two congregations to find room in the church. The edifice seats some 250, and in the season the ordinary congregation is, of course, augmented by a large number of visitors.

Baptist.

The anniversary services at Rosegrove Chapel, Burnley, were preached on Sunday, August 9. An address by Mr. John Bradshaw was given in the morning; and Rev. W. T. Garling, the newly-appointed pastor, preached excellent sermons in the afternoon and evening to full congregations. There is every prospect of this new church doing splendid work in the future. The church is an outcome of the Burnley and District Baptist Union.

Although Broadway Baptist Church, Chesham, has been without a pastor for the last five or six weeks, the attendance at the week-night and Sunday services has been excellent, especially during the month the revered former pastor, Rev. Duncan McCallum, took charge. On Sunday, August 9, Rev. Leonard Jones, of Oxford, occupied the pulpit, and many will long remember the impression made by the sympathy and earnestness of the preacher.

On Wednesday last a new Baptist Chapel was opened at Watford. A sermon was preached in the afternoon by Rev. Thomas Howe, and at the evening meeting addresses were delivered by Revs. H. A. Hunt and D. Macmillan and other friends. Mr. Parker Gray presided, and the Open-Air Mission Male Choir gave selections. The pastor (Rev. W. H. Chillman) gave a brief account of the work since its commencement less than a year ago in temporary premises. The meetings were well attended.

Methodist.

The work of enlarging the Primitive Methodist College at Manchester, to accommodate forty additional students, will cost over £10,000. Mr. W. P. Hartley has undertaken to meet the expense.

Rev. Thomas Champness, in Joyful News, states that on and after September 1 he ceases to be responsible for any of the Evangelists known by that name, save those engaged in mission work in China, India, South Africa, and New Ireland, together with Messrs. Howard and Moses Welsby, who still remain, and two others who will be engaged in special work amongst neglected children.

The founder of the Primitive Methodist S.E. London Mission at St. George's Hall, Old Kent Road, Rev. James Flanagan, is missioning through the country and raising funds to clear the debt on the freehold, but he lately preached at the anniversary services. The Sisters' Settlement has established itself in the affection and confidence of the slum people; 15,000 visits were paid to homes. The Settlement is training ladies for work among the poor throughout the denomination. Rev. Joseph Johnson, reporting on the work of the year, stated that 106 names had been added to the membership roll.

The first anniversary of the Primitive Methodist Chapel at Amesbury (Salisbury circuit) has been celebrated amid many evidences of growing interest in the aggressive movement which it represents. In spite of numerous difficulties, Rev. George Litten, with his helpers, has succeeded, under God, in gathering together a regular congregation, although a year ago there was not a single member in church fellowship. A working man's church has been formed, and a missionary devotes the whole of his time visiting the soldiers in camp and barrack and the homes of the people, finding out those who attend no place of worship.

The annual address to the Primitive Methodist churches throughout the country, prepared by order of the Conference, is now being circulated throughout the denomination. It is prepared by Rev. George Bennett, the secretary of the Christian Endeavour Council. The church members now number 198,393, being 2,742 more than last year. The value of church property in the United Kingdom is £4,180,842, and the debt upon the same is £1,055,855. In Africa and New Zealand there are sixty-one connexional chapels, and 101 other chapels and rooms. The value of the church property is £50,975, and the debt upon the same is £10,518.

Presbyterian.

Rev. A. Scott Berrie, who recently resigned the pastorate of Arthur's Hill Church, Newcastle, on account of his health, will sail at the end of the month for New South Wales.

Rev. Dr. John Robbins, having undertaken important work in connection with British emigrants in the north-west of Canada, has resigned the charge of the church at Watford, Herts, of which he was the founder.

On a recent Lord's Day, the pulpit of Queen's Road Church, Brighton, was occupied by Rev. William Bryant, clerk to the Synod of Michigan. Thirty-five years ago Mr. Bryant was a scholar, and subsequently a teacher, in the Queen's Road Sunday School.

The "Challenge Fund" of £7,000 for Foreign Missions has been completed. The Presbyterian says:—"We invite all friends to join in thanksgiving to God for the success attained, and in fervent prayer for increased blessing on the whole work of our Foreign Mission."

Society of Friends.

Attention has been called to an application to register the word "Quaker" as a trademark by a firm engaged in the liquor traffic. A firm of solicitors has been instructed to oppose this on behalf of the Society.

At the recent Home Mission Conference Henry S. Newman gave an address on "Methods of Bible Study," observing that every true revival is accompanied by prayer and by renewed zeal in the study of Scripture. In the cause of an address on "Methods of Winning Souls," Caroline W. Pumphrey said, "The first thing is to recognise the Divine factor in the matter. It takes God to save a soul. And the next is never for a moment to forget how much God wants to do it. Just in proportion as the love of God dwells in us, and continues to dwell, will be our continual yearning for the salvation of men. I emphasise continual, because of the risk of fitfulness. Many are not won because we do not always show the same steady, self-sacrificing effort for them."

At the Meeting for Sufferings on the 7th inst., Helen Morland gave an interesting account of her year's work amongst the Dukhobors. The land question is now being happily settled to the satisfaction of the Canadian Government. Titles are being entered for the land, and under their own leaders their settlements are being re-arranged It is hoped that all will be re-settled before winter, and schools of some sort established in most if not all of the villages. The semi-mania, of which the newspapers published accounts, was really of small dimensions, only involving about twenty-five men out of many thousands. As the people mix more with the Canadians, in work and in other ways, their prejudices and peculiarities are being modified, and H. Morland expressed a feeling of hopefulness for the future.

The three Wycliffe preachers, Messrs. Hodgkinson, Simpson, and Moss, who were sentenced a short time ago to one month's imprisonment by the Barrow magistrates because they refused to be bound over to keep the peace in consequence of disturbances at Barrow at meetings which they addressed, were brought from Lancaster to Barrow on Friday last by order of the Home Secretary for the re-hearing of the charge against them. The magistrates decided that they were justified in discharging the sureties and in releasing the prisoners.

Fallen Asleep.

Aged 56, Rev. J. Prue Williams, pastor of Elm Grove, Baptist Church, Southsea. The members of his church and the people of the town, in which he had spent nearly twenty-one years, have followed his long illness with solicitude and anxiety. Epworth mourns the loss of Rev. W. M. Anderson, Baptist, who passed away after a lingering illness on August 1. He was a man of beautiful spirit, and lofty character, and was revered by all classes. In the death of Mr. Thomas Huxley, of Malpas, Cheshire, who passed away on August 11, in his eighty-third year, Congregationalism loses an active worker. Mr. Robert Foskett, secretary to the Methodist Times Company, Ltd., who administered the financial affairs of the paper with ability and devotion. The death of Mr. Price Hughes, with whom he had been associated ever since the paper was started, affected him greatly, and during the last nine months his health showed signs of enfeeblement. Mr. W. Strange, until lately trade manager of the Wesleyan Book Room. At Ballyvaddy, Carnlough, Co. Antrim, Mr. Jas. Wright, a devoted Methodist class leader and local preacher of many years' standing, and a power for good in the neighbourhood in which he lived.

European Schools in India.

FOR sixteen months I have been visiting the principal schools of North India as the representative of the Children's Special Service Mission. God has awakened many of the young people to the truth, to whom it has been good news indeed.

It has occurred to me lately that some effort might be made, while the iron is hot, to bring them into touch with that type of literature, devotional and missionary, which has been a means of blessing to ourselves. Of course, they have their Bibles and they read them; this is essential. But they will probably know nothing of such books as those by Miss Havergal, &c., let alone some of the best missionary books of the day, unless something be done now. My purpose, God willing, is to despatch a selection of some fifty books to each of six or seven schools, to form the nucleus of a lending library.

That the books will be read eagerly by many I am certain. I have already selected a suitable lot of fifty books and despatched them to one school. But I await financial help before proceeding on a larger scale. My address for this purpose is—Care of Religious Book Society, Lahore, Punjab, India.—Yours, &c.,

(Mr.) R. T. ARCHIBALD.

The Late Mrs. Schonberger.

AFTER a painful and prolonged illness, borne with Christian fortitude and resignation, Johanna Schönberger, the wife of Rev. C. A. Schönberger, of the "Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel," fell asleep in Jesus, Wednesday, August 12. One distressing feature of the last months of her malady, was the frequent wandering of her mind; but, even so, the brightness of her spiritual sense overcame the mental trouble, and a word of prayer engaged her instant intelligent and devout attention. Mrs. Schönberger was the last surviving member of the gifted Saphir family, of which her late brother, Rev. Dr. Adolph Saphir, the beloved and revered pastor, was the best known in England. We commend her bereaved husband and daughter to the sympathy and prayers of their Christian friends.

The Greatest Thing in the World. This, in the estimate of God and the hosts of Heaven, must surely be the Missionary Enterprise—obedience to the great and last Commission of our Lord, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." How heavily this purpose must lie on the heart of the Triune Jehovah; for which purpose, through the Eternal Spirit, the Son of His love offered Himself without spot to God.

The Laymen in Missions. A writer in the current number of East and West, A. C. Madan, of the Universities Mission to Central Africa, makes out a strong case in favour of the wider employment of laymen in connection with foreign missions. In only too many cases, the time of missionaries is frittered away in work which could be better done by trained laymen, and Mr. Madan shows clearly the need for some change in this direction. The necessary men are easily to be obtained, he says, "on the societies' own terms." They are terms certainly which would not attract any but those who are under the influence of the missionary spirit:—

> He need want nothing, nor spend a farthing of his own, from the day he crosses his doorstep to the day of his return, if it ever comes, but neither must he look to returning, if he does return, in any worldly sense a richer man.

It is interesting to note that in Zanzibar and Likoma the U.M.C.A. have seventy-one such helpers, including forty-nine ladies, working with thirty-nine ordained missionaries.

Sacerdotalists and the Open Bible. A noteworthy effect of the blinding influence of sacerdotalism is shown by the Church Times. It would seem as if the excellent work of the Bible Society, in distributing the Scriptures in all languages and lands, must appeal to every Christian man. A colporteur's statement that there were communes in France where Christ was practically unknown till the Society, through him, disseminated copies of the Scriptures there, is perversely paraphrased thus in an editorial note:—

> That is to say, where the Catholic faith in Christ reigned undisturbed until he brought his new Gospel for the confusion of simple minds.

This comment goes a step too far, not only in its discourtesy, but also in the evidence it carries with it that even an Anglican organ fears the free dissemination of the Scriptures as much as does the Pope of Rome, and for the same reason—that the Bible is in effect a Protestant Book. Sacerdotalists cannot face the circulation of the "Open Bible," for its teachings are incompatible with their view of Christianity.

Romanizing the Children. In a paper entitled "Roman Catholic or Protestant?" the Daily News, on the 20th inst., gave quotations from certain Ritualistic publications. Were it not that the titles of the books and the names of the authors were given in detail, it would indeed be difficult to believe that the work of Romanizing our young people is being carried on so boldly and openly. One of these books, addressed to "little Catholics," urges confession to "God's priest," the need for absolution, the use of the rosary with the "Hail, Mary, on each of the ten small beads," and prayer to the saints; and has reference to the saints in Purgatory. In another, it is stated that "when Adam and Eve made their confessions, God gave them each their penance," and it is stated that the Holy Ghost "does not make His home in any Dissenting sect. He goes to visit them perhaps, but only as a stranger"! Other passages in regard to transubstantiation will not bear quotation. Verily, the enemy soweth tares!

Dangerous Pessimism. If the small group of Rationalists, who are so busy disseminating literature attacking both God and man, cannot perceive the logical outcome of their endeavour, we think the British public can. Reviewers are struck with the increasing tone of pessimism which directly results from the ignoring of God and the belittling of man. But this is exactly what is to be expected; it is the natural punishment for ignoring the obvious facts of life. Where God is suppressed, and man is reduced to a mere natural effect of the play of blind forces, it is hardly astonishing that life is regarded as a vast illusion, and the world as "a den of dangerous animals" to be kept in check by one means or another. It is a simple fact of history that when men have disbelieved in God they have disbelieved in each other. Cut off from their Source, they have nothing to bind them to each other. The present Rationalistic movement is not an affair of theology simply; it is a distinct attack upon human nature, and the sinister effects are already visible.

The Christian Hope. The ultimate result of this dangerous movement will be to bring into relief once more the unique glory of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Men wander into the far country of intellectual speculation, and end with the famine, and often with the swine. It is then, when everything breaks down, that the starved soul cries out for its God. And in this fact there is one great element of the Christian's hope. It is impossible for the whole of humanity—or for any considerable section of it—to be permanently imposed upon by the menacing theories which, when accepted, plunge the soul into the darkness of pessimism. The ways of God are inscrutable, but it may be that He has allowed the present indifference and scepticism to run riot, so that His people may once more preach the Gospel—the one hope for men—with a new passion, awakened by the sense of men's sin and their failure to find rest. At least the Church may, with certainty, interpret things in this way.

The Cloud and the Voice. "A voice came out of the cloud." All God's voices come out of clouds. The creative voice, the voice of conscience, the voice of providence, the voice of redemption—all sound forth out of darkness and mystery. There is no "science of origin" possible; for science can only take note of what is, not of how it came into being. All our scientific knowledge is banked and flanked by impenetrable mystery. Still more true is this of our religious knowledge. Behind and beneath all the facts and voices of the Gospel there is mystery unfathomable. It is therefore our duty to bear the clouds of life patiently, that the light which is behind them may penetrate through to our minds and hearts. And if the clouds of life are often dark, there is no doubt about the voice that speaks through them. We look for a future state of being in which the light shall swallow all cloud, and in which we "shall know even as we are known."

A Novelist on the Bible. Mr. Hall Caine, in an interesting address as chairman at a lecture on the Revised Version, paid a glowing tribute to the Bible as a mine of great and moving narratives. As an imaginative writer, in common with many writers of popular fiction, he has found the Great Book an unfailing source of inspiration. "It contains all the great stories, and they are all greatly told." Apart from its Divine truth, what the life-story of Christ has done for man, even on his human side, "is to realize that the Bible has been the greatest of all forces in the progress of humanity." This is in line with the testimony of the late Charles Reade, whose tribute to the evidence of the Old Testament narratives as a witness to their own truth will be remembered by many of our readers. Parents should encourage their children to search the Scriptures, and so fill their minds with material which in after years will yield up their wealth of teaching and stimulus.

Christian Investment. It becomes increasingly difficult for Christian ladies, and others not in business, to find sources of income which are clean enough to satisfy their consciences. Railway stock is permeated with drink, and, to a wanton degree, with desecration of the Lord's Day; while the limitations imposed by law as to "trust investments" close many more desirable channels. In describing the new Midland Hotel at Manchester, a local paper says:—

> It has been promised that the hotel shall be ready at the end of August, and in order that there shall be no disappointment, there has been for months past no cessation of work night or day, weekday or Sunday. At present there are well over a thousand people working on the job—builders' men, furnishers' men, decorators, florists, and behind them all—first sign of the end of a long task—a small army of charwomen.

Really conscientious investors hardly know whither to turn, in order to keep their money both safe and clean.

Pandita Ramabai. Those who are interested in the progress of the Gospel in India, and especially in the beneficent work of Pandita Ramabai, will rejoice to know that (as we learn through Rev. Gregory Mantle) £2,000 (in one sum of £1,000 and two of £500 each) were sent to Ramabai as the result of his appeal in our issue of July 16. This is in addition to the long list of smaller sums which have been acknowledged in our columns since the above date, amounting at present to over £900. Mr. Mantle adds: "How I praised God; for it lifts the pressure from our dear friend's mind. But my concern is for some systematic help in the place of those who have ceased to support her"—i.e., on account of the advanced step she has taken in conforming her work more definitely to the Gospel of God, in obedience and faithfulness to her deepened convictions of the truth.

Whose Faith Follow.

Some no less faithful servants of Christ at home are, we know, a little discouraged when they hear of some large donations and many smaller ones being sent abroad, while they are scantily sustained in their efforts at home. Cheer up, brethren! Follow Ramabai's example, stedfast in the faith. The river of God is full of water; His treasuries are full of money. Pray down a spirit of love and liberality into the hearts of those who hold and withhold more than is meet, which tendeth to penury. Pray upon them the blessing of the liberal soul, who deviseth liberal things, and by liberal things shall he stand.

Vivisection.

The official who, a few days ago, informed a deputation that anti-vivisectionists were faddists and hostile to science, may have persuaded himself of the truth of his sentiments, but it is evident there is a growing feeling in this country that vivisection must cease. The horrors of it, as now being revealed in the columns of the Daily News, thrill us with a sense of shame and pity. The Church of Rome has tacitly lent itself to vivisection by its dictum that "we have no duties towards animals," a sentiment worthy of the society that invented the thumb-screw and rack and other tortures for God-fearing "heretics." But we cannot understand how anyone who sees the world as the Saviour sees it can delight in torturing His dumb creatures. As for the scientific value of vivisection (its only justification), Mr. Jerome K. Jerome, in a published letter, says, with plainess:—

> They (vivisectionists) admit that experiments upon a human being would be infinitely more resultful for their purposes than any amount of torture inflicted upon animals of another species. Why, if so many of them are eager to suffer, is it that they cannot persuade their fellow operators to perform upon them? When one of these heroes (in writing) has suffered one hundredth part of the agony they are so ready to inflict, I, for one, shall believe that these protestations are something more than a cowardly and contemptible form of hypocrisy.

A Praiseworthy Task.

Out of 2,393 local branches of nine large trades' unions, with a membership of 352,816, no fewer than 1,716 branches meet in public-houses, and of the Railway Servants' Union, with over 50,000 members, 73 per cent. do so. The determination of the secretary of the General Federation of Trades Unions, Mr. Isaac Mitchell, to induce the unions to sever entirely their connection with the drink shops, is a commendable one, and every Christian will wish him success in his task. Some of the large Friendly Societies have already moved in the matter, and the suspicious fact that in many cases the publicans provide the accommodation free of charge ought to be sufficient to convince the workman that it would be to his advantage to find other quarters.

A Great Statesman.

THE LATE LORD SALISBURY.

MEN and women of every shade of opinion have joined hands this week in a world-wide tribute to the memory of the Marquis of Salisbury, one of the foremost of our British statesmen. Since his retirement from active service he has been little before the public, yet he was in no danger of being forgotten. The nation felt safer because the trusted leader of many years could yet be turned to for weighty and wise counsel in any time of crisis or perplexity. Lord Salisbury has left a deep and abiding mark on the page of history.

On some of the great questions which have been before the public during his career, Lord Salisbury's actions and utterances have done much to mould public opinion. He proved himself, in connection with his Indian administration in the seventies, an uncompromising free-trader, and, by permitting the export of grain even in a famine year, has left on record an object-lesson of the highest value.

In connection with his own special department of foreign affairs, among the episodes which will dwell longest in the public mind several connected with must be prominent. The Berlin Congress marked an epoch in the history of Europe; and although Lord Beaconsfield was the leading British member, his colleague is held by competent authorities to deserve a full share of credit for the settlement arrived at. Lord Salisbury has repeatedly steered the bark of State through troubled waters, as when war seemed imminent with the United States on account of Venezuelan affairs, with Portugal through misunderstanding in East Africa, and with France in connection with the occupation of Fashoda. China once and again claimed the closest attention, and his policy in dealing with that country may be taken as exemplifying his constancy of purpose, alike in the face of criticism or applause.

Undoubtedly the Boer War pressed on the shoulders of the Premier in such a way as to hasten the necessity of his withdrawal from public life. To him, as to Queen Victoria, the horror of the situation was ever present, and the responsibility for coming to decision time after time was a strain under which the human frame practically gave way.

Lord Salisbury was a many-sided man. His gifts as journalist and author were recognised early in life. In scientific matters he spoke as a master. Few of those who only read his political addresses had any idea of the variety of his pursuits and interests.

The religious side of his life was referred to last Sunday by the curate of Bishop Hatfield, as follows:—

> We think of him, indeed, as the world thinks of him, as the great statesman, devoting all those wonderful powers and brilliant talents with which he was so richly endowed; we think of him as devoting them to the unselfish service of his country, with all the weight of care and anxieties which this work involved, and of which we can form no adequate estimate. He might have chosen, as doubtless many with lower views of life and its responsibilities would have done, a life of comparative ease; instead of which he deliberately chose the highest life, that life of service, a life of incessant and exacting toil in the interests of others, which in all human probability hastened the end, allowing him practically no rest here from his continual labour.
> The home life at Hatfield House will long be remembered as worthy in every sense of the best traditions of the English home. His life was a consecrated life. Each day, whatever the pressure of work might be, he was to be seen taking part in the devotions in the little private chapel where it was my privilege to administer. You, too, know what a regular attendant he was in this church, thus bearing his testimony to the supreme importance of public worship in the corporate life of the Church of Christ.

On the other hand we cannot ignore the fact that his conservative temperament led him to adopt a negative attitude toward many reforms in the social life of the people which were, and are, stirring earnest minds. His attitude to the temperance movement was very unsatisfactory; and at times his foreign policy was denounced by those who put humanity before patriotism, righteousness before party interests.

Such was the leader who has fallen. The times in which we live call for special prayer that God may thrust to the front men of uprightness and faith, men of devotion to truth, men ready to live lives of sacrifice at the call of duty.

The Monastic Invasion.

AN illuminating article recently appeared in the St. James' Gazette upon the remarkable invasion of England by the expelled monks and nuns of France. It has been vaguely realised that these exiles have sought refuge in these islands, but the extent to which they have established themselves amongst us is almost incredible.

Thirty years ago there were 299 monasteries and convents in England. This year there are 990, and the end is not yet, for a further number of monks are about to settle. The Southern Coast of England, and the Isle of Wight, particularly, swarm with foreign monks and nuns. The Roman Catholic Bishop of Southwark has recently opened up thirty-one new missions in South London, and in these he has placed the members of the expelled French congregations.

This invasion has naturally increased the zeal of the Roman Catholics already at work in the country. Last year, the writer in the St. James' says, forty-seven new convent schools were started, and these contain 3,455 pupils. Surely in a new sense we may cry,

"WAKE UP, ENGLAND!"

Silently as a fog these Orders have drifted in upon us, and they are established in our midst before we are aware of it. There can be no doubt that their coming is a serious matter, and it must be taken seriously. These monks and nuns are not established in England for the purposes of pleasure or of innocent contemplation, but as propagandists, and it is clear that the Roman Catholic authorities, after the example of the Bishop of Southwark, are going to make the fullest use of them.

We know their tactics. They will never beat the drum until the victory is assured. Their plan is to work in silence, and quietly to capture the children under the guise of "education." We think it necessary to warn all parents against their schools. No notice whatever should be taken of the assurance that "the religion of Protestant children will be undisturbed." If, literally, no word against Evangelical truth were pronounced, the atmosphere of a convent school would be almost fatal to a Protestant child. Children are impressed with pictures and images, and their imagination is captured; the rest is not difficult. We are aware that the low fees charged by these convent schools appeal to many parents, but it is a costly thing to obtain a "cheap" education at the expense of a soul.

Another thing we ought to insist upon is the placing of all these conventual establishments under public surveillance. We cannot forget Tours, Nancy, Naples, and other convent scandals.

The Great Commission.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature" (Mark xvi. 15).

THE WORLD-WIDE WAR.*

As we drift into the new century and contemplate the possibilities and probabilities, the hopes, the fears, the developing capacities, and the desperate antagonisms, which shall take shape ere time shall clear away the sixth millennium of the world's history, we find ourselves quite incapable of forecasting what results the termination of this period shall witness.

East and West throb with a common life, and if heaven and earth seem ready to pass away we must feel that the Kingdom of God is nigh at hand. We must not omit the wonderful movement which at the present time is stirring the hearts of God's chosen people of the elder dispensation, whose conversion to the faith of Christ must be one of the last features of the age immediately preceding Messiah's return.

England is the centre of every kind of interest, but she stands in a sense alone in her call to maintain the freedom of man and the truth of God. These two principles are essentially one. It is only eternal truth which can sustain the liberty of the human soul. "The Truth shall make you free." Freedom without Divine Truth as its basis is only an accident, a delusion. God is the guardian of all freedom, for from Him alone true love can spring; and if his sovereignty is not recognised, there is no power to hold back the various forms of aggression by which freedom may be set aside.

God's war against Satan must be carried on by the Church in the name of Christ as the Head of the Body seated at the right hand of God. Missions are the exploits of this campaign, and this is the foundation of all Mission work. Missions are not merely a philanthropic agency for the benefit of individual men; they are the essential and necessary outcome of the Divine character of the Church, inasmuch as she is the extension of Christ's glorified Body. That Body extends itself not merely by lapse of time and the increase of populations, but by the warfare of Divine life operating with a redemptive claim while Satan still seeks to hold mankind under his dominion.

A warfare! A Divine warfare! A warfare pledged to Divine power!

The Church therefore was to go forth to all nations as a witness of the sovereignty of Jesus Christ, her Head. Her real purpose is to glorify God in the presence of all the heavenly host by showing that the apostate angel is vanquished by the Incarnate God, and man has to take part in this victory.

How few realize the Church as the living Body of Christ, so that His power is inalienably pledged to her; her members are partakers of His Divine Life, and all who are not her members are in a state of death. "We are of God, and the whole world lieth in the wicked one" (1 John v. 19).

We need to realize the difference between Christianity and other religions, not as a matter of degree, but a substantial difference of life.

Missions, therefore, are primarily for the extension of the Glory of Christ. They are a form of struggle against the prince of this world, and Christ makes His glory to be manifested in His members, not by their success in propagating the Christian faith as a form of intellectual apprehension, but by the Divine vigour of the witness which they bear to Him. The philanthropic result of Missions is a secondary consideration. The witness to Christ against Satan is the primary. The Church has to show her Divine life, because she is "a city set upon a hill," being the continuous expression upon earth of the glorified Son of God, reigning on high and still working in His members.

God has set forth the Apostolic Church last, to be the final instrument of Satan's overthrow, as it were appointed unto death to conquer death by dying with Christ, "for we are made a spectacle unto the world"—the hellish worldly power—"and to angels, and to men" (1 Cor. iv. 9). Her witness has to be borne, not by human facility effecting world-wide approval, but by inherent Divine life triumphing over world-wide hostility with heavenly enthronization as the Bride of Christ. "The power from on high" was what the Apostles had to wait for. That power was never to be withdrawn from the Apostolic Church. Rather it is made the more manifest in successive ages by the withdrawal of every other power. That is the power in which we have to carry out our Missions in the present day.

If we seem to see Antichrist appearing in the not distant future, we look for Christ to come again and destroy him with the brightness of His presence, so that Satan and the unbelieving hosts shall be cast into the abyss, and Christ shall be glorified in His saints. For this battle we have to prepare by personal labour, by wealth, and by prayer. The victory must be won. When Jesus shall come again—"Even so, come, Lord Jesus"—if we have refused to take part in the battle we cannot have our part in the victory. In this day our sufferings for Christ are but small; yet if we struggle with Him in the battle of faith we shall reign with Him. If we refuse to take our part in delivering the nations from the blindness of heathendom, we are repudiating His injunction, and when He shall come again with all His saints we must perish with those that have rejected Him.

* Extracts from an article entitled "The Final Struggle of the World-wide War: a Review and a Forecast"—by Rev. R. M. Benson (formerly Superior of the Cowley Fathers)—in "The East and the West: a Quarterly Review for the Study of Missions." Published by the S.P.G., 19, Delahay Street, Westminster.

The one view with which we do not agree is this—"Her possession of Apostolical origin, Church authority, Sacramental Grace, and Biblical Truth enable her [the national Church of England] to go forth in a spirit which the Churches of other nations cannot equal. The very sects which cripple her by their separation make her position the stronger by the antagonism with which they meet her various claims."

But even this position is modified by the following paragraph:—"How apt people are to be interested in some one Mission and to think little of others. In truth no one can be rightly interested in one without being equally interested in all. The true interest of Mission Life can be nothing less than the Kingdom of Christ in its integrity."

It is well for us to read the writings of others, not of our own ilk. This is a very high-toned paper.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

It is now nearly two years since the Rev. Dr. Henry came to this country to aid the movement for one million new Total Abstinence pledges. From the very beginning the Christian Temperance Campaign—in the later months of which Mr. T. Armon Jones has been rendering service of the highest value as a singer—assumed great moral and spiritual significance. During this period more than 800 meetings have been held in 110 towns and cities of the United Kingdom, where audiences numbering, in the aggregate, more than a million of people have been addressed, and in these gatherings nearly 80,000 new total abstinence pledges have been taken. The audiences have filled the largest buildings, and the enthusiasm has been remarkable in its character. As a rule, the missions have extended from three days to a fortnight in a place, where the co-operation of the friends of Gospel Temperance has been exceptionally large and hearty.

This Campaign has not only created a new constituency in every community visited, but has helped to produce a new conscience as to the magnitude of the Temperance problem. There has been the most earnest insistence upon the essentially Christian character of this crusade against the drink. The spiritual, Biblical, and eternal aspects of the nation's curse have been brought into new significance in the minds and hearts of thousands of Christian men and women.

REMARKABLE CASES.

The moral and spiritual tone of the Campaign has been excellent. The fight has been conducted on a plane worthy of Christian service, and in some real sense commensurate with Christian duty. Many remarkable cases of moral and spiritual recovery have been witnessed. Drinkers and drunkards have not only been won to total abstinence, but to dependence upon the Lord Jesus Christ for grace and strength to keep their sacred promise. Spiritual results cannot be tabulated; but large numbers of office-bearers in the churches and tens of thousands of church members, representing all classes, have been led to separate themselves from complicity with the drink, boycotting the public-houses, banishing it from their homes, and registering their personal protest against it by solemnly committing themselves to total abstinence from it.

In the town of Falkirk, not only have 4,000 total abstinence pledges been taken, but there were more than 300 confessions of Christ. In the last Mission, held in Belfast, there were over 700 open avowals of faith in Him, and more than 2,000 signed the total abstinence pledge. The soul-winning spirit has become increasingly prominent with the progress of the work. Rev. F. B. Meyer says that no man who has come to this country has done more needed or important work along these lines than Dr. Henry.

The primary appeal has been made to Christian people as those upon whom rests the grave responsibility for the success or failure of Temperance Reform. Until Christians are right with reference to this question there is no hope of putting the outside world right with regard to it. The Campaign has witnessed an almost marvellous progress in Temperance work within the Church of Christ. Among its members the conviction grows that the time has come when the churches should separate themselves entirely from both the use of and the traffic in strong drink, and that the attitude of every true disciple of Christ must be one of uncompromising hostility to it.

A fuller measure of the spirit of Christ, who was moved with compassion for the perishing, would go far to separate Christian people from this destroyer of the bodies and souls of men. It is inconceivable that the churches should passionately desire the salvation of the lost, and at the same time give their countenance and toleration to a trade which in its results has been more destructive to life and property than the three great historic scourges of famine, pestilence, and war.

FUNDAMENTALS OF REFORM.

Concerning the fundamentals of Temperance Reform, we are all one; therefore the time has come to emphasize the things about which we are agreed, and to avoid the subjects on which we differ. Thoughtful people see that Missions of this character are vital to the well-being of both Church and nation.

The fatal defect in the Children's Bill, the legal decision regarding the Drunkard's Act, the impending Compensation conflict, the growing desecration of the Sabbath, the decline in Church attendance, the moral apathy of the nation, the spiritual dearth in the churches, the rapid and alarming increase of drunkenness, insanity, vice, and crime, the manifest physical degeneracy through drink, the deplorable condition of the poor, the wicked and wanton waste of wealth in the public-house, the grave commercial and industrial situation, the fearful and fatal increase of drunkenness among women, as well as the spiritual loss and eternal ruin wrought by this unspeakably evil trade—are all considerations that demand profound concern and immediate action. With all these facts before us, surely the hour has come when every lover of God, country, and humanity, should contribute, even to the point of deepest personal self-sacrifice, his full quota of wisdom, wealth, and work, in order that this social scourge, this political plague, this national reproach, this colossal curse of Christian civilization, and this dishonour to the Divine Name, may be immediately and for ever rolled away.

The pledge which is taken at the meetings of the campaign is the same as that adopted in 1879 by the late Miss Frances Ridley Havergal, emphasising the two reasons for taking the step—love to God and love to our fellow-creatures:—"In view of the great dishonour done to our most gracious God and Saviour; and in consideration of the damage, temporal and eternal, to our fellow-creatures through the use of strong drink; I agree to abstain from all intoxicating liquors as beverages; and to discountenance their use by others."

Love Against Anger.

(Matt. v. 21-24.)

"THEY of old time," the philosophers and legislators of mankind, saw that murderous anger strikes at the very existence of the human family, and must be arrested. They therefore prohibited it, and accompanied their prohibition by a threat of condemnation before their high courts. "Whosoever shall kill," they said, "shall be in danger of the judgment."

But neither prohibition nor threatening availed. The dams they built were all too weak to resist the tides of hatred and revenge that swept against their frail resistance. Men assented to their laws that they were good. In their saner moments they acquiesced and assisted. But when the storm arose within, they were swept headlong from the thought to the wish, from the wish to the fully-formed purpose, from purpose to word, and from word to act.

Then the Love of God incarnate stood amongst men. His legislation began further back, in the genesis of sin. He does not deal with the act of murder, but sees, first, the explosion of wrath in speech—Vain fellow; then behind this the feeling of dislike—Fool; and behind this again the anger of the heart, concealed from all eyes but His. In His judgment-chamber, that anger is as evil as murder is at the bar of man. He does not say, "Thou shalt not kill," because He deals with the springs of will and thought and action, creating a clean heart, renewing a right spirit, removing the evil disposition out of which murder springs. What need to tell a man that he must not kill his brother, when he has been led to love him as himself?

In Christ's Kingdom, unwarrantable anger would be liable to the lower court, the anger that vented itself in slighting and contemptuous phrase to the higher, and the anger that exploded in vehement and passionate epithets to the fate of a castaway. He did not go beyond this, because the crime of murder would be impossible to those in whose hearts the first sparks had been judged and condemned. In the legislation of Christ, the man that hates his brother was a murderer, and any that allow hate to smoulder unchecked and unrepented of, are guilty of a capital offence against His laws, and forfeit all the rights and privileges of His Kingdom, in the same way as murder causes the murderer to forfeit all the rights and privileges of the nation to which he belongs.

These are solemn words. They are quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword. They pierce to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and criticize the thoughts and intents of the heart. They make us look up at this humblest and meekest of men speaking with such authority, as He sets Himself above the level of the men of old time, with His majestic "I say unto you," and lo! His eyes are as a flame of fire!

He goes deeper still, and shows how we may deal with the first motions of our spirit against the ill-feeling which, after long smouldering, breaks out into so great a holocaust.

So often we are angry with people whom we have wronged; there is, therefore, no better way of saving us from explosions of anger than by undoing the wrong so soon as we become conscious of it in the clear light of God's presence. For this reason our Lord bids us find out the brother whom we have wronged, and make amends.

Again, when we review the past hours in the twilight of any ordinary day, we often become aware that, though we have not allowed our ill-feeling to have its way, yet we have given some manifestation of it, in a coldness of manner or change in behaviour which must have been noticed by our brother, our former friend, and have rankled deeply in his mind. The symptom of our altered feeling towards him may have been very slight, but quite sufficient to indicate, like the storm-signal on the coast, that there has been a depression in the atmosphere of our soul, and a storm was brewing. There is no more certain method of staying the progress of a tempest of anger than by at once becoming reconciled to the brother over that one small detail in which our antagonism has revealed itself.

For each of these reasons, therefore, it is according to the deepest philosophy of the soul that our Lord bids us go to anyone who may justly have some cause of complaint against us, because of our manner, speech, or act.

. . . . . .

The altar, of which the Master speaks, denotes some act of self-surrender to His adorable service, which we are eager to make. Beside it stands the High Priest, waiting to consummate our gift, adding to it the merit of His intercession. The light of the Shekinah fire, which waits to consume the gift, is shining with intense brilliancy. All is prepared for the devout act of the soul which, constrained by the mercies of God, will present itself a holy, reasonable, and living sacrifice. Suddenly our great Melchizedek turns a searching light upon the hours which have recently passed. Every incident stands as clearly revealed as the objects in a landscape illumined by the lightning flash at midnight. And we hear His voice, saying solemnly and searchingly,

"HAS THY BROTHER AUGHT AGAINST THEE?"

At first we shudder before the inquiry. We are conscious of some hidden wrong. The stiletto with which we struck at him was so sharp and slender that we assured ourselves against ourselves that the thrust must have escaped Christ's notice. But now we are aware that He, whose eyes carry the light with which they see, beheld it. We dare not deceive Him, but we evade His inquiry by enumerating the many causes of complaint that we have against the very person who has been the subject of our Lord's question.

"He has not treated me as I had every right to expect. He has been ungrateful, ungracious, intolerant. He has not considered my interests. He has taken advantage of my goodwill. I never can get on with him; his temperament and mine are so different. Why didst Thou give him to me as my brother? Had it been anyone else, we could have agreed. Outwardly I have tried to do my best. Canst Thou wonder that I hide a grudge in my heart, and that almost involuntarily it betrays its presence? But, after all, the incident was a very slight one; no doubt he has forgotten it before now."

"It depends, O Master," we reply, "in what court the case is tried. In any human court so slight a thing as that which stands revealed in this fierce light would be passed over as too trivial for notice. Before a jury of my friends, or even of my acquaintances, it would be admitted that I had not done anything so very wrong. It might be supposed that I was becoming morbid and introspective were I to take action on such a triviality."

Again, that clear, strong voice is heard saying: "We will not quibble. Thou knowest that thy brother is suffering, and he is losing faith in thy profession of religion, that he is being prejudiced against Me; thy parrying of My question is thy condemnation. Thou knowest what thou hast done. In excusing thou accusest thyself. Leave here thy gift at the altar. Go first and be reconciled to him. Then return; I will await thee. Though hours may pass, thou wilt find Me here."

"May I not offer my gift now, and then discover my brother? My heart is full of desire. I am eager to be an entire burnt-offering to my God. Will not this fervour pass away, and leave me chilled?"

"Not so," the Master answers. "Thy present gift will not be acceptable to God. The impetuous desire to make it, is of the flesh, not of the spirit. If it were of the spirit there would be no doubt about its ultimate permanence. To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of lambs. Be quick. The sky is darkening with night. The road that remains to be traversed by thy brother, who has now become thine adversary, is short. Agree with him quickly whilst thou art in the way, lest by delay the quarrel between thee and him becomes aggravated, and thou find thyself in difficulties from which extrication will be impossible. Every moment of delay intensifies the sense of injustice, and makes more difficult the reconciliation."

"But he has wronged me, gracious Master, Is nothing to be said to him?"

"Not in the first place" is the reply. It is necessary that thou shouldest retract thy part, whatever it may be. Ask his forgiveness for that ruffled feeling, that unkind and harsh bearing, that icy reserve. Pay him any due that he may rightfully claim. Ask his forgiveness as thou wouldst ask God's, and thy approach will bring a flood of repentant and protesting words, which will show that thou hast won thy brother. And if these do not follow, and he receives thine apology as his right, or without remark, still thou hast done thy part, and there is nought to be said against thee further. I will deal with him. Then come and offer thy gift."

What music then is in that word, Come! All heaven speaks in the invitation. Come, says the Master, and render thyself a living sacrifice, which is thy reasonable service. Come and let Me make of thee so much as is possible in thy brief life. Come, for all things are ready.

And we discover this—that when we have acted as love should act, not because we feel the love, but because the Master bids us, and we simply obey, then the Love of God bursts up in our heart like a hot geyser spring, and we find ourselves able to offer our gift to God with an emotion of love that we could never have experienced otherwise.

This is the glory of our Lord's teaching, that when we do what is right, altogether apart from the emotion of pleasure or desire, we find ourselves glad to do it. In the right act there comes the right feeling, and in doing His will we are able to say, "I rejoice to do Thy will, O my God."

Try it, O soul of man. Be indifferent to emotion. Act. The emotion will burst out like the flowers that carpet the meadows in May. The birds will sing, the streams will flow, the flowers will appear, because by one act the reign of the Frost King is broken.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, August 30. Psalm civ.

A Psalm of Creation.

THE Psalmist in these vivid pictures of nature sees God in everything, and everything in God. He created and He sustains; to Him, therefore, be praise.

1-4. The First and Second Days of Creation. The uncreated Light, in whom is no darkness at all, first arrayed Himself with light as His vesture. He then drew the mighty arch of heaven over the earth, as the Arab draws the curtains of his tent. But that heaven in which the clouds float, full of waters for the fertilizing of the earth, is after all but the floor of His home, who is therefore said to lay the beams of His chambers in the waters. All the elemental forces—wind, water, fire, and earth—are His servants; they go and come at His bidding. He not only created, but maintains and rules.

5-9. The Third Day of Creation. The waters of the deep veiled the earth, so that its form of mountain and valley was indiscernible. But the Creator bade them depart to their appointed limits, and they acted as though they had been taken with a sudden fright; and as they fled, it seemed as though the mountains suddenly rose and the valleys sank; whilst the ocean became hemmed in the place which it was destined to keep for after time.

10-18. The Beneficence of Water. Though God restrains the sea, His sun draws thence the moisture, which descends in rain, and pours in brooklets through the mountains. All the earth is satisfied.

19-30. The Alternation of Day and Night. In the night the stealthy beasts of prey creep through the forest. At the first glint of dawn they retire to their lairs, and man goes forth to labour, and all the multitudinous life of the world, on sea and land, begins to reveal itself; but all depends on God's upholding providence.

31-35. Abounding Joy. Joy in the world, because of God's goodness; joy in the heart of God; and joy to the saint, who meditates on these wondrous themes.

MONDAY, August 31. Psalm cv.

The Hymn of God's Faithfulness.

God's merciful dealings with His ancient people are here set in sad contrast to their incessant sinfulness, which occupies the next Psalm. Is there one of us of whom these Psalms are not true? On His part, day of unclouded light; on ours, night of constant shortcoming—the one set against the other.

1-6. As Israel once, so the Church now, is bidden to tell the story of God's love throughout the world. Our work in the world, as God's representatives and ambassadors, should be primarily constructive. Knowledge of what God is, will ultimately overthrow the false conceptions that blind the minds of men.

7-15. God's Dealings with the Patriarchs. His covenant with Abraham, His oath to Isaac, His statutes with Jacob, His protecting care exercised over the little band of wandering pilgrims who sojourned among the small nationalities of Canaan and Philistia (Gen. xx. and xxvi.), all were tokens of the providence which watched over Israel, and that He was pledged to use them for mighty ministry to the world.

16-22. The History of Joseph is next referred to, partly because it was a necessary link in the unfolding of the Divine purpose, and partly because it was a striking illustration of how, from the saddest experiences of iron, God's fairest designs are evolved.

23-38. Israel's Sojourn in Egypt is lightly sketched. All the varied incidents of their memorable deliverance are ascribed to one hand only—God's. He sends the darkness; He turns the water into blood. There is nothing in our lives wherein we may not see the finger of God. Let us not dread to live!

39-45. The Wilderness March is next treated of; and the Psalmist closes by pointing the moral and lesson of the whole, that God's people should be constrained by the memory of His faithful love to yield themselves to His service in faithful devotion.

TUESDAY, September 1. Psalm cvi.

A Psalm of Human Unfaithfulness.

We have seen, in the previous Psalm, God's kindness and truth exhibited to Israel; here we have the alternative picture of their ungrateful response.

1-5. The Prelude records God's goodness to the Psalmist, in which he interjects a prayer to be remembered, which recalls a similar ejaculation by Nehemiah. What an appropriate prayer for each of us. "Visit me . . that . ."

6-33. Instances of Israel's Perverseness at the Red Sea and in the Wilderness. They murmured at the Red Sea; lusted for food in the desert; revolted under Horeb; worshipped the golden calf; accepted the evil report of the spies; participated in the abominable worship of Baal-Peor; and rebelled at the waters of Meribah, with a strife which involved the downfall of the great leader himself.

34-39. Two Flagrant Instances of Israel's Failure in the Land of Promise. They disobeyed the express command to exterminate the Canaanites, and filled the land with the impure rites which they had borrowed from the nations which they had superseded.

40-46. Cycles of Sin, Suffering, and Salvation. Though we may have brought on ourselves severe suffering as the direct result of wrong-doing, this paragraph teaches us that behind it all are the never-ceasing care and compassion of God, who (to use the language of men) will remember and repent.

47. The Closing Prayer. Though exiled and scattered, do for us again as Thou hast done in the past. Verse 48 closes the fourth book of the Psalter.

WEDNESDAY, September 2. Psalm cvii.

A Psalm of Lovingkindness.

In this Psalm a series of tableaux is presented to our mind, constructed on the same general pattern, and alike in their delineation of human trouble. The date is evidently post-exilic. The people of God had just been gathered from the lands of their captivity, and are exhorted to give thanks for Jehovah's lovingkindness (2, 3).

4-9. The Lost Caravan. How often our life has strayed from the right road, and we have been tormented by insatiable hunger and thirst! Happy are they who, in their distress, remember the only true Guide!

10-16. The Prisoner. We, too, are often in captivity to men and circumstances through our rebellion against God, who gives us over to stern discipline until we repent and turn to Himself.

17-22. The Pressure of Sickness and Pain. Here are failing appetite and ebbing strength. The doors of the other world come in sight. But ere they close upon the sufferer, he repents and turns to the Healer.

23-32. A Storm at Sea. The rising of the gale, the response of the waves, the pitching ship, the loss of the rudder, the desperation of the crew, are vividly depicted. But the cry of the sinking sailors is heard above the fury of the storm, and the tempest quiets as quickly as it arose.

33-42. Sudden Alternations. Barrenness is changed to fertility when God interposes with His life-giving word, so that inhabited cities arise in waste places. Robber-chieftains, on the other hand, are driven into pathless wastes, whilst those whom they oppressed take their place and rejoice.

43. There are troubles in the world, but let us look from them to the Divine Love behind them, and so we shall keep our sanity amid contradictions and trials.

THURSDAY, September 3. Psalm cviii.

A Morning Hymn.

This happy outburst of gratitude and joy dates, probably, from the return of the captives at the close of the Babylonish exile. The Psalm itself is composed of two Davidic fragments. Vv. 1-5 are from Psa. lvii. 7-11; and vv. 6-13 from Psa. lx. 5-12. Some holy soul seems to have felt that what David had originally applied to his own age was equally appropriate to more recent experiences, through which his people had been passing.

1-5. Psaltery and harp had hung silent on the willows, swaying sadly in the wind, over the streams of the conqueror's land, but now they are bidden to awake to a glad mission of praise. Desolate soul, thou too shalt take again thy harp, and elicit sweet strains of thanksgiving from its chords! Thy God will deliver thee from thy captivity, and fill thy tongue with laughter and thy mouth with singing!

6-13. We all have our fortified cities, which oppose our progress in the Divine life, but God will bring us into them, giving us complete deliverance. Even now we may claim the fastnesses of besetting sins for our own, not because we can overcome, but because God will tread down our oppressors (13). When these strongholds are conquered, they will greatly add to the strength and beauty of our soul, as new additions to an ancient empire.

FRIDAY, September 4. Psalm cix.

A Song of Retribution.

This is the last and most terrible of the imprecatory Psalms.

1-5. The singer complains to God of his adversaries. Note that significant name for God—"the God of my praise." Amid his dejection David (the probable author) persists in associating Praise with God. Such a man will not be left to complain long of the Divine silence. He had been prayer, they had been hate, but God could not be silent.

6-20. David's treatment of Saul, when twice he held his life in his hand, shows that his was not a vindictive nature. It is against the Lord's enemies, as such, that his wrath waxes hot (Ps. cxxxix. 21, 22). Remember too, the spirit of the ancient dispensation, which longed that God should put an arrest on sin for His own vindication and the just government of the world. Compare the striking parallels in 2 Chron. xxi, xxii, and Acts vii. 59, 60.

21-31. The singer here pleads for deliverance, with much humility and earnestness. He is attenuated with fasting like a long-drawn-out shadow, and is in danger of being whirled away like a swarm of locusts by the wind; but from all his sufferings and infirmities he turns to Him who never fails nor forsakes, first with prayer for help, next with strong confidence that soon prayer shall again become praise, since God stands at his right hand, and if God be for us, who can be against us?

SATURDAY, September 5. Psalm cx.

A Royal Anthem.

Our Lord distinctly ascribes this Psalm to David (Matt. xxii. 41-46). As He interprets it, it is distinctly Messianic, and is prophetic of Him who is first King of Righteousness, and then King of Peace (Heb. vii. 2).

1-4. The Priest-King and His Army. Our Lord on His Ascension was received up and sat on the right hand of God (Mark xvi. 19). But to enter into such participation in Divine authority and power indicates that He who is thus addressed cannot be a frail child of mortality, but the fellow of Jehovah. From Zion is God's King to rule. There are no pressed men or mercenaries in the ranks of His soldiers—they are freewill offerings, and are clad in holy attire, which in the Apocalypse is described as "pure linen, clean and white." Messiah's followers are spoken of as being in the bloom of early manhood, and numerous as the countless drops of dew which bespangle the morning meadows (2 Sam. xvii. 12). But probably this beautiful image refers also to their purity, their gentle and pervasive influence, and the mystery of their origin. Compare verse 4 with Heb. vii. 17, &c.

5-7. The Warfare and Victory of the Priest-King. He issues from His session at the right hand of Jehovah, and now Jehovah goes at His right hand into the battlefield against His foes. (See Rev. xix. 11.) Verse 7 may be compared with 1 Sam. xiv. 27; but perhaps it is parallel with Phil. ii. 7-9—because our Lord Jesus drank of the waters of sorrow, He shall be highly exalted.

Other Lands.

On the Riviera.

SINCE God called to Himself my dear husband, eleven months ago, the Gospel work among the Italians, to which he had so devoted the latter years of his life, has been continued uninterruptedly at Nice, Monte Carlo, Camporosso, and Pigna, and was extended in December to Castel Vittorio, and in July to Ventimiglia. It is always up-hill work at Monte Carlo; the thirst for gold among all classes drives out nearly all thirst for spiritual things. Yet God has His own there as elsewhere. A poor cripple, a shoemaker, is among the Christians there, and one of his chief joys is to come to the hall half an hour or so before the hour fixed for the meetings and sings hymns with the evangelist and myself.

Some time ago the head gardener of the beautiful gardens of the gambling Casino was converted. Feeling ill at ease in his employment, he consulted the evangelist as to what he ought to do. The answer of course was: "God is speaking to you; obey Him and give notice to leave." He objected: "But what am I to do for my wife and family?" The reply was: "Obey God, and trust Him for the rest." This the man did. At the next Gospel service a girl was present for the first time, and heard the evangelist ask the believers to pray for work for the gardener. The girl was a servant in a Russian family, and knew that her master was seeking a gardener. She told her mistress what she had heard, with the result that the man was engaged at once at the same salary as he had been receiving before, and a house or rooms in addition.

ROMANIST HOSTILITY.

During the last few months the Roman Catholics have been sending preachers to Camporosso and Pigna to denounce Protestants and our meetings. On May 22 it was known at Camporosso that two believers were to be baptized that evening. In the early part of the day our landlord noticed some children placing empty petroleum tins, sticks, &c., near the door of the mission hall, and he asked their reason for doing so. They replied that they were carrying out the priest's directions, and putting these things in readiness for the evening, when they were to beat the tins with the sticks and make all the noise they could, to interrupt the meeting. The landlord, not a Christian, I fear, told them that we had as much liberty to worship God as the priest, and if they did not clear the things away at once he would telegraph for carabineers to arrest them. They quickly obeyed. We heard afterwards that the priest was outside in the dark listening to the baptismal service.

The priest at Pigna has excommunicated all who attend our meetings; but the men, for the most part, are indifferent to his threats. I am sorry to say that only a few women come to the meetings; but there is one of them whose face lights up at the sound of the Gospel, and her hand-shake at the close always sent cheer to my heart. A woman to whom I recently offered a tract, and who took it without realizing what it was, thrust it back on me and rubbed her hand hard in her apron to rub off the defilement!

Castel Vittorio is a village approached by mule track up the mountain at the head of the valley of the Nervia. In June, I was there with my little boys distributing Gospel books, and on reaching the summit of the village I perceived a procession approaching from the country, whither the priest had been to bless some land. It was headed by a man carrying a huge crucifix. I let it pass, and continuing to distribute to stragglers behind, I saw the priest coming. He told the people not to take anything from me. I let him pass in silence, but then the Spirit of God rebuked me for cowardice and said, "This is not the way to do God's work." I stopped and prayed. Looking round I saw the priest standing still, surrounded by a crowd, whom he was evidently telling to destroy our tracts. Trusting God, I took some steps towards him, when, to my surprise, he suddenly left the people and proceeded at a rapid pace down the hill away from us. I went to the people and reminded them that they had perfect liberty in Italy to read what they pleased, liberty for which they had fought and suffered, and I told them that I believed the tracts to contain the Truth, and advised them to read them, and after perusal they could use their freedom and judge whether they ought to destroy them or not. They applauded my advice.

OPEN DOORS.

Many of the men are asking for meetings, and the Musical Society of the village has willingly placed their hall at our disposal for the small sum of two francs a time. Up to the present the mayor refuses his permission for meetings, but, no doubt, God will overcome this difficulty. When I was there at Easter, I gave an old man a New Testament, and my companion and I prayed specially about this book. On my next visit, this man waited at the door of his house for me as I returned down the village, and told me that he read the book every evening, and loved it. His wife and another woman were with him, and I had a long and interesting talk with them.

For some months after my dear husband's home-call, I felt there was a great need of a more experienced evangelist to direct the work in the valley of the Nervia, in which Camprosso, Pigna, and Castel Vittorio are situated. After much prayer for guidance, I engaged an evangelist who had been working for two years in the McAll Mission, a Waldensian by birth. He is stationed at Ventimiglia, where there had been no meetings for some years, and where a few Christians had been asking fellow-Christians of Nice and Cannes to send them some one.

The Gospel Hall at Nice is now in the hands of a devoted servant of God, Signor Valle, with whom I am associated in the work. We are able to praise God for much blessing in this large town. On the last Sunday in June ten persons confessed their faith by baptism, and on July 19 six more were baptized. At the village of St. Laurent, near Nice, Signor Valle has been remarkably used of God during last season. The whole village has been roused, a large Sunday school has been started, to which some of the women come as well as the children, and souls are being won for Christ.

My address in England is 18, Hartfield Road, Eastbourne. I expect to return to Nice at the end of September. M. E. NEWBERY.

Indian Villagers Seeking the Gospel.

WE have received a most urgent call to open up work in a district in India where a wonderful awakening has occurred. Twenty-five hamlets, containing over a thousand souls, beg very earnestly for Christian workers to be sent to them. This is the most remarkable call from the heathen themselves that I have known during my twenty years' service in India.

Something must be done, and done at once, to receive these people into the Christian fold. We purpose going ourselves for such time as the Lord may lead, and stationing six converted Indian workers among them, with a Spirit-filled couple (who are ready to go) to parent them. With other work this would involve an expenditure of Rs.200 (£13 6s. 8d.) per month. There are no missionaries in or near the district, and this makes the call the more remarkable.

A few praying people in various parts of India are crying to God to open up the way for us to take the Gospel to these needy ones. Will readers join in earnest prayer?

We feel that God is going to be glorified in the salvation of many souls. We believe the long-prayed for revival is coming.

Bidar, Nizam's Dominions.

BIDAR, a walled town of 11,000 inhabitants near Hyderabad, in the Nizam's Dominions, India, is the chief town of a district of the same name, having a population of over 700,000, and these are dependent on this mission for the Gospel.

Our work is chiefly evangelistic and medical. The missionary lives in a native house, on the verandah of which the sick gather day by day. People from the town and from the villages for many miles around look to us for help, and while caring for their bodies we tell them of the compassion and power of the Great Physician of souls.

It is estimated that there are in India 20,000,000 people who are in a chronic state of starvation, and many such who are ill come to us. Lately we have been moved almost to tears at the suffering which some of these poor women are called upon to endure. Weak and emaciated, suffering from tumors, cancers or abscesses, with the marks of pain and suffering upon their faces, they have come to us for medicine, and some of these have been living on one pancake of coarse grain a-day. Little children, their condition most pitiable, have come who were subsisting on only half a pancake daily!

We are doing our best to alleviate the afflictions of these very poor, but our stock of medicines is very low, and we are unable adequately to assist immediate and pressing need. W. H. L. BATSTONE, M.D.
